PREFACE

1169750

IN presenting the Commemorative Biographical Record of Indianapolis and Vicinity to its patrons, the publishers wish to make grateful acknowledgment of the encouragement and support their enterprise has received, and the willing assistance rendered in enabling them to surmount the many unforeseen obstacles to be met with in the production of a work of this character. In nearly every instance the material composing the sketches was gathered from those immediately interested, and then submitted in typewritten form for correction and revision. Many of the biographies contain items of history which would probably be preserved in no other way, and the volume, which is one of generous amplitude, is placed in the hands of the public with the belief that it will be found a valuable addition to the library, as well as an invaluable contribution to the historical literature of the State of Indiana.

BIOGRAPHICAL

DANIEL YANDES belonged to that class of men who naturally become pioneers. He was born in Fayette county, Pa., in January, 1793, when it was yet a new country, with fertile soil, and a hilly but beautiful surface, underlaid with coal. He was the son of Simon Yandes, whose wife before marriage was Anna Catherine Rider—both natives of Germany. His parents lived upon a farm near the Monongahela river west of Uniontown. They had two sons, Daniel and Simon, who received only the limited education usual at that time. Both of the sons worked on the farm. They enlisted in the year 1813 under General Harrison, in the last war with Great Britain, and served six months in northern Ohio, but were not engaged in battle. The father of Gov. Albert G. Porter enlisted in the same company. In 1814, when the city of Washington was first threatened by the British, they again enlisted, and Daniel Yandes at the age of twenty-one was elected major of the regiment. Before leaving the place of rendezvous the order to march was countermanded, and the troops were not again ordered out. In 1815 occurred the most fortunate event of his life, and that was his marriage to Anna Wilson, the oldest daughter of James Wilson and his wife, Mary Rabb. James Wilson was a leading farmer and magistrate of the county. The Wilsons were Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, and the Rabbs Scotch-English Presbyterians, and Anna Wilson was a Presbyterian. Her educational advantages were but moderate as compared with those at present. James Wilson's father, Alexander Wilson, was born in 1727, and removed from Lancaster county, Pa., to Fayette county, where he died in 1815.

After the marriage of Daniel Yandes he acquired a mill and opened a coal mine. In 1817 his father died, at the age of eighty-four, and in 1818, when the advantages of the fertile soil of Indiana were heralded in western Pennsylvania and enthusiasm aroused, he, with his wife, mother and two children, floated down the Ohio to Cincinnati, and went thence to Fayette county, Ind., where he opened a farm in the woods near Connerville. In the spring of 1821 he removed to Indianapolis, which had been fixed upon as the seat of government for the State, and resided there until his death in June, 1878, at the age of eighty-five years and five months. His portrait and signature represent him at the age of eighty. His first residence was a log cabin which he built near the northeast corner of Washington and Illinois streets. In 1822 he erected and resided in a double log cabin near the southwest corner of Washington and Alabama streets, opposite the Court House Square. In 1823 he built a new frame residence of three rooms in that locality. About 1831 he erected a two-story brick residence west of and adjoining the State Life building. In 1837 he was the owner of an acre of ground where the United States court house and postoffice now stands, and where he built a large plain two-story brick residence. Here he lived until it was sold to the First Presbyterian Church in 1863, and here his wife died in 1851. After her death he did not marry again.

He came to Indianapolis with about four thousand dollars, and strange as it may seem, that constituted him the largest capitalist of the incipient metropolis for the next ten years. That amount included the total of his inheritance and of his own acquisitions up to 1821. He was, in common with pioneers generally, a man of rugged health, and hopeful, confiding and enterprising. He was fond of building mills, manufactories, and introducing other improvements. On his arrival in Indianapolis, with his brother-in-law he erected the saw and gristmill on the bayou southwest of the city where the McCarty land now is, the dam being built across White river at the head of the island which was opposite the Old Cemetery. This is said to have been the first mill in the New Purchase.

About 1823 the firm of Yandes & Wilkens established the first tannery in the county, and continued in that business together about thirty years. The active partner was John Wilkens, a man well known for his uncommon merits. Afterward Daniel Yandes continued the same business with his nephew, Lafayette Yandes. After the death of Lafayette he formed another partnership, with his nephew, Daniel Yandes, Jr., and James C. Farmerlee in an extensive tannery in Brown county, and in a leather store at Indianapolis. About the year 1825 Mr. Yandes became the partner in a store with Franklin Merrill, brother of Samuel Merrill. Stores in the early history of Indianapolis contained a miscellaneous assortment, more or less extensive, including dry-goods, groceries, queensware, hardware, hats, shoes, etc. About 1831 he became the partner of Edward T. Porter, and the store of Yandes & Porter was in a brick building which preceded that where the State Life building now stands. At nearly the same time he started Joseph Sloan in business as a merchant at Covington, Ind., and continued his partner for several years. In 1833 he and Samuel Merrill, treasurer of State, dug a race along Fall creek, and built a gristmill, a sawmill, and the first cotton-spinning factory in this region. A few years afterward he and William Sheets, then late secretary of State, built on the canal west of the State-house grounds the first paper-mill in the county. About the same time he became the partner of Thomas M. Smith in a store, and about 1838 was the partner of John F. Hill in another store, both of which were on the north side of Washington street, a little west of Pennsylvania street. In 1839, under great difficulties, he alone built at Lafayette, Ind., a gristmill, sawmill, and paper-mill, and opened with his son James a large store. While engaged in this enterprise the panic was precipitated upon the country, and Mr. Yandes found himself involved heavily in debt, both as principal and indorser, at Indianapolis and Lafayette. While he enjoyed the good-will of his creditors, he did not command their entire confidence as to his solvency, and during the years 1839 to 1844 judgments in Marion county accumulated against him to the amount of over twenty-two thousand dollars, when he sacrificed some of his most valuable property at much less than cost. At the same time he was under protest at the bank at Lafayette. In due time, however, he paid the full amount of his debts, and it is a matter of honest pride that he and his children have always paid in full individual and all other indebtedness. About the year 1847 he and Thomas H. Sharpe built the College Hall, a brick building, which preceded the Fletcher & Sharpe bank and store property, at the corner of Washington and Pennsylvania streets; and a few years afterward he erected a brick building on Washington street west of Pennsylvania street. In 1847 he built ten miles of the Madison railroad, which was completed about September of that year, and was the first railroad to Indianapolis. The same year he joined in building a gristmill at Franklin. In 1852 he and Alfred Harrison built thirty miles of the eastern end in Indiana of the Bellefontaine railroad. Previous to this time he had twice ventured successfully in sending large cargoes of provisions by flat-boats from Indiana to New Orleans. About the year 1854, during the Kansas excitement, his desire for the freedom of that State impelled him to aid some young men to settle there, whom he accompanied to the West. About 1860 he joined Edward T. Sinker as partner in the Western Machine Works, where he continued for some years.

One of his most curious traits was the manifestation of unusual energy and labor for a series of years until an enterprise could be put upon a solid basis, after which he evinced unusual indolence and inattention to details for several years, until he became again enlisted in a new enterprise. As a consequence, after new enterprises were fairly started and tested, he lost interest in them, and in a few years would usually sell his interest. He was senior partner, and in most cases the capitalist. Although he matured his plans carefully and patiently, he was nevertheless too fond of hazard.

If his business career had terminated

when he was seventy-five years of age he would have been a successful business man; but an undue fondness for enterprise and a hopeful enthusiasm, together with the fascinations of the far West, an over-confidence in others, and the deterioration incident to old age, with his unwillingness to be advised, resulted in disaster. He lost a considerable amount in mines in the West, and a large sum in the Brazil Furnace, stripping him in effect of his property when he was past the age of eighty.

In politics he was a very decided Whig and Republican, but cared little for the distinctions of office. He was, however, the first treasurer of Marion county, and in 1838 Governor Noble, unsolicited, appointed him one of the board of internal improvements to aid in carrying out the extensive system of improvements provided for by the Legislature in 1836.

In church matters he was a Lutheran by preference, but there being no church of that denomination at Indianapolis in early times he became a Presbyterian, and was for some years one of the first elders and trustees of the Second Presbyterian Church. From 1823 to 1845, and until the failure of his wife's health, his house was one of the favorite stopping places of the Presbyterian clergy. Rev. Mr. Proctor, and afterward Rev. George Bush, were his guests for months. He was liberal to charities and the church, having given away up to 1865 about sixty thousand dollars. It would require at least double that amount, according to the present value of money, to be an equivalent.

Five of his children died young. His daughter Mary Y. Wheeler died in 1852. His son, James W. Yandes, died in 1885. Simon Yandes died Oct. 5, 1903. Elizabeth Y. Robinson died in May, 1904. His daughter Catharine C. Fletcher and his son George B. Yandes yet survive him.

JUDGE WILLIAM ALLEN WOODS (deceased), at one time United States Circuit Judge, was born May 16, 1837, near Farmington, Marshall Co., Tenn., and came of Scotch-Irish ancestry by both father and mother. She was a Ewing. About 1760 the family came from Ireland to western Pennsylvania, whence descendants went to Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee and other western States. Both Judge Woods's grandparents were well-to-do farmers and influential slave-holders.

Francis H. Woods, the paternal grandfather of Judge Woods, was a son of Samuel Woods, who married Elizabeth Patten. Samuel Woods, or his father, came from the North of Ireland and settled in Pennsylvania about 1760. William D. Ewing, the maternal grandfather of Judge Ewing, was a son of Samuel Ewing, and grandson of George Ewing, Sr., who married Eleanor Caldwell. William D. Ewing was probably born in Georgia, and moving into Tennessee settled in what is now Marshall county, three miles north of Lewisburg, the county seat, where he cleared a farm and spent his life. He reared a goodly family, and died at the age of eighty-four years. The wife of William D. Ewing was Rebecca Ewing, daughter of David Ewing, who was a son of William Ewing, Sr., who came from Ireland about 1760. The Judge's grandmother on his father's side was the aunt of his maternal grandmother.

Allen Newton Woods, father of Judge Woods, was a student of theology, and took strong ground in opposition to slavery. He died June 15, 1837, when only twenty-six years old, and about 1844 his widow married Capt. John J. Miller, who was also opposed to the institution of slavery. Capt. Miller took his family to Davis county, Iowa, where he died before the ending of the year, leaving William Allen, and a younger step-brother, Adolphus, who is now a resident of south-western Iowa, to do the work of the farm under the guidance of a brave-hearted and pious mother. His life was one of exacting but hopeful toil in field and forest, brick yard, sawmill, gristmill and village store until in his sixteenth year he became a student, later an assistant teacher, in the Troy Academy: a notable result considering the limited advantages he had received at the district school. He was made chief of the lodge of the I. O. G. T., at Troy, and in the winter of 1854-55 helped organize at Troy. He was elected a member of the Grand Lodge of the Order in Iowa.

In September, 1855, he matriculated at Wabash College, from which he graduated in 1859. During the ensuing year he was a tutor of the College. In 1860 he took a school position at Marion, Ind., which he held until the first battle of Bull Run, when the school was broken up by the enlistment of Mr. Woods. An injured foot, however, disabled him from active service, and he was admitted in December, 1861, to the Bar of the Grant County Circuit Court, which was presided over by Judge Horace P. Biddle. At that session of the Court, as deputy prosecutor, he conducted the criminal trials. At Goshen, Ind., he opened a law office, March 17, 1862, and for two years had little to do. This time he diligently improved by careful and thorough reading, which he did to such purpose that he became noted for a thorough and ready command of the principles of legal practice, and their application to the problems of the Court. Presently his practice took on satisfactory proportions, and he was elected to the State Legislature in 1867, and introduced and pushed to a passage several important measures, by one of which a new judicial circuit was created, the judgeship of which was tendered to him by Gov. Baker. This Mr. Woods declined, as he did a renomination to the Legislature and a nomination to Congress, though his election would have been very certain. As an earnest Republican he was always active in his county campaigning, though seldom willing to speak elsewhere.

Judge Woods was elected to the Judgeship of the 34th Judicial Circuit, in 1873. It was composed of Elkhart and LaGrange counties. He was re-elected without opposition in 1878, and was continued in that office until January, 1881. That year he took his seat on the Supreme Bench of the State, succeeding Judge Biddle. In May, 1883, being at the time Chief Justice of that Court, he was appointed District Judge for the District of Indiana by President Arthur. Judge Gresham was his predecessor. Judge Woods held that high position until March 17, 1892. This was thirty years from the time he opened his office in Goshen. On the nomination of President Harrison, he was commissioned United States Circuit Judge for the Seventh Circuit, under the act of Congress, creating the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, of which he was ex-officio a judge. By reason of his priority of commission following Judge Gresham, he was the presiding judge at the time of his death.

The work of Judge Woods on the Supreme Bench of Indiana is preserved in the official reports, commencing with Vol. 73, and is well known to the profession, and of this a discriminating estimate was published in the "Green Bag" of 1892. On the Federal Bench he has dealt with many important cases, some of which, like the Tallysheet Cases, the Dudley Case, the World's Fair Sunday Opening Case, and the Debs Case, have been subject to wide comment and discussion. Rarely, if ever, has a more notable tribute been paid to the law and to a judge for declaring and enforcing it, than the following pronounced by Justice Brewer, in an address before the Marquette Club, of Chicago, in February, 1896: "The great strike, of which this city was the historic center, attests the wisdom of judicial interference. * * * The peaceful ending of that strike is a supreme attestation of the power of the American people to govern themselves. That honest and true-minded men were in both sides of that controversy, no sensible man doubts, and that it was settled judicially, and not by bayonets and bullets, is the glory of all. Let me say in passing, that the hero of that struggle for the domination of the Law was Circuit Judge William A. Woods, whose name will be revered and honored through the coming ages, long after the memories of his critics and assailants shall have become like the body of Lazarus four days in the grave."

The case, however, that attracted the most attention was the proceeding against Col. Dudley, charged with writing a letter from New York, during the campaign of 1888, advising bribery at the polls. The election was, perhaps, the most exciting ever held in the State, and charges of corruption were freely made by both parties. A "confidential" letter, asserted to have been written by the chairman of a Democratic County Committee to a subordinate, fell into the hands of the opposite political party. It advised that voters who could be bought, were simply "floats," and should be closely looked after. No one should escape. Another letter, over the alleged signature of Col. Dudley, written on a sheet bearing the imprint of the National Republican Committee, and addressed to an unknown person in Indiana, was intercepted in some manner, and fell into the hands of the Democratic Committee of the State. It gave full and explicit directions for the conduct of the campaign, and contained this offensive clause, "Divide the floaters into blocks of five, and put a trusted man with necessary funds, in charge of these five. Make him responsible that none get away, and that all vote our ticket." In his charge to the Federal Grand Jury, which met Nov. 14, 1888, Judge Woods called attention to Section 5511, of the United States Revised Statutes, which makes bribery an offense, and provides that any person who "aids, counsels, procures or advises any such voter, person or officer to do any act hereby made a crime * * * shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment, not more than three years, or by both. And shall pay the costs of prosecution." The question of the proper construction of the Statutes having been under consideration between Judge Woods and Senator Macdonald, and there having developed a difference of opinion, Judge Woods purposely omitted any construction of the section, and gave his charge to the Grand Jury employing the wording of the Statutes, so as to leave the District Attorney free to conduct the investigation before the Grand Jury in his own way. A month later, however, in response to a request from the Grand Jury for more explicit instruction, he quoted Section 5511, and added this construction: "But in any case, beside the mere fact of the advice or counsel, it must be shown that the crime contemplated was committed, or an attempt made to commit it." This was followed by a storm of partisan criticism. It was charged in the Democratic press, and by the senior Senator from Indiana upon the floor of the United States Senate, that this construction was inconsistent with the first charge, and that the Judge had determined to shield the guilty by making indictment impossible under his construction of the Law. The criticism being repeated in words of bitter denunciation in the Democratic State Platform of 1890, Judge Woods published an elaborate statement of facts with correspondence and data, which not only exonerated him from any suspicion of wrong doing or inconsistency, but also showed that his construction of the law was correct, that it was approved by Justice Harlan, of the United States Supreme Court, who examined the authorities carefully at his request. It appeared later that his ruling was in exact accord with an early decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the U. S. vs. Mills. This was case 7, Peters, 137, and it seems was overlooked while the discussion was being held. The vindication was complete.

Judge Woods was well and favorably known in Indiana, and from three educational institutions of high degree did he receive the doctorate of Laws, namely: Asbury (De Pauw) University, Hanover and Wabash.

Judge Woods was married, Dec. 6, 1870, to Miss Mata A., a daughter of ex-mayor

Augustus Newton, of Des Moines, Iowa. To this union were born two children: Alice Newton, and Floyd Allen. The daughter is an artist of marked ability, and the son is a member of the legal profession in Indianapolis, and his career though brief shows that his father's mantle has fallen on worthy shoulders.

AUGUSTUS NEWTON was born at East Templeton, Mass., and was educated in his native State. When a young man he came West locating in Benton Harbor, Mich., where he engaged in the fur trade on his own account. Later he went to Des Moines, Iowa, and there he built the first frame house, the first brick house and the first brick business block—the old Exchange Block—which is still standing. He was mayor of Des Moines and was a merchant there. After his retirement from business he moved to Knoxville, Tenn., where he died in February, 1894, aged seventy-four years. At Elkhart, Ind., he married Miss Mary Mitchell, born in Lancaster, Pa., daughter of Gen. William B. Mitchell, born in the North of Ireland, of Scotch ancestors. Gen. Mitchell came to America when a young man, as a teacher, and he married Miss Rebecca Lyman, of Pennsylvania, born in Lancaster, of an old family there. Mrs. Woods's great-grandfather Newton was from Gardner, Mass., where he was a soldier in the war of the Revolution. His wife was a Miss Howe, a member of an early settled Puritan family.

JOHN EBNER, president and sole owner of the Indianapolis Varnish Company, is one of the most prominent and successful business men of his city. A pioneer in his line in the middle west, he has by untiring, well-directed efforts risen step by step to his present prosperous condition, being the head of one of the largest concerns of its kind in this section. His splendid business qualifications, as well as his many other admirable traits of character, he has inherited from good German ancestors.

John Ebner, his grandfather, was a man of means and influence. For the most part he made his residence in the Kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany, and there upon reaching manhood he settled and began managing a vineyard. Branching out in business, he also engaged in the manufacture of wine very successfully. He prospered through life and won the confidence of all, establishing for himself a leading place in the business world.

During his young manhood he married and by this union there were five children, all of whom made their homes in Germany, and there died: David, John, Christoff, Caroline and Mary. Mr. Ebner was a man of cultivation, and was well informed on general subjects. Possessed of many social attributes, he won for himself friends in all circles, especially in the business world, where he wielded a large influence. Coming of an old and prominent Protestant family, he strictly adhered to their religious teachings.

Christoff Ebner, father of John Ebner, whose name heads this sketch, fell heir to a good share of his father's stock of brains and force of character. Born in Wurtemberg, he there, under the influence of a cultivated home and progressive institutions, grew to manhood. As a preparation for life's activities he early learned the trade of a weaver, and being possessed of rare ability in his line he became in time an artist in that branch of industry. As a young man he engaged in the manufacture of embroideries, corsets and other fine articles for ladies, and, meeting with success in this industry, he continued it for the most part throughout his active life. A skilled workman, gifted in directing affairs, and a good financial manager, he made well out of this industry, and on the whole prospered through life. He died at the old homestead in Frickenhausen, Wurtemberg, Germany, June 17, 1851, at the age of fifty-three years.

During his young manhood Mr. Ebner married Rosina Nestil, who was born in Frickenhausen, Wurtemberg, and to this union came six children: Pauline (who married J. Lang) and William, who both died in Germany; August, who came to America in 1860, and died some years later in New York, leaving one daughter, Pauline; Christina, who married William Ridder, and had five children (both parents died in New York); Rosa, who married Christian Schweitzer, in New York, and they had five children; and John, mentioned below. Mr. Ebner was a man of influence, who through life found his friends in the best circles of German society. Possessed of expensive tastes, he usually lived up to his large income, using his money freely in entertaining his many friends and keeping up his luxurious home. He was exempt from army service, and devoted himself unreservedly to the pursuit of his main industry. Reared in the Protestant faith, he was a consistent member of the Reformed Church.

John Ebner, son of Christoff, was born in Frickenhausen, Wurtemberg, Germany, Oct. 20, 1836, and attending the well-conducted schools of his vicinity for eight years, he gained a thorough education, and formed habits of industry and self-reliance of much value to him in later years. Remaining at home until he was eighteen years old, he early entered his father's business establishment, and there, by close attention to the work, learned the weaver's trade. A skilled workman, he had no difficulty in securing a position at his craft, and for several years he followed his trade in Germany, commanding good wages. In 1860, however, he broke home ties and came to America, landing in New York Aug. 11, 1860. Arriving there on the verge of the Civil war, on Oct. 11, 1861, at Watertown, N. Y., he enlisted for three years in Company D, 35th N. Y. V. I., under Colonel Lord of Buffalo, and went to the front, where he served in many hard engagements. In the second battle of Bull Run, Aug. 28, 1862, he received a wound in the left leg, from the explosion of a shell piece, and after six months and three days of hospital treatment, in Washington, D. C., and Newark, N. J., on Feb. 28, 1863, he received at Newark, N. J., an honorable discharge, on account of disability. Returning at once to New York City he entered a varnish factory, and there applying himself diligently to the work soon mastered all the details of the business. Advancing rapidly, after a short time he rose to the position of superintendent of the works, which place he filled very acceptably for some time. On the outlook for a good business opening for himself in his line, he in 1867 completed by telegram negotiations with Henry B. Mears, of Indianapolis, for starting a varnish factory in that place, and proceeding at once to the field of the new enterprise, he directed the erection of the buildings, and after their completion assumed the superintendency of the establishment, which operated under the name of the Capital City Varnish Works. Under his management the enterprise met with success from the start, and soon the company reorganized and enlarged the plant, giving the establishment the name of Mears & Lilly, still known as the Capital City Varnish Works. He remained with this firm until January, 1871, when he and Mr. Andrew Kramer purchased a business site, and established the Indianapolis Varnish Company. They enlarged the business from time to time, and took in new partners, changing the name from Ebner & Kramer to Ebner, Aldag & Co., conducting the business under the style of the Indianapolis Varnish Company; and under this appellation the firm did business until 1885, when Kramer sold his interest to his partners. In 1893 the Aldags sold their interest to Ebner, and a stock company assumed the management of the business, comprising John Ebner, president, William Geiger, vice-president, and E. F. Knodle, secretary and treasurer. About 1895 Mr. Ebner bought out the interests of some of the other stockholders, the company then consisting of John Ebner, president, Bertha E. Ebner, secretary and treasurer, and Emil Ebner, vice-president; with William F. Ebner, director, Edward J. Ebner, varnish maker, and Charles A. Ecklin, brother-in-law of Mr. John Ebner, one of the traveling salesmen. This company has since conducted the business with excellent results, has greatly improved and enlarged the establishment, as well as the force of employees, and has given the factory a standing among first-class industries of the middle west. Mr. Ebner has in every respect shown himself an excellent financier, and a most competent business manager. Possessed of many resources, he has in addition to conducting this business so efficiently also engaged in the real estate business to some extent, and he now owns some seventeen tenement houses in Indianapolis, which he rents to advantage. Prospering in all his ventures, he has amassed considerable wealth, and in addition to his city real estate he now has also a large bank account, bonds, stocks, etc. He owns a pleasant residence property in Indianapolis, where he has long made his home.

Mr. Ebner married in New York City, May 10, 1863, Christina Ecklin, who was born in Wendenreuthe, Baden, Germany, Sept. 4, 1841, daughter of Andreas Ecklin. Andreas Ecklin was a shoemaker by trade, came of a good old Protestant family of Germany, and for many years made his residence in the town of Wendenreuthe, in that section of Baden. He married, in Germany, Elizabeth Schrode, of Baden. She passed her last days in Indianapolis, and died there Sept. 23, 1899. Of their union were born five children: Christina, Mrs. Ebner; Elizabeth, who married Nicholas

Seyler, now of Indianapolis; Mary, who married Henry Lohse, of New York City; Kate, who married George Gunsett, now of Indianapolis; and Charles A., the traveling salesman for the Varnish Works. In 1853 Mr. Ecklin moved with his family from Germany to New York City, and there passed his last days, dying in 1857. He was a man of ability and always commanded the respect of his fellow-citizens. The Reformed Church counted him among its influential members.

Mr. and Mrs. Ebner had fifteen children, seven of whom died young: Rose, John, Charles, August, Christina, Olga and John. Of the eight now living Elizabeth and Anna M. have never married; Bertha E. is mentioned above; Ida married Frank Krause, and has one son, Arthur John; Emil, of the Varnish Works, married Barbara Berdel, and has three daughters, Helen Esther, Marie B. C. and Elizabeth Ruth; William F., of the same firm, married Minnie Kuhler, and had one daughter, who is deceased; Edward J., the varnish maker, married Emma Erber, and has one daughter Mildred (he enlisted in the 161st Ind. V. I., under Colonel Durbin, former governor of Indiana, and served in the Spanish-American war, being stationed in Cuba); Frank, who is a bookkeeper in the Indiana National Bank, married Marietta Whisenand, and has one son, John F.

Mr. Ebner has by his efficiency, honesty and square dealings won the entire confidence of business men in Indianapolis and vicinity, where he is well known. He possesses an indomitable will and plenty of courage, is broad-minded, alert and thoroughly up-to-date. Public-spirited and generous, he is a power for good in his community. Fraternally he stands high, belonging to the I. O. O. F.; the G. A. V. A., of which he is quartermaster; the G. P. S., of Indianapolis; and is a member of George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R., No. 17, of Indianapolis. For many years he was a member of the Methodist Church, to which his wife and children still belong.

DANIEL BERND, president of The Bernd Brothers Company, wagon manufacturers, of Indianapolis, is one of the substantial German residents of that city who have done so much to promote its industrial growth. He was born Feb. 24, 1839, in Dietschweiler, Rhenish Bavaria, Germany, son of George Philip and Phillipena (Becker) Bernd, and passed his early life in his native land, where he received a good common-school education.

In 1857 Mr. Bernd came with his father to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he learned wagon-making, at which he worked until his enlistment, in 1864, in the 106th Ohio Volunteer Regiment. He was sent to Stevenson, Ala., where he was on duty until the close of the war, after which he returned to Cincinnati, and resumed his old trade. Coming to Indianapolis in May, 1868, he became an employee of the Shaw Carriage Company, and in March, 1875, he started in business on his own account, in partnership with his brothers. By industry and honest work the brothers prospered, doing an increasing business from year to year, until the concern is now upon a very substantial basis. In March, 1904, Mr. Daniel Bernd, with his sons George Philip and Theodore Jacob and son-in-law William C. F. Grieb, formed an incorporation. William C. F. Grieb is first vice-president, and George Philip Bernd is second vice-president of the company and assists his father in business, having worked in the wagon factory for more than twenty years. Theodore Jacob Bernd is secretary and treasurer, and handles practically all the financial affairs of the firm, to the advantage of all concerned. He is especially fitted for his duties, having received a good education in the public, high and business schools of Indianapolis and six years' training in the practical part of the wagon manufacturing business. Being acquainted thus with every detail of the work and endowed with keen business perception, his estimates are universally satisfactory, both to the firm and its patrons. His enterprise and progressive spirit have during his comparatively brief connection with the business been felt in every department.

Daniel Bernd is well known in German-American social circles in the city, being an active member of the German-American Veterans' Association, the German Pioneers, the Druids, the German Protestant Orphans' Home Association, the Deutscher Klub und Musikverein, the Germania Park Association, and one of the organizers of the South Side Turnverein.

By his first marriage, to Carolina Diehl, Mr. Bernd had one son, Daniel, and four children have been born to his second union, with Louisa Matilda Juppenlatz, viz.: Matilda, George Philip, Theodore Jacob and Alma Theresa.

HON. WILLIAM HAYDEN ENGLISH, late of Indianapolis, was a man of national reputation and importance in affairs of government and business for so many years that Indiana was proud to claim him for one of her native sons. A mere recital of his achievements, the positions he held, his connection with various public and private enterprises, with no comment upon the far-reaching effects of his life and work, would make an article of respectable proportions. The notable productions of his pen, "The Conquest of the Northwest" and the "History of Indiana," will entitle his name to a permanent place among the writers who have made the State famous and who have won repute as chroniclers of her fame.

Mr. English's parentage and ancestry are also worthy of note, as showing decidedly whence he drew the strength and principle which characterized his whole career, and a brief mention of his forefathers will be an appropriate introduction to his own life story. The family originated in England, from which country James English (son of Thomas) emigrated to America about 1700, settling near Laurel, Del. His son, James English (2), was the great-grandfather of William H. English. Elisha English, son of James (2), was born in Delaware and married Sarah Wharton, also a native of that State. Thence they migrated in 1792 to Kentucky, where their son, Major Elisha Gale English, was born. In their old age, in 1830, they moved to Greene county, Ill., where several of their children had located. They lived together for sixty years, and their family consisted of fourteen children, all of whom were married and had children of their own before death came to break the family circle. At that time their descendants numbered about two hundred.

The Major was the first of the English family to come to Indiana. He settled in Scott county, this State, in 1818, being one of the earliest pioneers in that section, where he became one of the most prominent men of his day, both in business circles and in politics. At one time he served as United States marshal for Indiana, under appointment of President Buchanan, and he served twenty-four years as a member of the State Legislature, in both House and Senate. Coming into the State shortly after its admission into the Union, and when Indiana was still on the border of the Indian territory, he had an important part in the making of her early history. His name was known and respected over a wide territory, and his influence in the formation of the early laws and institutions of the State is felt to this day. Major English never gave up the home in Scott county where he settled upon his removal to this State, but he spent most of the time during the closing years of his life at the home of his son, William H., in Indianapolis, in which city his death occurred Nov. 14, 1874. He and his wife are buried in Crown Hill cemetery. Major English married Mahala Eastin, a native of Kentucky, whither her parents, Lieut. Philip and Sarah Smith Eastin, moved from Virginia, their native State. There were seventeen children born to Lieut. Eastin and wife.

On the maternal side William H. English was descended from those notable characters in American Colonial history—Louis DuBois, the Huguenot patentee of the Kingston (N. Y.) district, and Jost Hite, who brought the first colony to Virginia that settled west of the Blue Ridge mountains, locating on a grant of land of over 100,000 acres made to him by King George II. of England. William H. English's grandfather, Lieut. Philip Eastin, an officer of the Revolution, in the 4th and 8th Virginia Regiments, Continental Line, served through the entire war. Capt. Charles Smith, his great-grandfather, was an officer in the French-English Colonial war under the then "Col." George Washington, and was severely wounded at the battle of Great Meadows. His great-great-grandfather, Col. John Hite, was a Colonial officer and a member of the first board of justices of Frederick county, Va., after independence was declared. Capt. Revel Wharton, another of Mr. English's direct ancestors, was captain of an American privateer during the Revolution, was captured in action, and died on board a British prison ship.

William Hayden English was the only son of Major Elisha Gale English and Mahala (Eastin) English, and was born Aug. 27, 1822, in Lexington, Scott Co., Ind. He grew up among the scenes familiar to the early settlers of his native locality, and there acquired the beginnings of his education in the common schools. His collegiate course was pursued at Hanover University, where he studied for three years, after which he devoted himself to the law, which he had chosen for his profession. The most pointed comment to be made upon his aptitude is the mere statement that he was admitted to practice in the Circuit court when only eighteen years old. He began practice in his native county, and soon had a patronage covering that and neighboring counties, for he was well known and trusted even at that early age. Within a short time he was admitted to the State Supreme court, and before he was twenty-three to the United States Supreme court, at a period when the examinations were, to quote the words of one of his noted legal associates, "strict, thorough and exacting." That he possessed the necessary requirements and acquirements at such a youthful age was highly creditable. Meantime he had also laid firmly the foundations of his political power. Even before he attained his majority he filled local offices, serving as deputy clerk of his county and as postmaster at Lexington, and in 1843, when just twenty-one, he was chosen principal clerk of the Indiana House of Representatives over several worthy aspirants for the position. He served as such during 1843 and 1844. In the latter year he gave efficient service to his party in the election of Mr. Polk to the Presidency, and he was tendered an appointment as clerk in the Treasury department at Washington, which he held throughout Polk's administration, resigning at its close because of his opposition to the election of President Taylor. In the memorable session of the compromise of 1850 he was a clerk of the Claims committee in the United States Senate, resigning at the close of the session. Upon returning to his native State from Washington Mr. English had entered actively into the movement for a new State constitution, and he was elected principal secretary to the State Constitutional convention which assembled at Indianapolis in October, 1850, to revise the constitution; at the adjournment the convention assigned to him the important trust of supervising the publication of the constitution, the journal, address, etc. In 1851 he was elected to represent his native county in the State Legislature against an opposition majority, and over a competitor considered the strongest and most popular man of his party in the county. This was the first meeting of the Legislature under the provisions of the new constitution, and judgment and discretion were required of the Legislature to put the new State machinery into harmonious and successful operation. It was, therefore, no small compliment for so young a man as Mr. English—he was but twenty-nine—to have been chosen over so many older and more experienced citizens. He was still further honored by being elected Speaker, and it may be mentioned as an evidence of his ability and popularity as a presiding officer that, during his long term of service (over three months), no appeal was taken from his decisions. This was the more remarkable as it was the first session under the new constitution, when many new points had to be decided. His successful experience in the speakership opened new avenues for Mr. English and at the same time made him master of the local political situation. He became widely known throughout Indiana, and the favorable impression he had created while in the Legislature became apparent when he became a Congressional candidate.

In October, 1852, Mr. English was elected to the United States House of Representatives, entering Congress at the commencement of President Pierce's administration. It was at the opening of this Congress that the famous Kansas-Nebraska bill was introduced. Mr. English was a member of the House committee on Territories, which was charged with the consideration and report of the bill; he did not concur with the majority of the committee in the propriety and expediency of bringing forward the measure at that time, thinking its introduction unfortunate and ill-timed, and made a minority report on Jan. 31, 1854, proposing several important amendments, which, although not directly adopted, for reasons hereafter explained, probably led to modifications of the bill of the Senate, which bill was finally adopted as an amendment to the House bill, and enacted into a law.

Mr. English was a conservative Democrat. The controversy about the institution of slavery, which had been going on, with but little intermission, ever since the formation of the Government, raged with greatly increased bitterness during the eight years immediately preceding the war. During all this period, Mr. English was in Congress, and more or less identified with the measures involving the question of slavery. It is therefore, perhaps, proper to briefly define the position he occupied upon this great question of the age, as gleaned from his speeches and the Congressional history of the period. "I am," said he in one of his speeches, "a native of a free State, and have no love for the institution of slavery. Aside from the moral question involved, I regard it as an injury to the State where it exists, and, if it were proposed to introduce it where I reside, would resist it to the last extremity." He greatly deprecated and unsparingly denounced the aggressive measures of the extremists of both sides, and their persistent agitation of the subject. He believed in faithfully maintaining all the rights of each individual State, as guaranteed by the Constitution, and that it would be wisest to refer the question at issue to that best and safest of all tribunals, the people to be governed, considering them to be the best judges of the soil and climate and wants of the country they inhabit, and the true judges of what will best suit their own condition and promote their welfare and happiness. Speaking for himself and his constituents, he said, upon another occasion, "We do not like the institution of slavery, neither in its moral, social nor political bearings, but consider that it is a matter which, like all other domestic affairs, each organized community ought to be allowed to decide for itself." The idea of "leaving the people of every State and Territory perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States," seemed to him at that time to be in accordance with the genius of our American institutions; but the storm raised by the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill resulted in the defeat of nearly all the members from the free States who voted for it. In fact, Mr. English was one of the only three in the United States who commanded strength enough to survive the storm. He was re-elected, and continued to support the policy of the administration during the XXXIVth Congress. During this Congress he made a speech in defense of the management of the Smithsonian Institution (of which he was a regent for eight years—1853-61), which was highly commended by Professor Henry, president of the Institution, Charles Henry Davis, and other eminent scientific gentlemen, Mr. Davis writing a letter in which he said Mr. English was entitled to "the gratitude and friendly regard of every scientific man in the country whose opinions are thought worth repeating."

Mr. English was not a candidate for re-nomination in 1856, but his constituents claimed they had a right to his services at that time, and he was again brought forward and elected, by a larger majority than ever before. Speaker Orr appointed him chairman of the committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the arduous duties of which he discharged with ability. In the meantime the agitation of the slavery question continued, and the Kansas controversy assumed a new and more dangerous aspect than ever. Application was made to admit Kansas as a State under what was known as the Lecompton Constitution, and this was favored by the South, and also by President Buchanan's administration. Mr. English acquired his widest reputation during this Congress by his course upon the Kansas policy of the administration. He was "Anti-Lecompton," but not of those who wished to cripple the administration, or break up his party organization, and he steadily and firmly opposed the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton Constitution until that instrument had been ratified by a vote of the people. Hitherto he had acted and voted in harmony with his political colleagues and the Democratic administration; but he now found it impossible to persevere in that course. In the closing paragraph of a speech delivered by him in the House of Representatives, in exposition of his views upon that question, he clearly defined his position and his ultimatum. He said: "I think, before Kansas is admitted, her people ought to ratify, or, at least, have a fair opportunity to vote upon, the Constitution under which it is proposed to admit her; at the same time, I am not so wedded to any particular plan that I may not, for the sake of harmony and as a choice of evils, make reasonable concessions, provided the substance would be secured: which is the making of the Constitution, at an early day, conform to the public will, or, at least, that the privilege and opportunity of so making it be secured to the people beyond all question. Less than this would not satisfy the expectations of my constituents, and I would not betray their wishes for any earthly considerations. If, on the other hand, all reasonable compromises are voted down, and I am brought to vote upon the naked and unqualified admission of Kansas under the Lecompton Constitution, I distinctly declare that I cannot, in conscience, vote for it." During the long and exciting contest over this question, which had seldom before been equaled in bitterness, and was really the prelude to the terrible Civil war, Mr. English never departed from the position taken in this speech.

As a party man he was anxious to heal the divisions that had sprung up among his political friends upon this question, and to relieve the administration and the South from the position they had taken, which Mr. English, in his heart, considered impolitic and dangerous. The great contest filled the country with the most intense excitement, and awakened the apprehensions of the most thoughtful and patriotic citizens. For five long months it was the all-engrossing topic in Congress, absorbing the attention of Senators and Representatives, and standing in the way of the transaction of all useful and legitimate public business. The Senate saw proper to pass a bill admitting Kansas under the Lecompton Constitution without limit or condition; but this bill, although it commanded the favor of the President and his cabinet, failed to receive the sanction of the House of Representatives. The House, on the other hand, passed a bill as a substitute for that of the Senate, but this the Senate would not accept, or the Executive approve. Thus was an issue formed between great co-ordinate branches of the Government, whose joint and harmonious action could alone remove the dangerous question and give peace to the country. In this stage of the proceedings, when the whole country had about abandoned the hope of a settlement of the disagreement between the two Houses, and the angry contest was likely to be adjourned for further and protracted agitation before a people already inflamed with sectional animosities, Mr. English took the responsibility of moving to concur in the proposition of the Senate asking for a committee of free conference. The excitement upon the occasion had scarcely ever been equaled in the House of Representatives. Upon adopting this motion the vote was a tie (108 to 108), but the Speaker voting in the affirmative the motion carried. As the Senate had asked for the conference, the managers on behalf of that branch of Congress were informed by Mr. English that propositions for a compromise must first come from them. If they had none to offer, the managers on the part of the House had none, and the conference would immediately terminate. The managers on the part of the Senate made several propositions, none of which, however, were acceptable to the members on behalf of the House. The Senate committee then asked the members from the House if they had any compromise to offer, to which Mr. English replied that he had none prepared, but he had a plan in his mind, based, however, upon the principle of a submission of the question of admission under the Lecompton Constitution, and an amended ordinance to a fair vote of the people of Kansas; and if the committee thought it worth while, he would prepare it, and submit it to them at their next meeting. They told him to do so. Thus came about the great Kansas compromise measure, commonly called the "English Bill," which finally passed both branches of Congress, and became the law. Mr. English never claimed that the "English bill" was entirely as he wished it, but it accomplished its object. Under this law the question of admission under the Lecompton Constitution was, in effect, referred back to the people of Kansas, and they voted against it.

Thus was the result accomplished which Mr. English had contended for from the beginning, and there is no inconsistency in his record upon this subject. On the final vote which admitted Kansas as a State he was still a member, and voted for her admission. President Buchanan wrote Mr. English a letter congratulating him upon the success of his compromise bill and prophesying it would make the name of English historical. The popular current in the North was still strongly against the Democratic administration, and the "English bill" entered into the ensuing political campaign, and came in for the usual amount of misrepresentation and abuse. Mr. English had again been brought forward for reelection, and the contest in his district assumed a national importance. His political opponents made extraordinary efforts to defeat him, and there was at one time some disaffection with a portion of his political friends who thought he should have voted for the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton Constitution. This disaffection finally subsided, resulting, probably, in part, from a letter, which was made public, written by the President himself, in which he spoke in the highest terms of Mr. English, and said if he had a thousand votes Mr. English should have them all cheerfully. In fact, although Mr. English had firmly opposed a leading measure of the administration, the President was well aware it was from conscientious convictions, and always manifested the most friendly feeling for him. These kindly relations existed to the end of Mr. Buchanan's life. The election of 1858 resulted in the triumphant return of Mr. English to Congress, by a larger majority than ever.

In the meantime the split in his political party continued to widen, and the shadows of the great Civil war began to be visible to his keen and experienced vision. Mr. English was for pacification, if possible, and favored every measure tending to that result. He introduced a proposition looking to that end, which, with other similar propositions, was referred to a committee, but all alike came to nothing.

On the subject of secession he was as firm and bold in opposing the views of his former political associates from the South, as he had been in opposing the admission of Kansas as a State under the Lecompton Constitution. He denounced it from the beginning, and made every effort to induce Southern members to abandon it. In a speech in the House of Representatives he plainly told the South that "the great Democratic party, that has so long and so justly boasted of its nationality, must not degenerate into a mere Southern sectional party, or a party that tolerates the sentiment of disunion; if it does, its days are numbered, and its mission ended." But his appeals were all in vain. The time for such appeals had passed, and the crisis of the great American conflict was at hand. It was now inevitable that the angry controversy would be transferred from the halls of Congress to be decided by a bloody and relentless war, an event he had hoped would never come, and zealously labored to avert. He now determined at all hazards to retire from Congress and active political life, after serving continuously through four terms, and he withdrew in 1861 with the full and unqualified endorsement of his constituents, as is shown by the fact that the convention which nominated his successor adopted unanimously the following resolution:

Resolved, That in selecting a candidate to represent this district in the Thirty-seventh Congress, we deem it a proper occasion to express the respect and esteem we entertain for our present member, Hon. William H. English, and our confidence in him as a public officer. In his retirement, in accordance with his well-known wishes, from the position of representative, which he has so long filled with credit to himself and benefit to the country, we heartily greet him with the plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

When the war broke out Governor Morton offered him the command of a regiment, but being without military tastes or knowledge he refused it. During the war Mr. English remained an active "war Democrat" and a warm supporter of Governor Morton's war policies, and in his public speeches recounted his position in Congress and recalled the fact that he had told his Southern colleagues that they could not expect the Northern Democrats to uphold them in their secession ideas. He continued to be one of the Governor's most trusted advisers, advanced money to the Governor to send troops to the front, and served as provost marshal of the Second Congressional district.

Mr. English's political career had many remarkable aspects besides its unusually early beginning. Up to the time of his retirement from Congress in 1861 he had never sustained a defeat at election. He lived in a period of remarkable transition for the United States, and his early ambitions were fostered among conditions which made the courage of his convictions and the defense of his principles necessary elements of political activity. While in Washington as a young man he was a clerk in the Senate during those stirring times when the burning questions of antebellum days brought forth the best efforts of Calhoun, Cass, Clay, Webster and Benton, as well as other great statesmen of the age. His experience in numerous other positions of similar character made him remarkably familiar with the movements of his party, and his extensive acquaintance in the organization made him invaluable as a worker. Thus the law, in which he had seemed destined to make a great name, gave way for the more urgent activities of politics and public service. He was qualified for leadership, and took a prominent part in all the great movements of the years during which he was in the legislative halls of his State and country. When he retired from politics it was to enter upon a business career in which his success was so great as almost to overshadow his earlier achievements. Only once after his voluntary retirement did he re-enter the political arena, and that was during the great national campaign of 1880, when he was the candidate for Vice-President on the Democratic national ticket of Hancock and English. However, while he had been out of politics for twenty years previously, so far as seeking or accepting office was concerned, during that time he was well known as an honored adviser in party councils, frequently presiding over conventions and in one important State campaign serving as chairman of the Democratic State central committee.

Upon his retirement from Congress Mr. English spent a year at the old home in Scott county, but the inaction was more than one of his nature could endure. He had allowed his law practice to lapse, and he had no heart to engage in public duties under the existing state of affairs. So his mind turned to business, he having become though somewhat indirectly, interested in financial matters. He had shown such ability in the management of the means he had accumulated that he was seriously advised to enter the banking business. Removing to Indianapolis, he in 1863 became identified with the organization of the First National Bank, the earliest institution under the national banking system in Indiana, and the first to issue notes under the then new banking law. He was president from the establishment of the bank until he retired on account of ill health, July 25, 1877. Other important financial interests also claimed his attention, and his bank ranked among the leading financial institutions of the country, and its influence upon the business of the city and State was inestimable. His personal standing was such that he was recognized as the foremost banker in the State, being president at one time of the Indianapolis Clearing House Association and of the National Bankers Association of Indiana. During his presidency of the First National Bank the panic of 1873 swept over the country, and his wise and conservative stand upon the proper method of handling the situation and preventing a recurrence of the conditions has always been conceded as indicative of the shrewdest insight regarding the true control of the country's finances. On one occasion several years after his retirement from the presidency of the bank or any control thereof he came to its rescue when it was in financial difficulties and a run was being made upon it, saving it from disruption by the sole strength of his personal credit and presence.

Mr. English was the owner of numerous pieces of real estate in Indianapolis and deeply interested in the development and opening up of the city, and at one time held a controlling interest in the street railways of the city. He encouraged all local improvements, aiding various enterprises with his means and influence. At the time of his death he was paying taxes on 448 pieces of property in Marion county, very little of this being outside of Center township, practically all of his local real estate interests being in Indianapolis. Besides, he had invested in real estate in Louisville, Ky., and Washington, D. C., and owned large tracts of farm land in Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri and Texas. His investments were so carefully made that a title accepted by William H. English was never disputed. He always strove to maintain the value of property and the good standing of any neighborhood in which he was interested, a fact so well known that his investments were invariably regarded as a benefit to any locality. His assessments were never questioned and always promptly paid. Mr. English was exacting about conformation to the stipulations of his various contracts, but he was equally punctilious about carrying out his own obligations to the letter. And although he was strict in business and money matters it is well known that he never foreclosed a mortgage except as a last resort, or took any legal action in the settlement of a debt until all other means had been exhausted.

Had Mr. English been successful merely as a business man his career would have been worthy of remark. But he had gained national fame as an able public servant before he had thought seriously of devoting himself wholly to business, holding a position of influence and power which few men would have had the courage to relinquish. And when busiest with financial problems he found pleasure and relief in the work which will most surely serve to perpetuate his name—his contributions to historical literature. As a speaker and writer Mr. English was fluent and forceful, and noted for the practical common sense of his arguments and the strength of his ideas. His writings were almost exclusively of an historical character. He first prepared a biographical work on the constitution and lawmakers of the State, which coming from his pen could not be otherwise than authoritative and valuable. During the last ten years of his life he devoted most of his spare time to the compilation and production of his "History of Indiana," and from material discovered in his researches on that account grew "The Conquest of the Northwest," the latter work coming out shortly before his death. It has not been equaled by any others on the subject. His study of the early history of his State had been carried on for many years, and the intimate knowledge he possessed on the subject, supplemented by the numerous rare documents of interest and value which he accumulated, qualified him thoroughly for his undertaking. Mr. English took the greatest pleasure in this work, into which he was led wholly by his interest. Regarding the "Conquest of the Northwest," a lawyer of high reputation gave his opinion as follows: "It is by far the most important, accurate and readable book ever published on this subject. It required great research and experience, and is the true foundation of the earliest history of the white settlements of the Northwest territory. * * * His historical researches were made with great care and expense, with indefatigable perseverance, and are a fitting monument for his character."

In 1885 a meeting of the surviving members of the Constitutional convention was held in Indianapolis, at English's opera house. There were not many. It was felt that it was high time to collect data regarding the early history of the State and put them into permanent form, and Mr. English was made chairman of the committee appointed for the work. In the end he had to assume the entire responsibility of the work, to which the last ten years of his life were practically devoted. His enthusiasm in collecting material never waned, and he was not only patient and laborious in his researches, but also traveled considerably in the prosecution of the work, hunting up and going over thoroughly many old manuscripts, some almost forgotten. He spared neither pains nor expense, using his means freely in obtaining valuable and pertinent documents, and in this connection it may be mentioned that his collection contained many rare and valuable papers and his rooms in the "Hotel English," where his last years were spent, were filled with all kinds of valuable relics, mostly of an historical character. His papers were gathered from every part of Indiana and the adjoining States, many being original documents, while others are authenticated copies. Governor Matthews said at the time of his death: "No one was better prepared to write the history of Indiana, and to the citizens of the State his loss is immeasurable. He possessed wonderful powers of research, tracing up important and hidden papers. The work was with him a labor of love, and he would have given to us a history of Indiana of which all could have been proud. The two volumes already published gave to thousands their first conception of the important part Indiana played in the war of the Revolution, and if he had been permitted to finish the remaining volumes he would have related much that would have added to the sentiment of State pride." Mr. Owen, the secretary of the State at the time of Mr. English's death, said apropos of the same subject: "The pride of his life was not the immense fortune he built up, but was his history of Indiana, which, indeed, is his worthy monument."

Mr. John H. Holliday, former proprietor of the Indianapolis News and a prominent citizen of Indianapolis, said regarding his work: "He could both labor and wait. This is shown by his history of Indiana, to which he has devoted many of his later years, and which will be his real monument. He started this with an exact, comprehensive idea, and worked for years in making a collection of material which no one else ever could have done. It will be the chief source of all writers about Indiana in the future, a mine of historical wealth and a monument of energy. I understand that it is now complete—a most fortunate thing. The first two volumes, recently published, have met the most favorable reception. Only last night I read a review of it in the New York Evening Post, a paper renowned for its literary criticisms, which spoke of it in terms of unqualified praise, calling it a noble and memorable contribution to American history. He had known so many of the men concerned in making Indiana, his family had been identified with it from the beginning, and he was so conversant with the incidents of its government and growth that he was fitted almost above all men to do the work. I hope the report that he has completed it is true, for it will be hard to find a worthy successor, even with his material available."

Another prominent citizen who knew Mr. English and his work well said of his history: "It is not too much to say that he has incorporated in his writings much of the history of the Mississippi valley that very probably would never have been rescued from oblivion."

The following is taken from the Indianapolis Journal of Saturday, Feb. 8, 1896, which devoted over a page to Mr. English and his achievements: "It was his intention, when he began to make a history of Indiana, to make a monument for himself as well as to give to this country a complete history, such as had never been previously written. When he was well into the work he found that George Rogers Clark had a strong bearing on the war of the Revolution. It is certain that no future history of the war of the Revolution will be complete without its chapter taken from Mr. English's 'Conquest of the Northwest.' This book, which has but recently come from the press, is only the preliminary to the history of Indiana, which he started out to write. He found he had so much material that he completed the work which has placed Indiana and the surrounding territory in a much more important place in the history of the country than it occupied before. The history of Indiana was left uncompleted but he has made arrangements in his will for the completion and publishing of the work. In the matter of collecting the material for his history he has shown a perseverance, a willingness to plod and a patience which have characterized much of the other work of his life. He has not been hurried, and no trouble has been too great for him to undertake to have every detail of the work without a flaw. The letters, state papers, and original letters from statesmen and soldiers of the last century, files of newspapers of nearly a century ago, rare old prints, portraits of prominent men and of their ancestors, are treasures to the historian and collector. Mr. English has not left this collecting to be done by letter writing and depending on others but he visited many places himself and made personal search. Many of the letters have been reproduced in facsimile in the book, and not less interesting are the facsimile scraps in the work, such as the autographs of people mentioned in the book, pictures and other things which are inserted as they occur in the text.

"One letter in the original which Mr. English had was written by Thomas Jefferson at Williamsburg Oct. 21, 1779. Another is the commission of Joseph Bowman as major, signed by Patrick Henry. There are personal letters of William Henry Harrison. Mr. English had one letter of William Henry Harrison which he would never show to any one. It is in the collection, and Mr. English said that it only could be read after his death. Numerous letters from Thomas Jefferson to George Rogers Clark are also included. The original patent issued by King George II to the father of the Major Bowman who was with Clark is in the list. Previous to Mr. English's writing there had never been a list of Clark's officers and men. He found the men had been given grants of land in Floyd, Clark, and part of Scott counties. He made a visit to those counties and found the name of the original grantee of land for every quarter section. This has all been methodically arranged and placed in the book in a section by itself. To show what Mr. English was willing to do is his effort in getting the perfect copy of the seal of the Northwest Territory. There were many documents with an impression, but none was perfect. He took the different parts and, after weeks of labor, had the perfect copy made. It was made four times before it pleased him. This is the seal which is on the cover of the book. Few people can conceive of the work that he put on the whole. One bit, of which Mr. English was very proud, was the coat of arms of the Rogers family. He went to Washington many times and visited every historical society east of the Mississippi river. He once heard that the Historical Society of Minnesota had some information which he wanted. He took a clerk and went to Minnesota, visited the society and secured permission to copy what he wanted.

"A rare old bit, which caused Mr. English to feel proud at having secured it, is a note of Francis Vigo's. In another place there is a map of Indiana with George Rogers Clark's route to different points, all drawn by Mr. English. Not only have papers and portraits contributed to the stock of material, but he found the old swords of George Rogers Clark and Joseph Bowman. From the original Virginia patent of land grants to Clark and his men for their services in the campaign, Mr. English secured much information.

"Mr. John J. Curtis, who was intimately associated with Mr. English and represented his publishers during the publication of his book, said Mr. English never lost his enthusiasm. Sometimes he would work till long after midnight, and then get up at 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning and go to work on it again. Mr. Curtis thinks that Mr. English prized the most highly the letter signed by Wyeth, Jefferson and Madison, which was written to Clark, giving the authority of the Virginia Legislature to Clark to carry on the campaign.

"Mr. English was opposed to dictation;

he could not get accustomed to it, and all his notes were written out in his own hand. His writing was very distinct and careful. It was as plain to read as typewriting. When the copy went to the printer it had corrections, and he never ceased to correct the proof as long as it was possible. He corrected the galley proof, the page proof and the plate proof. He studied every sentence, and when the proof left his hand for the last time he was perfectly satisfied with it. He did not hesitate to correct the last plate proof, as many authors do. He seemed to feel that this was to be his last work, and as such it should be as perfect as it was possible to have it. He used to keep the proof for days, and at one time, after the proof was made of a sketch of Father Gibault, he delayed the printer and sent the proof to Father Schmidt at Welz to see if it was correct. Some of the plates for the illustrations were made three and four times before he was satisfied with them. Finally, after years of patient labor and months of waiting for the material to be put into type and the proofs made and corrected, the books finally came from the binders. He chose the binding and the designs for the cover, with the George Rogers Clark figure as it stands just west of the soldiers' monument for the front cover and the seal of the Northwest Territory for the last cover. When the first copy of the books was taken to Mr. English he was as delighted as a child and expressed the greatest gratification with them. He never lost interest in the work, and often talked of it. Wednesday evening he was told of the distinguished attention which had been paid the book in a long criticism in a recent number of The Nation. He expressed his pleasure. It was not till the evening of life that Mr. English took up literary work, and it was a task that thousands of younger men would have not only hesitated but become discouraged over. It is a history of the Northwest broader in scope and more comprehensive than any ever written before, and, with the history of Indiana to appear, will be a lasting monument to the man when his political and business life will be hidden and lost even to memory."

Mr. English was an enthusiastic member of the State Historical Society, of which he was president at the time of his death. He remembered the society with a bequest in his will to aid it in its work.

Mr. English always maintained his interest in the welfare of Indianapolis and the management of its business affairs, and on important local questions was not bound by party ties, being independent in thought and speech. He was very public-spirited in his efforts to make the most of all funds expended for public purposes, and personally made many liberal contributions intended for such uses. He frequently attended City Council meetings and watched closely to keep down extravagant expenditures, but nevertheless he was never niggardly in opposition to spending money for real improvements, or in any way that would add to the prestige of his city and State. He was the author of the first set of resolutions adopted favoring the erection of the State soldiers' monument, was the author of the Bill which passed the Legislature authorizing it to be built and contributed the largest sum donated by any individual to the fund for its erection. He was subsequently appointed a member of the commission which had charge of building it, and later became president thereof. His business judgment, and his intimate knowledge of the history of the State, made him a very valuable member of that body. He was in favor of using the plans of the architect without change, and opposed many of the variations made from those plans which have since been regretted. He wrote the inscriptions which appear on the face of the monument and originated the idea of the subsidiary statues of General Clark, General Harrison, Governor Morton and Governor Whitcomb that surround it. The bronze tablet on the base of the monument of Gen. George Rogers Clark (at the west side of Monument Place) was purchased with the money due Mr. English for his services on the monument commission, and which he presented to the commission for the purpose to which it was applied.

Mr. English had a strong personality, but he never forced his convictions upon any one, and he was notably reserved and undemonstrative, though he was both positive and aggressive and could show spirit when necessary. His devotion to family ties was unusually strong, as shown in his solicitude for his parents during their declining years, and his pride in his children and grandchildren. This sense of filial duty was particularly strong. When he went to Washington, during his young manhood, he kept only enough of his savings for his immediate expenses, giving the balance to his father, to assist him in paying the balance of purchase money due on the family homestead ("Englishton Park"). Knowing his father would not accept it from his hands at such a time he sealed it in an envelope which he left with instructions not to be opened until after he was gone. He relied on himself to hew his own way and carve his own fortune. Later his father became quite well-to-do, but at that time, though fairly started, he was struggling to get possession of a large farm and home which cost more than he had cash to pay for, and the burden of meeting his payments as they fell due was heavy and burdensome, so that the gift was very acceptable.

Mr. English's tastes were quiet, and he was as averse to display of his material possessions as he was of his remarkable resources of character. His energy, perseverance and application enabled him to do anything to which he set his mind. His high sense of honor restrained him from directing his activities toward any but worthy objects. In business he was prudent and conservative, but too progressive to be over-cautious about adopting innovations, though he investigated new schemes thoroughly before giving them a trial. His executive ability was so universally relied upon that often he was called in to adjust difficult financial problems, and frequently in order to protect his own interests in concerns in which he had invested he had to assume, at least temporarily, the heavy responsibility of the entire management until matters were placed on a sound basis. Many instances of the confidence he enjoyed among Indianapolis business men are related by those who had long association with him. Mr. English had a fine presence and pleasant address, and his appearance suggested the intelligent, forceful, manly man.

During his first sojourn at Washington, while a clerk in the Treasury Department, Mr. English was married there, in 1847, to Emma Mardulia Jackson, of Virginia, whom he long survived. She died in 1877, and is buried in Crown Hill cemetery. To Mr. and Mrs. English were born two children, William E. and Rosalind. The latter became the wife of Dr. Willoughby Walling, late United States Consul to Edinburgh, Scotland, June 24, 1876, at which time he was a resident of Louisville, Ky., and to them have been born two children. Mr. English made a permanent home in Indianapolis when he established his business interests in the city, and he lived for a number of years in his beautiful residence fronting upon the circular park known as the "Governor's circle," because originally intended as the site for the residence of the governor of the State. But after the completion of the "Hotel English" at the corner of Meridian street and Monument Place (and which block is now the property of his son), he lived there until his death. Mr. English passed away Feb. 7, 1896, after several weeks' illness, and he was laid to rest Feb. 9, in Crown Hill cemetery, where he had erected a fine family monument several years previously. His funeral was conducted under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity, and Rev. John B. English (a first-cousin), a Baptist minister of New York, officiated. Nothing could have shown more clearly the general feeling regarding Mr. English than the manner in which the public received the news of his demise. By order of Governor Matthews the remains lay in state at the capitol on Feb. 8, on which day over 15,000 citizens passed through the Statehouse to take a last look at their distinguished fellow-citizen. The pall-bearers were men of the highest position in the city and State, including the governor and mayor. Messages of regret and condolence came from men of standing in every section of the country—President Cleveland, Vice-President Stevenson, Senators Voorhees and Turpie, and many others. Mr. English belonged to Center Lodge, No. 23, F. & A. M., in which lodge he was made a Mason a few years before his decease, his son, who was master of that lodge at the time, conferring the degrees. This was said to be the first occasion in the history of Masonry in this country where a son conferred the degrees on his father. Mr. English also belonged to the Sons of the American Revolution by virtue of his Revolutionary ancestor, Lieut. Philip Eastin, and held the right to membership in the Society of Colonial Wars through his direct descent from Col. John Hite of the Virginia Colonial Wars, Capt. Charles Smith of the French-English War and Louis DuBois, Mathew Blanchan and Cornelius Barrentsen Slecht of the Esopus (Kingston, N. Y.) Indian Wars.

English avenue, in Indianapolis, and the town of English, Ind. (county seat of Crawford county), are named for Mr. English, and a fine bronze statue of him was erected at the latter place shortly after his death. A magnificent bronze statue of him was recently unveiled, Sept. 28, 1907, at Scottsburg, the county seat of his old home county of Scott. The residents of his old Congressional district and of Southern Indiana generally attended in great numbers and the immense concourse of people was addressed by Hon. Charles W. Fairbanks, Vice-President of the United States, Hon. Hugh T. Miller, Lieutenant Governor of Indiana, ex-Senator John W. Kern, ex-Attorney General William L. Taylor, Judge Joseph H. Shea and Congressmen James E. Watson and William E. Cox. The statue was unveiled by Rosalind Orr English, four and one-half years old, the only granddaughter of William H. English and only child of Capt. William E. English and Helen Orr English, his wife. The statue is of heroic size, being eight feet, four inches high, and is a striking likeness. During the years to come it will stand as a fitting and lasting monument to the distinguished Indian in the midst of his old friends and neighbors of his native county.

COL. JOHN CHALFANT NEW had a career of fifty years in Indianapolis which has been equalled by few citizens of that municipality or, indeed, of the State of Indiana. As a public official and business man of the city, consul-general to London, England, and prominent worker in the State and national councils of the Republican party, he held a leading place among the distinguished residents of Indiana from the time he attained his majority until he passed away. Colonel New came of a family which has long been settled in America, and from the sturdy stock which gave patriots to the Revolution and the war of 1812 he inherited mental and moral qualities of a high order, as well as the executive ability which was so potent a factor in his energetic life. But he surpassed the achievements of his forefathers, intelligent and forceful though they were.

Jethro New, the Colonel's paternal grandfather, was born in Delaware, of English ancestry, and was a farmer by occupation. He was a soldier in the war of the Revolution from the beginning until the end, and immediately at the close of the Revolution came West. He lived for fifteen years in Kentucky, being a very old man before he came into Indiana to spend his last years with his children; he had a grant of land in what is now Clark county, this State, for his services in the Revolution. He lived to be over eighty. He had several sons and daughters.

John Bowman New, son of Jethro, was born in Delaware, was originally a farmer, and later in life became the owner of a cabinet-making establishment. For ten years he lived in Kentucky, and he came to Indiana as a soldier under General Harrison in the war of 1812, from North Carolina. In 1818 he made his home in Madison, from which point he moved to Vernon, where he spent a short time before coming on to Indianapolis, where he made his home until his death, in 1872, at the age of seventy-nine years. His widow passed to her rest in 1877, at the age of eighty years. Mr. New became a preacher in the Christian (Disciples) Church, and was one of the pioneer ministers of that denomination in Indiana, preaching in Indianapolis and at various other points in the State. He was a pioneer along with such men as John O'Kane, "Raccoon" John Smith, John Walker, Elijah Goodwin, Barton W. Stone, and other leading lights in that church. John B. New married Maria Chalfant, a native of Kentucky, and to them were born three sons and two daughters, of whom the only survivor is the eldest daughter, Mary C., widow of Dr. William C. Thompson.

Nathan Chalfant, the maternal grandfather of Colonel New, was born in Pennsylvania, of Welsh descent. By occupation he was a farmer and a planter, and he lived many years in Kentucky, where he became quite prosperous, and where he died when past middle life. His family consisted of thirteen children.

Colonel John C. New was born July 6, 1831, in Jennings county, Ind., and during his earlier childhood lived in Vernon, that county, where he began his attendance at the public schools. For some years he lived at Greensburg, Ind., and in 1847 entered Bethany College, in West Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1851, at the age of twenty years. Studying law in Indianapolis, he was there admitted to the Bar in 1852, and the same year entered the office of the county clerk, where he was employed as a deputy until 1856, when the clerk died and he was appointed to the place, in which he continued until 1861.

On the outbreak of the Civil war John C. New was appointed quartermaster-general of Indiana by Governor Morton. During his service as such he was elected to the State Senate for a term of two years, at the end of which time he became financial secretary of Governor Morton, serving in that capacity until, in January, 1865, he became cashier of the First National Bank of Indianapolis, being associated with William H. English. This position he held until March 18, 1875, when he was appointed treasurer of the United States by President Grant, which place he resigned in July, 1876, to become vice-president of the First National Bank of Indianapolis. In 1878 Colonel New sold out his banking interests, and, devoting himself considerably to politics, was chairman of the Republican State Central Committee until 1879. The following year he took a position on the National Republican Committee, which he held until 1892. Colonel New was appointed assistant secretary of the United States Treasury by President Arthur, in February, 1882, and continued in that office until May, 1884. In 1880 and again in 1884 he was an active worker in national politics, and in 1888 he worked indefatigably for General Harrison in the national gathering of the Republican party. The following year he was appointed consul-general of the United States at London, England, resigning when President Cleveland took office, in 1893. For thirty years he played a prominent part in the history of the Republican party, not only as an office holder and party leader, but also in the shaping of its policies as the controlling owner of the Indianapolis Journal. He was a man of attractive appearance, with a good figure and finely shaped head, and his face and manner bore out the general good impression. His death, which occurred June 4, 1906, was widely mourned, for he had a circle of acquaintances as broad as the country itself.

Colonel New was married, May 24, 1854, to Miss Melissa, daughter of Joseph and Hannah (Matthews) Beeler, and to this marriage was born one son, Harry S. Mrs. Melissa New was born in Marion county, Ind., Feb. 8, 1833, and died Sept. 16, 1867, at the age of thirty-four years. She was a member of the Christian Church. Joseph Beeler, her father, was a native of Virginia, when he came to Indiana, being numbered among the very early settlers of this State. He made a location in Morgan county, where he cleared and owned a farm, but in later years he came to a point in Marion county seven miles southwest of Indianapolis. His wife came here from Ohio when a girl, making the trip with her brother, on horseback, and she first met Joseph Beeler at the White river, nineteen miles below Indianapolis. He was towing a raft, and helped them across the river. Mr. Beeler was always a farmer, and he died in 1850 on his home place. He left three daughters and two sons.

Colonel New was married (second) in September, 1868, to Miss Elizabeth R. McRae, of Cumberland county, Va., a daughter of John H. and Elizabeth (Williamson) McRae, and to this union were born two daughters, Elizabeth Rowena and Rowena McRae. Elizabeth R. married William R. McKeen, Jr., of Terre Haute, who is now superintendent of motive power for the Union Pacific Railway Company, with his headquarters at Omaha, Nebr. Rowena McRae married Ernest H. Burford, of Indianapolis, son of W. B. Burford, senior member of the firm of W. B. Burford & Company.

Colonel New belonged to the Christian Church, of which his widow is also a member. In 1871-72 he built for himself the very handsome and attractive residence at No. 518 North Pennsylvania street which he occupied until his death. This house was two years in course of construction, and is regarded as one of the most elegant homes in the city.

We may fittingly close this sketch with a brief article from the pen of Gen. John C. Co-burn, written under date of Dec. 20, 1906: "John C. New came from Jennings county, Ind., to Indianapolis (a young man) with his father's family. He was a graduate of Bethany College, Virginia, of which the famous Alexander Campbell was president. John C. New began the practice of law in Indianapolis and on the death of William Stewart was appointed clerk of the Marion Circuit court. During the war of the Rebellion he served as quartermaster-general of the State of Indiana, and was a close associate of Governor Morton. He was competent and accurate, and gave entire satisfaction in each of these offices. He was afterward engaged in banking and was associated with William H. English in the First National Bank of Indianapolis, and was appointed treasurer of the United States during President Grant's second administration, and was assistant secretary of the treasury under President Arthur, and consul-general to London, England, under President Harrison. He discharged the duties of these offices accurately and faithfully, with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the Government. He purchased the Indianapolis Journal newspaper and printing establishment, which was conducted by himself and son Harry Stewart New for a number of years. His father was a pioneer minister of the Christian Church. Among his personal friends and associates were Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Walter Scott, John O'Kane, Isaac Errett, William K. Pendleton, and many others. He was a soldier in the war of 1812 under General Harrison. He was a very intelligent, decorous and honorable citizen."

JOHN HENRY BYRNE NOWLAND (deceased) was born in Frankfort, Ky., Oct. 12, 1813, son of Matthias R. Nowland, and came of distinguished ancestry in both paternal and maternal lines. His maternal grandfather, Capt. John Byrne, was a captain in the Virginia line during the war of the Revolution, and afterward engaged in the wars with the Indians in Kentucky. One thousand acres of land were awarded him for his services in the Revolution. Phillips Nowland, his paternal grandfather, established and edited the Manchester (England) Chronicle, and had Tom Paine for a regular contributor. His sympathies were heartily and unreservedly with the colonists who had become Revolutionists, and he championed their cause very effectively in England. The Nowlands came to this country soon after the establishment of peace, landing at Philadelphia, and made their home in Dover, Delaware, where Matthias R. Nowland was born. Phillips Nowland attended the inauguration of President Washington, where he was treated with distinguished courtesy. After the death of his wife, Elizabeth, he moved to Kentucky, and later went to Texas to engage in an effort to conquer Mexico, though he received a permit from the government to gather wild horses. His purpose was suspected, and he and his party were taken prisoners by the Mexicans and executed on the plaza in the City of Mexico. His son, John R. Nowland, died side by side with Davy Crockett at the battle of the Alamo, while engaged in avenging the death of his father.

Matthias R. Nowland and his brother-in-law were here at the time the commissioners were locating the State Capital, and Mr. Nowland told them if they would select the mouth of Fall creek, as his place was then called, he would go back to Kentucky and move his family in, bringing with him as many of his neighbors as possible. In the new settlement Mr. Nowland early took the lead, as he was a man of education and tact, and had means as well. The first sale of lots was held Oct. 9, 1821, from his cabin, on Washington street, between Missouri and West streets. Many of the early settlements were made near the White river, as the general impression prevailed that the future city would be located there. Mr. Nowland was appointed by the commissioners one of a committee to select a graveyard, in company with Daniel Shaffer and James Blake. They selected the site one Sunday, and the next Sunday Daniel Shaffer was buried there—the first to be laid to rest in the new cemetery. He was soon followed by Mr. Nowland, who had bought the tract of land bounded by Washington, East and Liberty streets, where he owned and operated the first brickyard, in which he took a severe cold, his death ensuing Nov. 11, 1822. He left a widow and several children, his son, John, whose name introduces this article, being only nine years old.

John H. B. Nowland came to Indiana with his father and was the last of a family of twelve, including hired help, to arrive in the State. The date of his arrival was Nov. 4, 1820, and he attended the first school in Indianapolis and also the first Sunday-school. The day school was taught by Ebenezer Sharpe, who had a gold repeater, which he frequently sent to the silversmith's, as the jeweler was then called, to be regulated, selecting first one boy and then another to take the watch. The teacher discovered that the boys tampered with it, but young John was never caught as he waited until he was out of the hearing of Mr. Sharpe, and thereafter he carried the watch whenever it was necessary to have it regulated. That watch was placed in Mr. Nowland's hands a few months before his death by the granddaughter of Mr. Sharpe, after an interval of seventy-nine years.

Mr. Nowland attended the State University at Bloomington, a notable privilege in those days, as but few could secure the benefits of a higher education, and among his classmates was Governor Whitcomb. True to the traditions of his ancestors he was active in the public affairs of his day, and he was only nineteen when he was private secretary to Governor Jennings, the first governor of the State, serving as such at the time of the treaty with the Pottawatamies and Miamis, in 1832;

he was personally acquainted with Francis Godfroy, the great war chief of the Miamis, as he was with Richardville, the civil chief of the same tribe. He also had personal acquaintance with every governor of the State up to the time of his death, and was related to two by marriage. Mr. Nowland was appointed to a government position under President Tyler, and lived in Washington seven years, while there being a frequent and popular contributor to the Washington Star. This was in the days of Daniel Webster, John C. Calhoun, William Seward and Henry Clay, and Mr. Nowland and his wife attended a reception given by Henry Clay in honor of the passing of the Compromise Bill which admitted California and Texas into the Union. They also attended the only reception given to Fredricka Bremer in the United States. This was a notable occasion, adorned by all the great literary lights of the country, one of whom, Washington Irving, was at one time a beau of the mother of Mrs. Nowland. The day following the reception he was a guest in the Nowland home.

Mr. Nowland was engaged as a merchant in Indianapolis in the days when that business involved long and tiresome as well as dangerous journeys to buy goods in the East. Often he was obliged to make a trip by stage to Philadelphia, carrying with him in a strap around him as much as ten thousand dollars at a time.

Mr. Nowland and Miss Amelia T. Smith were married in 1840, the wedding, which took place in Christ Church, being notable as the first church wedding occurring in the city. Her father, Justin Smith, had the first wholesale house in Indianapolis, whither he moved from Rochester, N. Y., with his family in the fall of 1838. He came of distinguished lineage, being a grandson of General Otis of Revolutionary fame, and a great-grandson of Col. James Otis, the president and the oldest member of the King's Council in Massachusetts in 1764. The Nowland homestead on Washington street between Meridian and Pennsylvania streets, was the third brick house erected in the city, and was used by the Nowlands for forty years; up to the present time it has had but three owners. The Nowlands brought to this city the first keel boat that ever navigated the White river in Indianapolis, bringing in provisions for the settlers, and they had the third piano in the city.

Mr. Nowland was considered a very fluent and entertaining talker as well as an interesting and picturesque writer, and he was a contributor to the local press for about sixty-five years. Two valuable books on local history emanated from his pen, "Early Reminiscences of Indianapolis" and "Prominent Citizens of 1876." Several years before his death he was elected an honorary member of the Indiana Historical Society, and received the honor of having a street named for him by the city, which afforded him much pleasure. In the editorials on his death, which occurred Aug. 1, 1899, the papers said: "The death of Mr. Nowland removes an interesting and historical figure. He had been a leading authority on our local history, and did much to preserve it. His works are something that will grow more valuable as time passes, and his friends may be sure that future generations will feel even more gratitude for it than the present one." "Mr. Nowland served a great purpose in this city, and was regarded as a walking encyclopedia of all valuable information regarding its early days. There was a time in our history when no statistics were made, and few people either in public or private life were giving attention to the minute details important to all the world, but invaluable to us at home. The generation which he represented has passed away, and we know it through the efforts which he made to preserve its history. There is little else that is available that is a first hand report of the intimate life in Indianapolis, during its first years, and but for what he has written we could hardly build up a true conception of that earlier life. He saw Indianapolis grow from three log cabins to the city which now honors his memory. His books will, indeed, always be conspicuous in our chronicles, and to him will the future historian be indebted more than the casual reader recognizes, for scattered all through his gossipy reminiscences is a great amount of matter that graphically reflects the spirit of the times when our city and commonwealth were in a formative state."

As a citizen Mr. Nowland was a generous and kind-hearted man, devoted to his friends. As a father he was kind and indulgent, and a bountiful provider for his children's wants. He probably knew more public men in the Territory and State of Indiana than any other man living or dead in Indiana. A widow and two children, Edwin R. Nowland and Miss Justine Otis Nowland, survive him.

HON. JOHN WORTH KERN, a distinguished attorney at law in Indianapolis, was born in Howard county, Ind., Dec. 20, 1849, son of Jacob H. Kern, and grandson of Jacob Kern, who was born July 4, 1777, at Kerntown, Frederick Co., Va., of Holland-Dutch descent. His great-grandfather, Adam Kern, came to America about 1750, from the Rhine, Germany, with two other brothers. They settled in Pennsylvania, but Adam went to Frederick county, Va., where he laid out Kerntown. Jacob Kern was a blacksmith by trade. He came to Indiana in 1836, settling in Shelby county, where he died at about the age of seventy years. He was the father of six or seven children.

Jacob H. Kern, born in 1813 in Virginia, was a physician by calling. He came to Indiana in 1836, locating first in Shelby county, and in 1845 moved to Howard county, when it was an Indian reservation, just opened up to settlement. In 1871 he moved back to Virginia, living in Botetourt county, near Daleville, where he died in April, 1900, aged eighty-seven years. Dr. Kern was a Democrat in politics. He never drank nor used tobacco, nor swore in his life. He was twice married, his first union being to Nancy Liggett, who was born in Ohio, one of the twelve children of George Liggett, a native of Virginia, who moved to Ohio and thence in an early day to Indiana. He died in Shelby county, Ind., at the age of about seventy-five years. He was a miller by occupation. Jacob H. and Nancy (Liggett) Kern had two children, Sarah E. (wife of Isaac Engel, of Daleville, Va.) and John Worth. The mother died in 1859, at the age of thirty-five or thirty-six years. She was a Methodist. Dr. Kern's second marriage, which occurred in 1860, in Virginia, was to Miss Sarah M. Engel, who survived him but a few months.

John W. Kern was reared in Howard county, in the village of Alto, attended school there and at the Normal school in Kokomo, and graduated when nineteen years of age, in 1869, from the Law Department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor. He began practising immediately at Kokomo, where he remained until 1885. In 1884 he had been elected reporter of the Supreme court, and taking the office in January, 1885, moved to Indianapolis, where he has had his home ever since. He held that office four years. In 1892 he was elected to the State Senate, in which body he served four years. He has also served two terms as city attorney of Indianapolis; was city attorney at Kokomo for seven years; was appointed by Attorney General Olney special assistant United States attorney in 1893 to prosecute the Indianapolis bank wreckers; in 1900 he was the Democratic candidate for governor of Indiana; was unanimously renominated for the same position in 1904, and received the complimentary vote of his party for United States senator in 1905. He has always been a Democrat and is one of the party's leaders in his State.

John W. Kern was married Nov. 10, 1870, to Miss Julia Anna Hazzard, daughter of David Hazzard, and to this union came two children, Fred Richmond and Julia Anna. Fred Richmond Kern died Feb. 26, 1901, in Washington, D. C. He served with considerable distinction as a private in the Spanish-American war, being the only private volunteer soldier from Indiana that took part in the battle of Santiago, and belonged to the 1st District of Columbia Volunteers, the only regiment raised there. Miss Julia Anna Kern is a graduate of Mrs. Sewall's Girls' Classical School of Indianapolis, class of 1901. The mother of these children died Sept. 1, 1884, aged thirty-four years. She was a member of the Methodist Church. On Dec. 23, 1885, Mr. Kern married Miss Araminta A. Cooper, daughter of Dr. William and Eliza (Newcomb) Cooper, of Kokomo. Two sons have been born to this union, John W. Kern, Jr., and William Cooper Kern. Mrs. Araminta A. Kern is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a woman of the most estimable graces and virtues. The family reside at No. 1836 North Pennsylvania street.

Hon. John W. Kern belongs to Howard Lodge, No. 70, F. & A. M., of Kokomo; to Indianapolis Consistory, Scottish Rite Masons; to Star Lodge, No. 7, Knights of Pythias; and to Indianapolis Lodge, No. 13, B. P. O. Elks. He became a director of the Commercial Club soon after its organization and president in 1904. He also belongs to the University Club, the Country Club, and the Century Club, and was the first president of the Indiana Democratic Club.

GEORGE HASTY, M. D., was settled in Indianapolis in the practice of medicine for over thirty years, and was one of the distinguished members of his profession in the city. He was the founder of the Physio-Medical College of Indiana, in which he lectured for a number of years, was prominent in the various medical associations, and held such high ideals of the obligations of his profession that he enjoyed the confidence and respect of all who knew him. A thoroughly honest and absolutely truthful man, he was sincere in his desire to do all he could for the benefit of his fellows, interesting himself in all things which he thought would promote the welfare of the city and its residents. He believed in doing the greatest good to the greatest number, and usually devoted his talents to projects which would encompass that end, but nevertheless his private charities were numerous, though he endeavored to bestow them worthily.

Dr. Hasty was born Sept. 30, 1835, in Henry county, Ind., son of Thomas and Ann (Raper) Hasty, and grandson of Thomas Hasty. The latter was born in Delaware and was a farmer by occupation. He reared his family of several sons and daughters in the West, dying in either Ohio or Indiana.

Thomas Hasty, the Doctor's father, was born in Lexington, Ky., but left his native State when ten years old, growing to manhood in Ohio. He was an early settler in Indiana, in 1834 locating in Henry county, where he opened up a farm which he cleared of the heavy timber. He was a farmer all his life. He died there in 1893, at the age of eighty-five years. Thomas Hasty was twice married, his first wife being Ann Raper, a native of Wythe county, Va., whom he married in Ohio. Her father, John Raper, was born in Liverpool, England, and on coming to the United States first settled in Virginia, but soon removed to Wayne county, Ind., where he cleared up and occupied a farm three miles south of Richmond. He died at an advanced age. He reared a large family. Mr. Raper served in the war of 1812. To Thomas and Ann (Raper) Hasty were born six children, four sons and two daughters, who grew to maturity, but only two now survive: Elizabeth, wife of T. B. Keesling, of San Jose, Cal.; and Mary, wife of O. H. Modlin, of Excelsior, Minn. The mother passed away in 1865, at the age of fifty-seven years, and Mr. Hasty married for his second wife Mary Reese. After her death he married Mrs. Cooper, who survives.

George Hasty was reared on his father's farm in Henry county, Ind., where he attended a log cabin school. His intellectual attainments, however, were not hindered and shut in by his limited advantages, and in 1856 he took up the study of medicine, graduating from the Cincinnati Physio-Medical Institute. He began professional practice in his native county, where he remained until 1872, when he transferred his residence and interests to Indianapolis. That city was the scene of his subsequent labors, which were marked with unusual success. From 1860 to 1869 Dr. Hasty was a lecturer in the Institute from which he graduated and he founded the Physio-Medical College of Indiana at Indianapolis, for which he lectured until 1896. His lectures covered a period of thirty-seven years. He was prominently associated with the Indianapolis Physio-Medical Society (which he founded), the First District Physio-Medical Society of Indiana, the Indiana Physio-Medical Association, and the American Association of Physio-Medical Physicians and Surgeons. Dr. Hasty was remarkably successful in his life work, becoming prominent not only in his profession but also in many lines of worthy activity in his adopted city, where his kindly heart and good deeds won him many friends and admirers. He was a Republican from the days of Fremont. During the Civil war he served in the Home Guard. He was an enthusiastic Mason for a number of years, and at one time served as master of the lodge in his home town, Mechanicsburg. His death, which occurred Dec. 23, 1905, was widely mourned in the city.

On April 25, 1861, Dr. Hasty married Miss Caroline M. Julian, daughter of Peter and Adaline (Hess) Julian, and they lived in the home at the corner of West Michigan and California streets, Indianapolis, where the Doctor bought when he first came to Indianapolis. His widow still resides there. She is a member of the Christian Church.

Shubal Julian, Mrs. Hasty's grandfather, was one of the early settlers of Wayne county, Ind. His father, Isaac Julian, was born in France, and married a Long. Shubal Julian was born in Guilford county, N. C., and married Bridget Hoover, who was born in Wayne county, Ind., where her father, Peter Hoover, was an early pioneer. Mr. Julian moved to Henry county, where he died, at Cadiz, when ninety-four years old. His brother, Rene Julian, was the first clerk of Henry county.

NICHOLAS McCARTY, SR., passed away over fifty years ago, but his memory still lives in Indianapolis, and, indeed, all over the State. He was a pioneer of Indiana, and impressed himself deeply upon its morals and politics. His influence on the mercantile life of his adopted city is yet felt, and among the older residents there are many who remember the days of his business activity, when "McCarty's Corner" was the busiest place in the growing metropolis.

Mr. McCarty was a native Virginian, born Sept. 26, 1795, at Moorefield, Hardy county, in the Alleghany mountains, in that part of the Old Dominion now included in West Virginia. He was reared, however, in Pittsburg, Pa., whither his mother moved soon after the death of his father, which occurred when he was very young. This circumstance threw him upon his own resources at a tender age, and he not only supported himself, but with characteristic filial devotion found delight in being able to provide his mother with every comfort. He had few advantages in his youth, even for ordinary schooling. Before he was twenty he left Pittsburg, going to Newark, Ohio, where he soon entered the employ of Mr. Buckingham, one of the foremost merchants of that State, with whom he continued for several years. He at once displayed the traits which marked his career, and Mr. Buckingham soon intrusted him with the superintendence of one of his branch stores, near Newark. This increased responsibility was met by increased industry and more strict attention to his duties, and the fidelity with which he served his employer laid the foundation of a friendship which lasted as long as they lived. Mr. McCarty did so well that within a few years he felt competent to begin business on his own account, having saved enough to justify a modest venture.

The emigration fever then pervading the country had seized him, and he started toward the setting sun. When in the vicinity of Indianapolis he became impressed with the fertility of the soil, and with Indianapolis as a geographical center, and in the fall of 1823, then a young man of twenty-eight, Mr. McCarty settled in Indianapolis, of which city he was a resident thereafter until his death. He established himself at what was popularly known for over thirty years as "McCarty's Corner," in a building at the southwest corner of Washington and Pennsylvania streets. The first merchant of importance to settle in this city, and the first to open on so liberal a scale, his store attracted an unusual share of attention and his success was out of the ordinary. With a degree of confidence little understood in his day, he soon branched out extensively by establishing stores at various points in the State—Laporte, Greenfield, Covington, Cumberland and Waverly. To conduct these branches profitably without neglecting his central establishment he employed many young men in whom he took great interest, and several of whom attained success in later life. He not only aimed to give them adequate commercial experience, but endeavored to instill into them those sterling principles which made him so respected as a man, aside from any reputation he may have won in business life. Mr. McCarty was one of the greatest merchants of his time central Indiana had known. He continued to carry on his first place in Indianapolis for many years, and erected a substantial brick residence south of the store, which was the home of his family. The ground on which the Century building now stands was his barnyard in connection with his house and store.

Mr. McCarty's enterprise and progressive methods were proverbial in the early days, and the stories of his original and ingenious expedients for overcoming the obstacles that blocked the path of the pioneer merchant warrant the belief that he would have been a leading spirit in any day or under any conditions. But though he maintained his aggressive energy to the last, Mr. McCarty never lowered the high standard of honor with which he set out in life. He never promoted his own interests at the expense of another's, a characteristic so generally recognized by all who knew him that, in spite of the fact that he was notably successful, he never excited any but the friendliest feelings among his associates. He shared his prosperity with the communities in which it was won and was ever a generous and public-spirited citizen. But even better than his public benefactions were the various enterprises he set on foot which gave profitable employment to many, and advanced the welfare of the localities in which they were carried on. One of the early industries in Indiana which for many years was a source of revenue that added substantially to the incomes of the pioneer residents was the collection of ginseng and its preparation for shipment. As early as 1821, following the advice of Philadelphia friends, Mr. James Blake came to Indianapolis to investigate the possibilities of this business. At that time ginseng grew abundantly in the woods all about the settlement, and as the demand from China was on the increase he arranged to ship it from Philadelphia. In a little house south of the creek known as Pogue's run, on what is now South Delaware street, where the depot of the Big Four railroad is now located, he installed a drying and purifying apparatus, where Mr. McCarty collected the roots sent in by the farmers to his place at Indianapolis and his various branch stores. May a farmer helped out a short corn crop by the profits from his "sang," as it was called. There was a little hoe made especially for gathering the roots, called a "sang hoe," an implement that has been obsolete for many years. This business was one adjunct to Mr. McCarty's merchandising, barter being common in the early days. Another venture somewhat out of the ordinary was his contracting to supply the Indians, and in the course of this business he became quite familiar with the dialects of two or three of the tribes on the Miami Reservation.

Mr. McCarty's alert intelligence was displayed in his efforts to introduce or discover new sources of revenue for his locality, and thus he became identified with the attempt to introduce the silk growing industry in about 1835. Again about 1840 he began one of the most important undertakings of his career, the cultivation and manufacture of hemp, though the financial condition of the country prevented the full development of its possibilities. He conducted this industry on his bayou farm, and in other localities. The part of this farm now in the city of Indianapolis was formerly incorporated and named West Indianapolis, with a population now of about seven thousand, where the Stock Yards, Car Works, Nordyke & Marmon Company and the Parry Manufacturing Company, as well as other establishments, are located. The fiber was rotted, broken and cleaned in vats and mills on the bluff bank of the creek, between Morris and Wilkins streets, near Carlos street. The venture proved unprofitable and was abandoned in two or three years.

In company with James M. Ray and James Blake, Mr. McCarty built the first steam flour-mill in the vicinity of Indianapolis; this was situated on the north side of Washington street, at the end of the National Bridge. Though several of his enterprises were unsuccessful, Mr. McCarty never lost faith in the future of the city. He owned large tracts of land, which he bought at an early day, in the immediate vicinity of Indianapolis, as well as lands in different parts of the State. Those in the vicinity of Indianapolis became exceedingly valuable, his descendants reaping the benefit of his judgment and foresight.

Mr. McCarty was eminently a business man and had no aspirations for public honors, though he had a taste for politics which, if cultivated, would have brought him into much greater prominence. He gave the benefit of his great personal popularity to the success of the Whig party during its last years. As commissioner of the Canal Fund he effected the first loan ever made to Indiana. His action in this matter was such as to commend him to those in authority, as well as to the people at large, and no man ever acquitted himself in a fiducial capacity with more conscientiousness and fidelity than he. But he eventually resigned the position, and an article which appeared in the Indiana Democrat of June 13, 1840, under the heading "Trembling in the Whig Camp," explains his position in the matter:

"We are not so blinded by party as to be unwilling to award justice to real merit, let it be found in what ranks it may. It is a fact highly creditable to Indiana that the early negotiations of loans by our Fund Commissioners were eminently successful. Previous to the passage of the Internal Improvement Bill of 1836 Nicholas McCarty, the leading merchant of this place, and we believe of the State, stood at the head of that commission. Mr. McCarty has always been a bitter opponent of General Jackson and a warm advocate of the United States Bank. We consider him a well-meaning politician, although differing with us in political matters. When the Internal Improvement Bill of 1836 was becoming a law Mr. McCarty, as a Fund Commissioner, plainly told the members of the Legislature that it would be a ruinous policy for the State not to provide means at that time to pay interest on the loans to be effected—that if they did not our bonds would soon depreciate. He sent to the Democrat office a short time previous to the passage of the bill an extract from the message of Governor Marcy of New York, showing the ruinous policy of not providing the means to pay interest previous to making loans. We then stopped the press, took out other matter and placed this extract in type, printed it, and circulated additional copies, containing this extract, amongst the members of the Legislature. But the Whig members, such as Stapp, Evans and others, would then hear no arguments and passed Mr. Carty's suggestions by as the idle wind, regarding them as a clog to the bill. They were afraid the people would open their eyes if they would see the amount of taxes and then go for classification. Well, what was the result? The result was Nicholas McCarty soon after resigned the station of Fund Commissioner. He was unwilling further to risk his high character as a financier in the ruinous policy the State was about pursuing. * * * * Mr. McCarty as a friend of the United States Bank now warmly supports General Harrison, but he has become alarmed at the prospects of his party in this State, and even in our own county of Marion. He says truly the Democracy is aroused, and at a meeting of the Tippecanoe Club, on Wednesday evening last, declared that unless they could make the Whigs in the country organize this county would go for VanBuren—nothing else would save them. We can assure the Whigs that nothing can save them in this county—their fate is sealed—their doom is fixed—Marion county is Democratic. We have heard that at the Tippecanoe Club in this town Mr. McCarty made the statement above alluded to. If he did not we shall contradict it when apprised of the fact. Few men in this State have more foresight than he. As an instance we refer to a remarkable fact. Knowing as he well did the embarrassment this State was running into, he resigned his office as Fund Commissioner long before the pressure commenced. Possessed of that keen foresight which every real merchant should have, he would not jeopard his character as a merchant to continue connected as an officer with a ruinous system of internal improvement. His proverbial discretion in business and his foresight in financial operations entitle his opinion to much weight (where interest of course is excluded) and we believe with him that this county is Democratic. Can the Whigs hope to succeed in this State when one of the principal men abandons all official connection with their system of extravagance?

This 'Hoosier Girard' knew too well that his character would be at stake if long connected with such a system. As a friend of the United States Bank he supports Judge Bigger for governor and is anxious for his election, knowing, as he does, that Judge Bigger in our State Legislature opposed the State Bank of Indiana because he believed it would do away with the necessity of a United States Bank so far as Indiana is concerned."

From 1843 the Whig party had been blamed for the financial distress which prevailed in the country and was greatly in the minority in Indiana, but the party leaders hoped they could gain in Congress by putting up a candidate whose personality could overcome the objection of the party. Mr. McCarty was emphatically a man of the people and had the faculty of endearing himself to all classes, but he preferred a private business to public employment, and was seldom a candidate for office, though he could have had almost any office in the gift of his party for the asking. In 1847 he was the Whig candidate for Congress in his district, and though defeated by Judge Wick by a small majority was much stronger in the district than his party, the Democratic party being greatly in the ascendance at this time. Mr. McCarty made no show of oratory and knew none of the wiles of the politician, but he had executive ability, strong common sense and a clear understanding of the needs of the situation, and his addresses were exceedingly effective and did him great credit as against an opponent who was trained to the conduct of campaigns and accustomed to public duties. A few years afterward Mr. McCarty was a candidate for the State Senate and was elected and served three years—the last three under the old constitution. He was made chairman of the Committee on Corporations, and as such jealously guarded the interests of the people.

In 1852 the Whig State Convention nominated Mr. McCarty for governor, for the first gubernatorial term under the new constitution. He did not desire the nomination, and strenuously opposed its being made. However, it was believed that because of his honest, upright character and business connections and large agricultural interests he was stronger than any other man, and when the convention met it was apparent he would be nominated if he would accept. But it was so generally understood that he would not stand that the convention hesitated to make the nomination, and after appointing a committee to see him and solicit his consent it adjourned until the following day. That evening the committee met Mr. McCarty for a conference and found him firmly fixed in his determination not to make the race. It labored with him long and earnestly, but he continued obdurate. At last George G. Dunn, one of the most gifted Indianians of that or any other day, arose and, in the name of the Whigs of Indiana, demanded that Mr. McCarty cast behind him his personal wishes and accept the standard his party wished to place in his hands. This touched him deeply, and, asking until the next morning for consideration, he left the room. It was felt at once that Mr. Dunn's shot had hit the mark. Next morning the committee notified the convention that Mr. McCarty would make the race, and he was nominated by acclamation. After this the convention was addressed by several distinguished speakers, among them James T. Suitt and George G. Dunn.

W. W. Woollen, in his Biographical and Historical Sketches of Early Indiana, in his sketch of George G. Dunn, says: "Mr. Dunn in his speech drew a dark picture of the condition of the Whig party until Mr. McCarty consented to be a candidate, and then rising on tip-toe and bending his body forward and pointing his finger at the nominee he exclaimed with the power of a Booth:

"Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that lowered upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried."

"It is a great pity that this speech was not taken down at the time and preserved. It embodied the wit and drollery of Corwin, the invective and sarcasm of Randolph, and the eloquence of Clay, in one symmetrical whole. It lives only in the recollection of those who heard it, and, happily for the author, he was one. These men will be gone after a while, and then this great forensic effort will be forgotten, or remembered only as it is handed down from father to son." There are but very few living who heard this great speech, among them Gen. John Coburn, who says it was one of the greatest speeches of the kind ever delivered of that time or any other time.

Though defeated, Mr. McCarty's campaign against Governor Wright was a notable one, for the Governor was an educated man, one of the best "stumpers" in the United States, and a man whose long familiarity with public life had made him a master of campaign tactics and a ready speaker who could command attention wherever he went. Mr. McCarty and Governor Wright made the canvass with the utmost good feeling. They went from place to place together, often riding in the same carriage. They had no petty bickerings nor angry words, their intercourse being more like members of the same family, than of leaders of hostile parties. On the stump there was great difference between them. The Governor was a good talker and a good reasoner; Mr. McCarty was also a good talker, but not so good a reasoner. He dealt in repartee and anecdotes and was particularly happy in the application of the latter. But the year 1852 was a bad one for Whig candidates, and Mr. McCarty was defeated by the Democratic nominee. Having resigned his seat in the Senate when he accepted the gubernatorial nomination, he was now a private citizen, and he remained one as long as he lived.

One or two other incidents of Mr. McCarty's career, though well known, will bear narrating here as showing his readiness in meeting emergencies, his executive capacity, his business instinct, and his intuitive honor. Early in 1829 a cold snap froze the Ohio, just as his goods reached Pittsburg from Philadelphia in order to take steam passage down to Madison. It was his entire season's stock, requiring sixteen six-horse Conestoga wagons, but he could not take any chances on an indefinite delay and he had the wagons continue the hauling the rest of the way. In order not to lose by this great expense, he used the wagons to haul his consignment of ginseng to Philadelphia—a management which enabled him to have his spring goods on hand at the proper time without loss. Mr. McCarty's action, when the result of the panic of 1837 made his great resources—largely in real estate—unavailable, involving him to an embarrassing extent, was equally characteristic, though in another way. He made a settlement with his creditors upon such terms that they realized more than the principal and interest of his obligations.

Practical and great-souled, the interests of the community were his, and while he was ambitious to acquire influence and independence he was wise, broad and humane enough to desire the success of all good people. By force of early circumstances he had but little opportunity for learning, but he made the best use of what he acquired. He had a ready and comprehensive vocabulary and a simplicity in statement characteristic of great men in the various business and professional walks of life. Realizing his own deficiencies as a scholar he did what he could, in private life and public station, to secure to others what he had been denied himself. When a candidate for the State Senate he visited a neighborhood where opposition to public schools was active and strong, but he boldly said that, if elected, he would vote money to make tuition free. His courage and frankness won him friends, and many who went to hear him speak, opposed to free schools, went home their advocates. When Mr. McCarty was nominated for governor, so well was his reputation for frankness established that the Indianapolis Sentinel had this to say of him: "Like Henry Clay, everybody who knows Nicholas McCarty knows his politics. The same yesterday, to-day and forever."

Mr. McCarty was an intelligent and influential man, and his influence was always for the good. Although not a church member, he had a great reverence for Deity, and was an example of Christian purity, integrity and character. He was generous as the day, tolerant of offences that affected only himself, peaceable and honorable. No man that ever lived in the city was more sincerely or generally loved and honored, and certainly none ever deserved it better. He was prompt in his aid of benevolent efforts and one of the most active in the organization of the "Orphans Home." He took particular delight in serving others, and would go out of his way to do a favor, being always too glad to make others happy.

On July 27, 1828, Mr. McCarty was married, in Boone county, Ky., to Margaret Hawkins, daughter of Rev. Jameson Hawkins, one of the earliest Baptist preachers of that county, and several times a member of the Kentucky Legislature. Their four children were Susanna, Margaret R., Nicholas and Frances J. Mrs. McCarty died Feb. 18, 1873.

Susanna McCarty became the wife of Rev. Henry Day, for many years pastor of the First Baptist Church of Indianapolis, and she died Aug. 30, 1873. Mr. Day died Aug. 1, 1897. Their children are Henry McCarty Day and Margaret McCarty Day, of Indianapolis.

Margaret R. McCarty married John C. S. Harrison, grandson of William Henry Harrison, and for many years a partner of Harrisons' Bank. They had four children: Margaret McCarty Harrison, Nicholas McCarty Harrison, John Cleves Short Harrison and Cleves Harrison. The two living are Nicholas McCarty Harrison, whose residence is in Indianapolis, Ind., and Cleves Harrison, whose residence is in Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. Harrison died at Los Angeles April 6, 1904.

The four children of Nicholas and Margaret McCarty were born in Indianapolis—worthy representatives of parents of the highest character. The three living are Mrs. Harrison, Miss Frances J. McCarty and Nicholas McCarty, the only son, all of whom reside in Indianapolis.

Mr. McCarty died May 17, 1854, and is buried in Crown Hill cemetery. At a meeting of the citizens, a committee consisting of James M. Ray, Robert Hanna, Bethuel F. Morris, Calvin Fletcher, John D. Deerees, John M. Talbot, and Nathan M. Palmer, prepared the following resolutions:

"Resolved, that in the departure of our fellow citizen, Nicholas McCarty, Esq., we realize the loss of one who since the early days of the city has deservedly ranked as a most worthy, generous and valuable man, and who by his affectionate heart, clearness of mind and strict integrity of purpose had warmly endeared himself to all who knew him. In the important public trusts committed to him—as commissioner of the Canal Fund, effecting the first loan of the State, as senator of this county and in other engagements—he manifested remarkable judiciousness and ability. It was with reluctance he was drawn into the pursuit of official station, and with decided preference enjoyed the happiness of an attached circle of family and friends. His hand and heart were ever at command for the need of the afflicted, and his counsel and sympathies were extended where they could be useful with unaffected simplicity and modesty."

In the preparation of this biography of Mr. Nicholas McCarty, Sr., we have made extracts from sketches by J. C. Fletcher, Berry Sulgrove and W. W. Woollen; we have also consulted old citizens of Indianapolis, including Dr. William H. Wishard and Gen. John Coburn, who knew Mr. McCarty well, all of whom bear the same testimony to his high character and great usefulness.

HARRY STEWART NEW, particularly well known in Indianapolis through his long connection with the Journal, of which he was general manager until recently, was born in the city Dec. 31, 1858. His father and grandfather both passed the greater part of their lives in Indiana, whither they came in pioneer times, and the family has long been settled in America.

Jethro New, great-grandfather of Harry Stewart New, was of the first generation of this family in Indiana, though he did not come here until late in life, to pass his declining years with his children. He had served as an officer in the Revolutionary war, and had a grant of government land in what is now Clark county, this State, for his services in that struggle.

John B. New, the grandfather, was a soldier under General Harrison in the war of 1812, and came to Indiana as such, from North Carolina. He was a minister in the Christian Church, and one of the pioneers of that denomination in the State, and he numbered among his friends such leaders of his day as Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Walter Scott, John O'Kane, Isaac Errett, William K. Pendleton and other lights of that communion. He died in Indianapolis Jan. 9, 1872, at the age of seventy-nine years. His family consisted of three sons and two daughters, the only survivor being Mary C., the eldest daughter, who is now the widow of Dr. William C. Thompson.

John C. New was born July 6, 1831, in Jennings county, Ind., and grew to manhood in this State. He graduated from Bethany College, and coming to Indianapolis studied law, was admitted to the Bar, and became deputy county clerk. He was appointed county clerk in 1856, and held the position until 1861. During the Civil war he was quartermaster-general of the State and very intimately associated with Governor Morton, and after the war he became associated with William H. English in the First National Bank of Indianapolis, of which Colonel New became cashier. During President Grant's second administration he was appointed treasurer of the United States, and he was assistant secretary of the treasury under President Arthur, and consul-general to London under President Harrison. On May 8, 1880, Colonel New and his son bought the Indianapolis Journal Printing Company, of which the Colonel was president for a number of years. He married Melissa Beeler, who was born in Marion county, Ind., Feb. 8, 1833, and died Sept. 16, 1867. Like her husband she was a member of the Christian Church. Mr. New married for his second wife Elizabeth R. McRae, daughter of John H. McRae, of Cumberland county, Va., and to this union were born two daughters, Elizabeth Rowena and Rowena McRae. Elizabeth married William R. McKeen, Jr., and has her home in Omaha, Nebr., where Mr. McKeen holds a position as master mechanic with the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Rowena married Ernest H. Burford, of Indianapolis, a son of W. B. Burford, the senior partner of the printing and lithographic firm of W. B. Burford & Company.

Joseph Beeler, father of Mrs. Melissa (Beeler) New, was a native of Virginia, whence he came to Indiana among the very early settlers of this State. He made a location in Morgan county, where he cleared and owned a farm, and in his later years he came to a point in Marion county seven miles north of Indianapolis. His wife came from Ohio when a young girl, making the journey with her brother, on horseback, and she first met Joseph Beeler at the White river, nineteen miles below Indianapolis. He was towing a raft, and helped them across the river. Mr. Beeler was always a farmer, and died in 1850 on his home place. He left three daughters and two sons.

Harry Stewart New, only child of Col. John C. and Melissa (Beeler) New, has always called Indianapolis his home. He attended the public schools, and for three years during his youth and early manhood traveled in Europe, going there when he was fifteen years old; during the greater part of the time he was by himself. Upon his return he became a student at Butler University, which he attended for a year, and on Feb. 11, 1878, he entered the employ of the Journal Company, when the paper was the property of E. B. Martindale. His connection with the paper remained unbroken until May, 1903, he and his father buying the establishment in 1880, as previously mentioned. His father became president of the company and Harry S. New vice-president and general manager when it was incorporated, six years later.

Like his father Mr. New is a well-known figure in Republican political circles, and at present is acting chairman of the National Republican Committee. He has been a member of the Indiana State Legislature, to which he was first elected in 1896, serving in the sessions of 1897 and 1899. During the war with Spain he was a captain and assistant adjutant general of the 3d Brigade, 2d Division, 7th Army Corps.

On Oct. 18, 1880, Mr. New was married to Miss Kathleen V., a daughter of W. F. and Virginia (Teakle) Milligan, of New York. Mrs. New was a resident of Chicago at the time of her marriage. To this union was born one child, Kathleen Virginia, who died when a year old, and Mrs. New died May 21, 1883; she was a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. New married for his second wife, Aug. 18, 1891, Miss Catherine McLaen, daughter of W. E. and Eliza Catherine (McLaen) McLaen. They have a tasteful and elegant home at No. 1002 North Capitol avenue.

Mr. New is a Scottish Rite Mason, and has attained the thirty-second degree. He belongs to the Columbia and Marion Clubs, and has the honor of being one of the organizers of the latter association; he also holds membership in the Commercial and Deutsche Haus Clubs, the Board of Trade, and the Spanish-American War Veterans' Association.

SYLVESTER JOHNSON, a retired citizen of Irvington, was the founder of that Indianapolis suburb, where he settled in 1872. Mr. Johnson was born in Union county, Ind., near Liberty, Jan. 31, 1822, a son of Pleasant and Sarah (Huddleston) Johnson, and grandson of Nicholas Johnson.

Nicholas Johnson was born in Virginia, and came of a family which originated in Scotland, but settled in Virginia among the earlier pioneers. Nicholas Johnson was a member of the Society of Friends. He died in Union county, Ind. (where he had settled), in 1844, at the age of eighty-three years. He made a good living as a farmer, and reared a large family.

Pleasant Johnson was born in Bedford county, Va., and came from his native State to Indiana in 1816, locating in Union county, where his father gave him 100 acres of government land which he had taken up. In 1837 he removed to a farm near Dublin, Wayne county, where he lived until 1872, when he went to live at the home of his son, Sylvester. There he died at the age of eighty-two years. He married Sarah Huddleston, who was born in 1800 in New Garden, Guilford county, N. C., and died in 1866. Both were Friends, Mrs. Johnson uniting with the New Garden Friends' Church. Mr. and Mrs. Pleasant Johnson had ten children, five sons and five daughters, namely: Sylvester; Dorinda J., the widow of John T. King, of Dublin, Wayne Co., Ind.; Martha, who died unmarried when about twenty years old; Elwood F., of Colorado Springs, Colo., who died in June, 1904; Timothy E., who married Mary E. McIntosh, and died in Colorado Springs, Colo., about 1896, leaving a family; Elvira, who married Charles Gartman, of Jersey City, N. J.; Milo, a farmer and fruit grower at Brownsburg, Hendricks Co., Ind.; Mary Ann, the wife of Isaac H. Herrington, of Indianapolis; Eliza Ellen, the wife of Samuel Compton, of Dublin, Ind.; and John Ashley, of Dakota, who is married but has no children.

Jonathan Huddleston, the maternal grandfather of Sylvester Johnson, was a native of North Carolina, and made his first appearance in Indiana in 1816, making his home in Union county, where he secured government land. When advancing age made it necessary for him to retire from active life he moved to Dublin, Wayne county, where he spent his last years, dying in his eighty-third year. He lived to see 150 of his descendants, and rejoiced in the fact that not one of the number was addicted to the use of either tobacco or intoxicating spirits. He was the father of thirteen children, of whom only one survives, Mrs. Lucinda Burkett, of near Dublin, Wayne county, but all had long and useful lives. In religion Mr. Huddleston was a member of the Society of Friends. He was one of the vice-presidents of the National Liberty convention which met in Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 20, 1847, at which John P. Hale and Leicester King were nominated for President and Vice-President of the United States. Mr. Huddleston walked all the way to and from that convention, and we are told walking was his favorite mode of travel.

Sylvester Johnson was about fifteen years old when he came with his parents to Wayne county, where he attained manhood. He had received his first education in the old subscription schools and later became a student in the academy at Dublin, which was erected in 1837 and rebuilt thirty years later. He became a teacher, his first school being in Butler county, Ohio, where he also fought his first battle for temperance, by refusing to "treat" his scholars with intoxicating liquors, as was the custom in those days. After leaving Butler county he returned to Dublin, Ind., where he taught in the academy for twelve years, ending in 1856. That year he entered upon mercantile life, which he followed at Dublin until 1861, when he was appointed mail agent on the route between Indianapolis and Dayton. This position he held two years, resigning to become auditor of Wayne county, in which office he served eight years. In 1870 Mr. Johnson purchased a half section of land on which he laid out the town of Irvington, and on April 10, 1872, removed his family to the present home, which he had built the preceding year, and which is one of the handsomest residences in the suburb. The village presents the appearance of a park, the beautiful homes being surrounded by lovely grounds and shaded by stately trees. To keep out the liquor traffic for all time, each deed contains the following clause: "The grantee accepts this deed from the grantor with the express agreement that his heirs and assigns will not erect, or suffer to be erected or maintained, on the real estate herein conveyed, any distillery, brewery, slaughter house, soap factory, or other establishment offensive to the people of said town; that he will not sell, or suffer anyone else to sell, on said premises any intoxicating liquor, except for medicinal or mechanical purposes. And he accepts this deed on the farther agreement that the right to compel the enforcement of the foregoing agreement rests in all property owners and inhabitants of said town, as well as in the grantor and his assigns." The validity of such conditions in deeds has been passed upon by the Supreme court of the United States and held to be legal and constitutional.

Early in life Mr. Johnson espoused the anti-slavery cause, and in 1844 voted for James G. Birney, the candidate of the Liberty party. Four years later he voted for Van Buren, and in 1852 for Hale and Julian. In 1856 he voted for Fremont and Dayton, and from that time until 1884 he voted the Republican ticket. However, he never gave his support to candidates who were known to be drinking and dissipated characters, voting for the candidate of the opposite party if it were known that he was free from the drinking habit. If no such choice presented itself he did not vote at all. In 1884, believing that there was no longer any reason to expect the Republican party to free itself from the influence of the liquor interests, its policy being in his opinion rather to perpetuate the traffic as a source of revenue and a means of political action, he abandoned the party and voted the straight Prohibition ticket, both on State and national issues. His faith in the ultimate triumph of that party is still strong and is strengthened by the analogy between the status of the present Prohibition party and the opinions formerly held of the anti-slavery movement, as well as by the attitude of the dominant parties on the subject. Since the organization of the Prohibition party, in 1884, Mr. Johnson has given much time to its up-building, filling many important positions, and rendering services which money could not buy. He has been manager, secretary and treasurer of the Indiana Phalanx Company, publishers of the official organ of the Prohibitionists of the State, and has been secretary and treasurer of the State central committee.

Mr. Johnson has always been interested in the agricultural development of this section, and his activity in the various societies has made him well known in that line all over the State. He was president for twelve years of the Indiana State Horticultural Society; for six years he was treasurer of the State Board of Agriculture; for eleven years he was president of the Marion County Agricultural and Horticultural Society; was appointed judge of horticultural implements and grapes (on which he is an authority) at the Columbian Exposition, held at Chicago; and was one of the judges of fruits at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, held at St. Louis. He has filled many other positions of trust. For sixteen years he has been a trustee of Purdue University. For many years he was treasurer of the town of Irvington. He was appointed receiver of a large manufacturing company, and has acted as guardian and served as administrator in the division of several estates.

A prominent citizen, who has been a life-long friend of Mr. Johnson, says of him: "Mr. Johnson is distinguished for a kind heart and tender sympathy, and his ears and eyes are ever open to suffering and ready to relieve. Though advanced in years, he is still hale and hearty, active and clear-headed, illustrating the truth that temperate habits and upright life bestow their rewards in advanced years. He is a splendid specimen of that sturdy stock, with iron will, clear conscience, high purpose and ceaseless energy, given by Quaker ancestry and training to this nation, whose influence in reforming and shaping public and social affairs has been of inestimable value. As a son, brother, husband, father and grandfather he has been a model to be observed and followed. As a business man, a public officer, in which he had large experience, he has shown fine ability, capacity and integrity. As a citizen he has shown independence and high conscience in the discharge of his duties and a single purpose to serve the civil government to which his services were due. As a Christian man he has been consistent and faithful. Summing up the life and character of Sylvester Johnson I will say his has been the life of an upright man."

Mr. Johnson was married, Nov. 21, 1844, to Rachel Miner, a daughter of Noah W. Miner, an attorney of Wayne county, Ind. To this union were born four children: Francenia (deceased), who was the wife of William W. Wilson; Eudora M., who was city comptroller of Indianapolis for six years; Martha E., the widow of James J. Powell; and Oliver R., now business manager of one of the departments of the Indianapolis News, who was formerly vice-consul with Col. John New, in London, England. Mrs. Johnson died April 28, 1899, at the age of seventy-two years.

On May 7, 1901, Mr. Johnson married Mrs. Eunice B. Harris, widow of William Harris, and daughter of James and Lucinda (Brown) Gilky. By her first marriage Mrs. Johnson was the mother of five children: Florence (deceased), who married Delbert Pyle; Edith, wife of Melvin Helmuth, of Cahill, Minn.; Emma, married to Alexander McCallum, of Spokane, Wash.; Nettie, who is the wife of Herbert L. Smith, of Minneapolis; and Frank O., a railroad engineer, who has his home in Minneapolis. Mrs. Johnson is a member of the Irvington M. E. Church, and Mr. Johnson is a member of the Society of Friends.

ELIAS CORNELIUS ATKINS attained a distinctive and eminent position among manufacturers and inventors which entitled him to rank with the foremost "captains of industry" of modern times. His name in Indianapolis stands for everything included in a career of the most honorable achievement. His influence and work still continue in the business of E. C. Atkins & Co., the largest manufacturers of saws in this country, if not in the world. Mr. Atkins was the founder of this concern, and in it his chief interest as a business man was centered, but incidental to its management along progressive lines he found himself drawn into many other matters of vital importance. Having come to Indianapolis in the days of its insignificance he was naturally interested in the growth of the city, and many enterprises whose adoption assisted materially in her advancement were furthered by his support and patronage. His was a broad nature, and his far-sighted judgment enabled him to grasp the advantages of a new invention or a project far ahead of the times so quickly that afterward his opinion seemed like a prophecy. He had many of the elements of greatness in his make-up, and in the simple pursuit of his natural inclinations found his level among the master minds of the day.

Mr. Atkins began life poor in purse, but he had back of him the traditions of a long line of worthy American ancestors, to whom he owed his stability of character and strong mental traits. He was born June 28, 1833, in Bristol, Conn., son of Rollin and Harriet (Bishop) Atkins, and a descendant of Thomas Atkins, the first ancestor of the family in America. Thomas Atkins was a native of England, and settled in Connecticut about the middle of the seventeenth century. Samuel Atkins, a descendant of Thomas, and grandfather of Elias C. Atkins, was the father of twelve children. His son Rollin was born in Connecticut, and learned the trade of clock-maker, later turning to the manufacture of saws. He served as an officer in the militia of his native State, holding the rank of captain of the 4th Company, 4th Regiment. He died in middle life. Rollin Atkins married Harriet Bishop, like himself a native of Connecticut, of English ancestry, and five children were born to this union.

Austin Bishop, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Atkins, was a native of Connecticut, born in 1764, of old English stock. He married Anna Stalker, who was born in 1766, and they became the parents of ten children. They were farming people all their lives. Mr. Bishop died Sept. 23, 1833, at the age of sixty-nine years, and his wife passed away Oct. 22, 1840, at the age of seventy-four. Traditions of him survive as a perfect representative of the old-fashioned pious and devoted New England deacon.

Elias Cornelius Atkins was reared at Bristol, and attended school until his father's comparatively early death caused him to be put to work on a farm, when only eleven years of age. The following year he was apprenticed to his uncle for five years, starting work at the saw-making trade. By the time he reached the age of seventeen he had become so familiar with the work, and had displayed such mechanical ability, that he was foreman of the shop. During these five years he would work overtime at every opportunity to earn money, in order to furnish his mother certain luxuries, and to pay his pew rent at the church.

Mr. Atkins came West in 1855, and established the first saw factory at Cleveland, Ohio. The following year he came to Indianapolis, opening a saw factory here with a cash capital of but $500. His place of business was in a little corner of the old Hill planing-mill, and a year or two later he moved into the old city foundry. At first he did all his own work, but presently employed a German named Louis Suher, who walked all the way from Bristol to go to work for him. Suher died while still in the employ of Mr. Atkins. The business prospered from the start, and though he was twice burned out Mr. Atkins each time opened on a larger scale and continued with increasing success. The little shop in Illinois street, where he located after the destruction of the old city foundry, has grown into an immense institution, where over one thousand men are employed, and the weekly pay-roll amounts to more than $13,000. The firm of E. C. Atkins & Co. was incorporated at $600,000. Branch houses are maintained in Memphis, Minneapolis, New York, Portland, Seattle, Atlanta, Chicago, San Francisco and New Orleans, and there are important agencies all over the country. The Atkins saws are sold in China, Japan, Australia, and all other parts of the world.

From time to time Mr. Atkins became interested in other enterprises, where he found fresh opportunities for the exercise of his business ability. One of the most important of these was the Hecla Consolidated Mining Company, which had extensive silver, copper and lead mines. Mr. Atkins went into the mountains, where supplies had to be hauled 350 miles, from Ogden, Utah, and for two years he lived the rough life of a miner, finding his health greatly improved. It had been poor, and he sought this change of climate temporarily, but it produced important financial results, for the original investment of the mining company, under his pluck and enterprise, was raised from $60,000 to $1,500,000. At the time of his death he was president of the Natural Gas Manufacturing Company.

His connections with minor business enterprises were quite numerous.

Mr. Atkins was himself a man of ideas, and he recognized and appreciated the progressive tendency in others to such an extent that he was constantly on the lookout for new discoveries, especially those applicable to his own particular line of industry. And he could see more readily than most men the practical value of an invention, his superior analytical mind grasping at the essentials with unerring judgment. He became interested in condensed air, the power of which he investigated thoroughly, at the expense of considerable time and means, engaging experts to test its value. In company with some distinguished English gentlemen he formed a company which with the weight of his influence might have done an immense business, selling stock and manufacturing lifting machines. But Mr. Atkins was brought to a realization of the fact that the new power was little, if any, better than steam, and when he became convinced of this he demanded the dissolution of the English company, much against the wishes, however, of the other members thereof. He had no ambition to float a dishonest enterprise. He was willing to take risks in a legitimate business way, but he had neither patience nor sympathy with schemes.

Mr. Atkins belonged to the Commercial, the Columbia and the Contemporary Clubs, the Board of Trade, and at the time of his death he was the oldest member of Marion Lodge, F. & A. M. In politics he was a strong Republican, and held strenuously to the doctrine of protection. Believing in and practising the rule of speaking well of people, he yet had no patience with political trickery. It was his ambition to do something for the benefit of his workmen, and access to him by his employes was made easy, as he had risen from the anvil himself, and retained an intelligent sympathy with his men which was rewarded by their deep and lasting loyalty. Mr. Atkins was of a quiet and undemonstrative demeanor, devoted to his friends, and of deep religious convictions. He became a member of the Baptist Church in 1856, immediately after coming to Indianapolis, and at once made himself felt as a positive power for righteousness in the city. Of his growing means he gave liberally to all helpful projects, and was especially interested in the cause of education, contributing freely to the Baptist Female Seminary, which for many years stood on the site of the Shortridge high school. He sought to secure the establishment of a Baptist University in this city, and offered under certain conditions to give forty acres of land, lying between Meridian street and Central avenue, north of Thirty-second street. When the project for reviving the University of Chicago was launched, and Mr. Rockefeller offered his first gift of $100,000 to the Theological Seminary, providing a like amount should be given by others, Mr. Atkins offered to give the forty acres already noted as a $20,000 donation. This $20,000 secured the interest of Mr. Rockefeller, and the present great university took shape and beginning. Mr. Atkins afterward bought back this tract of land, paying $20,000 cash for it, and it is now known as University Place. He was one of the trustees of Morgan Park Seminary, at Chicago, until it was merged into the University of Chicago, and up to the hour of his death was on the official board of that institution.

A notable thing in the domestic life of Mr. Atkins were his breakfast table talks to his family circle. In this he was greatly gifted, and showed much skill in presenting important events, prospects, discoveries and developments.

Mr. Atkins was married three times. By his first wife, Sarah J. Wells, he had one daughter, Harriet, who is now Mrs. J. L. McMahon, of Colorado Springs, Colo. His second marriage was to Mary Dolbeare, and their only child is now deceased. On Aug. 17, 1865, he was married to Miss Sarah F. Parker, a daughter of Rev. Addison Parker and Eunice (Brigham) Parker, and to this union were born five children: Mary D., Henry C., Sarah Frances, Emma L. and Carra. Mary D. married Nelson A. Gladding, the present secretary of the E. C. Atkins Saw Company; they have two daughters, Frances M. and Mary E. Henry C. has taken his father's place as president and manager of the saw company; he married Miss Sue Winter, and they have three children, Elias C., Keyes Winter and Henry Clarence. Sarah Frances married Thomas Reed Kackley, second vice-president of the Atlas Engine Works; they have two children, Sarah Frances and Thomas Reed, Jr. Emma L. married Edward B. Davis, at present manager of the New York branch. Carra is married to Capt. Sandford H. Wadhams, U. S. Army.

Mrs. Sarah F. Atkins, the mother of this family, is a woman of superior mental qualities and intellectual power, and she was always regarded by her husband as his able adviser and most valuable counselor in business affairs, in which she took a deep interest. Her practical comprehension and thorough understanding of manufacturing are such that she is still considered one of the best informed persons in Indianapolis on such subjects. Nevertheless she is a woman of engaging social disposition, occupying a high position, and she has been especially prominent in D. A. R. circles. Mrs. Atkins comes of that sturdy Puritan stock so prominent in the history of New England for high moral courage and devoted patriotism, and her ancestors were all zealous church workers. Her mother was a native of Sudbury, Mass., a descendant of the Brigham and Haines families long and favorably known locally. Her great-grandfather Brigham was in the battle of Lexington, where he held rank as a commissioned officer. Her grandfather, Aaron Parker, was a farmer and teacher in Vermont. Her father, Rev. Addison Parker, a Baptist minister, died in Agawam, Mass., in 1864, aged sixty-seven years, and her mother died in 1855, at the age of fifty-seven. The only brother of Mrs. Atkins is Rev. Addison Parker, of Richmond, Indiana.

We can find no more fitting close for this article than the estimate of Mr. Atkins made by Mr. Volney Malott, long a fellow citizen: "E. C. Atkins, founder of the most important manufactory in Indianapolis, and one of the two most important manufactories in the world, was a clear-headed, far-seeing business man. He possessed wonderful energy and great capacity for work. He had a most agreeable personality and was of a very generous nature, a large contributor to the institutions of his church, and to other benevolent and charitable movements that appealed to him. I knew him personally a number of years, from the time he started in business until his death. He took a prominent part in the upbuilding of Indianapolis, being an active participant in all the enterprises that contribute to the upbuilding of a city."

REV. MATTHIAS L. HAINES, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis since 1885, is a distinguished representative of the religious denomination with which he is connected, and has won prominence in the educational field as well as in theological circles. He is a man of superior mental attainments, taking particular pleasure in the cultivation of his literary talents, which have led him into many delightful associations. His long extended pastorate over a congregation of such notable intelligence bespeaks remarkable fitness for the rather unusual demands of the position which he has indeed adorned.

Dr. Haines was born in Aurora, Ind., in 1850, and comes of a family of physicians, his father, Abram B. Haines, of Aurora, his grandfather, Matthias Haines, of Rising Sun, Ind., and his great-grandfather, Abram Brower, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., all being of the medical profession. His maternal grandfather was Ezekiel Howe Loring, of Rising Sun, Ind. After gathering the rudiments of an education in the public schools of Rising Sun and Aurora, Ind., he entered Wabash College, in 1867, and was graduated therefrom in 1871. Then he became a student at the Union Theological Seminary in New York City, from which he was graduated in 1874. His first pastorate was at Astoria, N. Y., where he was called to the pulpit of the Dutch Reformed Church, which he continued to serve as pastor for eleven years. Then, in 1885, he received a call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis, succeeding Rev. Myron W. Reed. In the succeeding twenty-two years all of his talents have not been confined to purely church work, but have flowed out into wide channels of social and public activities. The hand and voice of Dr. Haines have been employed in many good works. He is president of the Indianapolis Benevolent Society; was for ten years a member of the Presbyterian Board of Aid of Colleges and Academies; is a director of Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati, Ohio; and a trustee of Wabash College. In 1899 he was pressed by a large vote in the Presbyterian General Assembly as a candidate for moderator. He has entered in a number of ways into the life of the city and State. He was one of the committee of five, appointed by the Commercial Club, which drew up the new park law passed by the Legislature in 1899. He has been president of the Indianapolis Literary Club, is one of the executive committee of the Winona Technical Institute of Indianapolis, and a director of the Winona Assembly of Winona Lake.

It is impossible to describe the personality of Dr. Haines without including many of the qualities that go to make the pastor of a large church loved, admired and respected. Witty, without crossing the border line into sarcasm, a post-prandial orator of more than usual interest, a charming host and a delightful guest, he is what a popular and faithful minister should be; and more than that, his unflinching sympathy and ardent devotion to duty have won him a distinguished place in the respect and affection of the people of Indianapolis.

The First Presbyterian Church was organized July 5, 1823, and was the third church organized in the new settlement, following the Wesley Chapel, now the Meridian Street Church, and the First Baptist, both of which were formed the preceding year. The Presbyterian society was the first to erect a church edifice. Occasional preaching services had been held in the new settlement from August, 1821, but it was not until two years later that the settlers began dividing into different denominations. The first house of worship erected was located on the west side of Pennsylvania street, north of Market street, on the present site of the Vajen block. It was begun before the organization of the church, and was a frame building 54x40 feet. In 1843 it was given up for a brick building on the site of the American Central Life building, on the corner of Market and Monument place. This, in turn, gave way to the third structure, located on the southwest corner of New York and Pennsylvania streets, which was begun in 1865, the chapel being occupied in 1866. The main auditorium was first occupied Nov. 27, 1867. The fourth edifice—and the one now occupied by the congregation—stands on the corner of Delaware and Sixteenth streets. It was completed and dedicated Oct. 4, 1903, and is old English-Gothic in style, with a seating capacity of one thousand. The clergymen who have occupied the pulpit of the First Church during the more than fourscore years of its history have been of ability and character. The membership has embraced some of the most useful and prominent men in the State, including Governors Samuel Bigger, Conrad Baker, James A. Mount, President Benjamin Harrison, United States Attorney-General W. H. H. Miller, Mr. Thomas H. Sharpe, Hon. H. H. Hanna, Mr. John H. Holliday, Mr. Thomas C. Day, and others.

It is said of Dr. Haines that, since Indianapolis is a village, no pastor has been more thoroughly respected or more universally loved than the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. Ex-President Harrison said of him: "I thank God for a pastor who preaches Christ crucified, and never says a foolish thing."

Dr. Haines was married May 7, 1885, in Astoria, N. Y., to Miss Sarah L. Kouwenhoven, daughter of Francis D. and Harriet Kouwenhoven, of Astoria. Two daughters were born to this union. The present home of the family is at No. 216 East Thirteenth street, Indianapolis.

SAMUEL EVINGSTON EARP, M. S., M. D., of Indianapolis, has during his quarter of a century of professional life experienced almost every phase of a physician's usefulness. He has won reputation as a general practitioner, as an educator, as a public servant in the field of his chosen work, and as a contributor to medical literature and research. His success in all these lines is ample compensation for the years of hard work which lie behind his accomplishments. He began modestly, at the close of the regular student period, as a teacher in his alma mater and in regular practice. As his prospect widened new interests came in which a man of progressive and helpful spirit could not conscientiously neglect. His responsibilities increased rapidly, but not too rapidly for his energetic spirit to grasp and master them, and though his best efforts have been put forth with the object of helping others he has forged ahead with his ambitions until he is now in the front rank of the eminent physicians and surgeons of Indianapolis.

Dr. Earp was born Dec. 19, 1858, in Lebanon, Ill., and is of English descent, being a son of Joseph and Margaret E. (Walls) Earp, natives, respectively, of Derby and London, England. The Earp family was long settled in England, and traced its ancestry back through Lord Melbourne to Oliver Cromwell's time. The Doctor's paternal and maternal grandfathers died in England, and the latter owned a landed estate; his name is now lost to the memory of the Doctor.

Joseph Earp was a cloth cutter during his early life, in England. When still a young man he came to America and became a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving in Southern Illinois. He died in 1898, at the age of seventy-five years, long surviving his wife, who passed away in 1875, aged fifty-five years. Of their four children the Doctor is now the only survivor. Rev. Joseph Earp was one of the preacher friends of Abraham Lincoln, being well known in southern Illinois, in what is known as "Egypt." His influence was such that he was frequently called into the councils of Mr. Lincoln and his friends, among his associates being Gen. John A. Logan, Governor Oglesby, Lyman Trumbull, Gen. John M. Palmer, and a number of other men of national reputation. After the assassination of President Lincoln, Rev. Joseph Earp delivered the memorial address in the chapel of McKendree College, Lebanon, Ill., and the audience was so large that only a portion could gain admittance. The address was spirited, patriotic and eloquent, such as a high-spirited Union man, unless very brave indeed, would have hesitated to deliver at that period.

Samuel E. Earp lived with his father at the various place to which he was assigned as pastor, and obtained his literary training in the high school at Alton, Ill., at Shurtleff College, in Upper Alton, and in McKendree College, at Lebanon, Ill., from which latter institution he was graduated in 1879. Meantime he had commenced studying medicine in 1874 under Dr. C. M. Smith, of Alton, Ill., and in 1879 studied under Dr. Gonsalvo C. Smythe, of Greencastle, Ind. He was graduated from the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons of Indianapolis in 1882, and at once began practising in Indianapolis, where he has remained to the present day, achieving fame and fortune in the calling of his choice.

The year of his graduation Dr. Earp became a member of the Faculty of Central College, with which he continued to be identified in an educational capacity until 1902. He was first engaged as Professor of Chemistry and Toxicology, later was in the department of Materia Medica and Therapeutics, and in 1899 was elected Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine and Sanitary Science. He was secretary and dean of the college and was re-elected for four terms. His work as an educator has not, however, been confined to this institution. For seven years he was Professor of Materia Medica and Therapeutics in the Central College of Dentistry; he is one of the corps of instructors of St. Vincent's Training School for Nurses, his subject being the Practice of Medicine and Dietetics; and in July, 1906, he was elected Professor of the Practice of Medicine in the State College of Physicians and Surgeons, in affiliation with the University of Indiana.

The Doctor's public services have been of the kind that require not only wide professional knowledge but also kindness of heart and good judgment in the discharge of the duties attaching to the various positions he has filled. For two years he was chemist of the Health Department of Indianapolis; for four years he was a member of the Board of Health of the city, and acted as the executive officer of that body, to which he was unanimously elected, by both Democrats and Republicans; later he became a member of the Board of Public Health and Charities; filled out an unexpired term as police surgeon, and later was elected police and fire surgeon for two consecutive terms.

Dr. Earp is on the consulting staff of the Indianapolis City Dispensary, the Indianapolis City Hospital, the Protestant Deaconess Hospital and St. Vincent's Hospital. He is a contributor to a number of medical journals, and is quoted in several text-books for original work in chemistry. His services to the profession outside of his work as a teacher have been considerable, especially as editor of professional journals. He was first editor of the "Medical and Surgical Monitor," which was inaugurated in June, 1898, and associated with him were Drs. Joseph Eastman, Allison Maxwell, L. L. Todd, G. V. Woolfen, and others. In November, 1903, Dr. Earp resigned his position as editor of the "Medical and Surgical Monitor" and became editor of the "Central States Medical Magazine," and when, in November, 1905, the two journals were amalgamated under the title of the "Central States Medical Monitor," Dr. Earp became the editor-in-chief, with Drs. S. P. Scherer and S. C. Norris as associate editors. This monthly journal is one of the leading medical publications, and has for its collaborators and contributors some of the most prominent men in the United States. Its contents are freely quoted by the best medical journals.

The Doctor is a member of the Indianapolis Medical Society, and the Indiana State Medical Association. In fraternal connection he is a Mason and a member of the Knights of Pythias, being prominent in both organizations. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of Murat Temple of the Mystic Shrine, at Indianapolis; in the Knights of Pythias he belongs to the Uniform Rank, is brigade surgeon, with the rank of colonel, is past chancellor of Capitol City Lodge, No. 97, and has been representative to the Grand Lodge five times. In political connection he is a member of the Republican party.

On June 29, 1898, Dr. Earp married Miss Evelyn M. Byers, daughter of David A. and Emma (Sheets) Byers, and this union has been graced with two sons, Evanson B. and Leon S. Mrs. Earp is a member of the Meridian Street Methodist Episcopal Church. The family occupy an elegant home at No. 1121 North Illinois street, and the Doctor's office is at No. 24½ Kentucky avenue.

The opinion of Dr. J. A. Sutcliffe, one of the Doctor's friends and admirers, will be of interest at the close of this brief sketch of his career: "For a quarter of a century I have watched with pride and pleasure the intellectual achievements of Dr. S. E. Earp. He was born of a will and determination which knows no failure, of an energy and devotion to effort which is well nigh irresistible; and with it all with a due appreciation and regard for what is fair and right toward his fellow-men and the medical profession. In the many positions of trust and honor which he has occupied his work has been characterized by integrity and justice. As a writer and scholar he is a man of exceptional merits. Many practitioners and former students watch with eagerness for his editorials and other articles as the latest exponents of medical literature. As a teacher in medicine, his clear analytical and philosophical mind fits him pre-eminently for his work and easily adorns the chair which he occupies."

Dr. William N. Wishard writes: "Dr. Earp is a man who has been regarded as a physician of ability from the time he first graduated in medicine. During the past quarter of a century he has been recognized as one of the leading men in general medicine and chemistry, to which departments he has given a great deal of attention. He is well and favorably known as a teacher and editor and a genial, pleasant gentleman."

The venerable Dr. W. H. Wishard says: "Dr. Samuel Earp has always sustained himself well as a reputable physician, a gentleman and citizen."

John H. Holliday, a distinguished financier of Indianapolis and founder of the Indianapolis News, of which he was for many years the successful editor, writes of Dr. Earp under date of Jan. 7, 1907: "Dr. Earp is nothing if not energetic and thorough. As a student of medicine at Greencastle he helped to support himself by corresponding for the Indianapolis News, the editor of which marked and appreciated his services. He would have made a good newspaper man, in fact he has that all around combination of good qualities that would have brought him success in any calling he might have tried. But he chose to be a doctor and he has made a good one, having steadily gained in the estimation of his patients, the public and his professional brothers, so that he now holds an enviable reputation and rank in the profession. But it took work, hard work, to achieve it, and the reward has been fairly won. His career has been one characteristic of our American life, but none the less is it a shining example for all young men."

JUDGE PLINY WEBSTER BARTHOLOMEW, attorney-at-law, Indianapolis, was born in Cabotville, Hampden Co., Mass., Aug. 4, 1840, son of Harris and Betsy (Moore) Bartholomew, both of whom were natives of Massachusetts. Of their four children Judge Bartholomew is the only one now living.

Harris Bartholomew, grandfather of the Judge, was a son of Andrew Bartholomew, who was a native of Connecticut and came of Puritan ancestry. He was a prominent man in Montgomery, Mass., where he spent his whole life, serving as a selectman, treasurer of the town and school commissioner. He died at the age of seventy-six, and was the father of six children. Pliny Moore, the maternal grandfather of the Judge, was a farmer and a native of Massachusetts. When he died at the age of sixty-six years he left a family of five children.

Harris Bartholomew, son of Harris and father of the Judge, was a merchant in Indianapolis. He came to that city in 1869 and for some years was engaged in a wholesale tea and tobacco trade, in which line his son Harris was a partner with him. Later in life he was a boot and shoe merchant. He died March 21, 1887, at the age of seventy-three years, two months. His first wife, Betsy (Moore), died in 1846, in Montgomery, Mass., at the age of thirty-nine years. She was a Congregationalist in religious faith. He married for his second wife Deborah S. Coleman, a well educated woman and a teacher in Massachusetts, and two of their eight daughters are now living: Alice married Wells Noble, of Westfield, Mass., in which state the Nobles are a noted family. Leila is unmarried and for several years has been a teacher in the Indianapolis schools; she is a graduate of Pratt Institute, one of the famous art schools in Brooklyn, and was at the head of her class, is noted for her originality in designing, drawing and molding, and won the first scholarship, out of four prizes submitted by the Prang Drawing School, against more than a thousand competitors.

Harris Bartholomew was originally a Congregationalist, but after removing to the West became an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Cambridge City, Ind. When he died he was a member of the Seventh Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis. In politics he was originally a Whig and when the Republican party was organized in 1856 he at once attached himself to its fortunes. In 1850-51 he was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature, and he and Daniel Webster were great friends. His integrity and reliability were beyond question, and he was a very successful merchant.

Pliny Webster Bartholomew lived in Massachusetts until he was sixteen years old, attending the common schools at Northampton until that age. He then found a position in a grocery and butcher shop, where he was to receive fifty dollars and his board for a year's salary. In the meantime his father had removed to Canton, N. Y., and presently Pliny followed him. He determined that the practice of law should be his life work, and accordingly for a time taught district school in Hermon, N. Y., and made preparations for entering college, which he did in the fall of 1861, matriculating at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., where he graduated in 1864. During the first two years and a part of the third he paid his way by teaching school in the winter and selling maps and books during the summer seasons. During his Senior year he took up the study of law, and was admitted to the Bar at Schenectady in May, 1865. He then went to Ballston Spa, the county seat of Saratoga county, and formed a partnership with J. S. Lamorreux, practising with him until the fall of 1866. That year he came to Indianapolis and established a law practice, in which he has been very successful, and in which he is still engaged, the only break in his professional career being when he was on the Bench. He was elected judge of the Superior court in 1890 and served with great success until Oct. 26, 1896, when his term expired. He was a partner with Judge Edward Buskirk for several years, under the firm name of Bartholomew & Buskirk, and was also for a time a partner with David V. Burns, late of Denver, Colorado.

Judge Bartholomew was married Jan. 30, 1873, to Miss Sarah Belle Smith, daughter of G. W. Smith, of Crawfordsville, Ind., and to this union were born three children: (1) Belle Isadora married Allin W. Hewitt, and lives in New Jersey. She is the mother of three children, Arthur Cromwell, Helen Louise and Sarah Lucile. (2) Pliny W., Jr., died when four years old. (3) Harris Sherley graduated at Shortridge high school and attended Union College one year, and is now a salesman in New York City.

Judge Bartholomew and his family belong to the Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder. In Marion Lodge, No. 1, K. P., he is past chancellor, past representative to the grand lodge, etc., and at the present time is a member of the grand lodge; he is past grand dictator of the Knights of Honor, is past Indiana representative and member of the American Bar Association, and a member of the Indiana Bar Association. In politics he is a Democrat. From 1866 to 1870 he was commissioner of deeds for New York and Connecticut in Indiana. For several years he has lived at No. 1924 College avenue, where he has a fine and attractive home.

VALENTINE SCHAAF, president and superintendent of the Indianapolis Manufacturers & Carpenters Union, Nos. 201, 203, 205 New Jersey street, Indianapolis, was born in Germany, close to Frankfort-on-the-Main, June 7, 1831. He is a son of Valentine and Barbara (Schmidt) SchAAF, natives of Germany, who had four children, two now living: Valentine and Casper, the latter of Erbenhausen, Germany. The father was a farmer in Germany and died there in 1884, aged seventy-nine years. The mother died in 1887, aged eighty-four years. They were Lutherans. He served as a soldier in the regular army.

Valentine SchAAF's paternal grandfather, also named Valentine, was a farmer, and died in Germany aged seventy-five years. He served in the Napoleonic wars. He had four sons, one of whom lives in Indianapolis, and is close to ninety-one years of age. The maternal grandfather of our subject, Adam Schmidt, was a farmer, and died at an old age. He had two sons and two daughters.

Valentine Schaaf was raised in Germany and received a common school education. He came to America in 1850 and settled in Indianapolis, where he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for many years, also doing contracting from 1860 to 1870. Then he and Fred Schmid with others organized the Indianapolis Manufacturers & Carpenters Union, for the manufacture of all kinds of house material. Mr. Valentine Schaaf has been its president since 1877. They employ about sixty-five people.

On April 27, 1867, Valentine Schaaf married Miss Elizabeth Breckley, daughter of Gottlieb and Elizabeth Breckley. Eight children were born to this union, five sons and three daughters, two of whom are now living, Harry and Alvin. The others died in early childhood. Harry is foreman of the manufacturing establishment of which his father is president; he married Miss Minnie Aldag, and is the father of three children, Frieda, Norman and Paul. Alvin married Miss Lora Francis Vanatta, and they live in Indianapolis; he was a traveling man for a lumber firm, but is now a salesman under his father.

Mr. Valentine Schaaf was originally a Lutheran in religious connection, but is now identified with the Evangelical German Church. In politics he is a Republican. He resides at No. 217 North Arsenal avenue, with his son Harry, in a fine home. Mr. Schaaf has lived in Indianapolis fifty-one years, and he has seen it grow from a small city, when the old Madison railroad had been built only a year. Mr. Schaaf has put up a great many houses, and some of the large buildings of the city.

HENRY P. COBURN came out to Indiana in 1816—the year it was admitted as a sovereign State of the Union. He was a young lawyer, a graduate of Harvard College, and the library he brought with him was typical of the progress and advancement which he advocated and fostered to the close of his life. His labors in behalf of general education and the free school system have never been publicly acknowledged, but he is recognized as one of the earliest and ablest friends of free schools in this State by all familiar with their history. His efforts in the promotion of public morality were still another expression of his earnest desire to be of the utmost service to his fellow-men. Mr.

Coburn was a practicing lawyer throughout the period of his residence in Indiana, and for over thirty years clerk of the Supreme court of the State.

Mr. Coburn was born in 1790, at Dracut, Mass., where his ancestors settled in Colonial times. The family is of English origin, the Coburns having come to America with the Puritans in the latter part of the seventeenth century and settled on the east bank of the Merrimac river, in what is now Dracut township, Middlesex Co., Mass. Descendants of the original settlers still own and occupy the land purchased from the Indians over two hundred years ago. The title was from "John Thomas, a Sagamore of Natic."

Capt. Peter Coburn, grandfather of Henry P. Coburn, was born in 1737, at Dracut, Mass., and died there in 1813. He served throughout the Revolution, being captain in the Continental army, commanded a company of minute-men at the Lexington alarm, and was in command of his company at the battle of Bunker Hill, in Col. Ebenezer Bridge's Regiment. He married Dolly Varnum, who was born in 1739 and died in 1765.

Peter Coburn, Jr., son of Capt. Peter Coburn, was born in Massachusetts, was a farmer by occupation, and lived to the age of over sixty. He was a soldier throughout the Revolutionary war, and took part in the battle of Bunker Hill, although he was too young to enlist regularly, being only a boy in his teens at the time. He married Elizabeth Poor, who was born in 1766 and died in 1841. They had a large family.

Henry P. Coburn, son of Peter Coburn, Jr., was reared on a farm. He received a thorough education, taking a course at Harvard College, from which institution he was graduated in 1812, studied law and was admitted to the Bar in Massachusetts. Shortly afterward he came to Indiana, the year it was admitted into the Union, and first located at Corydon, the early capital of the new State. He bought land near Mount Vernon. Mr. Coburn followed his profession at Corydon until after Indianapolis became the State capital, removing to the new center of government in 1824, from which time until his death he practiced in Marion county and the surrounding territory. In the Indianapolis Gazette of Jan. 30, 1826, we find the following "Law Notice": "Hiram Brown and Henry P. Coburn will practice law in the Federal court and the Marion county courts in partnership. They reside in Indianapolis and keep their law office opposite Henderson and Blake's tavern [the present site of the New York Store], one door east of the Journal printing office. Hiram Brown will practice in the Supreme court." Mr. Coburn could not practice in the Supreme court, as he was clerk of that court, having been appointed while at Corydon, soon after the organization of the State. He was the second to hold the position of clerk of the Supreme court of Indiana, the first clerk dying within a year of his appointment. Mr. Coburn held the office continuously, by re-appointments of the judges of the Supreme court, until the new order was established in 1852. By the provisions of the new constitution just adopted the clerk of the Supreme court was to be elected by popular vote, and Mr. Coburn declined to be a candidate. As a lawyer he was highly successful, and the confidence he enjoyed in the profession was the most convincing evidence of his ability and legal attainments.

H. P. Coburn

Mr. Coburn thoroughly appreciated the advantages of education, being far ahead of his day on the question of free schools. His foresight enabled him to see the benefits and future popularity of public education long before they became apparent to those who would profit most by the change, and his sagacity, though recognized by his fellow workers, was underestimated by those he was seeking to help. The first attempts to have the free school system adopted met with little sympathy, but Mr. Coburn was not disheartened, and his perseverance and earnestness won out in the end. He was probably the earliest advocate of free public schools in this section, and associated with him were such men as Calvin Fletcher, Samuel Merrill, James Blake, John G. Brown, and James M. Ray. These were all men whose names have become inseparably associated with the history of Indianapolis and who have left many traces of their life and work on the various commercial and public interests of the city. Mr. Ray's son, Judge Charles Ray, is a judge of the Indiana Supreme court. Mr. Brown was a Virginian and a typical refined Southern gentleman; one of his sons, Alexander M. Brown, became a lawyer of Indianapolis, and another, James W. Brown, a scholarly man of high scientific attainments, served as city engineer; there were also two daughters—Mary, who married Stephen Tomlinson, a druggist (who gave Tomlinson Hall to the city), and Margaret, still living, who married a Presbyterian minister.

The prominence and standing of his associates in the cause of free education shows convincingly that Mr. Coburn was taken seriously by the best elements in the community. After the establishment of the schools was accomplished their maintenance was the next important question, and he was as prominent in this phase as he had been in founding them. It was his idea to tax the public for the revenue needed, and a vote was taken each year upon this point until the plan carried and was adopted by the State. He had the satisfaction—not always the lot of the benefactor—of seeing his ideas in successful operation for a number of years before his death. Mr. Coburn's well-known sentiments on the subject of education led him into close relations with all similar projects and many institutions of learning, for he took a public-spirited interest in every such establishment, aiding them all by his influence and encouragement, and, where necessary, with his means. He was retained for many years in the office of trustee of the Marion County Seminary. He was one of the first promoters of the county library, was a member of its first board of trustees, and also served as treasurer. In that position he had considerable to do in the early financiering of the library. The county commissioners appointed him to ascertain the amount due the public on the sales of all the original town lots of Indianapolis, the county being allowed by law a certain per cent on such sales. This sum was to be applied to the purchase of the Marion county library. The task was considered a very tedious one, requiring time and patience, as well as judgment and ability, and Mr. Coburn's selection was a mark of high confidence in both his integrity and business qualities. The money he collected formed the basis of the library fund, which has since been augmented by various amounts for the increase of the library. His son Augustus was the first librarian. The venerable Dr. William H. Wishard said recently (Jan. 10, 1907):

"Henry P. Coburn was an attorney, very modest and unassuming, a first-class type of a Christian gentleman of the old school. He was well educated and a graduate of Harvard College. In his legal business he was very generous to his clients, never exacting pay from the poor and indigent for his professional services. Justice has never been done to this gentleman by the histories and historians of early Indianapolis and Marion county, as a worthy, far-seeing citizen, looking after the educational and moral welfare of this pioneer town. He was one of the very first advocates of general education of the people, long before the establishment of the public school system. He held various offices of trust. He was the earliest and most active advocate for temperance, and took a bold and determined stand against the licensing of grog shops in Marion county. He with Nicholas McCarty, Calvin Fletcher, James M. Ray, Samuel Merrill, David V. Culley, and John B. Dillon were the earliest and most active advocates of the public school system."

The following comments upon Mr. Coburn and his work were made by Gen. Lew Wallace and other men intimately acquainted for years with the progress and history of Indiana:

Henry P. Coburn, a pioneer lawyer, clerk of the Supreme court of Indiana, was one of the foremost men of his time, always active in the promotion of public education and the establishing of the free school system, to which there was very considerable opposition, especially by men of the South or slave States, who were almost universally opposed to the establishing of free schools. Mr. Coburn was prominent and active among those who insisted upon a liberal provision by law for the establishment of the free school system, which met with a decided and vigorous opposition. He was a graduate of Harvard and a man of great influence among all classes, who respected him for his earnestness and honesty. No one was more prominent in the establishing and support of the free school system than Mr. Coburn and it is remarkable that no recognition of him has been made by the citizens of Indiana for his constant services in the establishment of the public schools. He was connected with all public-spirited enterprises. He was positive in his opinions and was a man of fine principle and of well-trained mind. He did more for the promotion of the free school system of Marion county than any other man. He was one of the trustees of the county seminary from its organization to its close, and was always on the school board. He, with David V. Culley, Calvin Fletcher, Samuel Merrill, Sr., John B. Dillon and others, made the rounds of the schools, encouraging the teachers in their labors and in the preservation of order and thorough discipline. Calvin Fletcher was especially active, and would administer personal chastisement on the proper occasions.

While at Corydon Mr. Coburn married Sarah Malott, who was born at Louisville, Jefferson Co., Ky., daughter of Hiram Malott, a pioneer of that county. Hiram Malott's wife was a daughter of Peter Haas, a Swiss Mennonite settler of Lancaster county, Pa., who was noted for his religious principles and patriotism and was an influential man in his section during the Revolutionary war. He was a member of the committee of safety and observation, and also gave active service in the war, being a member of the first company that passed the committee of observation. Hiram Malott was born in Maryland, of French-Huguenot ancestry, moved to Kentucky about 1785 or 1790, and was a farmer all his life, owning and managing a plantation of considerable size in Jefferson county. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and afterward served in the Kentucky militia, being known as Major Malott.

To Mr. and Mrs. Coburn were born five children, four sons and one daughter, of whom but one is still living, Henry Coburn, of Indianapolis. Mrs. Caroline (Coburn) Bence, the widow of Dr. Robert F. Bence, also a resident of Indianapolis, died in 1903. Mr. Coburn died in 1854, and Mrs. Coburn passed away in 1866, at the age of about seventy-four. She was a Methodist in religious faith, and Mr. Coburn was a Presbyterian.

WILBUR SYLVESTER WYNN, vice-president of the State Life Insurance Company of Indianapolis, was born Jan. 25, 1850, in Monroe county, N. Y. His ancestors on both sides came from old New England stock, a great-grandfather on each side having served in the Continental army during the Revolutionary war. Mr. Wynn lost both of his parents when he was five years old, and lived with his maternal grandfather until he was fourteen, when he went to Indianapolis to live with an uncle, W. J. Wynn, who was at that time general agent for the New York Life Insurance Company.

At the age of seventeen he entered the book house of Bowen-Stewart & Co., of Indianapolis. He spent ten years in the book business, part of the time on the road as a traveling salesman. At the same time he took up the study of law, and at the age of twenty-seven went to Hamburg, Iowa, and engaged in the practice of law. While there he was elected and served a term as city attorney. In 1882, his health failing, he moved to Sioux Falls, Dak., and engaged in the newspaper business, establishing the Daily Argus in that city, now the leading daily newspaper in South Dakota. In 1886 he sold out the newspaper and entered the life insurance business, as agent for the Michigan Mutual. He subsequently worked for the Northwestern of Milwaukee, in Dakota, and the Mutual Benefit, in Nebraska. During this period he made a close and profound study of the scientific basis and general principles of the life insurance business.

He returned to Indianapolis in 1892, and, in connection with other parties there, organized a stock company, the Atlas Life Insurance Company, of which he was actuary and manager. In 1893, the panic having materially reduced the chances for building up a successful company at that time, the Atlas reinsured and went out of business. Mr. Wynn then became Indiana State manager for the Fidelity Mutual of Philadelphia.

In 1894, the State Life Insurance Company was organized by Mr. Wynn, Mr. Andrew M. Sweeney, and Mr. Samuel Quinn, Mr. Wynn being the original promoter of the company. There being no legal reserve law in Indiana at that time the company was organized under the assessment law, but Mr. Wynn as its actuary placed the company from the beginning on an old line basis, and the company never issued a policy at any time that did not require the payment in advance of the full regular old line standard participating premium rate, and the company, from the first, regularly valued its policies and maintained full old line reserves. For this reason, while still operating under the assessment law in Indiana, it was admitted in Ohio as a regular, legal reserve company. Mr. Wynn served as secretary and actuary, and in March, 1907, was elected vice-president of the company.

Mr. Wynn was the author of the famous Legal Reserve Deposit law of Indiana, which requires all companies incorporated thereunder to maintain a deposit with the State of the full net cash value of all outstanding policies, and was largely instrumental in securing its enactment by the Legislature, and the State Life was the first company to incorporate thereunder. This law has been of enormous benefit in inspiring public confidence in Indiana companies, and in making Indianapolis an insurance center.

WILBUR FISK BROWDER, of the firm of Clifford, Browder & Moffett, lawyers, at Rooms 806-808 Stevenson building, Indianapolis, was born in Jamestown, Ohio, Nov. 29, 1850, son of Parker S. and Susan J. (Dakin) Browder, natives, he of Virginia and she of Ohio.

Parker S. Browder had seven children, five sons and two daughters: Cornelius, of Indianapolis; Courtland R., of Chicago; Wilbur F.; Frank F., of St. Louis, Mo.; Charles S., of Old Mexico, a gold miner and ex-conductor; Jennie E., wife of A. L. Stanfield, of Edgar, Ill., now deceased; and Mrs. Carrie Tweed, a professor in the State Normal at Terre Haute, Ind. The father was for many years a farmer and stock drover and shipper of fine cattle. He came west with his parents to Greene county, Ohio, settled in Jamestown, and owned considerable property. In 1858 he moved to Greencastle, Ind., and lived there until 1876, when he moved to Murdock, Douglass Co., Ill., where he died in 1890, aged seventy-four years. His wife still survives and lives with her daughter at Terre Haute. They were Methodists. He was a local Methodist preacher, and gave thousands of dollars to the church. He was never a politician, but was a prominent Mason and an Odd Fellow.

William Browder, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was a native of Virginia. The family was of Scotch-Irish descent, emigrating from England. William Browder was a farmer and soldier in the Revolutionary war. He was a Presbyterian and being opposed to slavery, he and his brother, James, who owned about two hundred slaves, brought them to Ohio and released them. William died when upward of fifty years of age. He had thirteen children who grew to maturity. James died aged eighty-eight years. The maternal grandfather of our subject was named Dakin. He belonged to the celebrated Dakin family of New York, had money and was a gentleman of leisure. He was an early settler in Ohio, and died there aged about forty-six years. He had four children by his first wife, and two by his second.

Wilbur F. Browder lived in Ohio until eight years of age, when they went to Greencastle, Ind., and he lived there until the fall of 1872. In that year he came to Indianapolis, and has lived here ever since. Attending the common schools in Ohio for his preparatory education, he graduated from Asbury (now Depauw) University, in 1872. He then became an officer of the Supreme Court under State officer James P. Black, the official reporter, and served there until 1888 under four different officials, both Democratic and Republican. In 1888 he took up the practice of law in Indianapolis, and has continued at it ever since, being associated with Mr. Vincent D. Clifford until 1896, at which time they took in an additional partner, Mr. W. S. Moffett, the firm name now being Clifford, Browder & Moffett. Mr. Browder was employed for several years in reading proofs and compiling court reports of Indiana, comprising volumes from No. 35 to No. 144 inclusive; also from No. 1 to No. 12 Appellate court reports. He resigned in 1888, but continued to read proofs on these reports up to the year 1896. He is one of the three principal men in the C. P. Leah Paper Company of Indianapolis; a member of the board of directors of the Indiana Insurance Company, and attorney for same; and is identified with other enterprises in the city.

On December 4, 1873, Mr. Browder married Miss Ella J. Jones, daughter of Richard Wilds and Mary Catherine (Daggy) Jones. Nine children were born to this union, seven sons and two daughters: Frederick, Emma, Wilbur, Clifford, Alice Irene, Clarence Newton, Maurice Eugene and two who died in early childhood. Miss Emma is a graduate of Depauw University, and a teacher in the Indianapolis public schools. The other children are at home. Mr. and Mrs. Browder are members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Browder is a member of Mystic Tie Lodge, No. 398, F. & A. M., and past-master of the lodge; of Keystone Chapter, No. 6, R. A. M., and an officer therein; of Raper Commandery, No. 1, K. T.; is a Scottish Rite Mason, Valley of Indianapolis, District of Indiana; a thirty-second degree Mason; and is High Priest and Prophet of the A. A. O. N. M. S., Murat Temple; he also belongs to the Beta Theta Pi college society, Delta Chapter. In political sentiment he is a Republican, and has been a member of the County and City Central committees several times. He belongs to the Marion, Columbia and Commercial Clubs:

Deutsche Haus, and various other local societies. He lives at No. 2212 Talbot Avenue.

REV. NATHANIEL ALDEN HYDE, whose home is at No. 1316 North Delaware street, Indianapolis, was born in Stafford, Conn., May 10, 1827, son of Capt. Nathaniel and Caroline (Converse) Hyde, both of whom were born in Connecticut.

The founder of the family in this country was William Hyde, who settled at Norwich in the seventeenth century; he first appears at Hartford in 1636, and probably came from England as early as 1633. He was an important man in his community, which he served as selectman.

Ephraim Hyde, grandson of Thomas (grandson of William the founder), married Martha Geddings.

Nathaniel Hyde, son of Ephraim and Martha, was born in Stafford, Conn., in 1757, and he died there in 1825. He was twice married. His first wife was Sarah, daughter of Lieut. Strong, and his second, Cynthia Palmer, the latter still living at Hartford as late as 1856.

Capt. Nathaniel Hyde (2), son of Nathaniel and father of Rev. Nathaniel Alden, was born in Connecticut in February, 1800, and became a prominent iron manufacturer in his native State, prospering greatly. He died Oct. 11, 1830. He was captain in the State militia. He married Caroline Converse, who was born in Connecticut in 1804, daughter of Dr. Josiah Converse, a native of Connecticut, and his wife, Martha (Alden) Converse, daughter of Captain Alden (a direct descendant of John Alden of the "Mayflower"). To Nathaniel and Caroline (Converse) Hyde were born three children. The wife and mother died Oct. 31, 1861, in the faith of the Congregational Church, of which she had long been a member.

Rev. Nathaniel Alden Hyde was reared in Stafford, Conn., and when thirteen years old was sent to Monson Academy, at Monson, Mass., where he prepared for Yale College, which he entered when sixteen years of age, graduating therefrom in the class of 1847. After a brief rest he taught school for a year, and then entered the Theological School at Andover, Mass., to prepare for the ministry, completing the course and graduating in 1851, after which for nearly a year he was a resident graduate in Yale Divinity School. He preached in Connecticut, at Central Village, Rockville, and other places, and was called to Central Village and Deep River, but declined, as he did not care for an immediate pastorate. For two years he was secretary for Charles L. Brace, of the Children's Aid Society in New York City, and for a time was acting pastor of the First Congregational Church of Columbus, Ohio. He was called to Cincinnati to supply for Dr. Storrs, who was obliged to take a long vacation on account of ill health. In 1857 he was called to the Pastorate of the Plymouth Congregational Church in Indianapolis, where he was engaged for ten years, and for five years was superintendent of the Congregational Church in Indiana. After this he became pastor of the Mayflower Congregational Church, in which capacity he served sixteen years. He resigned in May, 1888, and was elected pastor emeritus. Since that date he has not been in active pastoral labors, but for several years has been very intimately connected with the churches of the State as permanent secretary of the State Association, and chairman of the State Missionary Association. During all these years he has also been the chairman of the State Building Society, and is closely connected with the charitable and literary associations of the city, among them being the Home of Friendless Women, and the Board of Children's Guardians of Marion county, being president of the latter. In the Indianapolis Literary Club he is an old and venerated member, and the Contemporary Club, of Indianapolis, also claims him for a member. For many years he has been a director of the Chicago Theological Seminary, and is still active in that capacity. In his early years he was chiefly instrumental in organizing the Association of Yale Graduates in Indianapolis, and for more than a decade has been president of the New England Society. His life has always been a busy and useful one.

Mr. Hyde was married Aug. 28, 1866, to Miss Laura K., eldest daughter of Stoughton A. and Maria N. (Kipp) Fletcher. They have an adopted daughter, Josephine. In politics he is a Republican. For many years he lived at the corner of Ohio and Alabama streets, but for several years has occupied his present attractive and comfortable home.

PETER BERND, senior member of the firm of Peter Bernd & Son, has been a resident of Indianapolis since 1873 and has been engaged in business as a wagon manufacturer since 1875. Several members of the family have been interested in the same line throughout that period, and the name is well known in that connection in the city.

Mr. Bernd was born Oct. 5, 1846, in Bavaria, Germany, of which kingdom his parents, George Philip and Phillipena (Becker) Bernd, were also natives. He attended school in the Fatherland for four years before coming to America with his parents, and received the rest of his education in this country. He came to Lawrenceburg, Dearborn Co., Ind., with his father, and from there, in 1863, went to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he remained until 1864, after which, until he settled in Indianapolis, in 1873, he was at a number of places. In the spring of 1875 he and his brothers Daniel and George formed a partnership known as Bernd Brothers, and they carried on the business of wagon manufacturing together very successfully for many years. In the spring of 1904 Peter Bernd and his son, Albert Frederick Bernd, founded an independent business under the firm name of Peter Bernd & Son, which bids fair to add further prestige to a name already well known in their line. The factory and offices are at Nos. 170-172 East Morris street. The work turned out of this establishment is its own recommendation, being second to none of the kind. Both father and son are thoroughly familiar with the work in all its branches, and the firm enjoys a patronage of which any concern could be proud and which shows a steady and satisfactory increase.

Mr. Bernd is prominent among the German-Americans of his adopted city, is a member of the German Pioneers, and of the German Protestant Orphan Association. He was married in the fall of 1875 to Catherine Thomas, daughter of Rev. Rudolph Thomas, whose wife was a Zorn, and they have had a family of seven children, three of whom survive, namely: Catherine, Louisa and Albert Frederick.

Albert Frederick Bernd, born Oct. 15, 1882, in Indianapolis, received his education in the public schools, finishing the course in the Manual Training High School, from which he was graduated in January, 1902. He has received a good practical business education, especially adapted to the needs of his own line of work, and he manages the business affairs of the factory for the most part.

JEFFERSON H. CLAYPOOL, of Indianapolis, attorney-at-law, farmer, banker, dealer in real estate, etc., was born in Connersville, Ind., Aug. 15, 1856, son of Benjamin F. and Alice H. (Helm) Claypool.

Newton Claypool, his grandfather, was born in Virginia, of English descent, the family descending from a Claypool who settled in Pennsylvania in early Colonial days. Newton Claypool was a farmer, merchant and banker, and otherwise prominent in his community, serving eight times as a member of the legislature. He came to Indiana in 1817, locating at Connersville, where he passed all of his subsequent business life. He died in Indianapolis in 1867, aged seventy-one years, leaving four sons.

Benjamin F. Claypool was born in Connersville, Ind., where he lived and died, and practiced law there for forty years. He was a member of the Legislature from 1860 to 1864, being State senator; was a candidate for Congress in 1874, but was defeated by W. H. Holman; and was a Presidential elector in 1864 and 1868. He was a Whig, and when the Republican party was formed was a delegate to the convention that organized the party. Mr. Claypool died in 1888, aged sixty-two years, his wife passing away in 1882, aged about fifty. They had two children, Mrs. Mary C. Roberts (deceased) and Jefferson H. Mrs. Claypool was born in Indiana. Her father was a physician, and came to Indiana about 1820, locating in Rush county, where he practiced his profession. He was a special surgeon in the army during the Civil war. He died there about 1885, aged eighty-two years. He had six children, three of whom died before him. Dr. Helm was active in the political affairs of his day, being a member of the Constitutional Convention of Indiana in 1852, and a member of the Indiana Senate one term subsequent to the war.

Jefferson H. Claypool was born and raised at Connersville. He attended the public schools, and later the Miami University, at Oxford, Ohio, and the University of Virginia, after which he took up the study of law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1877. He began practicing at Connersville, where he remained till 1893, in which year he moved to Indianapolis, where he has had his home ever since. He was elected to the Lower House of the Legislature in 1888, and again in 1890, was Republican State election commissioner in 1898, and again in 1900. Since coming to Indianapolis he has given his attention more particularly to farming and general business matters, having an office in the Talbot block. He is a director of the First National Bank of Connersville. He has written considerably for the newspapers on political and economic questions, and for a number of years assisted in the preparation of most of the Republican State platforms, being chairman of the State Advisory committee of the Republican party in 1896.

On Oct. 18, 1893, Mr. Claypool married Miss Mary Buckner Ross, daughter of Major J. W. Ross, of Connersville, and Sarah (Hanson) Ross. Their home is on Meridian street. They have one son, Benjamin Franklin Claypool. Mr. Claypool is a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon college fraternity.

GEN. ABRAM O. MILLER, M. D., deceased, brigadier-general in the Civil war and a physician and surgeon by profession, was born in Madison county, Ohio, Oct. 2, 1827, and died in Lebanon April 25, 1901. He was a son of Thomas and Hannah (Fry) Miller. The father was a wheelwright by trade, and with his wife and family came to Indiana from Ohio in 1830, settling in Clinton county. The following year both parents died, Mrs. Miller surviving her husband but a few months. Both died in middle life, and they had seven children, three sons and four daughters, all now deceased.

Abram O. Miller grew to manhood in Clinton county. He lived on a farm and was sent to the old fashioned subscription schools. Later he entered Louisville Medical College, and finishing received the degree of M. D. from Rush Medical College, of Chicago. Until the breaking out of the Rebellion he practiced medicine at Jefferson, Clinton Co., Ind., but when the call to arms came he enlisted as a private in the 10th Ind. V. I. in April, 1861. At the expiration of his three months' term of service, he re-enlisted for three years. He rose to the rank of lieutenant in the 10th Regiment, three months' service, and after coming home he helped to reorganize that regiment and was promoted to be major and afterwards lieutenant-colonel of it. On Aug. 13, 1862, he was commissioned colonel of the 72d Ind. I. V. This regiment was mustered in Aug. 24, at Lebanon, Ky., and when Col. Miller joined it there he was accompanied by his bride, Mary L. Miller, to whom he had been married three days earlier at Lebanon, Ind.

Three weeks after Mrs. Miller returned home, and Col. Miller again took the field.

The "Lightning Brigade" was composed of the 98th and 123d Illinois and the 72d and 17th Indiana, and was commanded by Col. Wilder, who retired in July, 1864. Col. Miller succeeded him, but he had been practically in command for some time. About five months before the close of the war Col. Miller was brevetted Brigadier-General. He saw much active service and was in the following battles: Rich Mountain, in which he took the first Rebel flag from off the enemy's works; Mill Springs; Kenesaw Mountain; Missionary Ridge; Farrington; Chickamauga; and all through the Atlanta campaign. His regiment was mustered out in June, 1865. Gen. Miller was twice wounded, once only slightly, at Mill Springs, with the 10th regiment; and once severely, at Selma, Ala., while with the 72d regiment. This latter wound was received April 2, 1865, in the last battle in which the regiment was engaged. Gen. Miller was honorably discharged at the close of the war.

When the war ended Gen. Miller returned to Lebanon and resuming the practice of medicine continued in it until 1868, in which year he was elected county clerk for a term of four years. After the expiration of that time, he helped to organize the First National Bank, and was its cashier until 1876. Two years later he was nominated for State auditor on the Republican ticket, but as that ticket was included in the general landslide which overtook that party in 1878, all were defeated. After this Gen. Miller abandoned politics, and again returned to his medical practice, which he continued without further intermission until a short time before his death, which occurred April 25, 1901, when he was in his seventy-fourth year. The General was a member of the G. A. R. and of the Masonic Fraternity. He and his wife both belonged to the Methodist Church.

As was previously stated, Gen. Miller was married Aug. 21, 1862, to Miss Mary L. Zion, a daughter of William and Amelia (Sims) Zion. Four children were born to them: (1) Elizabeth A. married Charles Shepherd, a grocer in Lebanon, by whom she had a son and a daughter, namely: Letha Louise, who married Owen E. Wilcox, a manufacturer of Lebanon, and who has borne him four sons: Owen E., Riley St. Clair, and Jacob and Charles (twins), and Arthur St. Clair, a grocer, who married Miss Nellie Welch, and has one daughter, Margaret. (2) Ada M. married Charles Hayden, by whom she had one daughter, Diana. Mr. Hayden is now deceased, and his widow has married I. A. Richey, of Lebanon, proprietor of a barber shop. (3) William S. is a printer in Chicago. His wife, formerly Miss Emma Johnson, of Thorntown, is the mother of one son, Chauncey Depew. (4) Abram Alonzo is a salesman for Nelson Morris & Co., of Chicago, and resides in Philadelphia, Pa. He married Miss Helen Garrity, and has one daughter and two sons, Mary E., Abram A. and Newton E. Mrs. Mary L. Miller survives her husband, and still lives in the old home on West Main street.

William Zion, Mrs. Miller's father, was a native of Virginia, while his wife was born at Brookville, Ind. Mrs. Miller was one of eleven children, seven sons and four daughters, of whom six are now living, namely: Partrize, wife of Manson Head, of Zionsville, Ind.; Mrs. Mary L. Miller; Theodore L., of Anderson, Ind.; Alonzo A., of Indianapolis; James M., of Clark's Hill, Ind.; and Charles M., of Lebanon. The father was a blacksmith by trade, but after he came to Indiana in 1834, locating in Lebanon, he engaged in general merchandising instead, and followed that until his death. In his younger days he was sheriff of Boone county for two terms, and was postmaster of Lebanon four years under President Lincoln. Later he was a director and stockholder in the Lafayette & Indianapolis railroad (now the Big Four). He died in 1880 aged sixty-eight years, while his wife lived to be seventy-nine, passing away in 1894. She was a member of the Methodist Church. The paternal grandparents were Jacob and Catharine (Fleener) Zion, the former a native of Virginia, of German descent. They had a large family and lived to be well advanced in years. The maternal grandfather was Stephen Sims, a native of Tennessee and a pioneer of Indiana. He lived for a short time in Boone county, then moved to Clinton county, and lived there on a farm, although he was a lawyer by profession and practice. He died in 1862 when he was quite old. The name of his first wife was Elizabeth McCarthy, who lived to middle life and bore him thirteen children; after her death he married Caroline Betz, who became the mother of six children. Stephen Sims's father was a soldier in the war of 1812, and his father was a soldier in the war of the Revolution.

GEORGE F. EDENHARTER, M. D., the distinguished, efficient and capable superintendent of the Central Indiana Hospital for the Insane, at Indianapolis, was born in Piqua, Ohio, June 13, 1857, son of John and Elizabeth (Roseberg) Edenharter. His grandparents on both sides died in Germany.

John Edenharter, the Doctor's father, was born in Bavaria, and the mother was born in Saxony. They had a family of three sons and two daughters, and two of their children are still living, Dr. George F. and Frank, the latter an attorney in Indianapolis. John Edenharter was a cabinetmaker, and sought a home in the United States about 1848, locating first in Cincinnati, but removed to Piqua. About 1875 he came to Indianapolis, where he died in 1898, at the age of seventy-four years. His wife passed to her rest in 1889, when about sixty-three years old. She was a Lutheran and he was a Catholic. In Germany he served his term in the regular army.

Dr. Edenharter lived in his native town until he was about ten years old, when his parents moved to Dayton. It was not until 1878, however, that he came to Indianapolis, where his father had already been established some three years. His academic education was obtained in the public schools, and his professional training in the Medical College of Indiana, from which he graduated in 1886. Dr. Edenharter at once began to practice in Indianapolis, rising to such professional standing that he was appointed superintendent of the Central Indiana Hospital for Insane April 7, 1893, entering upon the duties of his office the first of the following May. He was re-elected March 25, 1897, again on March 29, 1901, and again, for his fourth term of four years, on March 31, 1905. The board of Trustees at this meeting adopted the following resolution:

The Board of Trustees of the Central Indiana Hospital for Insane feel it their duty, as well as pleasure, to make this record of their appreciation of the services of Dr. George F. Edenharter, Superintendent of this institution, at this the close of another term of his employment. He assumed his duties as such superintendent in May, 1893, and during the twelve years of continuous service he has brought the hospital to the exalted rank it now enjoys, not only among the institutions of like character in this country, but among those of the civilized world, as is evidenced by the many testimonials and letters received from foreign visitors that have been guests of the institution. The results that have been achieved during his incumbency are the indisputable evidences of his high executive ability, untiring and conscientious industry—in short, a comprehensive grasp of the duties to be performed and a prompt and fearless performance of them.

We hereby most cordially commend Dr. Edenharter for his faithful and efficient work and indulge the hope that the State may have many more years of his services.

RESOLVED, That a signed copy of these resolutions be presented to Dr. Edenharter and also one be transmitted to the Governor.

D. Edenharter was married June 6, 1888, at Dayton, Ohio, to Miss Marion E., daughter of Michael and Marie (Michel) Swadener. They have one child, Ralph.

Dr. Edenharter is a Scottish Rite Mason, and is affiliated with Capital City Lodge. He is associated with the Indianapolis Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the American Medico-Psychological Association, and the New York Medico Legal Society, being vice-president of the last named for Indiana.

In 1904 Wabash College conferred the degree of Master of Arts upon Dr. Edenharter. The Doctor is a Democrat in political faith.

Dr. Edenharter was physician and surgeon to the Marion County Asylum for two years, and for one year was physician and surgeon to the Marion County Work House. He was in the city council from 1883 to 1887, as a representative from the Eighth ward, and in 1887 was the Democratic candidate for mayor of the city, but failed of election. Two years later he received the unanimous vote of both Democrats and Republicans in the city council for superintendent of the City Hospital, and after serving a two years' term was re-appointed for a second term, but resigned to become superintendent of the Central Indiana Hospital for Insane. His home is on the hospital grounds, which are quite extensive, embracing one hundred and sixty acres and containing some thirty buildings, many of them models of architectural construction, all well adapted to their purpose, and maintained in a neat and most attractive manner. At the present time there are enrolled over two thousand patients under the care of this justly celebrated institution.

The work of the hospital has been greatly changed since the advent of Dr. Edenharter, and advanced upon much more scientific lines. The pathological laboratory and the new hospital for the sick insane have been constructed under his regime, and in their design, scope and appliances are receiving the highest praise from many sources. Under his management the institution has become essentially a teaching hospital, its facilities being extended alike to student and practitioner. One afternoon each week the students of the Indianapolis Medical Colleges attend clinical lectures upon mental and nervous diseases and Neuro-Pathology, the vast number of patients in this institution offering unexcelled clinical advantages.

Dr. William B. Fletcher, a former superintendent of this institution, and now Emeritus Professor of Mental Diseases in the Medical College of Indiana, wrote to Dr. Edenharter, under date of Nov. 30, 1900: "In making your hospital a great institution of learning for the instruction of physicians you have taken a step that will ultimately save the wrecked minds of thousands of human beings and the State millions of dollars."

The Pathological Department was dedicated by the Marion County Medical Society Dec. 18, 1896. The address was delivered by Prof. Ludwig Hektoen, M. D., of Chicago, who said in part: "The present occasion marks a most significant step in the advancement and improvement of the humanitarian work in which institutions like the Central Indiana Hospital for Insane are engaged. The inauguration, under the present auspicious circumstances, of a fully equipped, substantial department of this hospital, built in accordance with the best modern views, reflects great credit upon the development of American alienism, upon the intelligence of the board of control of this institution and of its superintendent."

Prof. C. B. Burr, M. D., of Flint, Mich., who addressed the society on Dec. 5, 1899, used the following language in closing his paper: "Indiana has done wisely in christening her institutions State hospitals. She has done wisely to emphasize the hospital idea by erecting in connection with the Central Indiana Hospital for Insane this superb and in many respects unique pathological laboratory, which in the perfection of its design and equipment will ever remain a monument to the enthusiasm, sagacity and philanthropy of our esteemed confrere, generous host and worthy friend, Dr. George F. Edenharter."

Dr. Lewellys F. Barker, of Chicago, in an address to the society on Dec. 18, 1900, said:

"It is an encouraging sign to find here in Indianapolis so well equipped a laboratory in connection with a hospital for insane. I have gone over this laboratory to-day and through the kindness of Dr. Edenharter have been permitted to examine it in detail. It is admirably constructed and presents many features that are novel. This institution and this community are to be congratulated on the possession of it, and on the fact that it is determined to facilitate every effort in this place to a more thorough study of psychiatric problems."

Prof. F. W. Langdon, M. D., of Cincinnati, Ohio, in closing an address delivered to the society on April 5, 1904, said: "We shall see at a glance the importance of the laboratory for general pathology in institutions for the treatment of nervous and mental diseases. I congratulate you, members of the Indianapolis Medical Society, that you have in your midst a pioneer in this work in the West. How well it has been organized, and how well it is fulfilling its mission it is not necessary for me to tell you. The superintendent of this Hospital is building his monument from day to day and year to year, not alone in the material structures devoted to pathological anatomy and the sick insane, but also by his devotion for the higher researches of Neurologic and Psychiatric medicine. These annual meetings of the leading medical society of Indiana under the roof of the most complete laboratory for psychiatric research of any hospital for the insane in our country are in themselves unique; they are also equally helpful and stimulating to the practitioner and the special students of nervous and mental diseases."

Dr. U. O. B. Wingate, of Milwaukee, Wis., wrote as follows to Dr. Edenharter, after a visit to the institution in 1900: "I feel it my duty and it is a great pleasure, I assure you, to express my congratulations to you on the splendid arrangements you have provided by way of bacteriological, chemical and pathological laboratories at that institution, as well as many other improvements which you have been engaged in constructing. I know of no other hospital for the insane in this country for which there has been supplied such grand facilities for studying the obscure and sad diseases that are found in all hospitals for the insane, and not since the time when Pinel and Esquirol worked their great reforms in the treatment of the insane have there been greater steps taken for the benefit of this unfortunate class than you have taken in providing such complete scientific methods for studying and understanding mental diseases. You have, my dear Doctor, reared a monument to your reputation and name more lasting than bronze or marble, and you merit not only the approbation of every intelligent citizen of Indiana, but your work is entitled to the greatest praise by the medical profession throughout the country and the unfortunate insane and their friends should rise up and call you blessed, and I am sure they would if they could understand, as those of our profession do, what a great and lasting benefit will result from your splendid efforts."

Extracts have only been made from a few of the many sources available concerning the character of the work done at this institution, but we have quoted sufficiently to show that the Central Indiana Hospital for Insane has a superintendent fully cognizant of the needs of the great institution over which he presides, and the ability to initiate and carry forward a progressive management. His influence with the General Assembly in 1905 was very marked. It was his suggestion that the State should create a new district (South Eastern) for the insane population and build a new hospital. He also advocated that the bill providing for an epileptic village be so amended as to provide for the accommodation of the hopeful or curable cases rather than for the incurable insane epileptics in the hospitals for the insane. It is a matter of record that all of his suggestions were adopted, although the opposition was active and influential.

JOHN C. PERRY, president of the J. C. Perry Company, of Indianapolis, is by virtue of his position as the head of the oldest wholesale grocery house now doing business in the State a leader in that line in Indiana and the West. As a business man and a citizen his record is above reproach. Throughout a long and active career he has maintained the most creditable standards of personal and commercial integrity, and without putting forth his efforts especially to the end of attaining popularity he has achieved it by the manner in which he transacts the every-day affairs of a busy man. He has been a resident of Indianapolis for over forty-five years.

Mr. Perry comes of an old family of Saratoga county, N. Y., where his grandfather, Benoni Perry, was born, near Edinburg, and he died there. His son, Arba D. Perry, was also born in Saratoga county, and there passed his early years. His father remarried after the death of his mother, and the stepmother proved unkind to the boy, who ran away from home at the age of thirteen, after a whipping. He never returned, but made his own way successfully, and though he died when a comparatively young man he gained a high reputation as a contractor and civil engineer. Possessed of a fine mind, and gifted with unusual mechanical ability, he gave evidence in his remarkable career of the possibilities open to a thoroughly trained tradesman who supplements technical knowledge with the intelligent judgment which enables him to see and fill the needs of his time and place. He learned the trade of carpenter, and built up a prosperous business as a contractor and builder whose work was in unusual demand, and in addition to the ordinary undertakings in that line engaged in building canals, aqueducts and dams, principally in Ohio and Indiana. He had come West with his family by wagon in the year 1836, their original destination being St. Joseph county, Mich., where Mr. Perry entered a tract of land. But because of the prevalence of ague in that region they moved through Indianapolis to Harrison, in the western part of Hamilton county, Ohio. Mr. Perry built the aqueduct at Harrison, Ohio, for the canal which ran down the White Water river valley from Hagerstown, through Central City, Connorsville and Brookville to Lawrenceburg, Ind. Fourteen miles north of Lawrenceburg he built the aqueduct across the White Water river, which made a feed for the canal. This aqueduct was constructed about 1836. Having finished it, he took the contract for the dam across the White river at Waverly, Ind., and when that was completed took a contract for eighteen miles of the canal along the Maumee river, in Ohio. There he died, in 1842. Though only a young man he had reached a high position in his line of business, as may be judged from the character and importance of the work entrusted to him.

Arba D. Perry was married in Pennsylvania to Christina Hann, daughter of John Hann, of Newcastle upon Tyne, England, who came to this country and located in Chester county, Pa. Mr. Hann died at Point of Rocks, Md. He was a coal merchant. Mrs. Perry died when a young woman, in September, 1837, and, as previously intimated, her husband did not survive her many years. They had three children who grew to maturity: Thomas P., of Marion, Indiana, now living retired, who was a contractor and builder during his active years; John C.; and Anna C., the widow of B. F. Earp, who resides with her daughter Annie in Washington, D. C.

John C. Perry was born Feb. 21, 1834, at Paoli, Chester Co., Pa., came West with the family, and was only six years old when his father died. The children were reared by Mrs. Perry's relatives, John being adopted by her sister Martha, who was the wife of Richard Calvin, of Hamilton county, Ohio. As a business man Mr. Calvin was a prosperous contractor and later a farmer, and he was also popular as a public official in his county, where he served as sheriff. He was a man of high principle, and so universally respected and trusted that he was elected to the sheriff's office by the largest Republican majority ever given to a candidate in Hamilton county up to that time. Mr. Perry remained with his uncle and aunt until he was sixteen, when he decided to learn a trade and prepare to make his own way in the world. He learned cabinet-making, and followed it continuously until the breaking out of the Civil war, in 1861. In the year 1853 he came to Indianapolis and worked at his trade until 1861, since which time he has been engaged in the grocery business, in the retail jobbing and wholesale branches. He began as a retailer, was later a jobber, and finally confined himself exclusively to the wholesale line. At present he is the oldest wholesale grocer in the State of Indiana.

Mr. Perry's first venture here was in partnership with George L. Rittenhouse, under the firm name of Rittenhouse & Perry, and they located on Washington street, near Delaware. Selling his interest in this concern he traveled for a time for E. B. Alvord & Co., wholesalers, and later for A. Jones & Co. Subsequently Mr. J. E. Robertson bought a half interest in the last named firm, and Mr. Perry bought half of Mr. Robertson's share, thus acquiring a fourth interest in the business. Within a year Mr. Robertson bought out Mr. Jones's interest and the firm of J. E. Robertson & Co. was established. During the panic of 1873 Mr. Robertson's interest was purchased by his son, A. M. Robertson, and Mr. Perry, who formed the firm of Robertson & Perry. Five or six years later Mr. Perry bought his partner's interest, continuing the business under the name of J. C. Perry for three years, until he admitted his son, Arba T. Perry, and George C. Brinkmeyer into partnership. This was dissolved in 1898, Mr. Brinkmeyer wishing to join his brother-in-law, and the firm became J. C. Perry & Co. It was incorporated as the J. C. Perry Company in 1901. Arba T. Perry sold his interest in the establishment in that year. Mr. Perry not only has superior business ability, but he is a man who wins the liking of those with whom the various relations of life bring him into contact, and his friends are legion. He is a Mason, a member of Ancient Landmark Blue Lodge of Indianapolis. One of his friends, Mr. John H. Holliday, capitalist of Indianapolis, founder of the News, and well known in the city, says of him:

"Mr. Perry has been identified with the jobbing interests of this city for many years and is one of the best known as well as most popular men 'on the street.' He is genial to a marked degree, always has a smile and a pleasant greeting, is frank, outspoken and companionable, and to those who know him the name 'Jack Perry' means a combination of agreeable qualities that few men possess. Withal he is a rather retiring and unassuming man, going about his daily business in his thorough way, but taking no part in side lines or outside interests. To his concentration of purpose and effort is to be attributed his success. At one time he served as one of the governors of the Board of Trade, and rendered valuable help in the early days of the organization, but felt compelled to retire on account of impaired health. Mr. Perry is a thoroughly domestic man in every sense and very fond of his own fireside, but nothing pleases him more than to greet his friends there."

Mr. Perry married Miss Catherine Restock, a native of Tuscarawas county, Ohio, who passed away in September, 1901. She was a most estimable woman, and a member of the M. E. Church in Indianapolis. To Mr. and Mrs. Perry were born four children, two of whom survive, Arba T. and Kate. The last named is the widow of Earnest T. Morris, Esq., a noted naturalist, who was correspondent of the New York World in South America for eight years.

ARBA T. PERRY was born Dec. 17, 1869, in Indianapolis, and has there passed his entire life. During his earlier manhood he was associated in business with his father, but he sold out his grocery interests in 1901 and is at present engaged in the life insurance business. He was the organizer of the Western Life Annuity Company of Indianapolis, of which he is president, and which he is developing with the object of making it one of the most reliable companies of the kind in the country. Arba T. Perry married Miss Frances Foster, daughter of A. Z. Foster, late a leading citizen of Terre Haute, Indiana, who died in July, 1906. Mr. Foster was a gentleman of the old school, respected alike in social and business circles, and well known as a capitalist and banker in his part of the State. Mr. and Mrs. Arba T. Perry have one child, Foster Perry.

JUDGE DANIEL L. BROWN, a prominent lawyer of Indianapolis, with offices at 707 and 708 Lemcke building, was born in Plymouth, Ind., Aug. 14, 1846, son of Henry J. and Sarah F. (Mann) Brown.

John Brown, his grandfather, was born in Virginia, and became a pioneer in Indiana in the days when the Indians were still troublesome. He was killed while fighting with the Indians between Connersville and Liberty, in 1812. During the Revolutionary war he bore arms in the Colonial cause, and also served in the war of 1812. He had some eight or ten children.

Henry J. Brown was born in Union county, Ind., and his wife in Worcester, Mass. They were the parents of six sons and two daughters, and four of their children are now living: William, of Laporte, Ind.; Judge Daniel L.; Adelbert L., of Osborne, Kans., and John W., of Laporte, Ind. Andrew P., deceased, was a resident of Alton, Kans. The father was a farmer in Laporte, and lived there from boyhood until his death, April 23, 1863, at the age of fifty-seven years. The mother died in 1895 at the age of seventy-nine years. They were Second Adventists in religion, and people of fine character and of the very best reputation.

Horace Mann, the maternal grandfather of Judge Brown, was born in Massachusetts, of English ancestry, and died in Massachusetts in his fifty-sixth year, from the effects of injuries received in the war of 1812. He had also been a soldier in the Revolution. He left a family of four daughters and one son. Farming was his life work.

Judge Daniel L. Brown was reared in Laporte county, where his boyhood and early youth were spent on the farm. He attended the district school. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he determined to be a soldier in the Union army, in 1862 enlisting in Company H, 87th Ind. Vol. Infantry, but he was detained by his father. In the fall of 1863 he ran away from home and enlisted in the same company and regiment, serving until the close of the war. At the battle of Kenesaw Mountain he was severely wounded in the left side, June 20, 1864. During the course of his military experiences Judge Brown participated in the following battles, being a private all the time: Resaca, Buzzard Roost, Pumpkin Vine Creek, and was with General Sherman all the way through to the sea. Three brothers served with him in the same company, William, Henry Clay and Andrew P. Brown.

After the war Judge Brown completed his academic studies in the Laporte high school. Upon finishing his high school work he was chosen constable, in 1867-67-69-70, the last year being nominated and elected sheriff on the Republican ticket. Two years later he was re-elected, and on the conclusion of his second term as sheriff was admitted to the Bar in 1874. He opened an office for professional business in Laporte, where he remained until the winter of 1879-80, when he transferred himself and his professional interests to Concordia, Kans., remaining there until 1892. In Kansas his career was notably successful. He was made judge of the Probate court in 1882, re-elected in 1884 and in 1886, and for two years was mayor of Concordia. In 1892 Judge Brown came back to Indiana and established himself in Indianapolis, where he has since devoted himself to a large and growing legal practice.

Judge Brown was married July 28, 1867, to Miss Elizabeth M., a daughter of Daniel and Anna (Logan) Carpenter, and by her has two children, Maude B. and Daniel L., Jr. Maude B. married John LeMay, Professor of Physics in the Lake high school, of Chicago, and is the mother of two children, Alan B. and Elizabeth B. Daniel L., Jr., is associated with his father in his law practice.

Judge Brown and his wife are members of the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church. He belongs to the I. O. O. F., the K. of P., George H. Thomas Post, No. 17, G. A. R., and the Union Veterans' Union, which he has served two terms as department commander. His residence is at No. 3229 North Illinois street, where he owns an exceedingly tasty and attractive home, in which he has lived for the past eight years.

GEORGE JAMESON COOK, M. D., Professor of Gastro-Intestinal and Rectal Surgery in the Indiana Medical College, at Indianapolis, is in the front rank of his profession. If he had made his success in the commercial world he would have been classed as self-made, for such he is, though the term is not generally applied to the representatives of the professions. However, there is no reason why it should not be, for there are no more tireless or able workers in any field than we find among those who devote themselves to scientific pursuits. The returns are not so large to the workers themselves, perhaps the benefits of their labors are more widely distributed, but as a class they possess the nobility of spirit which enables them to sacrifice cheerfully their personal gain to the good of all humanity. The medical profession doubtless offers more opportunities for self-sacrifice than any other calling, and to their credit be it said that its followers generally take ready advantage of the many means of doing good open to them.

Dr. Cook was born in Pennsylvania, of Irish extraction, and is the grandson of a Revolutionary patriot, so that his character may be said to be the combination of several of the most desirable elements of the typical self-reliant American. The Irish settlers in Pennsylvania have always ranked among the sturdiest and most honorable citizens of that State, and John Cook, the Doctor's father, was no exception. He was born in or near Belfast, Ireland, and emigrated to America in young manhood with two brothers, all locating in western Pennsylvania. There Jameson and John remained and were married, making permanent homes near Nobletown, in Allegheny county, but Robert went west and was never again heard from. John Cook acquired a good farm some twelve miles west of Pittsburgh and passed the remainder of his life thereon, dying there in 1863. He married Mary Kelso, whose father, John Kelso, served in the Revolutionary war; Mr. Kelso had several children, Mrs. Cook being the youngest in the family. To John and Mary (Kelso) Cook were born six children, three sons and three daughters.

George Jameson Cook was born on his father's farm, twelve miles west of Pittsburgh, near Nobletown, Allegheny Co., Pa., and remained there until he was seventeen years of age, at which time his father died. His early life was passed much in the usual manner of farmers' sons of that time and locality, in attendance at the common schools in the winter season, and in farm duties during the summer from the time he was old enough to be of any practical assistance. Like many a man successful in later years, he laid the foundation for a strong constitution and rugged health in outdoor work which developed his muscles and physical strength. But the intellectual side of his nature was not neglected either, and having inherited qualities mentally of a high order, he quite naturally improved every opportunity for education. Dr. Cook has always been characterized specially by his practical and unassuming disposition, and this was no less apparent in his young manhood than now. Without any ostentation, or any flourishes, he has pursued his way quietly and evenly, letting his work speak for itself. His education was attained in the same way. After leaving the common school he attended Vermillion Institute, at Hayesville, Ohio, until he began reading medicine, recognizing the need of thorough preparatory work, so that he could appreciate and comprehend to the full the instruction of his medical preceptors. He began the actual preparation for his profession in 1864, and completed his medical course at the Kentucky School of Medicine, Louisville, Ky., graduating in 1866. Immediately thereafter he was appointed Demonstrator of Anatomy in his alma mater and began his career in that capacity, at the same time building up an extensive general practice in Louisville, where he continued until the year 1882. In time he became Professor of Anatomy in the institution, doing excellent work and filling that important position until the year mentioned, when he removed to Indianapolis.

Throughout the period of his residence in Indianapolis Dr. Cook has been an important member of the medical fraternity. He began practice in his special lines at once, and, true to his early inclinations, continued his work as an instructor, first as Lecturer, two years later being elected to the chair he now fills in the Medical College of Indiana. He was secretary of the institution from 1896 to 1905.

Dr. Cook has done a surprising amount of work, and that he has no superior in his specialty in the State, and stands second to none in the United States, is due directly to years of untiring devotion to a chosen calling in which he seems to have been predestined to succeed. While his duties as college professor and general practitioner would have occupied wholly the attention of one less enthusiastic or indefatigable he has found time, in addition to discharging them faithfully, for study and investigation which have carried him higher and higher until now he stands at the very top. That there is always plenty of room at the top has been well proved in his own case, and like the original investigators Mitchell, Gross, Agnew of Philadelphia, Rush, Cadwallader, Talbott, Parkes, Murphy, Senn, Byron Robinson of Chicago, he was to prevail in his investigations—a phrenologist would say because of his skull outline. We do not dispute the point, but no amount of talent could have accomplished such results without well directed and continued effort. His analytical and well-trained mind, supported by a physique of unusual endurance, has enabled him to give to his work a steady attention. Perhaps the good results he has had have robbed his labors of the fatigue that might be expected to follow such close application. In his careful and thorough work as an investigator Dr. Cook has perhaps done his best permanent work, for while the practical application of knowledge is of course the real test of its value, careful research is the first stepping stone to that end. Naturally of an inquiring turn of mind, he has continued his search for knowledge mainly along original lines, not disdaining precedent, but following it only when it seemed the part of wisdom to do so.

Dr. Cook was one of the first surgeons in the United States to go deeply into the subjects of Gastro-Intestinal and Rectal Surgery, and he has earned a reputation which extends all over the world among his own profession. He has been active in every branch of the particular line to which he has devoted himself, being an investigator, an instructor, a practitioner, the inventor of various devices for insuring the success of operations in his line, and a contributor of valuable material to medical literature. With all his success, he retains a modest exterior, having none of the pomp and aggressive independence which mark so many men who have attained to high place and appreciate the fact. Dr. Alembert Winthrop Brayton, writing of Dr. Cook, has expressed the general opinion of his fellow practitioners:

"Dr. George J. Cook has practiced gastro-intestinal surgery and medicine in Indianapolis for twenty years. He was the second to devote himself to this specialty in the United States, Dr. Joseph M. Mathews, of Louisville, being the first. Dr. Cook has been professor of this specialty in the Medical College of Indiana for fifteen years. He has devised a number of clamps, speculums and rectal dilators, widely used by the profession. Dr. Cook is regarded as a leader in surgery of the bowel and in appendicitis in Indiana. He is one of the charter members of the American Proctologic Society, and has great influence in a large circle of friends in the local, State and national societies. Dr. Cook graduated from the Kentucky School of Medicine in 1866 and was for several years professor of anatomy and surgery in the Louisville Schools."

Dr. Cook has always supported and identified himself with the various societies which have for their object the advancement and encouragement of medical science. He is an active member of the Indianapolis Medical Society, the Indiana State Medical Society (of which he was president in 1906-7), the Mississippi Valley Medical Society (of which he once served as president), the American Medical Association, and the American Proctologic Society, of which latter he was a charter member.

Dr. Cook was married in June, 1892, to Miss Ella Henderson, of Martinsville, Ind., daughter of Eb. and Ann Henderson, her father being a prominent citizen of Indiana and a former State auditor. Mrs. Cook passed away in June, 1896.

SILAS BALDWIN, the recently deceased member of the wholesale jewelry firm of Baldwin, Miller & Co., was a successful business man of Indianapolis for over twenty years. He was connected with the house mentioned throughout the period of his residence in the city, previous to which he had lived in Ohio.

Mr. Baldwin was born May 24, 1834, on his father's farm in Stark county, Ohio, near Canton. The Baldwins migrated to Ohio from Connecticut, David Baldwin (grandfather of Silas), of Milford, Conn., purchasing a farm in the Connecticut Reserve in the early years of the nineteenth century. He settled there in Stark county, when his son Jerub was a child of five or six years. Jerub Baldwin was born at Milford, Conn., in 1798, but passed the greater part of his life in Ohio. When about forty years old he moved west from his early home in Ohio to Logan county, that State, where he purchased a quarter section of land, on which he erected a mill in Mill Creek township (now included in Union county), about four miles northeast of Zanesfield. He and his wife lived to advanced age. Jerub Baldwin married Mary Elliott, and they had a family of nine children, David, Butler, Elliott, Jonah, Joseph, Andrew, Henry, Ruth and Silas. All lived to rear families except Ruth, who died in infancy.

Silas Baldwin was only three or four years old when the family settled in Logan county, Ohio, and there grew to manhood. He attended the country schools of his home township, and later had the advantage of a year's study at the Cincinnati Commercial College. At the age of fourteen he began clerking in a store at Bellefontaine, remaining there until he was twenty-one or twenty-two, when he became cashier of the Merchants' Bank of that place, a position in which he continued until the outbreak of the Civil war. In July, 1862, he was appointed first lieutenant and quartermaster of the 96th Ohio regiment, in which he served until Jan. 1, 1864.

Returning to Bellefontaine at the close of his military service Mr. Baldwin engaged in the mercantile business there on his own account until 1867, when he made a radical change, going to Toledo, to become a partner with Mr. Ed. C. Shaw in the wholesale dry goods business, under the name of Shaw & Baldwin. They were associated in that line until 1883, when Mr. Baldwin sold out to come to Indianapolis, where he formed a partnership with Mr. E. C. Miller in the wholesale jewelry trade. The firm of Baldwin, Miller & Co. enjoyed high standing and a large patronage from the start. The high personal reputation of both members was demonstrated again and again in the unbroken confidence of their associates and patrons, and proved in all their transactions. The partnership was broken by the death of Mr. Baldwin, March 7, 1906. He was a man as highly respected for integrity and straight-forwardness as he was admired for his ability and praiseworthy enterprise. Though not one of the older residents of Indianapolis, he was well known through his intimate connection with its trading circles.

Mr. Baldwin is survived by his wife and daughter, Mrs. E. C. Miller. He was married, May 4, 1858, to Mary H. McCulloch, who was born in Bellefontaine, Ohio, daughter of the late Judge Noah Zane McCulloch, granddaughter of the gallant Major William McCulloch, ranger, soldier, etc., and great-granddaughter of Abraham McCulloch. Major William McCulloch was one of the historic figures of his time. He was killed at Brownstown, Wayne county, Mich., while serving in the war of 1812. On Page 466, of the "Pioneer History," by Hildreth, we find the following in regard to this interesting character: "William McCulloch was brought up on the frontier of Virginia, near Wheeling, and from his youth was acquainted with Indian warfare. He came to Waterford, Ohio, about the time the war began, 1791, and was employed as a ranger. After peace he married a daughter of Isaac Zane, whose mother was an Indian. She was said to have been a superior woman for intelligence and beauty. He settled at Mad River, on lands given him by Mr. Zane, who owned a large tract presented to him by the tribe into which he was adopted. At the time of the late war, 1812, he joined the American troops as a volunteer and was killed at the battle of Brownstown, Mich., greatly lamented by the army."

Through her grandmother, Nancy (Zane) McCulloch, Mrs. Baldwin is descended from the celebrated Zane family, whose progenitor in America, Isaac Zane, came here from England with others of his family, and was a close friend and associate of William Penn; Zane street, in Philadelphia, was named in his honor. Col. Isaac Zane, son of Isaac, moved from Pennsylvania to Berkeley county, Va., where his children were born. Col. Isaac Zane was a distinguished patriot of the Revolutionary war, was colonel of his county militia, and represented his county in the Legislative Assembly, where he was associated with such leaders of his day as Patrick Henry, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and others of great note. He was a member of the Assembly when Patrick Henry made his great speech, and took the initiative in advising the Colonists to use armed resistance against British injustice. Col. Isaac Zane was the first to indorse the resolution. Being colonel of the militia of his county, he was appointed chairman or president of the committee of safety and observation, and he gave noteworthy service to the cause. He had a foundry and manufactured cannons, chains, etc. He did everything but sign the Declaration of Independence. Among his children were Isaac, Col. Ebenezer, Jonathan, Silas and Elizabeth, of Wheeling, of whom volumes have been written.

Isaac Zane, son of Col. Isaac, was captured by the Indians when nine years old, while going for the cows. He was taken to the Mad River country, in Ohio, and eventually married the sister of Cornstalk, the great chief of the Wyandotte tribe, who was one of the noblest and most gifted Indians that ever lived.

Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin had a family of three children, namely: Sallie Martina is the wife of E. C. Miller, and has two children, Marian N. and LeRoy B.; Nellie M. died unmarried at the age of twenty-one years; Harry McCulloch also died at the age of twenty-one, unmarried. Mr. Baldwin was a member of the Meridian Street M. E. Church, to which his widow also belongs. He also held membership in the I. O. O. F., the Loyal Legion and the G. A. R. In politics he was a Republican.

DAVID VOLLANDER CULLEY was one of those men who identify themselves with every phase of life in the community in which their lot is cast. In Indianapolis he is remembered especially as an official who was almost continuously in the public service from early manhood, and as a business man who exemplified in his successful career the possibilities open to the energetic and ambitious in a growing city. Every movement which made for civic progress and permanent improvement had his hearty co-operation and support. Yet his church work, his social and family life, his zeal in the interest of public education, were all as dear to him as the greatest triumph in politics or business. He came to Indiana in young manhood, with no capital beyond his natural abilities and a knowledge of the printer's trade, and grew with the growth of the State. As educator and editor, as well as in his capacity of legislator, he wielded an influence and had much to do with the molding of public thought and with the directing of public sentiment. That he used his powers to good purpose and to good ends may be judged from the esteem in which he was universally held.

Mr. Culley was a native of Pennsylvania, born in September, 1804, in Cooperstown, Venango county, near the town of Franklin. His father, John Culley, was born in New York, of Scotch extraction, and was a carpenter and millwright by trade. He married Anne Hathaway Sleeper, of Philadelphia, who came of a fine old family. Her parents were Philadelphia Quakers, and she held her birthright in the Society of Friends up to the time of her death. She was a woman of liberal education, and from his mother David V. Culley received the greater part of his early training. He grew up in Venango county, and learned at least the rudiments of his trade while still a boy at home.

In 1818 he came west with an elder brother, the greater part of his father's family having moved to Elizabethtown, Ky. For a few years he remained at Elizabethtown, Ky., in his father's home, and completed his apprenticeship at his trade. In 1823, his mother having died, Mr. Culley came with his father and a sister to Corydon, Ind., which was then the capital of the State, and was for a time in the employ of John Douglas, Esq., at that time State printer, and for many years proprietor of the Journal of Indianapolis. From Corydon he went to Brookville, Ind., where he had two sisters. In 1824 he settled at Lawrenceburg, where he continued to live for about twelve years, and entered upon a public career which brought honor to him and many lasting benefits to the State of Indiana. At this time he began his work as a newspaper man. In partnership with Hon. Milton Gregg he established the Indiana Palladium, which, under their management, was one of the most influential papers in the State. In the conduct of the Palladium Mr. Culley gave evidence of executive ability as well as of talent as a writer and editor. When, in 1834, political differences separated the partners, Mr. Culley retained the Palladium, which he continued to conduct as a Democratic paper. As an example of his enterprise it is interesting to note the fact that in 1834 Mr. Culley introduced into the State the use of composition rollers in press work. About a year afterward, having an opportunity to dispose profitably of his paper and printing business, he did so, and for almost another year devoted his time to the study of law, at that time intending to adopt that as his profession. So intense was his application and so persistent his industry, that he frequently passed whole nights in study.

Mr. Culley had been recognized by the Democratic party as one of the able workers in its ranks, and he was elected State Senator from Dearborn county. In this office he displayed such marked ability and conscientiousness that in 1829 he was nominated for Lieutenant Governor on the ticket with Reed, which ticket was defeated by Governor Noble.

L. V. Culler

However, this defeat was no check to the steady rise of this ambitious and energetic young man. He continued to exercise his influence in public affairs, and directed political opinion through the columns of the Palladium, and he served two or three terms as a member of the Lower House of the Legislature at this point in his career. In 1838, under the administration of Martin Van Buren, he was appointed Registrar of the United States Land Office, and from that time until the day of his death made his home in Indianapolis. The frequent floods in Lawrenceburg had long made a change of residence desirable, so that it was welcomed by all the family. Isaac N. Phipps, his brother-in-law, represented the Government as agent in the Land Office. In time Mr. Culley succeeded to the agency himself. During his business activity in Indianapolis he was associated with such well-known men as James M. Ray, James P. Drake, Daniel Yandes, Thomas A. Morris, William N. Jackson and others.

Mr. Culley took an interest in municipal affairs from the time of his settlement in the town of Indianapolis, which was incorporated as a city in 1838. In 1841, upon the resignation of William Sullivan, he was honored with election as President of the Council, although he had lived in the city but five years. Such early and decided recognition of his abilities and value in the community was unusual, but deserved, and his fellow-citizens never had reason to regret their choice nor change their first judgment of his character. Possessing peculiar dignity of manner, a keen sense of humor and a thorough grasp of the demands of his position, he made an ideal presiding officer. He was re-elected for two terms, and ever afterward, until ill health caused him to decline further service, he was a power in the affairs of the city. In 1854, advocating the opinions which were then taking so strong a hold on the people of the North, he joined what afterward became the Republican party, and during the early days of the Civil war lent the support of his pen and his means to the cause of the Government.

Mr. Culley was methodical, painstaking and accurate in his business methods, as can be seen from the numerous books of account which show the details of the very considerable public and private business which he transacted. Mr. Culley attended carefully to his private interests, as was attested by his continued prosperity. With a singular clearness of perception he realized that popular education was a great factor in the upbuilding of the community. He had educated himself in the time that he could spare from bread winning. He appreciated keenly the value of education in his own case, and his support of everything looking to systematic school work was enthusiastic and untiring. If our public school system had not been laid out on broad lines and managed with disinterested care and devotion by such men as Mr. Culley the schools of Indianapolis would not now have the proud distinction of standing at the head of the schools of the country. He was connected with the public schools of the city for many years as trustee and managing superintendent, and his devotion in that work left results appreciable to the present day.

The qualities which recommended him to the suffrages of his fellow-citizens made him an important factor in the business affairs of the city, and though he had no financial resources when he began life himself he surely had no occasion in his later years to lament the fact. The substantial fortune which he accumulated found him to be not only a man of keen judgment, but one especially fitted to take advantage of the opportunities of his day. The early growth of a large city always affords a progressive man a good opening, the more profitable as it appeals to the needs or comfort of the people who patronize his enterprises. It was mainly through Mr. Culley's untiring energy and perseverance that gas was manufactured in the city at so early a date, and on March 20, 1851, he was made president of the Indianapolis Gas and Coke Company. The new residence which was built on Ohio street, between Pennsylvania and Meridian streets, had the first stone foundation laid in the city, which was another evidence of his enterprise, as the stone had to be brought from Vevay, Ind., over the Madison road, at that time the only railroad entering Indianapolis. His public spirit, however, was not confined to local affairs. Like a truly patriotic American, he took just pride in everything which added to his country's prestige or glory. He was especially interested in the first Pacific railroad, a project which he had considered feasible long before its construction was undertaken. He was of a logical and thoughtful temperament, but his alert mind and broad sympathies kept him abreast of the times. His conscientiousness and high integrity were a sure guide in the administration of public affairs. He had a fine sense of the responsibilities of a trusteeship. That this was universally recognized was shown by his frequent selection as the guardian of minors, a duty usually taken with reluctance, involving, as it often does, much irksome and unappreciated work. No trust is more often shirked or more easily abused, yet in Mr. Culley's care it became a noble task to perform, and he never failed to earn the warmest affection of those he so served. Undoubtedly his kindness of heart and sincerity of purpose, as well as the fidelity which he gave naturally to the fulfillment of every trust reposed in him, had much to do with his success in this respect. Certain it is that the breath of suspicion never dared assail him.

In this connection some mention of George William Armentrout, Lieutenant Commander, U. S. N., will be most appropriate. Armentrout's mother died when he was an infant, his father when he was six years old, after which he was reared in the Culley home, Mr. Culley having become his guardian. At the age of seventeen he entered the navy, and in the fourteen years which preceded his death had a distinguished career, occupying a position in the regard of his associates and superiors second to none of his age in the service. He would have been one of the first to acknowledge that his success was largely due to the training which he received in his guardian's home.

One illustration of the fact that Mr. Culley's integrity was conspicuous at an early age, and believed in even by those only slightly acquainted with him, is given in a little incident which happened while he was at Corydon. A friend who knew him at that time related that Samuel Merrill, the treasurer of State, was obliged to leave home for a few days and needed a guard for the funds of the Commonwealth, consisting largely of gold and silver, which was kept in the treasurer's private residence. Mr. Culley, though then little more than a boy, was selected (with the gentleman who told the incident) to sleep in the treasurer's house and protect the public money—a high mark of confidence for one of his age.

Soon after his removal to Indianapolis Mr. Culley connected himself with the then newly organized Second Presbyterian Church, in which he was one of the leading spirits throughout the remainder of his life. It was through his influence that Henry Ward Beecher was brought from Lawrenceburg. Mr. Culley served the church many years as elder, being elected ruling elder Jan. 6, 1842, was senior elder at the time of his death, was trustee for a number of years, and clerk for a period of twenty years. That he gave freely of money as well as time goes without saying. He was practical and consistent in his Christianity; in fact, if he took any personal pride in the influence he exerted, it was the influence of his upright life. He was a diligent and careful student of the Scriptures, in which he found much comfort, and his spiritual strength was never more tried nor better shown than in the lingering illness which preceded his death by a period of several months. He died at the family residence on East Ohio street, on the evening of Friday, June 4, 1869, in the perfect faith of a devout Christian.

Gen. John Coburn spoke thus of his old friend: "I knew David V. Culley from my boyhood for at least sixty-five years past. When I first saw him he was a member of the Legislature here as senator from Dearborn county. And he was highly respected for his intelligence and ability. He changed his residence from Lawrenceburg to this place. He served in the Legislature several years. He held one of the Land Offices here for several years. He was one of the trustees of the County Seminary here, and a member afterward of the school board. He took a great interest in the education of the rising generation. He was a teacher in the Sunday-school, and one of the prominent members of the Second Presbyterian Church, of which Henry W. Beecher was the pastor. He was a quiet, modest, unassuming gentleman, but a firm and active advocate of all the efforts made by the people in favor of morality, sobriety, good order and particularly of temperance. He lived a quiet life, but his whole strength was always given to the improvement of society, in education, morality and religion. He was a model citizen in all respects, aiding in every word and work for the good of society. He was a man of firm convictions as to all efforts to promote the observance of the law and of good order in society and religion. In all these things he was among the foremost citizens of Indianapolis, at all times and under all circumstances. He was so modest, so quiet, and unostentatious in all these things that his influence for good was very great. Very few men in the history of Indianapolis have surpassed him in great and quiet works in the upbuilding of this city. He had no enemies, but in their place many warm friends in every rank of society."

Mr. Volney T. Malott writes of Mr. Culley: "David V. Culley was one of our most prominent and influential citizens, a pioneer newspaper man of Indiana, for many years editor of the Indiana Palladium, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., a prominent churchman and associate of Henry Ward Beecher. He was a legislator and an earnest advocate of temperance and a good citizen generally, and left many worthy descendants."

Perhaps we have dwelt too much on the serious side of Mr. Culley's character. Though of a serious temperament, he had many graces of mind and disposition. He enjoyed the higher things of life, good literature and lively company, and in his old age was often found among young people. In the winter he could be seen upon the ice with the young, skating as joyously as any of them; in the summer he took delight in rowing with his friends, and he often enjoyed a day's hunting. His kindly sympathy was evident in his intercourse with all, for his most attractive personal quality was his habit of estimating each of his fellow-men at his full value. He passed many pleasant hours among his books, and his Don Quixote, Shakespeare and Milton were well read and thoroughly appreciated.

In January, 1824, at Lawrenceburg, Mr. Culley married Miss Mary Ann Brown, daughter of Daniel Brown, who was born near Sandusky, Ohio.

No history of the Culley family could be told without including special mention of Mrs. Culley, whose rare strength and beauty of character stamped every feature of their domestic life with a peculiar charm. Her influence extended beyond the home circle, for she was a remarkable woman in many ways. She was a Methodist in early life, and believing firmly in the open profession of religion she united with the Methodist Church at Lawrenceburg in 1830, retaining this connection until the family removed to Indianapolis. Here she took membership in a church of the same denomination, which she continued to attend until 1850, when, for the sake of unity in family arrangements, she obtained the ordinary dismissal and transferred her membership to the Second Presbyterian Church. She was a regular attendant at church except when prevented by illness, and always ready to do her share in promoting the social and other interests of the church. Mrs. Culley was one of the early Daughters of Temperance, and in this connection it may be stated that many of the young men in her husband's employ on the Palladium in Lawrenceburg owed much to her wise counsel and encouragement. It was the custom there in those early days for the host to have wines and liquors for his guests, but Mrs. Culley succeeded in persuading her husband to dispense with liquors and allow her to substitute coffee. In this and in many other ways did she exercise her firm but gentle influence, and though hers was not an aggressive disposition she accomplished much good in her circle and gained a host of loving and devoted friends. She died Oct. 11, 1863, in the sixty-second year of her age, leaving surviving her one son and two daughters: Hannah Ann, who became the wife of William Mansur; Mary Elizabeth, who married James Madison Hume; and Capt. Daniel B. Culley, who died Nov. 12, 1886, at his residence, No. 486 North Pennsylvania street. The daughters both married citizens of high standing, and the son was a prominent citizen of Indianapolis for many years. He was one of the "Old Seminary Boys," conspicuous for agility and good humor, was city clerk in 1851-52 and 1853, and was secretary of the Marion Fire Company for a year or two during the latter part of its existence. He was among the first to enlist in the 11th Regiment, was elected second lieutenant of Company B, rose to the captaincy, and was honorably discharged in the fall of 1862. In the spring of 1847 Daniel Culley, with the other boys in the Journal office, John R. Elder and John H. Ohr, started the Locomotive, which for a decade led all the papers of the city in the matter of circulation. In 1850 it was purchased and enlarged by Mr. Elder and John Harkness, and was recognized as the leading paper from a social and literary standpoint until 1861.

WILLIAM MANSUR, for many years one of the successful business men of Indianapolis, was a native of Indiana, born Jan. 20, 1819, at Salsburg, then the county seat of Wayne county. Jeremy Mansur, his father, was one of the eleven children of William Mansur, of Temple, N. H. This latter William was in the Continental army and served throughout the Revolution, being with General Burgoyne at the siege of Ticonderoga. Jeremy Mansur came to Indiana and settled in the Quaker settlement near Richmond, Wayne county. When his son, William, the subject of this sketch, was two years old, the family was living on a farm near Auberville, Wayne county. Two years later they moved to Richmond, where they lived until William was twenty-one years old. William Mansur received the practical training common to the youth of his day, which fostered endurance and self-reliance. In 1840 he came to Indianapolis, where he made his home, and was there engaged in business for many years. His first venture was in the dry-goods business with his brother-in-law, John H. Wright. In 1847, in partnership with his father, he built a pork house near the old Madison depot and continued in the pork packing business until 1861. In 1863 he and his father and his brother Isaiah were associated with Daniel Yandes and others in the starting of the Citizens National Bank, William Mansur being a director of that institution for twenty years. Meantime he was also interested in other important business enterprises, being for many years a director of the Indianapolis Rolling Mills. He had a reputation in the community for honesty and fair dealing, and as a result attained an enviable position among the business men of the city. Dignified and self contained in manner and speech, his words carried weight wherever he was known. He was as considerate and thoughtful as he was earnest, and won the friendship of many by his kindly courtesy. After a creditable and honorable career he retired from business, with a considerable fortune, and passed the remainder of his days in its enjoyment, in travel, in his favorite modes of recreation, and in the cultivation of social pleasures among friends and kindred. He prized true friendship above all things, and, as a true friend himself, had the devotion of many. His amiable disposition was as marked in his home circle as under the more restraining influences of society.

Mr. Mansur took a pride in the rise and progress of the city, and an active part in the local civil administration, believing faithful service to be the test of true public spirit. He considered it a citizen's duty to assist to the best of his ability in the advancement of his home city. Accordingly, during his busiest years, he found time to act as city commissioner and member of the city council, and he never failed in his duty in either position.

Mr. Mansur was long active in the Second

Presbyterian Church, with which he united by profession of faith in 1843, during the great revival conducted by Henry Ward Beecher. To the day of his death he was a regular attendant at church and contributed largely of money and counsel. For thirty-one years he served as trustee of the church of which he was a member. Like his ancestors he believed in living his religion, carrying its principles into every relation of life, and took much comfort in his faith and its teachings. This was especially noticeable in his closing days. His life left a lasting impression for good on those among whom he moved. Mr. Mansur died Oct. 18, 1893, at his new home at Illinois and Thirty-second streets, which had just been completed, and was buried at Crown Hill cemetery.

On Aug. 17, 1847, Mr. Mansur married Hannah Ann Culley, daughter of the Hon. David V. Culley, and his widow and one son, Charles William, survive him.

JAMES MADISON HUME, during his active years one of the prominent business men of Indianapolis, was a native of Indiana, born in the pioneer days, and came of creditable ancestry on both paternal and maternal sides. The Humes came originally from the Scotch border and belonged to the house of Wedderburn, Sir David Hume, of Wedderburn, being mentioned in the charter of 1450. One of his descendants, a Covenant, came to Pennsylvania and settled in Lancaster county, and so devout a Christian was he that he changed his name to Humes, fearing that people might associate him with Hume, the historian, who was a relative but an infidel.

Of such stock came Madison Hume, father of James Madison Hume, who was a distinguished man among the pioneers of Dearborn county, Ind., where he owned a farm, and at the same time followed his profession as minister of the gospel. He was a Baptist preacher, and, there being but few churches in the early days, traveled on horseback from village to village, holding services in the schoolhouses, in which connection he is remembered by some of the older citizens of Indianapolis. In 1833 he purchased and moved to a small farm near Augusta, Marion Co., Ind., seven miles north of Indianapolis. In 1860 he sold his farm and moved to Indianapolis, and here passed his remaining days, dying in the sixties at his residence on Capitol avenue, near Thirteenth street. His widow sold this home to the school board, and a large brick schoolhouse now occupies the site. Mrs. Hume purchased a home on Illinois street, where she died Aug. 25, 1899, at the advanced age of ninety years.

James Madison Hume was born Oct. 1, 1830, in Dearborn county, Ind., and was a mere child when his father settled on the farm near Augusta, where he passed his youth and early manhood. His educational opportunities were limited to attendance at the three-months' schools in the neighborhood of his home. In 1849 he came to Indianapolis, business life appealing strongly to him. That he was not mistaken in his abilities or tendencies was proved by the result of his ventures into the world of trade. He first entered the merchant tailoring establishment of James Hall, as clerk, and six months later, so completely had Mr. Hume won his employer's confidence, he was sent by Mr. Hall to Pendleton, this State, to take charge of a shoe store there, a speedy recognition of worth and integrity as well as a bestowal of responsibility unusual for one of his age. There he remained a few months, until the store was closed out. Having acquired a taste for the dry-goods business, Mr. Hume, in 1852, made arrangements to enter the employ of Horace A. Fletcher, who was extensively engaged as a dealer in dry-goods, carpets and wall-paper. The first year he received but twenty-five dollars in money for his services, but by 1856, with what he had saved, he was able to purchase an interest in the business and took charge of the establishment, doing the principal part of the buying. The business was now conducted under the firm name of H. A. Fletcher & Co. In 1858 Mr. Edgar N. Lord, of Massachusetts, purchased an interest in the concern, which was then moved to No. 10 East Washington street, where for a time they were located in a building adjoining the one now occupied by the Indianapolis News. In 1859 Mr. James M. Ray commenced building the "Trade Palace," which was completed in 1860, and H. A. Fletcher & Co. had the foresight to lease the first floor of the building, thus obtaining a store room 35x100 feet; the three upper floors of the building were sixty feet deep. It was thought by many that the growth of their trade would not justify the occupancy of what was then considered extensive quarters, but the partners were willing to take the risk, and time proved that their judgment was not at fault. In 1863 Mr. Fletcher, wishing to retire, sold out to his partners, who in the fall of that year admitted Mr. W. L. Adams into the concern, which then became Hume, Lord & Co. In 1864, because of failing health, Mr. Lord sold out to the other partners and retired, and for another year the firm was carried on as Hume & Adams. In 1865 they disposed of their dry-goods business to engage extensively in the carpet, wall-paper and window shade trade, wholesale as well as retail, and about the same time Edgar J. Foster entered the firm, which then became Hume, Adams & Co. In 1867, so steadily had their business grown, they were able to purchase the "Trade Palace," which under this enterprising management was speedily enlarged to four times its original capacity. The first floor was rented to N. R. Smith & Co., dry-goods merchants, and the second floor was reserved for their own use. By 1870 the further extension of the business required the admission of an office partner, and Arthur L. Wright, ex-county treasurer, was taken in. Later the firm name was changed to Adams, Mansur & Co.

Mr. Hume married Mary Elizabeth Culley, daughter of David V. Culley, one of the prominent citizens of Indianapolis, and they had one son, George E. Hume. Like his father, James M. Hume clung to the faith of the Baptist Church, while Mrs. Hume, with the rest of her family, held membership in the Second Presbyterian Church. In 1885, Mr. and Mrs. Hume went to California, where they remained until 1893, after which they again resided in Indianapolis, their home being at No. 3213 Illinois street. Mr. Hume died March 5, 1899, leaving his widow and son surviving.

GEORGE E. HUME is one of the younger business men of Indianapolis. He was born March 19, 1869, son of James Madison and Mary Elizabeth (Culley) Hume, and, as may be seen above, comes of two of the old families of the city.

Mr. Hume attended the common and high schools of the city until 1885, when he entered the Boston Latin School. He graduated from that school in 1889, and entered Harvard University, graduating in 1893. Returning to Indianapolis, he became a student at the Indianapolis Law School, where he obtained his degree of LL. B. He read law for a year in the office of Butler, Snow and Butler, and then formed a partnership for the practice of his profession with Edward E. Gates, continuing in general practice until the organization of the Indiana Title Guaranty & Loan Company, of which he was elected secretary and treasurer. In 1904 he was elected treasurer of the American Central Life Insurance Company.

On Nov. 16, 1896, George E. Hume married Lucy Fitzhugh Holliday, of Indianapolis, daughter of William Jacquelin and Lucy (Redd) Holliday, the former a cousin of Governor Holliday, of Virginia, the latter a descendant of Patrick Henry. Mr. and Mrs. Hume have two sons, William Mansur and Jacquelin Holliday.

CAPT. WALLACE FOSTER was born in Vernon, Jennings Co., Ind., June 22, 1837. His parents were among the early settlers of that State, taking up their residence in Vernon in 1819. His father was born in Canandaigua, Ontario Co., N. Y., Dec. 30, 1810. His mother was of Scotch-Irish descent, born at Castlefinn, County Donegal, Ireland, Sept. 14, 1812, and she emigrated to this country when she was only six years of age.

Captain Foster attended the public schools of his native town until he had outgrown them; graduated from the old Seminary, Indianapolis, Ind., located on the southwest corner of Meridian and New York streets, in University Park, and later attended Hayden's Commercial College, located in the second story of an old brick building on the site now occupied by the L. S. Ayres & Co. new building. After receiving a practical business education he was offered a position in the bank of Fletcher & Churchman, or S. A. Fletcher & Co., but as the staying-in rules were so strict he declined the position, preferring freedom and fresh air. Returning to his old home, he entered his father's cabinet shop as an apprentice, working at the trade for one year, when he accepted a position in the Civil Engineering Corps, of which the late General Mitchell, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was the chief, in the construction of the Ohio & Mississippi railroad from Cincinnati to St. Louis, Mo. In the survey for a railroad route to California and the Pacific coast by the United States government he was offered a position in the United States Civil Engineering Corps under the command of the late General Lander, but owing to the defeat of the measure by Congress, authorizing the survey, Captain Foster returned to Indianapolis and took a position in the general auction house of the late William Y. Wiley, located on the corner of the alley east of the Fletcher National Bank. A year later he entered the dry goods house of M. M. Dunn & Co., in the Blake's Commercial Row, now named the Commercial Block. The Glenn's New York Store was directly opposite in the old "Bates House." On the removal of M. M. Dunn & Co. from the city he accepted a position in the establishment of H. A. Fletcher & Co., dry goods, carpets, etc. Not liking the dry goods business, he accepted a position in his father's drug store, at Vernon, Ind., where he remained until he became acquainted with the business. Returning to Indianapolis he entered the drug house of Perkins & Lilly, located on the ground of Wasson & Co.'s building. During his business life in the drug store he received his first military instructions and training in the "school" of a soldier, with others who were members of the "Independent Zouaves," a military company that graduated many good soldiers who served with honor and distinction to themselves and State throughout the entire war of the Rebellion.

Military service of Captain Foster, during the war of the Rebellion: When the first gun was fired on Fort Sumter, and before the echo of that shot had died, Captain Foster was recruiting a company. When the first call for three months' volunteers by President Lincoln was made he entered the service as a private of Indiana volunteers April 16, 1861, assisting in recruiting a full company for the service which was assigned to the 11th Indiana Volunteer Infantry (Lew Wallace Zouaves). The late Maj.-Gen. Robert S. Foster, his brother, enlisted at the same time, and was commissioned captain of Company A, 11th Indiana Volunteers. Later two younger brothers entered the service, Edgar J. Foster as first lieutenant of Company K, 9th Indiana Volunteer Infantry; he was also on the staff of Maj.-Gens. Van Cleave and Beatty. Chapin C. Foster enlisted as a private in Company D, 132d Indiana Volunteers.

Captain Foster was commissioned lieutenant of Company H, 11th Indiana Volunteers (Infantry), April 20, 1861. His regiment was organized at Indianapolis for three months' service; mustered in the United States service April 26, 1861; May 7, 1861, ordered to Evansville, Ind., where the regiment guarded the Ohio river until June 7th, when it was ordered to West Virginia, arriving near Cumberland, Md., on the 9th, bivouacking near New Creek until the evening of the 10th, when the march was resumed; in action early on the morning of the 11th at Romney, W. Va.; June 12th returned to Cumberland late in the night, bivouacking on the sidewalks on Baltimore street; on the morning of the 13th went into camp near the cemetery; from June 13th to July 7th remained in camp near Cumberland, the regiment participating in several skirmishes and one engagement on Kelley's Island; July 8th regiment ordered to reinforce Gen. Patterson at Martinsburg, Va., thence to Charlestown, Va., where term of service of the regiment—three months—expired. From a request of Gen. Patterson for ten days' longer service the vote of the regiment was unanimous to remain ten days longer. Shortly after they marched to Harper's Ferry, and before the ten days had expired they were relieved by new troops and the regiment started home via Hagerstown, Md., Chambersburg and Pittsburg, Pa., Columbus and Dayton, Ohio, arriving at Southeastern avenue and Washington streets on the morning of July 29, 1861; mustered out Aug. 2, 1861. In September, Lieutenant Foster joined the 13th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in West Virginia, for three years; was attached to Gen. Rosecrans' Brigade, McClellan's army of occupation, West Virginia; Gen. Reynolds' Cheat Mountain Brigade to November; Milroy's command, Mountain Department, Jan. 1, 1862, promoted first lieutenant of Company H, 13th Indiana Volunteer Infantry. In March, 1862, the regiment was assigned to the 2d Brigade, Shields' 2d Division, Banks' 5th Corps, to April; April 1st promoted to captain of Company H, 13th Indiana Volunteer Regiment, assigned to 3d Brigade, 1st Division, Department Rappahannock, to July; Ferry's Brigade, 2d Division, 4th Corps, Army of the Potomac, to September; attached to the staff of Gen. R. S. Foster, commanding Provisional Brigade; Peck's Division, 7th Army Corps, at Suffolk, Virginia, Department of Virginia, to April, 1863; 2d Brigade, same corps, to July 29th.

Participated in the following service: Expedition to Camp Baldwin, December, 11th to 12th; Allegheny Mountain, Dec. 13th; ordered to Green Spring Run, Va., Dec. 18th, on duty there until March, 1862; expedition to Blue Gap, Jan. 6th and 7th; advanced on Winchester, Va., March 5th to 15th; reconnoissance to Strausburg, March 18th; battle of Winchester, March 22d, 23d, with Stonewall Jackson's troops; again at Mount Jackson, March 25th; Strausburg, March 27th; Woodstock, April 1st; Edenburg, April 2d; Mt. Jackson, April 16th; New Market and Rood Hill, April 17th; Summersville, May 7th; march to Fredericksburg, Va., May 12th to 21st; to Front Royal, May 25th, and again May 29th-30th; battle Port Republic June 5th. C., from February to April. While an officer of the 13th Regiment, Indiana Volunteers, Captain Foster served on the staff of Generals Sullivan and Foster. During Captain Foster's military service he served with General McClellan in the Army of the Potomac, General Lander at Paw Paw Tunnel and Blooming Gap, Virginia, Generals Shields and Kimball in the battles and skirmishes down the Shenandoah and Rappahannock Valley, with General Sullivan at Columbia Bridge and the skirmish at Dog Town, Va., General McDowell at Fredericksburg, Va.; participated in the review of 80,000 infantry, cavalry and artillery by President Lincoln and Secretary of War Stanton. His regiment participated in the first expedition and assault on Fort Fisher, N. C., under command of General Butler, and again in the second expedition and assault under the successful command of Generals Terry and Curtis; regiment was with General Butler at Deep Bottom, Va.; Army of the James; with General Banks in Florida; Generals Devens, Meade and Grant to Appomattox. He was one of the escorts to President Lincoln when the latter passed through Indianapolis in 1861 on his way to Washington, D. C.

Just before the close of the Rebellion, Captain Foster received an honorable discharge on account of defective hearing, contracted by exposure and hard service in the Chickahominy Swamp. Soon after his return home he was appointed to a position in the United States Pay Department headquarters at Columbus, Ohio, and Indianapolis. On Sept. 27, 1864, he was commissioned by Gov. O. P. Morton on special service at Cairo and Mound City, Ill., St. Louis, Mo., Memphis, Tenn. During this service he sent thousands of sick and wounded soldiers to their homes, securing for them free transportation and medical attention. After retiring from the special service, in August, 1865, he engaged in business again, but later on account of his increased deafness he retired from active business and entered the commission house of R. S. Foster & Co. In 1882 he was appointed to a position in the Indianapolis post office, remaining there until 1886. While in the post office department the first two years of service he became totally deaf. After the expiration of his term of service he accepted a very pleasant position under the late William N. Jackson, secretary of the old Union Railway Company, in which he transferred the minutes of the old company to new books, in all nearly fifty years' business transactions of the old company. In 1887, in the organization of The Consumers' Gas Trust Company, he was given a position as receiver of records.

After Captain Foster became totally deaf in both ears he organized, for the mutual benefit of all comrades afflicted with deafness, the Silent Army of Deaf Soldiers, Sailors and Marines, of which he was secretary and treasurer. In 1888 he secured an increase of pension for all pensioners on the rolls afflicted with deafness, and in 1902 he secured another increase for the total loss of hearing, in a general bill, to forty dollars per month. In all he labored twenty-five years to secure partial justice and equity in the rating of pensions for his deaf comrades.

Teaching Patriotism in the Public Schools. Captain Foster's patriotism was first developed in 1846-47 during the war with Mexico, and he demonstrated it by erecting a flagstaff at his father's residence in Vernon and unfurling therefrom an improvised flag. In 1861 he again demonstrated his patriotism and love for his country and flag by offering his services in defense of both. At the close of the fearful struggle to maintain the honor of his country and flag he resumed the peaceful pursuits of citizenship with a holy love for his flag and the Union that was part of himself and inseparable. As the years passed into history, he saw the coming danger to our country in the influx of undesirable foreigners, flooding our country with their un-American customs and ignorance of our free institutions. With these thoughts in his mind, in 1889, in connection with the late Col. George T. Balch, U. S. A., auditor of the board of education of New York City, he became deeply interested in the problem of teaching these young foreigners American customs and intelligent citizenship through the influence of patriotism taught in our public schools, and displaying the stars and stripes over school buildings and grounds. Captain Foster's interest in displaying the flag over school buildings and from staffs erected on the grounds, with flags for schoolrooms, he classed as emotional patriotism, preparing the scholar for the higher branches of intellectual patriotism and the practical duties of citizenship. His patriotic activity was aroused early in 1890 by opposition from two members of the school board to his request for the privilege of erecting a flagstaff on the campus of public school No. 32, of Indianapolis. After promising to defray the expenses of erecting the staff and purchase of flags he received unanimous consent of the board to erect the staff, and on the 20th of February, 1891, with the aid of the patrons and friends of the school, erected the first staff and flag on the grounds of school No. 32, and followed this up with patriotic instruction in the school, which was the first known school in the country to raise a flag in the interest of patriotic teaching and continue the instructions in the school. The memorable patriotic day at school No. 32 was an inspiration that re-echoed from Maine to California, and the example was followed by other schools in the city, county, State and other States of the Union. In September, 1891, during the 25th National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic convened at Detroit, Mich., Captain Foster made another very important move in patriotic teaching by bringing before the Encampment and the people the importance and need of teaching patriotism in our public schools. A beautiful blue silk banner was presented to him by Col.

Balch, with the motto of Captain Foster painted upon it in gold letters: "Teach Patriotism in the Public Schools." It has been his inspiration ever since. This banner he carried in the parade, over four miles of the principal streets of Detroit, the motto creating intense interest and enthusiasm, causing the people not only to think but to heartily indorse the sentiment inscribed upon the banner and the patriotic movement inaugurated by Captain Foster, for it was the first banner in the interest of patriotic teaching ever carried in a National Encampment parade or in the parade of any organization. The motto had a warm greeting from the school teachers as well as citizens, and the study was welcomed in the curriculum of patriotic education. Captain Foster issued an address to the delegates of the 25th National Encampment and not only placed a copy in the hands of each delegate but placed his banner on the stage where every member of the Encampment could see and read it. While the Encampment indorsed the patriotic motto it simply referred the matter to a committee of Past National Commanders-in-Chief to be reported upon at the 26th National Encampment, to be held in Washington, D. C., in 1892. In the 26th National Encampment there were two committees appointed who sent in a report to salute the flag in the fall of the year and seemed indifferent to the importance of teaching patriotism in the public schools every school day, and as no further interest was taken in the matter, Captain Foster appealed to the 10th Convention, Department of Indiana, Womans Relief Corps, that met at Evansville, Ind., in April, 1893. It did not take the Department of Indiana, Womans Relief Corps, in convention fifteen minutes to deliberate on Captain Foster's patriotic proposition, for the sentiment in the convention was unanimous and enthusiastic, accepting a series of resolutions presented by him, giving his views as to the best means of inculcating a deeper and a more earnest love for our country and flag; the reason why patriotic instructions in our public schools were necessary was fully explained, and indorsed by the convention and recommended as part of their work. At the 11th National Convention of the Womans Relief Corps, convened in the city of Indianapolis, Sept. 6, 1893, the Department of Indiana presented the resolutions accepted by them to the National body, where they were indorsed and accepted by a rising vote in which great enthusiasm was manifested.

Before the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic convened in this city in 1893, a few friends of Captain Foster presented him a handsome United States regulation silk flag and made up a purse that he might enlarge his display of banners and flags for his patriotic display. With this fund he added to his first banner one white silk and one yellow silk banner. On the yellow was the motto "We give our Heads and our Hearts to God and our Country," on the white banner was the additional motto, "One Country; One Language; One Flag." In addition to the silk flag and banners he added thirty-two army corps flags. This display was carried for the first time in the parade of the 27th National Encampment, held in Indianapolis, Ind., in September, 1893. From the 27th National Encampment the display became a national feature in the G. A. R. National Encampment and school parades, and was displayed in the following cities: Washington, D. C., Pittsburg, Pa., Louisville, Ky., St. Paul, Minn., New York City, Chicago, Ill., and other minor parades. The display was retired a few years ago, after the flags had fulfilled their mission. The white and yellow silk banners Captain Foster presented to the Department of Indiana, Womans Relief Corps, and they are displayed by them at all Department and National Conventions. The balance of the display was carefully taken care of by Captain Foster. Since 1893 there has been an aggressive movement in the interest of the patriotic curriculum by the Womans Relief Corps in nearly all the States of the Union, and great good has been accomplished. As the interest in patriotic teaching increased the demand for patriotic literature became natural and necessary to increase proficiency in the work.

In April, 1894, Colonel Balch died very suddenly, and left nearly all of his unfinished work to Captain Foster, who was his most trusted and intimate friend, equal to the trust imposed upon him. His first work was to revise Colonel Balch's four-page folio primer into an acceptable primer for the use of teachers in schools. In revising the patriotic primer for the Little Citizen it was enlarged from a four-page to a sixty-two page in 1895, and in 1898 to 112 pages, and is now in its fourth edition. In 1898 a facsimile of the original copy of the Declaration of Independence was published and introduced and is now in its third edition. Another publication of Captain Foster's is the "Origin and History of the Stars and Stripes," first published and introduced in 1898, and now in its fourth edition. All these publications have been copyrighted. The success of these publications has been marvelous, aggregating nearly 50,000 primers, 25,000 facsimiles of the Declaration of Independence, and 35,000 "Origin and History of the Stars and Stripes," distributed through the Womans Relief Corps and other patriotic women's societies into every State of the Union, including one thousand primers and 500 copies of "Origin and History of the Stars and Stripes," contributed by the Womans Relief Corps to the Commissioners of Education in Manila, P. I., San Juan, Porto Rico, and Honolulu, Hawaii. Besides these publications, Captain Foster invented a flagstaff stand for the W. R. C. and D. A. R. and school rooms, having distributed more than 10,000, with a credit of 25,000 silk and bunting flags that he has sent into forty-six States of the Union and all the Territories. At the 13th National Convention of the Womans Relief Corps, Captain Foster was honored with the appointment of National Sponsor for the American flag.

Captain Foster says that in summing up the great patriotic work accomplished from 1893 to the present time, the noble self-sacrificing women of the Womans Relief Corps, Auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, and the intelligent patriotic women teachers who have so enthusiastically co-operated with him, must not be forgotten, for they have been his strength and inspiration in all his work. To them he gives the honor and credit for introducing the patriotic curriculum in our public schools, for he believes they are God's natural teachers of the young; and it can be truthfully claimed for the Womans Relief Corps, in its patriotic interest, that not another organization in the world can lay claim to or show such a glorious record in all good deeds to elevate the best good in mankind and citizenship. Mercy and kindness to dumb animals was another good work in which Captain Foster was interested, and he practiced what he preached. He was also a great lover of children and showed it in his attention to them. His own favorite school, No. 32, he loves and calls "his little family," for he takes a special interest in the pupils.

Captain Foster has never refused to give a helping hand to the worthy poor and hungry when called upon.

He was married April 25, 1866, to Jane Miller Doggett, eldest daughter of the late William F. Doggett, auditor of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. This union was blessed with a son and daughter, his son living. His daughter died Sept. 6, 1881, and his wife May 2, 1894. Captain Foster is a member of the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church, formerly the old Third Presbyterian Church, uniting with the church in 1867. He resides in his own home at No. 2030 North Capitol avenue, Indianapolis, where he has lived since 1882, engaged in his patriotic life work, which has extended to every State and Territory in the Union, co-operating with more than four hundred and fifty thousand loyal women in the Womans Relief Corps, Daughters of the American Revolution and teachers in the public schools.

Captain Foster is a charter member of George H. Thomas Post, No. 17, Department of Indiana, G. A. R.; an honorary member of the Patriotic League, Loyal Home Workers; a member of Mystic Tie Lodge, F. & A. M., and Adoniram Grand Lodge of Perfection, Scottish Rite Masons.

Captain Foster has had the uncommon distinction of having two mountains named in his honor—everlasting witnesses to his unflinching patriotic citizenship. Both mountains were named in 1900. One of these, Mt. Foster, so named by Mrs. Samantha West Miller, of Indianapolis, and her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Miller (author of "The Yoke"), is located in the Ouray, Colo., group, 11,000 feet above the level of the sea. By a singular coincidence, on the same day, Mt. Capt. Wallace Foster was named by Mrs. George A. King, of Denver, Colo. This latter mountain is in the Montezuma group in Clear Creek county, Colo., near Elk Springs.

Of Captain Foster, General Coburn wrote: "I knew Captain Wallace Foster before the war of the Rebellion. He lived from his boyhood in Indianapolis, Ind., and went out among the early volunteers from this State. His reputation is that of a brave and faithful soldier. I did not serve in the same army with him, and am not a personal witness of his conduct. He, I know personally, came out of the military service with the reputation of a brave, intelligent and faithful soldier. No man of his rank surpassed him in the line of duty well performed. I regret to say that I cannot speak of his conduct in the field from personal knowledge. But I know that he has, since his service during the war of the Rebellion, the respect of his comrades in arms, who, without exception, speak in the highest terms of his arduous and gallant service.

"He is well known as the author of the movement to call the attention of the whole people to the protection of and a reverence for the flag of our country."

ORANGE SCOTT RUNNELS, A. M., M. D., a surgeon of Indianapolis, whose office and hospital are at No. 522 North Illinois street, was born in Licking county, Ohio, June 11, 1847. His parents were Edwin and Lydia (Eaton) Runnels, natives of Vermont and New York, respectively.

The Runnels family is of Scotch and English descent, and has long been established in America, the ancestors settling first in Nova Scotia, after leaving Scotland, and later migrating to Vermont. The Doctor's great-grandfather, Stephen Runnels, was in the battle of Bunker Hill, and was among those who lost guns in the battle. He later became corporal, according to the New Hampshire Provincial records.

Col. Daniel Runnels (otherwise Reynolds, written interchangeably), great-great-uncle of Dr. Runnels, was captain of Company I, in Col. Nichols' regiment, which went with Col. Stark to Bennington in 1776. Later he became major and colonel of that regiment. It is stated that few Revolutionary records were more praiseworthy than his. His gradual growth, and acknowledged merit and distinction as an officer, and perseverance to the end, had given him high rank among the Revolutionary soldiers of New Hampshire.

A cousin, Enos Runnels, was also in the battle of Bunker Hill, in Capt. Moore's company, Col. Stark's regiment. They started from Medford early in the morning, and reached Bunker Hill "along in the forenoon." They marched to the redoubt, which was then full. Orders were given to the regiment to take the post on the left when the rail fence was commenced, and he helped to make it. He afterward enlisted for three years, and served in the Northern army under Gen. Schuyler; was taken prisoner by the Indians and delivered to the British. He escaped imprisonment at Ticonderoga, rejoined the army under Gen. Gates, and was present at the surrender of Gen. Burgoyne at Saratoga. At the time of Arnold's treachery he was stationed at West Point, and performed guard duty in the same room with Major Andre on the last night of his life.

Stephen Runnels, the grandfather, was born at Topsham, Vt., and was a farmer by vocation. He migrated from his native State to Ohio in 1819, and died in Licking county at the age of fifty-nine years. On Jan. 26, 1806, at Cambridge, Vt., he married Jane Brown.

Edwin Runnels at the age of twelve years, in 1819, migrated with his parents from Topsham, Vt., to Licking county, Ohio, where he grew to manhood amid pioneer conditions, clearing up a farm and living there until late in life, when he removed to Red Oak, Iowa, where he died in 1879, aged seventy-two years. His wife died three years previously, aged sixty-seven years. In religious faith they were originally Baptists, but latterly Methodists. He was a public speaker and a great anti-slavery man, being a conductor on the so-called "underground railway," in Ohio. Eleven children were born to him and his wife, seven sons and four daughters, of whom six are now living, namely: Celestia R., wife of George C. Hicks, of Sidney, Iowa; Ormond, of Red Oak, Iowa; Annie P., wife of Charles McFarland, of Nipomo, Cal.; Dr. Orange S., of Indianapolis, Ind.; Dr. Moses T., of Kansas City, Mo.; and Sherwin T., of Nipomo, California.

Dr. Runnels's maternal grandfather was from Connecticut, and was of English stock. He was a farmer, and resided first in Connecticut, later at Rome, N. Y., and then in Licking county, Ohio, where he died at an advanced age.

Orange Scott Runnels was reared in Licking county, Ohio, worked on a farm, and attended the district school as much as possible during the winter terms. He also attended Oberlin College off and on for several years, but his health failed before he completed the course. He taught a district school each winter in order to get money to defray his college expenses. He studied medicine under Dr. J. B. Hunt, of Columbus, Ohio, and graduated from the Cleveland University of Medicine in February, 1871, in April of the same year locating for practice in Indianapolis, where he has followed his profession ever since with marked success. In 1890 he established his private surgical hospital at No. 522 North Illinois street, and he has enlarged it from time to time. He devotes himself exclusively to surgical practice, and has attained national eminence in his specialty. He has been a voluminous contributor to professional literature. Oberlin College conferred upon him the honorary degree of A. M., in 1894.

Dr. Runnels was surgeon general of Indiana, under Governor Mount, and established and conducted Camp Mount Military Hospital, upon the return of the Indiana troops from the Spanish American war, in 1898. He is a member of the County, State and National Medical Societies, and of the Surgical and Gynecological Association of the American Institute of Homeopathy, besides being an honorary member of the Massachusetts Surgical and Gynecological Society, of the New York State Homeopathic Society, of the Missouri Institute of Homeopathy, of the Kentucky Homeopathic Society, and of the Southern Homeopathic Association. He is an ex-president of the County, State and National Homeopathic Medical Societies, and is also an ex-president of the American Association of Official Surgeons. He was chairman of the delegates of the American Institute of Homeopathy to the World's Homeopathic Congress held at Basle, Switzerland, in 1886, and was made vice-president of that body. He is a member of the Commercial Club, the University Club, and the Indianapolis Literary Society; in religion he is a member of the Plymouth Congregational Church of Indianapolis.

On June 20, 1872, Dr. Runnels was married to Miss Dora Clark, of Columbus, Ohio. Four children were born to this union, all sons, namely: Edwin C., who died aged five years; Walter, who died aged eight months; Scott C., who still survives; and Clark, who died aged nine years. Mrs. Runnels died in 1891, aged forty-five years. She was a member of the Plymouth Congregational Church.

On June 28, 1893, Dr. Runnels was married to Mrs. Alice McCulloch, widow of Rev. Oscar C. McCulloch, of Indianapolis, and daughter of M. R. Barteau, of Appleton, Wis. Dr. and Mrs. Runnels reside at No. 1100 North Meridian street.

COL. IVAN N. WALKER, deceased, of Indianapolis, was born just north of Rushville, Rush Co., Ind., Feb. 3, 1839, son of James and Jane (McBride) Walker, both natives of North Carolina.

John Walker, the grandfather of Col. I.

N., was born in Virginia, and was an early settler in North Carolina. About 1820 he came to Indiana, and made a location in the Little Blue river valley, Center township, Rush county, where he bought a half section of land, and made his home until 1853. In that year when he was seventy-five years of age, he sold his place, and moved into Hendricks county, where about as soon as he was nicely established, he was fatally injured in an accident at Plainfield. Mr. Walker was twice married, and by his first wife had thirteen children, and seven by his second. He was a Presbyterian minister, and after coming west he became identified with the Christian Church, and was a pioneer preacher of that body at the time of his death.

The maternal grandfather of Colonel Walker was Robert McBride, who was a native of North Carolina, and of Scotch descent. In the war of 1812, in the Creek war and in the Seminole war, he held a captain's commission, and did valiant service. About 1820 he came to Indiana, and settled in Rush county, where he died at the age of eighty-eight years. His wife was Betsey (Heathman) McBride.

James Walker, father of Col. I. N., was a member of the Walker Lead Company of Cincinnati, and was actively engaged in business there, when he died at an advanced age about four years ago. His wife died about three years ago, also reaching an advanced age. His career has been that of a merchant and manufacturer. Both husband and wife were members of the Christian Church. They were the parents of the following children: Col. Ivan N.; Sarah, the wife of J. F. Kinney, of Cincinnati; Elizabeth, the wife of J. K. Rugg, of Cincinnati; James M., of Cincinnati; Martha, the widow of Colonel Beck, of Connersville, Ind.; Emma, the widow of Walter Whittaker, formerly of St. Louis; John, who is deceased; Franklin P. and Alfred B., both of Cincinnati.

Col. Ivan N. Walker was three years old when his parents moved to northern Indiana, and the most of his younger life was spent at Fort Wayne, where he passed through the public schools and the local academy. His entrance into business life was as agent for the United States and American Express Companies, serving two and a half years in that capacity. In 1860 he was made deputy warden at the Northern Indiana State Prison at Michigan City, which position he retained until 1862. During the Civil war, in 1862, Colonel Walker raised a company, which was known as Company K, 73d Ind. V. I., he going to the front as captain of that command. Six months later he was made a major of the regiment at the battle of Stone River. Immediately afterward he was made lieutenant colonel of the regiment, and the following May was raised to the rank of colonel. This was following the death of Colonel Hathaway, who was killed at the battle of Blount's Farm. Colonel Walker was in active service two years and three months, being but slightly wounded during the entire time. He was on the battlefields of Richmond, Ky., Perryville, Stone River, Sand Mountain, Crooked Creek, Blount's Farm, Decatur, Athens and at Nashville. He was a prisoner of war in Libby Prison, and was one of the 109 who escaped through the tunnel Feb. 9, 1864.

After the war Colonel Walker established himself in mercantile pursuits and manufacturing at Nashville, Tenn., and was a resident of that historic city until 1871, when poor health compelled a change of scene and a location farther north. That year he came to Indianapolis, and made his home in this city up to the time of his death. For eight years he was the chief deputy in the auditor's office of Marion county, and in 1890 was the Republican candidate for the office of auditor of the State. In 1891 he became State tax commissioner of Indiana, and served in that capacity for eight years, and later was tax agent for the Pennsylvania Railway Company.

When Colonel Walker came to Indianapolis he associated himself with George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R., and was its commander in 1885. The following year he was appointed assistant adjutant general of the Department of Indiana, and served as such until he was elected Department Commander in 1891. In 1893 he was chosen senior vice commander-in-chief, and two years later was unanimously elected commander-in-chief at the National Encampment at Louisville, an office he ably filled for one year, the allotted time for that position. He was also for some years chairman of the pension committee of the G. A. R., and through his efforts some 12,000 pensions that had been illegally stopped were restored without re-examination.

Colonel Walker was married Oct. 27, 1864, to Miss Anna Layton, a daughter of William C. and Sarah J. (Dunn) Layton. To this union were born five children, namely: (1)

Lizzie married William E. Sharp, of Indianapolis; (2) Lena died at the age of fourteen years; (3) Sarah married Morris Black, of Cleveland, a graduate of Harvard, and a brilliant young lawyer, who died three months after their marriage. Mrs. Black was thoroughly educated in music in the schools of this country and in Europe, and is now filling a six years' engagement singing in the Royal Opera at Vienna, Austria, as prima donna contralto. (4) Layton C., who died Sept. 8, 1903, was bookkeeper for the Indianapolis Rubber Company; (5) Percy married H. D. Hammond, of Indianapolis.

Mrs. Walker and family belong to the Meridian Street Methodist Church. Col. Walker was a member of Star Lodge, No. 7, K. P., and of the business firm known as the Walker Lead Company, of Cincinnati and St. Louis. He passed away Sept. 22, 1905.

CHARLES E. COOTS, who has been chief of the Indianapolis Fire Department since 1901, is a man of peculiar fitness for that position. His long experience in the department has made him familiar with the work of fire fighting, and the equally important work of preventing fires, to an unusual degree; his executive ability enables him to keep the affairs of the department in excellent working order; his efficiency and proven trustworthiness have gained him the good-will of the public to a remarkable extent. He is widely known, having numerous friends both in and out of the department, and enjoys a measure of the confidence of the people of Indianapolis which should serve to spur any man to his best efforts.

Mr. Coots is a native of Indiana, born July 22, 1851, in Hagerstown, Wayne county, son of John and Lemira E. (Owens) Coots, and grandson of John Coots. His grandfather lived in Kentucky, where he owned a plantation and slaves, which he lost in the stress and storm of the Civil war. He lived to an advanced age.

John Coots, father of Charles E., was born in Shelby county, Ky., and was one of a numerous family. He came to Indiana about 1846, locating in Wayne county, where he passed the remainder of his comparatively short life, dying there in 1854, at the early age of thirty-five. He was a farmer by occupation. He married Lemira E. Owens, like himself a native of Shelby county, Ky., and their only child that reached maturity was Charles E., whose name introduces these lines. Mrs. Coots still survives, making her home with her son in Indianapolis. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church, to which her husband also belonged.

Thaddeus Owens, maternal grandfather of Charles E. Coots, was born in Vermont, and served as a soldier in the war of 1812. When a young man he migrated to Shelby county, Ky., where he married and where most of his children were born, and later he came to Wayne county, Ind., where he was a hotel-keeper in the early days. He was twice married, first to Lemira Elliott, who was born in New York, and had six daughters by his two marriages, five born to the first union. Mr. Owens attained a good old age.

Charles E. Coots lived in Cambridge City, Ind., until eighteen years of age, when he came to Indianapolis, and here he has since maintained his home. He attended the public schools of Cambridge, and when a young man learned the trade of stove molding, which he continued to follow for five years after his removal to Indianapolis. On Aug. 17, 1878, he entered the Indianapolis Fire Department, with which he has ever since been connected. For several years he was captain, in 1896 was made assistant chief, and in November, 1901, was promoted to chief, in which position he has since been retained. He not only attends to his duties in a manner highly satisfactory to the city by which his services are engaged, but with such good effect that his reputation has extended to other cities. He is liberal in his estimate of the work required of one in so important an office, and endeavors to discharge his obligations conscientiously, sparing neither pains nor labor to bring the department up to the highest mark of efficiency. He has under his charge twenty-eight engine houses and 250 men, eleven engines, twenty-six hose wagons, nine ladder companies, one water tower and three chemical engines. Forty-five thousand feet of hose are required to equip the hose wagons. In 1906 they laid out 349,741 feet, elevated 22,288 feet of ladder, and with the apparatus traveled 11,232 miles, not counting the trips made by the chief's buggies. In 1906 there were 1,203 alarms of fire.

On Oct. 21, 1873, Mr. Coots was married in Indianapolis to Miss Jeanette Morton, who was born in Steuben county, N. Y., daughter of Eber L. and Lucy (Gastin) Morton, both of whom were born in New York State. To this union have come two children: Howard

M. graduated from high school and from the School of Design in Philadelphia, then took a course of one year in the Cincinnati, Ohio, School of Art, and is now working in Chicago at interior designing, doing high art work. May L. Coots, the daughter, graduated from high school, and is now the wife of Charles Hanna, an attorney at law, Judge of the Superior court, member of the firm of Hanna & Daly, who have offices in the Lemcke building, in Indianapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Coots reside at No. 423 East New York street, Indianapolis. Mr. Coots is a prominent Scottish Rite Mason, member of Capitol City Blue Lodge, No. 312, and also maintains membership in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In political connection he is a Republican. Mrs. Coots is a member of the Central Avenue Methodist Church.

JAMES McB. SHEPHERD, for years one of the most prominent citizens of Indianapolis, long identified with the city's business interests, a leading politician, and an honored veteran of the Civil war, was born March 31, 1843, in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., a son of Dr. George W. and Julia A. (McBride) Shepherd.

Dr. George W. Shepherd was of English descent, but was born and reared and also married in New York, in the city of Utica, his immediate ancestors having been farming people of that State. His father's children were: Richard; Nicholas, of California; Robert; George W.; Lydia, who died in 1898, wife of Hon. H. D. Virack, of Poughkeepsie; Sallie, who first married a Mr. Parmely, of Canada, and later Edwin Goodwin, secretary of an insurance company at Hartford, Conn.; and Mary, who died unmarried in 1899. Dr. George W. Shepherd was a prominent physician of the Eclectic School and practised medicine and surgery for more than fifty years in New York State. He then spent a few years in South Carolina, in the drug business, returning later to his old home, where he died in 1898. For more than a half century he was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church at Dansville, serving as deacon and Sabbath-school superintendent for many years, and was one of its leading supporters. He was a man of many charities and commanded the respect of all with whom he came in contact. Dying at the age of eighty years, he left only warm friends among those who had known him best. His wife, Julie A. McBride, was born in Utica, N. Y., a daughter of Robert McBride, who was born in the north of Ireland, of Scotch-Irish ancestry. In early manhood Mr. McBride emigrated to America and as he was a civil engineer by profession he settled at Utica, N. Y., where he was made superintendent of the locks construction work on the Erie Canal, later undertaking other large contracts and becoming prominent and wealthy in the pursuit of his profession. Through indorsing notes for false friends he lost the bulk of his property, and he spent his last days with his daughter, Mrs. Shepherd, at Dansville, where he died at the age of ninety-seven years. Mr. McBride reared a family of thirteen children, five of whom passed away in infancy, the names of the others being: Julia A., Mrs. Shepherd; Louise, who married J. F. Bernard, of Chicago; Susan, who became Mrs. Sheriden, of New York; Helen, who married Thomas Collier, of Canandaigua, N. Y.; Jane, who married United States Senator E. G. Lapham, of Attica, N. Y.; James, deceased; Robert, deceased; and John, who, at the time of his death, was a justice of the peace in St. Louis, Missouri.

Children as follows were born to Dr. Shepherd and his wife: Henry V., for many years a prominent railroad man, who died in 1898 at the age of fifty-seven, in Indianapolis; James McB.; Edward S., who is president of the Crerar Adams Railway Supply Company, of Chicago; Miss Mary L.; and Susan, who married Frank Shepherd (no relative), of New York. Both parents were valued members of church and social circles. In politics Dr. Shepherd was originally a Whig, later a Republican.

James McBride Shepherd was reared at Vienna, N. Y., was educated in the schools of Dansville, and remained under the parental roof until he was eighteen years of age, when he went to Danville, Pa., and accepted a clerical position there, remaining until his enlistment, in September, 1861, in Company H, 7th Pennsylvania Cavalry, for three years. Soon after enlistment he was appointed quartermaster sergeant and took the first squad of his company into camp. When the regiment was ready for service it was assigned to the Army of the Cumberland and for three years and two months this brave and loyal soldier endured all the privations and rigors of war. After eighteen months of faithful service he was promoted to be orderly sergeant and in March, 1864, sergeant-major for the 17th Veteran Reserve Corps, which position he held until he was mustered out, on Nov. 20, 1864, receiving an honorable discharge. During this period he had held many responsible positions, having charge of companies of men and commissaries, and acquitted himself with such credit that he received praise and thanks from the highest quarters. However, the long exposure and hardship developed chronic troubles for which his pension from the government scarcely compensated. The greater part of his field of service was in Tennessee, under General Thomas, that noble, fearless leader, and he participated in many hard-fought battles, receiving but a slight wound.

After the close of his army life Mr. Shepherd located at Indianapolis and engaged again in clerking, later taking charge of the Meikel Brewery, in which position he continued for ten years. He then commenced his contracting and construction work, beginning with the excavating and paving of streets. After prospering in this line for several years he received an appointment as quartermaster-general of the State, from Gov. Isaac P. Gray, and most capably filled the office for four years. Resuming his old line of activity, he found that his health was not equal to the strain, and he was thus obliged to abandon active labor. He was confined to his bed, helpless from rheumatism, for two years before his death, which occurred Jan. 14, 1906. Mr. Shepherd possessed valuable property in the city and one of its most comfortable homes.

In politics Mr. Shepherd was long an influential member of the Democratic party and he filled positions of trust and responsibility. From 1868 he was prominently identified with city affairs, served three terms in the council, and was many times selected as a delegate to the various city, county and State organizations. He was a man of strong convictions of right and wrong, pursuing a path in life guided by conscientious motives.

On Jan. 11, 1865, Mr. Shepherd was united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Meikel, who was born April 4, 1843, and was baptized by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher. She attended first the common schools and finished at the seminary of St. Mary's of the Woods, and is a lady of the highest culture and most amiable qualities. She is a descendant of an honored pioneer family, a daughter of John P. and Mary M. (Weaner) Meikel, the former of whom was born in Nassau in 1814. and the latter in Baiern, Germany, in 1820. Mrs. Meikel was twelve years of age when her parents came to Cincinnati, where she married Mr. Meikel. By trade Mr. Weaner was a blacksmith. He died at Newport, Ky., a Protestant in religious faith; Mrs. Weaner died at Indianapolis, at the age of ninety years, a member of the Catholic Church.

In 1840 John P. Meikel moved to Indianapolis, then a small town, and assisted in the development of its industries. At that time no railroads intersected the country or centered here, and he engaged in the freighting business from Cincinnati, did city teaming, and later became a prominent contractor. In association with V. Butch & Pottage he erected the Washington Hall, which was the first large assembly room in the city, and later he bought the large brewery of Gause & Embury, about 1856. Subsequently he bought the old "Carlisle House," on the corner of Washington and California streets, moved the brewery to that location, built a small distillery and manufactured whiskey. His power was one horse at that time, but later he put in steam power, had the largest brewery, and manufactured nothing but beer. He was one of the enterprising and public-spirited men of the early days in Indianapolis and he was always ready to assist others to prosper, desiring wealth for his neighbors as well as himself. At one time he was probably the wealthiest man in the city, but his generosity in indorsing notes caused him to be caught in the panic of 1873, and his whole vast estate was swallowed up. His honorable character was shown in his resignation of everything, even when it was to pay debts he did not owe. In politics he was a Democrat, but never accepted office. Through life he was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church. During his years of ample means no religious, political or public-spirited appeal was made to him in vain.

The family of Mr. Meikel, brothers and sisters, all came to America and became worthy citizens. They were: Jacob P.; Justin; Charles P., who died at Greencastle; Henry J., and Catherine, Mrs. Battle. Two children were born to Mr. Meikel: Henry J., who served for three months in the Civil war and died at Indianapolis; and Mary A., the wife of Mr. Shepherd. Mr. Meikel died in this city in 1886, but his wife still survives, at the age of eighty-seven years, a beloved member of her daughter's family.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd were: Henry M., who died in infancy; John W., born in 1866, a gas and steam-fitter by trade, now conducting a hotel at Bastrop, Texas; and Edward, born in 1867, who is engaged in a drug business at Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Mr. Shepherd was a Presbyterian in religious belief, but Mrs. Shepherd was reared in the faith of the Catholic Church. His fraternal relations were most cordial in George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R., and the Union Veteran League.

WILLIAM HENRY WISHARD, M. D. Even before the days of Hippocrates, Æsculapius and Galen, in ancient ages, suffering mankind turned agonized eyes upon healers whose knowledge of human ills was but superficial, if knowledge they possessed at all, and after the advent of these ancient empirics found relief of a temporary character only, through use of medicines they had compounded; and so it went on until the days of William Harvey, discoverer of the circulation of the blood, who with other anatomists helped to make the practice of medicine an exact science. But the enormous strides made in medical science within the past quarter of a century have outstripped all that had been done before for hundreds of years, and justly famous as the predecessors of the physicians of the present generation were it is doubtful if their intrinsic merits exceeded those of the medical men we have now among us. In Indianapolis the best known among these is the venerable Dr. William H. Wishard.

Dr. Wishard was born in Nicholas county, Ky., Jan. 17, 1816, the eldest child of John and Agnes H. (Oliver) Wishard, natives, respectively, of Pennsylvania and Kentucky. They had eleven children born to them, three of whom are still living: Dr. William H.; Rev. Samuel E., a Presbyterian minister, of Los Angeles, Cal.; and Margaret A., widow of Dr. Thomas B. Noble, of Greenwood, Ind. The father was always a farmer. He was taken to Kentucky by his parents when one year old, grew to manhood in that State, and came to Indiana in 1825. He commanded a company of riflemen in the Black Hawk war and was also colonel of a company of State militia, the 50th Indiana. He lived ten miles south of

Mr. H. Washard M.D.

Indianapolis, near Glenn's Valley, just in the edge of Johnson county. He died at Greenwood, Johnson county, in September, 1878, in his eighty-seventh year, from a partial sunstroke. He had a brother who lived to be ninety, and a sister who lived to be ninety-five years and seven days old. His wife died in August, 1849, in her fifty-eighth year. Both were Presbyterians.

The paternal grandfather of Dr. W. H. Wishard was William Wishard, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, but his ancestors were from Scotland. He came to America about 1774 and located in the State of Delaware, and participated in the battle of the Brandywine. He afterward moved to Redstone Fort, near Brownsville, Pa., but removed to Kentucky in 1793, settling in Nicholas county, where he engaged in farming. He died on his farm, from apoplexy, at an old age, the father of thirteen children.

John Oliver, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Wishard, was a native of Virginia. He settled at Lexington, Ky., as early as 1782 or 1783, was a companion of Daniel Boone and helped build the blockhouse at Lexington, and died in Kentucky at an advanced age. He was of English descent, was a farmer, and quite a mechanic. His wife was Martha Henderson, and they had five children who lived to maturity.

William H. Wishard was nine years and nine months old when his father moved to the farm in Johnson county, Ind., and the Doctor lived on the farm until twenty-two years of age. He was educated in an old log schoolhouse. In the winter of 1837-38 he began the study of medicine, under the preceptorship of Dr. Benjamin S. Noble, of Greenwood, with whom he was afterward in partnership for ten years, until Dr. Noble moved to Iowa, where he died in 1869. Dr. Wishard first attended lectures at the Ohio Medical College, at Cincinnati, afterward graduated from the Laporte (Ind.) Medical College, and again went to the Ohio Medical College, where he took another course. He practised continuously from April 22, 1840, until January, 1906, being located at Greenwood until the breaking out of the Civil war, during which he served as a volunteer surgeon in the 59th Indiana Regiment, and later in the 83d Indiana. While acting in the capacity of volunteer surgeon he rendered a notable service to the wounded and disabled soldiers, one that was of sufficient importance to make it a matter of historical record. Realizing that the facilities were insufficient for caring for the sick and wounded soldiers on the field and in hospitals, and removing them to their Northern homes, Dr. Wishard reported these facts to General Stone, Quartermaster General of Indiana, who requested him to obtain all the information regarding the disabled troops belonging to the Department of the Mississippi after the surrender of Vicksburg and turn it over to Indiana's celebrated war governor, Oliver P. Morton. So complete was Dr. Wishard's report that Governor Morton secured through the War Department an order to remove all sick and wounded troops from the front to Northern hospitals—the first order of the kind to be issued. Dr. Wishard was present during the siege of Vicksburg and on the morning of July 4, 1864, marched into that city with General Grant's army. General Stone arrived the same day with a communication from Governor Morton to the chief surgeon of General Grant's staff, requesting the removal of soldiers according to the order referred to. In a pompous manner, characteristic of him, the chief surgeon declined, telling General Stone to present his compliments to Governor Morton and tell him the medical department was able to discharge its duties without his assistance. At General Stone's request Dr. Wishard then personally secured from each of the hospitals a list of disabled Indiana soldiers, with their capacity for providing for them; also a list of the boats for transporting soldiers and their accommodations for the same. General Stone returned to Indianapolis at once and gave the facts to Governor Morton, who started for Washington the same night. He applied to Secretary Stanton for an order that would insure the execution of the first order, but Secretary Stanton refused to comply, whereupon Governor Morton immediately appealed to President Lincoln. Without delay a cabinet meeting was called, attended by Governor Morton, who personally presented the matter in an earnest and effective speech. Secretary Stanton claimed the reports were not to be relied upon, and that if the order was granted other States would complain of partiality being shown to Indiana. The President called in Surgeon General Barnes and on investigation it was found that the report made by Dr. Wishard to Governor Morton did not vary three per cent. from the reports made by the Surgeon General through official channels. Secretary Stanton was told by the President to issue a general order, whereby all sick and wounded soldiers could be sent home, and soliciting the co-operation of all the governors of the different States. At first the order was resented by the medical officers in high authority, who thought their prerogatives were being ignored, but the President said it was a humane act and must be complied with. Immediately the order went into effect hospital boats were equipped, the transportation North of the sick and wounded became the first work of the medical department, and thus many lives were saved. With the steamer "Sunnyside," Dr. Wishard was the first surgeon to make a trip for that purpose, going from Vicksburg to Natchez, on to Cairo, and from there to Indianapolis. Gen. Lew. Wallace and other men of prominence in the army have repeatedly stated the entire credit for this order, which brought untold relief to the suffering, was due to Dr. Wishard. For all the time and services thus given to the country in its time of peril, covering a period of over two and a half years, he never accepted any compensation except his personal expenses. During almost the entire period of the Civil war his residence was at Glenn's Valley, on the old homestead which he had purchased from his father and which his father had purchased from the Government. In the spring of 1864 he moved his home to Southport, Marion Co., Ind. After the war he practised medicine at Southport until the fall of 1876, when he was elected coroner of Marion county, in which office he served four years. To facilitate the discharge of the duties of that office he removed to Indianapolis, where he has remained ever since. His professional services were still in demand to a flattering degree when he retired from practice in January, 1906, after celebrating his ninetieth birthday.

On Dec. 17, 1840, the Doctor married Miss Harriet N. Moreland, the youngest daughter of Rev. John R. and Rachel McGohan Moreland, the former at one time pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis. Nine children were born to this union, the four eldest of whom died in early childhood, those who survive being: William N., Albert W., George W., Harriet J. (the wife of Dr. John G. Wishard, medical missionary in Teheran, Persia), and Elizabeth M. (who is living at home). Of the sons, William N. is a physician and a professor in the Indiana Medical College; he married Miss Alice M. Woollen, who died eight months later, and he afterward married Miss Frances C. Scoville, by whom he has two children, William Niles, Jr., and Charles Scoville. Albert W. is an attorney in Indianapolis and has been a State senator, and was afterward United States District Attorney for Indiana; he married Miss Fannie Cooper, who is deceased, and subsequently married Miss Corrie Wallace, of Hopkinsville, Ky. George W. is in the farm loan business in Minneapolis, Minn.; he married Miss Ida L. Wishard and they have three children living, Dwight Milton, Harriet Marjorie and Robert Moreland. The Doctor and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church. Throughout his life Dr. Wishard has never allowed the pressure of professional work to interfere with his church and religious duties, except in cases of emergency. For over sixty years he has been a ruling elder in the church of his choice, and has served as commissioner in six meetings of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A., the last time being at Winona Lake, Ind., in May, 1905, just fifty-nine years from the first time he represented the Indianapolis Presbytery in that capacity. He has thus availed himself of the privileges too seldom exercised by Christian physicians, of being able to minister to the sin-sick as well as to the bodily ill. It would hardly be fair to speak of Dr. Wishard's usefulness as a citizen and physician without paying a tribute to his wife, to whose unflinching devotion much of his success may be attributed. With great self-denial she co-operated with him in the early struggles of their married life and was always the cheerful, patient helpmate that is to be found in the ideal wife and mother. Mrs. Wishard's death occurred April 28, 1902, after a wedded life covering a period of more than sixty-one years. The family home is at No. 506 Capitol avenue North.

Fraternally the Doctor is a member of Chapman Post, G. A. R., of which he has been surgeon for fifteen years. He is a charter member of the State Medical Society, and was its president at the fortieth anniversary. Only two of the charter members are now living. At the fiftieth anniversary of the society Dr. Wishard delivered the address of welcome and gave a history of the organization. He was also for many years a member of the American Medical Association, and is still a member of the Marion County Medical Society, of which he was one of the charter members, and was its president three years ago. Upon his retirement from this office the members of the society celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday at the Doctor's home, when his address as retiring president was read and the society presented him a parchment testimonial, bound in a morocco cover, book form, and appropriately inscribed. On his ninetieth birthday a large oil portrait was presented by his sons to the Medical Society, and the day was fittingly celebrated by calls and congratulations from many friends.

When the Doctor came to Indiana to live the country was full of wolves, panthers, squirrels, wild turkeys, deer and game of all kinds, as well as hosts of Indians. He has seen this region develop from a wilderness, and understands from experience all about the hardships and privations incident to pioneer life. He has seen steam and electricity become the motor power of the world, and all modern medical and surgical appliances were unknown when he began the practice of medicine. Anaesthesia had not been discovered, fever thermometers and hypodermics were not thought of, while only the surgeons of to-day have had the blessing of antiseptics to aid them in accomplishing the best results in their special field of work.

Dr. Wishard was a passenger on the first through train that ever came from Madison to Indianapolis, being one of the interested persons who boarded the cars at Greenwood. On the return trip he sat by Henry Ward Beecher, the most distinguished divine who ever held a pastorate in Indianapolis, who was on that day leaving the Second Presbyterian Church to become pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. Dr. Wishard is the author of a short historical sketch of the early medical days of Indianapolis, together with the biographies of a few of its pioneer physicians, the articles containing many important and valuable facts. He has also written interestingly of his experiences as an army surgeon.

In his welcome address to the State Medical Society upon the occasion of the celebration of its fiftieth anniversary he gave some valuable advice to the younger members of the society, the promptings of a good heart called forth by a lifelong experience as a physician, and he was particularly emphatic about the value of preserving a good character. He is recognized as a leading physician of Indianapolis and had an active practice of over sixty-seven years.

To-day Dr. Wishard occupies a unique position in the medical and social life of Indianapolis. He has frequently been called "a walking historical encyclopedia." His remarkable memory enables him to recall quickly and perfectly events and dates, even the days of the week upon which they occurred. This marked characteristic has not lessened his interest in current events, as is so often the case with elderly people, but he manifests an interest in the religious, professional and political questions of the day equal to that of a man in the prime of life. In writing of him as a professional and personal friend, the late Dr. N. S. Davis, of Chicago, founder of the American Medical Association, said: "Dr. William H. Wishard of Indianapolis, Indiana, is one of the oldest, most intelligent, most useful and patriotic general practitioners of medicine in that State. Rendered strong and self-reliant by abundance of physical labor in his youth, with educational advantages limited to the public or district schools of his neighborhood, he is in the best sense a self-made man. Though contributing but little to the pages of medical literature he has for sixty-three years efficiently sustained the regular medical organizations, both State and National, and as surgeon in volunteer regiments of Indiana during the Civil war, and especially during the siege of Vicksburg, his services were more than ordinarily efficient and valuable in the removal and care for the sick and wounded soldiers, many of whom had to be removed to Northern hospitals. He is one of those pioneers whose integrity, industry, and efficiency, have been his prominent characteristics in every position he has been called upon to occupy."

It is given to but few men to enjoy the rich heritage of an upright and honorable life spent in usefulness and good works, such as has been portioned to Dr. Wishard. Surrounded by his children and many relatives, honored by his professional and personal friends, he is passing the last years of his life in comfort and happiness, and although ninety-two years of age he is still active physically and vigorous mentally. His has been a life well spent.

stronger impress than the Rev. John Robertson Moreland, who was the second pastor of the First Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Moreland was born near Brownsville, Pa., in 1785. The death of his father threw him upon his own resources when little more than a lad, and drawn by the influence of relatives in Kentucky he went to that State, where during the prolonged revivals that marked the beginning of the nineteenth century he was converted under the preaching of the eminent Dr. Lyle. Soon after he announced his determination to enter the ministry. Having been deprived of educational opportunities in his boyhood he was unable to take up his theological studies until he had first received a collegiate course, which he did at the Transylvania University at Lexington, Ky., where he graduated with honors.

Not being able to go East to attend a theological seminary, for at that time there was none in the West, he began his studies with Rev. John Robertson and afterward went to the home of Rev. Thos. Cleland, D. D., of Harrodsburg, Ky., a Presbyterian minister noted for his deep piety and power as a preacher, as well as a profound student, where he completed his preparations. For a short time Mr. Moreland served as a missionary in Tennessee. Returning to Kentucky he was married to Rachel McGohan Staggs, June 5, 1814. Five children were born to them, three daughters and two sons: Nancy Logan, who married William Unthank; Mary Ann, who married Charles B. Davis; Harriet Newell, who married Dr. William Henry Wishard; Luther McCalla, who died in infancy, and William Latta, who died in 1906, at the age of eighty years, the last survivor of his father's family.

Mr. Moreland successfully filled pastorates at Cynthiana, Mt. Pleasant and Versailles, and for two years supplied the church at Paris, Ky., while the pastor, Rev. John McFarland, went to Europe to recuperate his health. In 1828 Mr. Moreland was called to the First Church of Indianapolis. This call came through the influence of two of the elders, Mr. Ebenezer Sharp and Mr. John G. Brown, warm friends of Mr. Moreland, who had known him as a pastor in Kentucky, and served in one of his churches in that State as elders. He found the membership somewhat scattered and suffering for the need of pastoral care. One who knew of his work in writing of him said: "By the blessing of God upon his energetic labors, in and out of the pulpit, the church was revived and strengthened. It was during his ministry that James Blake and James M. Ray, co-workers in the vineyard for so many years, united with the church by a public profession of faith." Besides attending to the duties of his own church he was largely instrumental in the organization of Hopewell Church, in Johnson county, and Washington Church, in Washington township, Marion county, no longer in existence, often going to these points to preach and seeking to bring about the establishment of the churches. It was while he was a pastor in Kentucky in 1823 that former members of his church who had emigrated to Indiana sent for him to come and organize the Sand Creek Church, in Decatur county, now known as Kingston.

But few are living who were personally acquainted with Mr. Moreland. The late Gen. John Coburn, of Indianapolis, in speaking of him said: "As a small boy I remember the Rev. Mr. Moreland. He was from my earliest recollection a preacher of the Presbyterian Church in Indianapolis. I was too young to judge of his influence as a man and of his power as a preacher, but he was respected and beloved here as a preacher by all persons." He served the church less than four years, and died Oct. 13, 1832, when only forty-seven years old. His wife died Aug. 19, 1839, and both were buried in Green Lawn cemetery.

No better summing up of his life and the purposes and ambitions manifested in his daily walk and ministrations as a preacher and pastor can be made than is to be found in the inscription placed on his gravestone by the elders of the First Church, who requested the privilege of inscribing these words, "The Friend of God."

WILLIAM NILES WISHARD, M. D., of Indianapolis, was born in Greenwood, Ind., Oct. 10, 1851, son of Dr. William H. and Harriet N. (Moreland) Wishard. The parents were natives of Kentucky. Of their nine children, four sons and five daughters, three sons and two daughters are now living: Dr. William N.; Albert W., formerly State senator, afterward United States District Attorney for Indiana, and later solicitor of the Internal Revenue Department, at Washington, D. C.; George W., of Minneapolis, Minn.,

Wm. A. Wishard

where he is engaged in the farm loan business; Harriet J., who married Dr. John G. Wishard, of Teheran, Persia; and Miss Elizabeth M., at home.

Dr. W. H. Wishard has been a physician for over sixty-seven years, and though he is now ninety-two years old, is still active, though retired from the practice of his profession. In 1825 he came to Indiana, locating nine miles southwest of Indianapolis, near Glenn's Valley, where he grew to manhood and studied medicine. When about twenty-three years old he went to Greenwood, Ind., where he practised medicine for some years, having previously been located at White River Bluffs, near Waverly, for a short time. In 1861 he went back to the old farm near Glenn's Valley, where he located with his family and was also engaged in professional labors. Most of the time during the war of the Rebellion he was in the Union army as a surgeon. In 1864 Dr. Wishard moved to Southport, and there he was engaged in professional labors until 1876, when he came to Indianapolis. He is still a resident of this city and his last years have been rich in friends and reputation.

John Wishard, grandfather of Dr. William N. Wishard, was born at Old Redstone Fort, Pa., in 1792. He was colonel of an Indiana regiment in the Black Hawk war. He came to Indiana in 1825, being moved to make the change because of his profound antipathy to slavery. He settled in Johnson county, nine miles south of Indianapolis, and was a farmer by occupation. He attained a very great age, dying in Greenwood, five miles from his old home, in 1878, when eighty-seven years old. Of his very large family three are still living. He held strong Abolition sentiments, and in politics was a Whig and later a Republican. In his religious views he was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

The Wishards are of Scotch-Irish descent, William, the father of John, having been a native of Scotland, and his wife an Irish girl. His family were expelled from Scotland and lost their property, seeking refuge in Ireland during the religious troubles of a former century. They finally sought a home in the American Colonies, and settled in Pennsylvania, where William Wishard became a soldier in the Revolutionary war. When the war had come to a successful issue he settled at Old Redstone Fort, Pa., and from there went to Nicholas county, Ky., where he died in the early part of the nineteenth century.

Rev. John Moreland, the maternal grandfather of Dr. William N. Wishard, was reared in Kentucky, became a minister, and after his marriage came to Indiana, in 1828. He settled in Indianapolis, and became a noted clergyman of the city, where he died in 1832, the result of an accident. At the time he was living in the rear of the First Presbyterian Church, of which he had formerly been the pastor, on the northwest corner of the Square upon which the new post-office is now located. Of his five children, none are living.

William N. Wishard was born at Greenwood, and when he was nine years of age accompanied his parents to Glenn's Valley, where he remained until 1864, with the exception of one year he spent at school in Tecumseh, Mich. In 1864 the family moved from Glenn's Valley to Southport, where he joined them in April of that year, on his return from school in Michigan, and where he resided, except when away at college, until 1876. After attending the Southport high school he became a student in Wabash College, at Crawfordsville. He did not complete his course at Wabash owing to ill health, but received the honorary degree of A. M. in 1891. In the fall of 1871 he began the study of medicine in the Indiana Medical College, at Indianapolis, from which he was graduated in 1874. For a short time he practised with his father, and in the spring of 1875 took a course of lectures at Miami Medical College, Cincinnati, in the fall of the same year entering on the full course in that school, whence he was graduated in 1876. The same year he opened an office in Indianapolis for the practice of his profession, meeting with large success in his chosen calling, and proving himself worthy of confidence as a citizen as well as an excellent physician. For seven and a half years he was the superintendent of the Indianapolis City Hospital, and was chiefly instrumental in its construction. He has been fittingly named by Dr. J. N. Kitchen as the real "father of the Indianapolis City Hospital." He was largely instrumental in founding the Indianapolis Training School for Nurses in connection with the City Hospital. This was the first school for nurses established in the State, and the second in the West, the first having been established in Chicago. Since leaving the hospital in 1887 he has been continuously on its consulting staff of physicians. Dr. Wishard has also been connected as a member of the consulting staff, on genito-urinary diseases, with St. Vincent Hospital, the Protestant Deaconess Hospital, the Bobbs Dispensary, and the Indianapolis City Dispensary. During the time he was superintendent of the Hospital he also held the position of lecturer on Clinical Medicine in the Medical College of Indiana. After leaving the hospital he spent one winter in study in New York under eminent specialists to better prepare himself for special work in genito-urinary and venereal diseases, and on his return was elected Professor of that chair in the Medical College, which position he still holds. As may be inferred, he has made a specialty of genito-urinary diseases, and since April 1, 1888, has limited himself to that branch of medical science, and has visited Europe several times for study and research. He gives his time to office practice, consultation and operating, and the range of his patronage is very wide, patients coming not only from Indiana but from other States as well. Not long after devoting himself to a specialty his original work in prostatic surgery brought him prominently before the profession at large. He performed the first, or one of the first, operations on record for removal of the lateral lobes of the prostate gland through a perineal opening. He invented an instrument for use of the galvanic cautery on the prostate gland through a perineal opening. This is the first instrument devised specially for this purpose which gives an opportunity for direct inspection of the operative area and is intended as an independent method as well as to supplement other procedures. For a number of years Dr. Wishard has served as chairman of the Committee on Medical Legislation for the Indiana State Medical Society, and as such wrote the larger part of the Indiana law governing the practice of medicine, and was the leading spirit in securing its passage, in March, 1897, as well as its subsequent amendments. It is conceded by all the profession that no one exerted a larger influence in the recent merger of the three schools of medicine—the Medical College of Indiana, the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons, both located in Indianapolis, and the Fort Wayne Medical College—than did Dr. Wishard. The result of this effort is the Medical department of Purdue University established at Indianapolis, and having for its teaching force the largest and strongest body of physicians and surgeons ever united in any medical school in Indiana.

Dr. Wishard is an influential member of the various medical organizations of the city and State, being a member of the Marion County Medical Society, the Indiana State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the Mississippi Valley Medical Association, the American Association of Genito-Urinary Surgeons, the American Urological Association, and several other medical organizations. He has been honored by being elected president of the county and State societies, the Mississippi Valley Medical Association and also the American Urological Association. In his capacity as president of these organizations, and the efforts growing out of them, Dr. Wishard has shown his unusual ability as a leader of men and as an executive officer. Considerate of the opinions of others, courteous to those who hold views different from his own, forceful and clear in argument, calm in judgment, and tenacious, energetic and persevering in whatever he undertakes, his marked characteristics of leadership have gained for him a place in the profession of medicine unlike that of any of his local contemporaries and have gained for him not only the co-operation and loyalty of his supporters, but the respect and esteem of those who represent opposing factions. In medical legislation, college and hospital management, his counsel and advice are sought and his time given to their advancement to the loss of his own personal interests. Selfishness has no part in his nature. In politics Dr. Wishard is a staunch Republican. During the incumbency of Governor Hovey Dr. Wishard was Assistant Surgeon General of Indiana and later was appointed Surgeon General by Governor Chase. For several years Dr. Wishard has been a member of the State Board of Health and has served that body as president.

Dr. Wishard was married May 20, 1880, to Miss Alice M. Woollen, daughter of William Wesley Woollen, of Indianapolis. She died Dec. 9, 1880. His second marriage, on June 17, 1896, was to Miss Frances C. Scoville, daughter of Charles E. and Frances Howell Scoville, of Evansville, Ind., and five children have been born to this union: William Niles, Jr., Charles Scoville, and three who died in infancy. Dr. Wishard and his wife belong to the First Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder. He has also represented his church in the General Assembly of that denomination. The family have a pleasant and charming home at No. 2024 North Delaware street.

No preceptor ever had a stronger following of faithful students than Dr. Wishard, those who in the office under his direction and afterwards as practitioners have always shown their intense love and devotion to him both as teacher and sympathetic friend and guide. His nobility of character has won for him hosts of friends from every walk in life, those who recognize in him the earnest Christian gentleman as well as the skilful, conscientious physician. The esteem and regard in which he is held by his associate physicians are shown in the cordial appreciation of him as expressed by two leading physicians, both editors of medical journals and warm personal friends of Dr. Wishard. Dr. A. W. Brayton, editor of the "Indiana Medical Journal," says: "Dr. W. N. Wishard has practised medicine continuously in Indianapolis for over thirty years. He was assistant coroner of Marion county two years, and for over seven years the superintendent of the City Hospital, changing it from a rude barrack into a modern hospital with a full-fledged training school for nurses, and making it a model for all the hospitals since established in Indianapolis. For twenty years Dr. Wishard has confined his medical work to genito-urinary surgery and stands in the front rank in the country in this department of surgery. He has been the leader in Indiana in establishing the medical registration and examination boards, and in the work of the Indiana State Health Board, of which he was president. Dr. Wishard has also been a leader in medical education as well as in medical legislation. He belongs to the middle group of Indiana physicians—those who were in touch with the great physicians and surgeons of the Civil war period, and who have also taken an active part in the medical and surgical renaissance which is the chief glory and beneficence of modern biological research. In all of Dr. Wishard's relations, in medical, sanitary, and civic life, he has been a wise and conservative counselor, but, whenever the occasion required, an aggressive and successful actor, serving as conditions demanded, either as the watchman at the bow or the helmsman at the wheel. He is now only in the height of his medical and civic usefulness and has a large fund of acquired knowledge and experience which he draws readily upon in surgical and general discussions and lectures."

Dr. S. E. Earp, editor of the "Medical Monitor," adds: "Dr. Wishard possesses rare executive ability and his power as a leader is recognized. In and out of professional life his methods show a comprehensiveness and value which is the issue of an analytical mind. His contributions to the medical profession in the line of new instruments, to better and perfect his special line of work, are the products of an inventive genius. His place in medical literature and his merit as a teacher are in the first rank, so that, all in all, his life and work make his position an enviable one."

OLIVER JOHNSON, who died March 19, 1907, on the elegant farm in Section 13, Washington township, Marion Co., Ind., where he was so long settled, gave evidence throughout a long career of sterling worth and a most honorable and industrious nature. He was descended from families in both paternal and maternal lines early settled as farmers in Franklin and Marion counties, Ind., and was born in Franklin county, near Brookville, Nov. 22, 1821, son of John and Sarah (Pursel) Johnson, the former a native of Virginia, the latter of New Jersey.

Jeremiah Johnson, grandfather of Oliver, was a native of Virginia of mingled Irish and German stock. He moved to Kentucky prior to 1795, in which year his son Thomas was born there. His wife, Jane (Lawson), was given some twenty odd slaves by her father, but Mr. Johnson refused to have any interest in them, and when he moved to Franklin county, Ind., the slaves were left in Kentucky. After Mrs. Johnson's death the State of Kentucky expected the family to do something with them, and after Mr. Johnson's death the children met in Marion county, Ind., and voted, out of respect for his wishes (he not believing in slavery), to set the blacks free. They then numbered over thirty-five, and some of them were worth as much as $1,000 apiece. In 1805 Jeremiah Johnson entered government land in Franklin county, and from him Johnson's Forks takes its name. He also located land in Marion county, east, west and north of Indianapolis, becoming a large land owner, and he was able to give each of his children an eighty-acre farm. In his old age he moved to Marion county, to be near his children, and he died advanced in years. On Aug. 15, 1803, he was appointed by the governor captain of the Dearborn county militia, and in August, 1807, major. His children were: Samuel married Susan Johnson; Jeremiah, Jr., enlisted from Center township, Marion county, in the war of 1812 (he married Oct. 19, 1823, Rachel Reagan; they were the first couple married in Marion county, Squire Wilks Reagan officiating); Thomas was married Feb. 12, 1820, to Rhoda Parr, by Squire Lismund Basye; John is mentioned below; Milton married Aug. 3, 1829, Mary Parish, George Smith, associate judge, performing the ceremony; Nancy was married Dec. 13, 1824, to Israel Harding, by James McIlvain, associate judge of Marion county; Jane was married May 1, 1825, to Samuel Harding, by Rev. Henry Brenton; Mary married John W. McCloud; Sarah married Jesse Whitehead; Hannah married Jan. 5, 1823, Richard Williams, the ceremony being performed by Rev. James Scott; Elizabeth married April 22, 1823, Daniel Trollinger; Margaret married June 30, 1825, Reuben Putnam; Isabella married Sept. 1, 1825, John Negley; William M. was married May 18, 1826, to Eliza Appleton, by Associate Judge George Smith; Isaac C. married Sept. 5, 1826, Berseba Helvey; William married Nov. 3, 1836, Elizabeth Robinson; George M. married Oct. 20, 1831, Jane Robinson; Ann was married Jan. 18, 1831, to Morgan E. Nurdyke, by B. F. Moore, presiding Judge. Jeremiah Johnson was an exhorter in the Baptist Church, and preached on White Water river.

John Johnson, son of Jeremiah, Sr., was born Jan. 1, 1798, in Kentucky. He accompanied the family on their removal to Franklin county, Ind., and became one of the pioneer farmers and stockmen there. In 1821 he came to Indianapolis, and hewed the logs for his own cabin, which, with the assistance of his brother, he erected on the eighty acres he entered at the land sale, now a part of the fair grounds. In the early part of March, 1822, he brought his family, which then consisted of wife and two children, Louisa and Oliver, to this home. He added to his land from time to time until he owned 214 acres. Later he bought an additional quarter section, which he afterward sold to assist his children, but his other land he retained. He died in August, 1854, at the age of fifty-six years, seven months, twenty-three days. His wife, Sarah Pursel, whom he married in Franklin county, was a daughter of Peter Pursel, Esq., formerly of New Jersey, and one of the early pioneers of Franklin county. She died about four years before her husband. They had a family of six sons and six daughters, all but the oldest two born in Marion county, namely: Oliver; Luther, deceased; John VanBuren, of Broad Ripple, a resident of Washington township; Volney, deceased; Newton, deceased; Charles P., of Topeka, Kans.; Louisa, who married Ambrose Dawson, and is deceased; Sarah Elizabeth, wife of William Dawson, of Washington township; Mary Ann, wife of Hezekiah Ringer, of Lawrence, residing in Washington township; Nancy Jane, wife of Hiram Haverstick, of Broad Ripple, Washington township; Lucinda, deceased; and Elijah, deceased. John Johnson, the father, was very prominent in public affairs. He was drafted with all his neighbors for the Blackhawk war, but was selected to remain at home and run his own and two of his neighbors' farms. In his religious views he was a Universalist, and his wife clung to the faith of the Baptists, but neither was identified with any church organization.

At the second county fair a premium of $25 in gold was offered for the best cultivated farm in Marion county, and this was won by John Johnson. The $10 on the first ten fatted hogs and $5 on second ten fatted hogs were also won by him. A plowing contest for the best four plowed furrows, forty yards, was won by John Johnson. In lieu of the gold they gave a brass kettle and a woman's cheap shawl, and instead of the gold offered in the plowing match he was offered a plow, but refused to accept it. On the hogs he received nothing on the first and silver on the second. All were disappointed, and Mrs. Johnson refused to wear the shawl. Mr. Johnson was indignant and declared they had killed the Fair, which proved true, as no country fair was afterward held. To this fair Mr. Johnson's son, Oliver, drove the horse and plow, turning the same over to his father on his arrival. Mr. Johnson was a very stern man. He was six feet tall and was of large frame, weighing 202 pounds, and he had a very large head.

Peter Pursel, father of Sarah (Pursel) Johnson, was born in New Jersey, of Irish and German descent. He was reared to farming and followed that line all his life. He settled in Franklin county when Indiana was yet a Territory, and there he died at an advanced age, leaving seven or eight children.

Oliver Johnson was only about four months old when his parents came to Marion county, and there he made his home until his death, at which time he had lived longer in the county than any other resident. For over eighty years he was a resident of Washington township. His first schooling was acquired in an old-time double log house, originally built for a residence, on the site of the present home of his son Silas, and the school was held in what had been intended for the kitchen. Split slabs were used for seats, and greased paper took the place of glass in the windows. He devoted his life to farming and stock raising, living at home until he was about twenty-two years of age, assisting his father for eight or ten years in the clearance of the home farm. When he married he worked three months for his father-in-law, receiving eight dollars a month, extra good wages at that time, because of his competency. He then rented a 160-acre farm for some seven or eight years, and carefully saved his money, so that at the end of that time he was able to buy half of the farm he was then renting. Later he sold this and bought his late home, in 1851, comprising 162 acres, at the north limits of the city of Indianapolis. This became one of the best farms in the county, being thoroughly cultivated and improved with handsome buildings. It was in the sale of portions of this tract that Mr. Johnson made the greater part of his substantial fortune. Until his death he retained forty acres, at what is now the corner of Forty-second street and Central avenue, Indianapolis, for his home place. The balance was sold from time to time at such remarkable prices that it was estimated, shortly before his death, he had received a sum equivalent to $2,000 for every year of his long life. When he purchased the tract, in 1851, the price he paid, $8,000, was considered extravagant. That was an average of $50 an acre, and the increase in land values was so great that he sold it at from $1,000 to $1,600 an acre. Thus he was able to establish his children comfortably, and they and their children have all been numbered among the prosperous farming people of Marion county. Mr. Johnson improved his own farm with substantial buildings, and kept it in a condition which would have satisfied the most exacting taste. Hard toil and wise investments earned Mr. and Mrs. Johnson their beautiful home.

On Sept. 27, 1843, Mr. Johnson was married, by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, to Pamela Howland, daughter of Powell and Mahala (Thurber) Howland, both of New York, and granddaughter of Elisha and Rhode (Powell) Howland, and of Lawson and Dorothea (Wood) Thurber. To this union were born four children, namely: (1) Mary Elizabeth married William A. Lowe, and both are deceased. Their only child, Ada P., is the wife of John Higgins, a brass foundryman of San Francisco, Cal. (2) James P., deceased, was a farmer, and one of the trustees of the township; he lived on a part of the Oliver Johnson farm. He married Rebecca Shoemaker, and they had two children, Charles and Edward. (3) Silas H., owner of a fine farm adjoining his father's on the north, which includes the site of the old log cabin school which his father attended, has been twice married. His first wife, Laura Wright, now deceased, bore him two children, Alice and Ollie; and his second wife, Etta Atkins, is also the mother of two children, Howland and Mary Esther. (4) Franklin P. owns a fine farm south of the State Fair grounds. He married Georgia Pursel, and has two children, Howard A. (engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Indianapolis, who married Minnie Fessler, and has a son, Franklin; they belong to the Second Presbyterian Church) and Francis H. (who married Georgia Farmer, and is engaged in farming in Washington township).

In his political views Oliver Johnson was a Democrat, but in local issues not strictly partisan. He served many times as supervisor, and was a strenuous worker for good roads, in the old days being much interested in the building of the first toll roads in the county, in which he was a stockholder. His name was once on the ticket for county commissioner, the nomination coming unsought, as he had no desire for official honors or preferment. He believed thoroughly that public positions should have no attraction other than the opportunity they afforded for benefiting the community.

Mr. Johnson earned his beautiful farm by hard and honest toil, and he was noted for his integrity and uprightness. He and his wife were loyal and devoted companions through the sixty-three years of their married life. She belongs to the Lutheran Church. Mr. Johnson, though not identifying himself with any church, believed in the principles of Christianity, and gave freely of his means to the support of the church, the Methodist Church in his neighborhood being the particular beneficiary of his generosity in this regard.

Mr. Johnson was a warm friend of Henry Ward Beecher, and he and his wife once saw that noted divine run a horse race. Mr.

Beecher was on his way to perform the marriage ceremony for James Armentrout, of Washington township, and Miss Margaret Blue. He rode out from Indianapolis with Henry Nelson, who was to be the "best man." Both owned race horses and on the way out got up a race. The judges at the end of the quarter mile were noticed by the guests at the wedding, and all ran down to see, being in time to greet and cheer Mr. Beecher as he proudly rode the winner past the post. He then proceeded to the performance of the ceremony.

Until about ten years before his death Mr. Johnson took considerable interest in the annual meeting of old settlers held at Broad Ripple, but more recently he did not attend, as he was averse to the prominence that was given to him as the oldest settler. This modesty and lack of pretension were thoroughly characteristic. In private conversation, however, he delighted to talk of the old times when, while living on his father's farm on the Fair grounds, he assisted in entertaining travelers who came through looking for land. He had many interesting reminiscences. There were Indians passing through at that time also, and these often came down Fall Creek in their canoes. This was before the days of bridges, and he often ferried travelers across the creek.

Mr. Johnson died at his home at seven o'clock on the morning of March 19, 1907, after several days' illness, and on March 21st was laid to rest in the cemetery of the Ebenezer Lutheran Church.

FRANKLIN P. JOHNSON, one of the prominent farmers of Marion county, Ind., owning a large, well-improved farm in Sections 19 and 16, Range 4, Center township, was born Jan. 14, 1850, in Washington township, on a farm which is now included in the city of Indianapolis, its site being in the vicinity of North Illinois and Fifty-eighth streets. The parents of Mr. Johnson were Oliver and Pamela (Howland) Johnson.

Franklin Pierce Johnson, so named on account of his father's admiration for the great statesman and President, was reared on the farm now occupied by his father. His education was acquired in the old subscription school, in a small building erected on one corner of the home farm. His interests have always been agricultural and by the time he was ready to set up his own domestic establishment he had become a thoroughly practical farmer, quite able to cope with the various possibilities of soil, seed and weather, which a farmer must always take into consideration. The youngest of the family, he remained at home to operate the farm after his marriage, and lived there for seventeen years. Mr. Johnson then bought a farm of his own, consisting of one hundred acres, where he has resided ever since, taking pride in its cultivation and improvement, and making it one of the finest farms in the county. In 1887 he erected a handsome, modern residence and commodious barn and made other substantial improvements.

Mr. Johnson's home is very favorably situated, its elevation giving a delightful view and a dryness of soil conducive to fertility. It is situated just across from the main traveled road, south of the State Fair grounds. Mr. Johnson was mainly instrumental in having these grounds located as at present. His foresight predicted the rapid and sure growth of the city northward of the Fair Grounds and the car line to this public park makes his property of much greater value. It was to his material advantage that his was the only farm that could be secured to permit the line to run directly through, from the Union depot to the grounds, without crossing a railroad. For many years Mr. Johnson followed general farming and dairying, but latterly has given much attention to the production of fine poultry, being mainly interested in the Light Brahmas. He has disposed of a part of his home farm, but has become the owner of the old Stanley farm, in Washington township.

On Nov. 14, 1871, Mr. Johnson married Miss Georgia Pursel, daughter of Thomas and Mahala (Harlan) Pursel, and they have two sons: Howard A. and Francis H. The former married Miss Minnie Fessler, and they reside on the old Oliver Johnson homestead; they have one son, Franklin Fessler Johnson. Francis H., who is farming his father's large farm in Washington township, married Miss Georgia Farmer.

In politics Mr. Johnson is a staunch Democrat and his sons share his political convictions. He has never accepted public office, but has worked for the party's success, from principle. He has been honored many times by agricultural organizations. For a number of years he has been a member of the State Dairy Association, also of the Marion County Agricultural and Horticultural Society, and was president of the latter for two years. He belongs also to the Poultry Fanciers' Association of Indiana and was its secretary one term and its president for two terms.

The parents of Mrs. Franklin P. Johnson were reared at Brookville, Ind., and they had a family of two sons and three daughters: John T. Pursel, of Denver, Colo.; Georgia, wife of Franklin P. Johnson; Maria, wife of James O. Warne, of Tuscola, Ill.; Lizzie, wife of William Ward, of Brookville; and Charles, who died aged fifty years, at his home in Knoxville, Ill., leaving a wife and one child.

Peter Pursel, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Johnson, was a pioneer at Brookville, and died there in advanced age. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, followed farming, married and reared a family of thirteen children. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Johnson was Ellis Harlan, who also came to Brookville in pioneering days, married a member of the Barber family and, like most of his neighbors, reared a large, intelligent, healthy family. He was an extensive farmer and a man of means and worth.

WILLIAM PATTERSON, one of the leading members of the Bar at Indianapolis, whose attractive home, at No. 520 East Ohio street, shows taste and culture, was born in Lawrence county, Pa., May 2, 1831, son of Andrew and Nancy (Zerver) Patterson.

Andrew Patterson, the grandfather of William, was born in Pennsylvania, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was a soldier in the Continental army all through the Revolution, and for his services in that war received a section of land in western Pennsylvania, where he lived and reared his family, a large one for that day. There he died at an advanced age. His brother Samuel served in the war of 1812 and drew a pension from the government.

Andrew Patterson, son of Andrew, was born in Pennsylvania, and was a farmer all his life. Coming to Indiana about 1861, he located at Marion, where he maintained his home, though he owned a farm not far away. There his life was spent with the exception of the last six months, when he lived with his son William, at whose home he died at the age of eighty-one years. His widow survived some thirteen years, dying in 1891, when about seventy-nine years old. All her life she was a consistent and devoted member of the Methodist Church. Her husband was not a member of any church, but usually attended divine services with her. Like him, she was a native of Pennsylvania. They had a family of six sons and five daughters (five of their children still living) viz.: Betsey; John; William; Henry; Robert; Margaret; Andrew, whose home is in Fort Scott, Kans.; Nancy, who is the wife of Columbus Love, of Fort Scott, Kans.; Amanda J., the wife of Franklin Coggeshall, of Fort Scott, Kans.; Abigail E., the wife of Charles E. Neal, of Marion, Ind.; and Solomon, deceased.

Henry Zerver, the maternal grandfather of William Patterson, was born in Pennsylvania, of German descent, and by occupation was a farmer. About 1840 he moved from Lawrence county, Pa., to Wayne county, Ohio, where he lived to be an old man. His was a numerous family.

William Patterson lived on the Pennsylvania homestead until he was about sixteen years of age, attending the district school, and later becoming an academy student at Poland and Ellsworth, Ohio, where his education was advanced sufficiently for him to teach school. He was engaged in teaching at Middletown, Carthage, Mount Washington and Amelia, Ohio. It was in Cincinnati that his professional career began by his taking up the study of law with the law firm of Morris, Tilden & Rariden. In April, 1853, he was admitted to the Bar at Lawrenceburg, Ind., where he at once began the practice of his chosen profession. The following year he was chosen prosecuting attorney of the Fourth Judicial Circuit of Indiana, and filled that position very creditably until July, 1858, when he resigned this position to which he had been re-elected in 1856, and removed to Indianapolis. This city has been his home to the present time, and here his knowledge of the fundamental principles of law, his wide and thorough familiarity with its application to the various problems of social and business life, and his unswerving integrity, together with his genial disposition and manly character, have won for him the favor of the community to a marked degree.

Mr. Patterson was married April 16, 1856, to Miss Sarah A. Corby, daughter of Justice and Mary Corby, of Hamilton county, Ohio. To this union were born four children, one son and three daughters: Florence, a teacher in the Indianapolis schools, has for more than twenty years maintained a high rank in her chosen calling. Abigail, the second daughter, married George J. Macy, and has her home in Columbus, Ohio. William is a clerk in the pork packing establishment of Kingan & Company; he married Birdie Alexander, and they have one son, George Russell. Mary is the third daughter. In 1866 Mr. Patterson built the house in which he is now living, having bought the ground on which it stands as early as 1858.

Mrs. Sarah A. Patterson died Dec. 11, 1901, at the age of sixty-eight years, seven months. She was a member of the Roberts Park Methodist Church at the time of her death, and left behind her sweet and tender memories of a faithful wife and a loving mother. Mr. Patterson, who is also a Methodist, was the recognized leader in the founding of the Woodlawn Tabernacle, which is now the Edwin Ray Methodist Church, and for years has been one of its hardest and most earnest workers, having been trustee, steward and class-leader.

Until 1852 Mr. Patterson voted the Democratic ticket, but he associated himself with the first movements for the organization of the Republican party, with which he continued to act until after the first election of President Grant. From that time he has taken an independent stand in politics, seeking the best men and measures regardless of party names. The only public position he ever filled was that of prosecuting attorney, as already noted.

Two brothers of William Patterson, John and Andrew, bore arms for the Union during the Civil war, being members of the 16th Ohio Volunteer Infantry. They were honorably discharged, Andrew at the close of the war, and John earlier for disability. They received pensions.

William Patterson is one of the most highly respected citizens of Indianapolis, where he is widely known for his many good qualities and professional ability.

WILLIAM FORTUNE. "In contemplating so busy, so active, so useful a career as that of William Fortune, whose fame extends far beyond his beautiful city of Indianapolis, the biographer is led to question from what virile stock sprung so active an intellect, so strong a personality, and whence came that flow of energy which has made so notable an impression upon the minds and affairs of his generation."

William Fortune was born in Boonville, Warrick Co., Ind., May 27, 1863. He is of French and Scotch descent on his mother's side, the St. Clairs of Kentucky and Virginia. His great-grandfather was Wayman St. Clair, and his grandfather was Isaac St. Clair. On his father's side the family (Fortune-Shoemaker) is of French and German origin. Although the St. Clairs were large slave owners, the Kentucky branch of the family took the Union side, and five of the six uncles of our subject served through the war on the Federal side.

William H. Fortune, the father of William, was one of the first to enlist in Company A, 1st Ind. Cav., and he served till mustered out at the close of the war. He was one of the great number of Union soldiers who went South soon after the surrender of the Confederates. He located in Murfreesboro, Tenn., in the summer of 1865, but, like nearly all others who sought their fortune in the rebuilding of Southern prosperity, he encountered reverses instead, and eighteen months afterward returned North. The next few years were spent in Paxton, Ill., Seymour, Shoals, Mitchell and Evansville, Ind., the family finally returning to Boonville, the birthplace of William, where the latter lived from his ninth to his eighteenth year.

William Fortune became an apprentice in the printing office of the Boonville Standard in 1876. The editor of the Standard, M. B. Crawford, took much interest in the training of the boy as a writer, and before he was sixteen years old he was doing much of the editorial work of the paper. When seventeen years old he wrote and published a history of his native county, from the profits of which he was enabled to provide for the family, which had become dependent upon him, while he sought a new field of work. In January, 1882, he became a reporter on the Indianapolis Journal. His reports of the sessions of the Indiana General Assembly in 1883-4 were the cause of several rather dramatic incidents, resulting finally in an attempt by the Democratic majority to expel him on the last day of the session, but this was thwarted by enough of the Democratic Senators voting on his side to make a tie, and the deciding vote of the Lieutenant-Governor, Gen. Manson, was cast in his favor. Soon afterward Mr. Fortune succeeded Harry S. New as city editor of the Journal, and continued in this position till the spring of 1888, when he resigned on account of ill-health. Soon afterward he started the Sunday Press, with Mrs. Emma Carleton as associate editor. The paper ranked high in literary quality, and among its regular contributors were many of the best known people in the State, but it was soon demonstrated, as Mr. Fortune believed, that the possible success of such a publication was not worth the efforts and expense of establishing it, and the Press was discontinued at the end of three months, without financial loss to any one who had put money into it, except Mr. Fortune. The nomination of Harrison for President made Indiana the battle center in the campaign of 1888, and, as the special representative of several leading newspapers, including the New York Tribune, Philadelphia Press and Chicago Tribune, Mr. Fortune did some notable work as a political correspondent.

While an editorial writer on the Indianapolis News, when John H. Holliday was in charge of the paper, Mr. Fortune wrote several articles urging organized effort toward overcoming the extreme conservatism which then hindered the physical improvement and commercial development of Indianapolis. The suggestion was received with general approval, as shown by many letters written to the paper commending the articles and offering ideas as to the scope of the needed work. It had been proposed in the articles that the work should be undertaken by the Board of Trade, but when a resolution on this line was brought before the governors of that organization it was defeated. One of the few members of the Board of Governors who supported the resolution was Col. Eli Lilly. When advised of the adverse action of the Board of Trade, Mr. Fortune immediately called up by telephone a number of business men asking them to attend a meeting at the "Bates House" the next day. Twenty-seven men were at this meeting, and they became the nucleus of the Commercial Club, of Indianapolis, the organization of which was completed at another meeting held two days later, with eighty charter members. Col. Eli Lilly was chosen as president and Mr. Fortune was elected secretary, and the Commercial Club entered vigorously upon the work for which it was organized. The membership grew from eighty to a thousand inside of a month, and the many projects which constitute the history of the club during the period of activity of Col. Lilly and Mr. Fortune were brought forward in rapid succession, and every important undertaking was successfully carried out. This movement marked the beginning of a new era in Indianapolis. The aim which Mr. Fortune kept in view in the work, as often declared, was "to make Indianapolis a model city." The story of what was accomplished through this work and his connection with it is to be found more completely than it can be given here in the history of the Commercial Club during the time of his official responsibility and activity. For five years Col. Lilly was president and Mr. Fortune secretary of the club, when both retired. Mr. Fortune then served two terms as first vice-president and rounded out his career in the work with one term as president, retiring finally from all official connection in February, 1898.

Mr. Fortune had charge of the National Paving Exposition held in Indianapolis in 1890. It was the first exposition of the kind ever held. The original purpose of it was to interest the people of Indianapolis in good street pavements, and to bring to them the opportunity of fully informing themselves as to materials and methods. The enterprise, however, attracted such wide attention throughout the country that it quickly grew into national importance, and official delegates were sent to it by municipalities from all parts of the United States. This exposition was the practical beginning of modern paving in Indianapolis.

In 1891 Mr. Fortune proposed that a systematic and organized effort should be made to bring to Indianapolis large conventions or meetings, arguing that in this way the fame of the city could best be spread, and, besides affording the most desirable advertising, it had the advantage of bringing to the city a large revenue. This work was established on a permanent basis with a large fund for its continuance raised by his personal efforts. He was elected Executive director of the G. A. R. National Encampment held in Indianapolis in 1893. This Encampment was conducted on new plans devised by him after a careful study of the methods followed in previous years. Greater responsibility devolved upon him than was ever put upon one man in the management of these great veteran encampments, and his work involved every detail of expense. As the Encampment was held at Indianapolis in the year of the panic, there was difficulty in raising the large sum of money required for its expense, and it was feared that there would be a deficit. The total amount raised was about $120,000, of which $75,000 was appropriated by the common council of Indianapolis. The expense the year before at Washington had amounted to $157,000. The Encampment in Indianapolis was conducted on fully as large a scale as in Washington, and the accommodations for veterans were the best ever provided, but at the close it was found that the total expense was only about $63,000. Over $42,000 of the city appropriation was returned and about $12,000 of funds raised by the Commercial Club were left on hand.

In 1892 a movement for Good Roads was started through the efforts of Mr. Fortune, resulting in the assembling of a Good Roads Congress, under his direction, to which delegates were sent by nearly every county in the State. At this meeting the Indiana Highway Association was formed. Mr. Fortune was elected president but declined, and the Congress adopted a testimonial, thanking him for his work in behalf of good roads. He was also prominently identified with the Good Roads Congress at the World's Fair in 1893.

Mr. Fortune was one of the committee of three, the other members of which were H. H. Hanna and Col. Eli Lilly, which had charge of the relief of the unemployed in Indianapolis during the winter of 1894. This committee devised and successfully carried out what became widely known as "the Indianapolis plan" of relief, whereby food, fuel and clothing were provided for unemployed people in need under conditions which eliminated as far as practicable the pauperizing influences of charity. The plan embraced the establishment of a food market, where, after investigations, worthy people were given credit for supplies, issued in regular rations, in payment for which they performed labor under the direction of the committee. They provided for over 5,000 people during most of the winter, and, so successful was it in the avoidance of pauperizing influences, that for some time after the close of the relief work in the spring of 1894, there were fewer people than usual dependent upon the Charity Organization Society. A history of this work is given in a pamphlet entitled "Relief for the Unemployed," and it was the subject of several magazine articles.

In 1894 Mr. Fortune proposed and brought about the organization of the Indiana State Board of Commerce, composed of the commercial organizations representing the different cities of Indiana, which were thus brought together for united action in advancing the public and commercial interests of the State. He was elected president of this organization in 1897, and again in 1898 and 1899. He was specially active in the movement inaugurated by the State Board of Commerce to reform county and township government in Indiana, and was chairman of the executive committee which prepared and secured the passage of these laws, which in the first year of their operation saved to the people over three million dollars.

His management of the National Paving Exposition in 1890 suggested to him the need of a publication devoted specially to municipal improvements, and, with William C. Bobbs as business manager, he soon afterward issued "Paving and Municipal Engineering," as a sixteen-page journal. This has since grown into "Municipal Engineering Magazine," a large and prosperous publication recognized as an authority and the foremost representative of the interests connected with the practical affairs of American municipalities. He was for years the editor of the magazine and is president of the company owning it.

Mr. Fortune was one of the original members of the Commercial Club Elevated Railroad Commission, appointed in 1894, and, in conjunction with Col. Lilly, was active for many years in promoting the project for establishing in Indianapolis a system of elevated railroad tracks, running east and west through the city, as a means of relief to the public from the dangers and inconveniences of grade crossings. Mr. Fortune was appointed chairman of the commission in June, 1898, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Col. Lilly. Mr. Fortune continued at the head of the commission, and in 1898 he secured the enactment of an ordinance requiring track elevation. This was resisted by the railroads and the fight was carried on for years through the courts, the legislature and in local political campaigns, resulting finally in the triumph of the movement and the enactment of an amendment to the city charter providing for continued progress in the work of track elevation, which is already well advanced. From the time of its organization he was a member of the executive committee of the Citizens League, being associated in this work with Thomas C. Day, T. E. Griffith, Father Gavis, Lucius B. Swift, A. L. Mason and G. E. Hunt.

Mr. Fortune was the first President of the Indianapolis Press Club, organized in 1891. He was one of the organizers of the Century Club, and was its president in 1892. He was president of the Automobile Club of Indiana for two years. He is a member of a number of clubs, including, besides those mentioned, the Country Club, the Columbia Club, the University Club and the Woodruff Club, of Indianapolis.

Through the Commercial Club in 1902 Mr. Fortune offered a gold medal to the pupil of the public schools writing the best essay on the topic "Why We Take Pride in Indianapolis," the object being to stimulate home pride and public spirit in the young people. This was afterward continued for a number of years by the Commercial Club.

In January, 1908, Mr. Fortune was elected president of the Inter-State Life Assurance Company. He is also president of Municipal Engineering Company, and of the New Telephone Company, of Indianapolis, and is a director in several companies.

It was largely through Mr. Fortune that Wong Kai Kah, the Chinese diplomat, was influenced to establish his home in Indianapolis while in America, and through him Prince Pu Lun was invited to become the guest of Indiana and Indianapolis for a week in 1904. Mr. Fortune was chairman of the General Committee of Citizens in charge of the entertainment of the Prince and his suite during this visit. In 1905 the Emperor of China by letter patent conferred upon Mr. Fortune the rank of nobility and also bestowed on him the decoration of the order of the Double Dragon.

On Nov. 25, 1884, Mr. Fortune was married to Miss May K nubbe, daughter of Frederick and Jerusha A. K nubbe. She was a beautiful woman, who was beloved by all who knew her and who supplied to her husband those elements of tenderness and softness which the character of his strenuous life does not bring uppermost. Her death took place Sept. 28, 1898, in her thirty-fourth year. She was survived by her three children: Russell, Evelyn (who in August, 1907, was married to Mr. Eli Lilly) and Madeline.

Perhaps one of the most gratifying expressions of public esteem which have been numerous in Mr. Fortune's career, was the presentation to him, in 1899, of a very handsome loving cup, bearing the inscription, "To William Fortune from citizens of Indianapolis in recognition of his services in promoting the general welfare of the city, February, 1899." This was accompanied by an address which was signed by 100 citizens, headed by Benjamin Harrison and James Whitcomb Riley, in which they expressed their high personal regard and their appreciation of his untiring efforts on behalf of the city and State.

Mr. A. L. Mason, in an address on "The Duties of Citizenship" in May, 1902, said "I undertake to say that William Fortune has contributed more individual energy and has achieved greater success in building organizations for the carrying out of public reforms than any man of his age in the Middle West."

ROBERT LINCOLN KELLY, LL. D., who since 1903 has been the efficient President of Earlham College, at Richmond, Ind., which is one of the leading educational centers of the Society of Friends, is a man well qualified in every way for this high office, as may be read in his former connections with important schools in various parts of the country. Dr. Kelly is equally at home as an executive, as a teacher and as a lecturer, having devoted close study to many psychological and political questions, outside of the general field of literature. He was born March 22, 1865, at Tuscola, Ill., son of Robert and Anna (Pearson) Kelly.

In 1867 Robert Kelly moved with his family to Lawrence county, Mo., where he became editor of the Spring River Fountain, the leading Republican newspaper of that region. Several years later he went to St. Louis, thence to Terre Haute, Ind., where young Robert L. attended the public schools for one year, and then, the family settling on a farm at Bloomingdale, Parke county, Ind., his education was further advanced by his attendance at the Friends' Bloomingdale Academy, from which he was graduated in 1884.

Dr. Kelly then taught school in the Kelly school house, in the Kelly settlement, and in the fall of 1885 he entered the Sophomore class (1888), Earlham College. After graduation he became superintendent of schools at Monrovia, Ind., a position he held for two years. He was for a like period principal of Raisin Valley Seminary, Adrian, Mich., and he then took charge of the Central Academy, Plainfield, Ind., which position he held for seven years. Later he took a three-years post-graduate course at the Chicago University, and during the absence of Pres. A. Rosengerger acted as president of the Penn College of Iowa for one year. He then came to Earlham College as Professor of Philosophy, and in 1903 was elected president of the institution, since which time the old college of the Friends has become one of the leading institutions of learning in the State. He has given special attention to the departments of Philosophy and Psychology, having established a Psychological laboratory which is exceeded in its equipment, in Indiana, only by the State University. The college has developed additional advantages and the faculty has been increased, several new members, men of learning and ability, having been added. An indebtedness of $35,000 has been liquidated, and the institution put on a sound financial basis. During the year 1907 a new library building, a new men's dormitory and a new central heating plant were constructed at a total cost of $100,000. While a student at Chicago University, President Kelly gave close study to the Psychology of children, working for two years in the Physiological School for Deficient Children, the result of this research being published in the "Psychological Review." This, with other addresses to learned bodies, has helped to cause unusual attention to be given this important subject, and the City of Chicago has made a department in all schools for these studies. President Kelly is a member of the National Educational Association, and numerous local educational associations. He is a member of the board of trustees of the Religious Educational Association, and is president of the board of education of the Five-Years Meeting of American Friends. He is also a member of the State Board of Education of Indiana, which carries with it membership in the Indiana State Library Board, the Indiana School Book Commission and the Indiana Teachers' Training Board; and he is a member of the Indiana Rhodes Scholarship Committee. Dr. Kelly is a well-known minister of the Society of Friends, and spends much time and effort in ministerial labors. At its sixtieth anniversary De Pauw University conferred upon him the degree of LL. D.

On Aug. 13, 1890, President Kelly was married in Bloomington, Parke county, Ind., to Cecilia Rifner, born Dec. 4, 1869, in Cleves, Hamilton county, Ohio, daughter of James M. and Martha (Ciley) Rifner, the Rifners being of Holland-Dutch and German ancestry.

GEN. JOHN COBURN, one of the leading lawyers of Indianapolis, has been a lifelong resident of that city, where he was born Oct. 27, 1825. He attended the common schools, also the Marion County Seminary and Wabash College, from which latter he graduated with honor in 1846. He then studied law in his father's office, was admitted to the Bar of the Supreme court in 1849, and has practiced almost continuously ever since. As an efficient public servant he has been prominently before his fellow-citizens throughout the greater part of his active life. He practiced law in Marion and adjoining counties until 1859, meantime entering upon the career of public usefulness which has caused him to become so well and favorably known, the advancement and welfare of his city and State having been ever as dear to him as the prosperity of his private interests.

In 1851 he went as representative to the State Legislature, and the following year, in the Scott campaign, he was one of the Presidential electors on the Whig ticket. In 1859 he was made judge of the Court of Common Pleas, holding that position until September, 1861, when he resigned to enter the Union army. He was appointed colonel of the 33d Indiana Volunteers, Infantry, and served three years, during which period he rose to the rank of general by brevet. In command of his regiment he participated, in 1861, in the battle of Wild Cat, Ky., the first engagement fought on Kentucky soil, in which the Rebels, led by General Zollicoffer, were repulsed after a severe engagement. In February, 1863, our subject was appointed brigadier-general, and in the spring of that year he was captured at Thompson's Station, in Tennessee, but was exchanged two months later. In the battle of Thompson's Station, where he fought General VanDorn, he attacked six brigades with one, being misled by being informed that he was attacking General Forrest, who at that time had one thousand eight hundred men. When he got into the battle he fought the six brigades until he ran out of ammunition. He was deserted by his cavalry and artillery, also by one regiment of Ohio infantry which guarded the ammunition that belonged to his brigade, neither of which belonged to his brigade. After his exchange he returned to the Army of the Cumberland, with which he remained, doing duty in Tennessee and Georgia, until his term expired. He served under Gen. Gordon Granger in the Reserve Corps, and under Gen. Joseph Hooker in the 20th Army Corps. During this time he was in many hard-fought battles, his brigade distinguishing itself especially in the Atlanta campaign, at Resaca, New Hope Church, Culp's Farm, Kenesaw Mountain and Peach Tree Creek. Atlanta was surrendered to him, the mayor attempting to surrender the city while a Rebel brigade fled for safety. He was brevetted brigadier-general for gallant and meritorious conduct in this campaign.

John Coburn

Returning to Indianapolis, General Coburn resumed the practice of his profession, and in the spring of 1865 received the appointment of first secretary of the Territory of Montana. He declined the honor, but in the fall of 1865 he accepted the position of judge of the Circuit court for Marion and Hendricks counties, to which he was elected without opposition. However, he did not long serve in this capacity, as in 1866 he was nominated for Congress, and immediately resigned the judgeship to take the stump. He was elected to Congress, and was re-elected three times, serving four terms in succession, until March 5, 1875. As might be judged by the length of his service, he exhibited marked ability in many directions, and as he acted upon several committees there was constant demand for the exercise of his varied gifts of mind and legal attainments. As a member of the committees on Public Expenditures, Banking and Currency, Military Affairs, the Kuklux Investigation and the Alabama Election Investigation, he proved himself a man of rare good sense and excellent judgment, and he won the same measure of esteem on the floor, his actions being marked by justice and honor, and all his work being characterized by capability and honesty. His views upon questions of reconstruction, which then agitated the entire country, were very positive, and he had the courage of his convictions in openly opposing such measures as he considered—in the light of then recent events—unpatriotic and unnecessarily generous. Another movement to which he was strongly opposed was the contraction of the currency, holding firmly to the belief that too much legislation on the currency question was an error, and that such matters could not be adjusted merely by legislation. He also took a stand against further land grants being made to railroads, claiming that the amount already devoted to that purpose was ample. General Coburn was among the earliest advocates of the reduction of the high duties levied under the tariff laws during the Civil war and for some time afterward, arguing for protection at a moderate rate, and that this was a matter which Congress should be ready at all times to modify in accordance with existing conditions. He offered a bill providing for the appointment of an American commission to act conjointly with one appointed by the British government, looking to the survey of a route for a ship canal connecting the St. Lawrence river and the Great Lakes, and capable of allowing the passage of the largest ocean steamers of both nations. This bill was referred to a committee, but never reported. Recently the scheme has been revived under more favorable circumstances. He served four years as chairman of the committee on Military Affairs, and made a notable record. The system of army pay was put upon a new basis as reported by him and as adopted by Congress without amendment. And it was as the result of a bill which he drafted and reported that the army prison at Fort Leavenworth was established. The prisoners, then scattered at a great expense in the States' prisons and jails, were thus made self-supporting, and secured the humane treatment which, as old soldiers, they deserved.

There is one especially interesting episode in General Coburn's Congressional life which now seems almost prophetic, and evinces a penetration into national affairs possessed alone by the higher type of statesman. In February, 1873, a discussion arose in the House over a bill making an appropriation for the Military Academy at West Point, in which it was proposed to drop the teaching of Spanish. The General, then chairman of the committee on Military Affairs, at once opposed this proposition, although it had the approval of President Grant, the Secretary of War and the Board of Visitors, mainly composed of college professors. He urged most strenuously that the study of the Spanish language was of prime importance, and especially to our military officers, since those of our national neighbors who do not speak English use the Spanish language, and that our soldiers might be brought into contact with Spanish peoples, either by conquest or annexation. His speech concluded with these words: "Let the standard of our military academy be made so high that its graduates will be proficient alike in English, in German and in Spanish. The knowledge of this last language will be of greater and greater value as time rolls on. The boy is born that shall see the day when the general shall mount his horse and lead the column riding from the Rio Grande to the isthmus of Panama, with the flag and the armed men of the Union behind it. The boy is alive who will issue general orders in Spanish from Morro Castle to a people who will then be citizens of the United States." The amendment was adopted and the Spanish language continues to be a part of the course taught at West Point. He also originated and reported a bill which became a law, providing for the erection of headstones over the soldiers' graves in the national cemeteries and elsewhere, of which the Daughters and Sons of the American Revolution have eagerly availed themselves. Another excellent bill which was introduced and carried through the House by him provided for the prevention of the promotion of officers of the army addicted to the habitual intemperate use of intoxicants or drugs, but this bill, though admitted to be a just and salutary measure, met defeat in the Senate. Thus it may be seen that he carried the enthusiasm and patriotic ardor which marked his army service into the legislative hall, and worked unceasingly for what he believed to be the good of the army and the benefit of his old comrades in arms. The publication of the Rebellion Records, giving to the world the orders, dispatches and reports of both Union and Rebel officers, and of which one hundred and fifty volumes have already been published, is the result of a law of which General Coburn is the author. His entire career in Congress was marked by a conscientious resistance to all schemes for the extravagant expenditure of the people's money. He was defeated with the Republican ticket in the fall of 1874, when the Baxter liquor law of Indiana engendered great hostility to the Republican party. In 1876 he declined to be a candidate for Congress and in 1880 declined the candidacy for governor.

Since the close of his service in Congress he has practiced law at Indianapolis, except while absent from the State as United States commissioner at Hot Springs, Ark., to which he was appointed in 1877 by President Hayes, to settle the land titles, lay off the city, fix the price of lots, etc. He was also in Montana for about two years, having been appointed by President Arthur one of the three judges of the Supreme court. When the Democrats came into power he was removed for political reasons, and returned to Indianapolis to resume his legal practice, in which he has ever since been engaged. His offices are in Rooms 532-533, Lemcke building.

Although General Coburn has always been busy with his legal work, he has never been too busy to take a public-spirited interest in the affairs of the city, and his influence has ever been directed toward the attainment and maintenance of the highest good. In 1851 he set on foot the project for the erection of a United States post office building in Indianapolis, and called a meeting of citizens to urge it upon Congress. It was not taken up with enthusiasm by many, but a committee of three, of whom he was one, labored so faithfully that within a few months the measure introduced became a law, and the city had a public building after New Orleans and Detroit. In 1854 he bore an important part in the organization of the Shade Tree Association, encouraging the planting of trees in public places, and in 1859, while judge of the court, he ordered and had planted a double row of trees around the court-house square. The free schools have also had their share of his attention. He served one term as a school commissioner of the city, and was one of the first to advocate the introduction of manual training into the public schools. Garfield Park, now a source of pride to the city, had long been neglected, and had been leased for ten years, but when the city council and aldermen passed a resolution authorizing it to be leased for another five years General Coburn thought the time to act had come, and he resolutely opposed such action. He called and addressed public meetings, gained the good-will of the newspapers, and so far succeeded in awaking the public feeling that not only was the original project defeated, but an ordinance was passed providing for the future protection and improvement of the park. To him also is due much credit for the efficiency of the various public charitable institutions. He did his best to obtain legislation for the establishment of a capable board of public charities, but without success. He worked zealously in the founding of the Indiana Soldiers' Orphans' Home, at Knightstown, and was one of the earliest workers for the building of the soldiers' monument, delivering a most eloquent address in its favor at a State soldiers' mass meeting held at Indianapolis in 1877; he rejoiced greatly at the successful outcome of the project, and delivered an oration when the corner-stone of the monument was laid. He took a leading and active part in preventing the division of the fund granted to the States by Congress for agricultural and mechanical colleges, which resulted in the establishment of the Purdue University at Lafayette.

General Coburn deserves the high esteem he enjoys. His life has been one of continuous unselfish usefulness reaching out in many directions, solely with a desire to promote the public and private good of his fellow-men, never with a motive of personal gain. That he has won an enviable standing was inevitable. No man could so devote himself and his work to the general good without gaining, in a large measure, the respect and good-will of all, and his talents as a speaker and writer, his legal attainments, his high natural endowments and their continual development, would also entitle him to a high place. He has ever aimed at practical results, and his success in attaining them is the best evidence of a high intelligence properly utilized. Gen. Lew Wallace spoke of him as one of the best men that ever lived and characterized his services to the State and nation as invaluable.

In March, 1852, General Coburn married Miss Caroline Test, who was born Dec. 15, 1830, daughter of Judge Charles H. Test, of Centerville, Ind. One child was born to them, a daughter, who died in infancy. Their home is at No. 1518 South New Jersey street. Mrs. Coburn is a member of the Congregational Church. The General belongs to George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R., of which he was a charter member, and is also a member of the Loyal Legion.

Judge Charles H. Test, attorney and circuit judge, was born in New Jersey, of Quaker ancestry, and was a direct descendant of John Test, the first sheriff of Philadelphia. Hon. John Test, the father of Judge Charles H. Test, was a typical gentleman of the old school, even to the cue he wore. He was a native of New Jersey and a noted figure in the early days in Indiana. He was admitted to the Bar of Indiana in 1811, was considered the best lawyer in the then Territory, and was an important man in every respect, doing much to improve the condition of the early settlers around Brookville and in Franklin county. He was the first Congressman from that section and did good work while in the public service. In his efforts to aid in the prosperity of the town he purchased the Butler watermill on Yellow creek, at Brookville, in which he installed a carding machine, a great innovation at that time. John Test married Mary Hall, a native of Pennsylvania, and like himself of Quaker stock, she being a descendant of Friends who came from England to Philadelphia with Penn. They were the grandparents of William and Gen. Lew Wallace.

As a boy Judge Test assisted in the survey of the public lands of Indiana, and he was familiar with the development of the State from its primitive condition. He adopted his father's profession, in which he became eminent, serving as judge on the Wayne county and Lafayette circuits, and was at one time secretary of State for Indiana. Judge Test was twice married, and had five children by each union. His first wife, Rebecca (Davis), of Kentucky (a second cousin of Jefferson Davis), was the mother of James, Caroline (Mrs. Coburn), Thaddeus, and two that died in childhood. Mrs. Rebecca (Davis) Test was a Methodist in religious belief. She died in Centerville, Wayne county, and the Judge subsequently married Elizabeth Moore, by whom he had: Charles, Lydia, Mary, Edmund B., and one that died in infancy. Mrs. Elizabeth (Moore) Test was a Friend, and Judge Test himself united with the Society in his later years. Both died in 1884, he passing away in December of that year, at the age of eighty-three.

Mrs. John Coburn has the old clock of her grandfather, Hon. John Test, a fine piece of mechanism and of typical high-class work of the earlier days. It has an enameled dial, with full face, hand-painted moon, showing the changes of the moon, day of the month, etc. The maker, Humphrey Griffith, was a man of Welsh descent, noted as a fine watch and clock maker, and an all-round mechanical genius. He afterward had a shop in Indianapolis, owning land on the north side of Washington street, his establishment being where the News office is now located. He left valuable property. His children and descendants have been citizens of the highest respectability. [Since the foregoing was written, notice has been received of General Coburn's death, January 28, 1908.—Ed.]

DR. JOHN V. BAIRD. The Baird family, to which the eminent physician, Dr. John Venable Baird, of Albany, Delaware county, Ind., belongs, is of ancient lineage. It originated in the South of France, where several of the name were living during the reign of Louis IV, and the first of the name mentioned in Great Britain came over with William the Conqueror. It is believed that it first appears in Scotland, when members of the family accompanied William the Lion on his return from captivity in 1174. Certain it is that little more than half a century later they possessed fine estates and had made alliances in the south and southwest counties of Scotland. The old spelling of the name was Bard, Barde, Beard, Byrd and Bayard. In New York it has been spelled Bard, Bardt and Baort. The COAT OF ARMS is: gules, a boar passant, or. CREST: a griffin's head with the motto, Dominus fecit. Tradition says these were presented by William the Lion, who happened to detach himself from his attendants while hunting in the southwest part of England, and was then attacked by a wild boar. Calling for help, a Baird came to the rescue and killed the boar. As evidence to the truth of this story, one foot of the boar was carried north, and is still preserved; it is fourteen inches long and nine broad, cut off at the ankle. Among the members of the family especially prominent in the early days may be mentioned: Le Seigneur de Barde, who, in 1066, was one of the followers of William the Conqueror; Henry de Barde, Mariscallus and Strivelin, who in 1178 was a witness to a charter granted by King William the Lion to the Bishop of Glasgow upon some lands in the town of Stirling; Hugo de Baird, one of the sub-witnesses to a safe conduct granted King William, April 17, 1194, by King Richard I, in which large appointments of money and provisions are ordered for him during his going, coming and staying in England; Magistrus Ricardus de Barde, a witness in 1224 to a charter granted by the Bishop of Glasgow; Richard de Baird, who in 1228 made a donation to the Abbot and Convent of Kelso; Duncan, Fergus, John and Nicol Baird, mentioned in 1296, in "Pym's Collection," as men of rank and property; Jordan Baird, the brave companion of Sir William Wallace (1297-1305); in 1308 a Baird was put to death for conspiracy against King Robert Bruce; Peter Baird, made commander of the navy (1313) by King Edward

II; Sir William Baird, of Evendale, who participated in the battle of Poitiers; General Sir David Baird (1757-1829), who at the head of the British troops successfully stormed Seringapatam, India, in 1799, when Tippo Sahib was killed and India given to Britain; Lt. Col. Andrew Wilson Baird, F. R. S. (born April 28, 1842), a noted civil engineer, and in 1885 a collaborator with C. H. Darwin in "The Harmonic Analysis of Tidal Observations." In American annals are found mention of William Byrd (born at Westover, Va., March 28, 1674, died Aug. 26, 1744), promoter of science and literature, fellow of the Royal Society of London, receiver general in Virginia, thrice agent for Virginia in England, thirty-seven years a member and finally president of the King's council of the Colony, commissioner in 1728 to set boundary line between North Carolina and Virginia, and in 1733 laid out the cities of Richmond (first called Byrd's Warehouse) and Petersburg, Va.; Robert Baird, D. D. (born near Uniontown, Pa., Oct. 6, 1798, died at Yonkers, N. Y., March 15, 1863), theologian and writer; Henry Martyn Baird (son of Robert, D. D.), Ph. D., D. D., LL. D. (born in Philadelphia, Jan. 17, 1832), noted evangelist and writer; Absalom Baird (born in Washington, Pa., Aug. 20, 1824), American soldier, graduated West Point 1849, Florida hostilities, 1851-53, assistant professor at military academy, 1856-59, captain and assistant adjutant general Aug. 3, 1861, lieutenant colonel June 13, 1865, brigadier general, U. S. Vols., 1862-66, and retired Aug. 20, 1888.

John Baird, great-grandfather of Dr. John Venable Baird, was son of John Baird, Sr., and grandson of Barzilla Baird. In his religious faith he did not depart from the teachings of his Scotch ancestors, but was a strict Presbyterian. His wife was an English woman by the name of Leighton.

Bedent Baird, son of John, born about 1780, lived on Schoharie creek in New York State. He married Sarah Britton, whose father was Welsh. About 1812 they removed to Ohio, making the journey down the Ohio river in a flat boat, and settling in Middletown, Butler county. After a short time there they went to Warren county, Ohio, and settled about seven miles northeast of the village of Lebanon. Here Bedent Baird cleared up 160 acres of land from the woods and made a fine farm. His first house was of hewed logs, but later he built a one-story flat-roofed frame house, large on the ground and very substantial, with many wide rooms and an excellent cellar. To Bedent and Sarah Baird were born eleven children, nine of whom survived infancy. The eldest, Hannah, born Dec. 30, 1802, married William Venable. The others in order of birth were: John; Britton; Newell; Elizabeth; Joseph; Bedent; Jane; and William. Bedent Baird died on his farm in 1850. In his religious faith he was an Universalist. He was a man of much independence of character, and was an active old-line Whig.

John Baird, son of Bedent and father of Dr. John V., was born in New York State Nov. 8, 1808, and was about four years old when the family came down the Ohio. He was reared among the pioneers of Warren county, Ohio, and in the early schools of that locality acquired a good education for the times, including a knowledge of Latin. He became a teacher, and was well-known through all that part of Ohio. In 1836 he moved to Indiana, making the journey with two wagons, each drawn by four horses, over the old Indian Trail from Cincinnati to Fort Wayne. He settled upon 160 acres of land in the woods. Of this land his father had entered eighty acres for him, and he entered eighty more for himself. At first he built a two-story hewed log house, which is still standing. After clearing up his land he became very prosperous, and was a man of much influence in the community. For many years he held the office of justice of the peace. In political principle he was an old-line Whig with strong Abolition sentiments. His home was a station on the Underground railroad. With his brother, also a strong Abolitionist, he helped many a runaway to the north to find freedom. At the organization of the Republican party, John Baird was one of the first to pledge his allegiance to its principles, and he voted for Gen. John Charles Fremont, its first presidential candidate, and all through that exciting campaign he took an active part, making many public speeches. He died Oct. 25, 1858. He was a man of active mentality, and was charitable in his judgments. His religious faith was that of the Universalists. On Jan. 27, 1831, in Warren county, Ohio, John Baird married Eliza Staley, born in Frederick City, Md., Aug. 11, 1811, daughter of Solomon and Margaret (Butler) Staley. Solomon Staley was born in Maryland of German descent, and was a wealthy farmer, tanner and slave holder, living on the Little Monocacy River near Frederick City, Md. To John and Eliza Baird were born the following children: Sarah, Mary, Elias, William, Elizabeth, Jane, John Venable and Rudolph C. Of these William and Elias were soldiers in the Civil war, the latter, a member of Company F, 75th Indiana Infantry, being injured at the battle of Chickamauga and dying from the effects of wounds. William, in Company C, 8th Indiana Cavalry, saw three years of service, of which time five months were spent as a prisoner in Libby prison.

Dr. John Venable Baird, son of John, was born June 13, 1850, on his father's farm in Jay county, Ind. He received a common school education. The first school he attended was a subscription school, and it was held in a log cabin, with puncheons for seats, and a plank fastened to one side of the wall with wooden pins to do service as a writing desk. His father paid thirty-three cents for each child. The next school was held in a frame building. He was able to attend but two or three months in the winter, the rest of his time being required on the home farm. At the age of sixteen he went to Liber College, Portland, Ind., where he took up higher mathematics and other advanced studies. He then began teaching, and for ten years was so engaged in Jay county, at the same time working on the homestead. In the meantime he studied medicine with Dr. E. W. Moon, of Portland, afterward attending the Cincinnati Medical College, from which he graduated in 1880. He at once established himself for practice in Albany, Ind., and soon won a substantial patronage. Dr. Baird is a man of wide reading, and has accumulated a collection of 1,000 volumes, the largest, perhaps, of any private library in that section of the State. He is a patron of the leading medical periodicals, and he keeps up with the modern scientific development of his profession.

Dr. Baird is very public-spirited and has been greatly interested in the cause of education, and was for years an active and efficient member of the school board of Albany. As a Republican he represented his district in the Sixty-third General Assembly. Fraternally Dr. Baird is a member of the Masons at Albany, the Modern Woodmen, the Odd Fellows and the Maccabees. Like all his family he clings to the faith of the Universalists. Both as a citizen and as a physician he has won the respect of the people of Albany and vicinity, and his great kindness of manner has endeared him to many.

On June 26, 1875, Dr. Baird married Aurelia Meeks, who was born in Miami county, Ohio, Sept. 14, 1844, daughter of Eli and Matilda (Morris) Meeks. Eli Meeks was born in Miami county, Ohio, and in 1860 settled in Jay county, Ind., where he opened and farmed a fine tract of 200 acres; he died in Lima, Ohio, aged sixty-five years, in the faith of the Universalist Church. In politics he was a Democrat. His children were: John; Eliza, Ellen and Aurelia. To Dr. John V. and Aurelia Baird were born the following children: John W., a lawyer in Muncie, who married Mary Risher; and Morris B., in the real estate business in Muncie. Mrs. Aurelia (Meeks) Baird died Feb. 28, 1890. Dr. Baird married (second) June 30, 1892, at Poplar Bluff, Mo., Mary A. McGarvey, who was born in Paradise, Ky., Aug. 4, 1857, daughter of Peter and Bridget (McGrail) McGarvey, of Scotch-Irish stock on both sides. Mrs. Baird attended the high school at Rockport, Ind., and the State Normal at Terre Haute, later studying medicine with her brother, Dr. John McGarvey, in Poplar Bluff. She graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Indianapolis, in 1898, and began the practice of her profession in Albany, being very successful especially in the line of gynecology and obstetrics. She is a woman of strong sympathies and is of a bright, cheerful disposition, and her very presence brings hope into the sick room.

BUTLER. The Butler family, to which Dr. Baird belongs through his grandmother, Margaret (Butler) Staley, daughter of Richard Butler, is of English stock, and came from the island of Scilly in the English Channel. Tradition says the first ancestor went over from Normandy with William the Conqueror. The first of the family of whom there is definite information was Theobald Fitz-Walter, who went to Ireland with Henry II, and was given the office of chief butler of Ireland, his especial duty being to attend coronations, and to present the first cup of wine to the newly made king—hence the name "Butler." CREST: Out of a ducal coronet, or, a plume of five ostrich feathers, argent. Therefrom issuant a falcon rising, of the last. ARMS: Or, a chief, indented, az. MOTTO: Comme je trouve (As I find).

Many of the name have been prominent in American history, and the descendants of Thomas Butler, born about 1674, who settled in Maine in 1698, with a retinue of servants, form a brilliant company of soldiers, professional men and statesmen. Lieut. Col. Percival Butler was a brave officer of the Pennsylvania Line in the Revolution. Col. William Butler was also in command of a Pennsylvania regiment in the struggle for liberty; Gen. William O. Butler succeeded Gen. Scott as commander of the American army in Mexico in 1848; Zebulon Butler, born in 1731, and an early settler in the Wyoming Valley, took part in the French and Indian War, and also in the Revolution, attaining the rank of captain; and Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, lawyer, politician, general, member of Congress, Governor of Massachusetts, and candidate of the People's party for President in 1884, died in 1893.

Richard Butler, father of Margaret (Butler) Staley, was born in Ireland and was killed by the Indians in battle in Ohio, Nov. 4, 1791. He came to America before 1760, and held the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the Pennsylvania Line of the Continental army. He served throughout the war, and was agent for Indian affairs in Ohio in 1787. He was with St. Clair in his disastrous expedition in 1791, commanding the right wing of the army with the rank of major.

Thomas Butler, born in 1754, brother of Richard, died at New Orleans Sept. 7, 1805. He was in every important battle of the Middle States during the Revolution, at Brandywine and Monmouth, receiving the thanks of his commanders, Washington and Wayne, for his skill and bravery. In 1791 he commanded a battalion under St. Clair, and was twice wounded at the defeat of that leader, when his own brother Richard was slain.

PROF. ELBERT RUSSELL, who is well-known as Professor of Biblical Literature at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., as well as a contributor to various religious periodicals, was born Aug. 28, 1871, at Friendsville, Tenn., son of William and Eliza (Sanders) Russell.

George Russell, the pioneer of the family in Indiana, settled about 1800 in this State, about three miles east of Richmond, whence he soon removed, however, to Webster, Ind., where his son, Josiah, was born.

Josiah Russell received the pioneer education of his day in the old Friends school, which was one of the first schools of this section. In Wayne county, Ind., he was married to Mary Whitson, born Dec. 5, 1812, probably near Webster, that county. Her people had come from South Carolina on account of their opposition to slavery. About 1840 Josiah Russell and wife removed to Marion county, where he entered land from the Government, paying therefor $1.25 per acre. He first took up a tract of eighty acres, and to this he added from time to time until his property consisted of 240 acres, he being one of the most substantial men of his community. He was a member of the Beech Grove Meeting, and later was one of the founders of the West Newton Meeting, in which he became an elder. In politics he was a Free-Soiler, later became an original Republican, voting for Fremont and Lincoln, was a staunch Abolitionist, and during his last years a Prohibitionist. Mr. Russell died in 1889, aged seventy-two years. He was a man of magnificent physique, standing six feet four inches, and being of immense frame, his weight being 280 pounds. Three of Mr. Russell's aunts together weighed over 1,000 pounds.

William Russell, father of Prof. Elbert, was reared at Valley Mills, Ind., and was an early attendant at the Friends Meeting there, the instructor being the well-known Gilbert P. Pinkham, one of whose pupils was President Mills of Earlham College. In 1862 Mr. Russell entered Earlham, from which he was graduated, as class poet, in 1866, after which he taught school for three years near Azalia, Bartholomew county. About 1867 Mr. Russell was married at Beech Grove to Eliza Sanders, daughter of Eli and Ruth (Mills) Sanders. After their marriage they settled in that locality, where Mr. Russell was engaged in agricultural pursuits for one year. They then removed to Friendsville, Tenn., where Mr. Russell became a teacher in the Friendsville Academy, and later became principal thereof. He was a recorded minister and preached not only for the meeting in Friendsville, but devoted much time to the meetings in the surrounding country. Here Mr. Russell died aged thirty-three years. He was a man of deep religious feeling and poetic nature, some of his poems being published in the press of the day. Mrs. Russell died during the same year as her husband, in 1879, leaving three children: Eva, born March 10, 1869, married Wayne Haworth, of Knoxville, Tenn.; Elbert; and Ruth, born Aug. 13, 1877, married Carl Bowen, a merchant of Lynn, Indiana.

Elbert Russell received his early education at West Newton, Ind., where he was living with his grandfather, Josiah Russell, his father having died when he was about seven years old. After graduating from the high school he entered Earlham College, from which he was graduated in 1894, at which time he became assistant teacher. The next year he took the degree of A. M., and was appointed Professor of Biblical Instruction, a chair he has held to the present time, with the exception of two years when he was in attendance at the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. He is a well known contributor to publications of a religious nature, including the American Friend, The British Friend and the Biblical World.

Professor Russell was married Aug. 14, 1895, in West Newton, Ind., to Luetta Lilian Cox, born in West Newton, Nov. 17, 1872, daughter of Theodore M. and Rachael (Stewart) Cox, and a member of an old Colonial North Carolina family.

Abner Cox, son of John Cox and wife (Quakers of Irish descent) and great-grandfather of Mrs. Russell, was a native of North Carolina and came from that State to Indiana in 1820, accompanied by his father, two brothers, and three sisters, making the journey in a covered wagon. Abner entered land in Morgan county between Waverly and Landersdale, along White river. Here he cleared up a large farm, building a large frame house and later, in 1849, a one-story brick, one of the first in this section. He owned about 1,000 acres and was largely engaged in buying and selling mules. He lived to be eighty years of age, and at the time of his death, his homestead was one of the most prominent on the Waverly pike. He married Alice Dollarhide, who also attained advanced years. To them were born seven children: John, Larkin, Dennis, Aca, Mary, Delilah and Rachel. Abner Cox was a typical North Carolinian pioneer. His neighbors told as a characteristic joke that on one occasion he walked all the way back to North Carolina again for an old jacket that was lined with red cloth, which he had left hanging on a fence post. This kind of thriftiness enabled him to accumulate a fortune of $40,000 in addition to his acres of land. He and his sons gave the land for the Mt. Olivet (Methodist) Church, and erected the building.

Larkin Cox, the grandfather of Mrs. Russell, was born on the old Cox homestead in Morgan county, Ind., and in 1843 was married to Martha McNab, daughter of Hicklin and Rebecca McNab, Kentucky pioneers of Scotch stock. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Cox settled on a farm near the homestead, and at the time of Mr. Cox's death, in 1853, when he had only reached his thirty-fourth year, he had 700 acres. He gave the land upon which was built the Landersdale school house, and like all his family, was interested in education. He was a man of fine qualities, and was religiously inclined, being a faithful member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Cox and his wife had three children: Theodore Mitchell, Sarah and Rebecca.

Theodore M. Cox was born July 14, 1851, in Morgan county, and received a common school education in his native locality, after which he also attended a private boarding school. He was married in Indianapolis to Rachael Stewart, born March 2, 1849, daughter of James and Sarah Jane (Peters) Stewart, Pennsylvanians of Scotch and German birth. Mr. Cox died aged thirty-four years, while his widow is still living. They had two children, namely: Daisy Evelyn, and Lietta Lillian. The latter graduated from West Newton high school in 1893, and entered Earlham College the same year. She continued her studies after her marriage to Professor Russell and graduated in 1899. In political matters Mr. Cox was a stanch Democrat, although he never held public office; and in religious belief he was in early life an adherent of the Christian or Campbellite faith and in later life joined the Methodist Church. He was an industrious farmer, taking great interest in overseeing his farm of 111 1-2 acres, this being a part of the old Cox homestead which had been owned by his father.

Two bright children, a son and a daughter, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Russell, namely: Josiah Cox, born Sept. 3, 1900, in Richmond, Ind.; and Marcia Rachel, born March 31, 1903, in Chicago, Illinois.

HON. JOSEPH JEFFERSON MOORE.

In this country of self-made men, where titles are unknown, where heredity—so it shows its representatives to be of honest, upright parentage—is almost unheeded, and where a man is judged solely upon his merits, we venture the opinion that the loftiest ideal is the man who surmounts all difficulties; who stands true and unshaken by the storms of life, and by unceasing efforts is able to lift up both himself and those about him. Such a man, preeminently the cause of his own extraordinary success, and the benefactor of all who know him, is the Hon. Joseph Jefferson Moore, of Trafalgar, Johnson Co., Indiana.

He was born in Union township, Johnson county, April 29, 1831. His father, Robert Moore, was born in Ohio, and was a hatter by trade. He conducted a prosperous business in that line in Nashville, Tenn. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. In 1821 he located near Nineveh, Nineveh township, Johnson county, where he entered eighty acres of land and lived there for some years doing a general farming business. He then moved to Union township, again entering land, and here he remained for some years. He was one of the Associate Judges during his residence there, and in 1849 removed to Jasper county, settling in the Blue Grass region. Six years later he returned to Union township and died there Jan. 20th, 1855, aged upwards of sixty years. Robert Moore's wife, Elizabeth (McKinley) Moore (a first cousin of the lamented President McKinley), was born in the same State as her husband, and she died in 1844. She was a member of the Christian Church, in which she was held in high esteem. Her husband was identified with the Cumberland Presbyterian and United Brethren Churches. Eight children were born to them, of whom four are now living: Martha M., widow of David Wyon, of Decatur, Ill.; Rachel Amanda, wife of Joseph Yoeman, of Rensselaer, Ind.; Robert M., of Trafalgar; and Joseph Jefferson.

The father of Robert Moore was a native of Ireland, coming to America during the Revolutionary war, and locating at Ripley, Ohio, where he lost his life in the prime of his manhood in the building of an old-fashioned stick chimney. He left a large family, one of his sons being known as "Uncle Bill" Moore. He was a great Abolitionist, and was Captain of the great Underground Railroad at Ripley. He was a man of great bravery, and carried out his ideas of right regardless of dangers. In later years he became wealthy and owned a large tract of land near Georgetown, Ohio.

Mrs. Elizabeth (McKinley) Moore was a daughter of Hugh McKinley, who lived near Higginsport, Ohio. He was a great horseman, and raised many blooded animals, in which he took great pride. He was of Scotch descent, and died well advanced in years, leaving a large family.

The Hon. Joseph Jefferson Moore passed his boyhood days in Union township in the varied duties and interests of farm work. Here he remained until about the time of his maturity, attending the old fashioned subscription schools. He began his business career in making rails and cutting wood, at twenty-five cents a cord. This work he did upon the neighboring farms, and he also assisted in the work at home. He then spent several years in hunting, trapping and fishing, at which he was an adept. His opportunities along educational lines were few, but he was always a great lover of books, and from them gained his information. He earned his first book, Pike's Arithmetic, by laboriously cutting wheat that had been left by the reapers in the field. For a pencil he used a flattened bullet, and his calculations and drawings were made upon logs which he had smoothed off for that purpose. At the end of three years he left Jasper county and removed to Johnson county, where he was selected, on account of his fitness and industry to teach in the schools there. His first experience was a three months term, for which he received the munificent sum of $25.00, together with his board and clothes. On account of the success with which he conducted his first term, he was selected for the position in a larger school, where he again taught for three months, this time receiving $50.00 with board and clothes. After this he taught in the subscription schools, in which his income was derived from per capita assessments against the pupils in amounts of $2.00, which netted him quite a handsome income for those days. Afterward entering Franklin College for one term, he completed the course of his studies and then accepted a position as clerk for Morgan & Bridges in Trafalgar, where he remained about a year. From this position he turned to renew his school work and taught another year, when he married and took up the general work of farming. After about a year he moved to Morgan county, continuing his work of farming. He had acquired a thorough knowledge of surveying some years before, while hunting and trapping, by reason of his employment by a surveyor, and soon after going to Morgan county, on account of his fitness for the position, he was elected county surveyor, in which position he continued a full term. At the beginning of the war he determined to go into business for himself, and accordingly returned to Union township, where he started a general store. He was elected county surveyor of Johnson county, and in this position served for many years. He continued conducting his store, until about 1866, when he rented a house in Trafalgar, and started a store later on in the place where his present business is located, building the store, warehouse and other buildings. In the year 1881 the buildings were all destroyed by fire, bringing upon him a loss of $16,000. Of this he only received the sum of $3,000 in the insurance. This would have been a crushing blow to most men, but Mr. Moore was undaunted, and simply used his insurance money in getting another start, and success has come to him. He is kept busy looking after his extensive mercantile interests and his farms and is greatly interested in the projected interurban railway between Indianapolis and Evansville, which will make Trafalgar one of the best towns in the state.

On Oct. 23, 1856, he was united in marriage to Ermina Forsyth, daughter of John and Sarah (Hughes) Forsyth, and to them four children were born: Frank F., Elgin E., Sinchona A., and one child who died in infancy. Frank F., now a prosperous and brilliant lawyer in Indianapolis, married May Wyeth, and has two children, Joseph W. and Fannie M. Elgin E. died at the age of two years and eight months. Mrs. Moore died on June 25, 1902, at the age of sixty years, three months and thirteen days. She was a member of the Baptist Church in which she was an earnest worker and highly esteemed by all, and her loss was a great shock to Mr. Moore and all of her friends.

The political affiliations of Mr. Moore have always been with the Democratic party, in which he has long been an important factor throughout the State. He is a Master Mason and was the author of the Gravel-road system, which was adopted with great success in this section. By this each farmer constructs his own section of road. This has resulted in much satisfaction to the tax payers and citizens of the communities where such roads exist, and greatly improved them at a minimum cost. In 1890 Mr. Moore was elected to the State Senate representing Morgan, Johnson and Brown counties. He served ably in this capacity for four years, and won the respect and admiration of his constituents.

The story of Mr. Moore's life, with all its varied occupations, its general unfolding and steady development, might almost without embellishment, furnish material for a work of fiction, which in proper hands, might live throughout the ages. First as a farmer's boy with no advantages, he began life's struggle; then through successive stages, even as the immortal Lincoln of Illinois, farming, teaching, rail-splitting, clerking, he rose until he was chosen to fill one of the highest positions in the gift of the State. Now, in his honored age, all join in admiration and highest regard for him, who had the ability to win these many laurels, and the heroism of soul to sacrifice and labor until they were all honorably obtained.

WILLIAM TAYLOR STOTT, D. D., LL. D., former president of Franklin College, Franklin, Ind., which high and honorable position he held for more than thirty years, is now serving as superintendent of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, at Knightstown, Ind. By birth Dr. Stott belongs to Indiana, and his high moral character and intellectual attainments are but natural heritages from forefathers who through life followed high ideals and worked for the spiritual development of their fellowmen.

Dr. Stott was born in Jennings county, near Vernon, Ind., May 22, 1836, son of Rev. John and Elizabeth (Vawter) Stott, natives of Kentucky. Rev. William Taylor Stott, paternal grandfather of William Taylor Stott, who bears his name, was born in Kentucky of Scotch ancestry. His religious zeal carried him into the sparsely settled neighborhood of Madison, Ind., and later he made his home at Vernon. A giant in physical appearance, his mental equipment matched it well, and through his preaching more than 1,000 converts were baptized and added to the church. His work took him all over the State, and his last charge was at North Vernon. For more than fifty years he preached at Vernon. Earlier in his career, he was a soldier in the War of 1812, under Gen. Hull, and he fought his country's foes as valiantly in the flesh as later he taught the battles to be fought in the spiritual sense. The death of Grandfather Stott took place at the home of his son near North Vernon, at the age of ninety years. His wife was Mary Ann Stott, and they had three sons and four daughters. No less distinguished was the maternal grandfather of Dr. Stott, Rev. William Vawter, a native of Kentucky, who also came as a pioneer to Indiana. His first settlement was near Madison, but later he located at Vernon and lived there all his life, dying in 1868, aged ninety years. His father was Rev. Jesse Vawter, a Baptist minister, and his wife's father was Rev. Philemon Vawter, also a minister in the Baptist Church. The family is of French-English descent. The parents of Dr. Stott came from Kentucky into Indiana, about 1820, lived a short time near Madison, and then located at North Vernon. The five children born to Rev. John and Elizabeth Stott, were the following: Vawter, who died in infancy; Martha, wife of Maxa Moncrief, of Franklin; Dr. William T.; Miss Mary F., of Franklin; and Maria J., deceased, who was the wife of James N. Chaille. For fifty years these parents lived on the same farm in Jennings county, moving to Franklin only a short time prior to decease. His death occurred in December, 1887, at the age of seventy-seven years, while his widow survived until November, 1893, when she had reached her eighty-third year. He was a minister in the Baptist Church, and had a number of charges in Jennings county as well as in other parts of the State. For a great many years he ministered to the churches known as Geneva Church, at Queensville, the Graham, Brush Creek and Zenas Churches in Jennings county and the Versailles Church, in Ripley county. He was ever ready to answer any call in any part of the State, but his last pastorate was at North Vernon.

Dr. William Taylor Stott spent his boyhood days on the farm near Vernon, and was given educational advantages at the academy at Sardinia. With this preparation, he entered Franklin College, in 1856-7 and graduated in 1861. In the July following, he enlisted as a private soldier, in Company I, 18th Ind. V. I., with Thomas Pattison as Colonel commanding. His ability was marked, and was early recognized by his superiors, and he received promotion, until he was made captain of his company. With his regiment he fought nearly the whole way round the Confederacy, taking part in the battles of Black Water, Sugar Creek, Pea Ridge, Cotton Plant, Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Big Black River, Vicksburg, Mustang Island, Fort Esperanza, Baton Rouge, Berryville, Hall Town, Winchester, Fisher's Hill, New Market, and Cedar Creek. At the last named battle Major Williams having fallen, he as senior captain, at a critical moment, assumed command of the regiment, rallied his men, re-formed, and with rare ability and coolness, conducted them to the close of that ever-to-be-remembered day. As a soldier, in camp, on the march or in the field, he maintained in a large degree those qualifications which distinguish the really great; self-possession, alertness, patience, resolution, strength—in short, character. If he was ever afraid, no one but himself ever knew it. On Dec. 10, 1864, he was mustered out, having served continually more than three years and six months.

At the close of the war, Capt. Stott, with characteristic energy and decision, resumed his student life. He matriculated at Rochester Theological Seminary, where, after three years, he graduated and was ordained pastor of Columbus Baptist Church, in 1868. In 1869 he was called to the chair of Natural Science, in Franklin College. In 1872 he became a professor in Kalamazoo College, at Kalamazoo, Mich., taking the chair of chemistry and physics, but in a few months, when Franklin College was re-organized, he was asked to assume the grave responsibilities of its Presidency. This he did. He had received at Kalamazoo the degree of Doctor of Divinity. As president of one of the State colleges of Indiana, Dr. Stott showed most unusual executive ability, and through the years exhibited a breadth of culture, clearness of perception, fidelity and perseverance in work, which not only made his name an inspiration all over the State, but which gave him a reputation among those engaged in higher education. As a teacher he has few equals in America, while he also keeps abreast of the times in every line of the world's work. Not only is he interested in the affairs of Nation and State, but his attention has been given to municipal matters, and he served as a member of the city council, having been elected by his ward by the largest majority on record. His influence in civic affairs has been felt and his fellow-citizens feel confident of his influence and approval for anything which assures real good to the community.

On May 21, 1868, Dr. Stott was united in marriage with Miss Arabella R. Tracy, daughter of Isaac S. Tracy and Mary M. (Pierce) Tracy, of Rochester, N. Y. Five children were born to this union, three sons and two daughters, Cyril H., the youngest, dying at the age of seven years. The other members of the family are: Wilfred T., a brilliant journalist, on the staff of the Chicago Tribune; Grace E., who is the wife of Rev. C. R. Parker, of LaPorte, Ind., and has two children, Cyril R. and Ruth Eleanor; Edith, who married Rev. F. G. Kenny, of Indianapolis, Ind., and has one child, Grace Elizabeth; and Roscoe G., of LaPorte, Ind., who married Isabel Porter, of Petoskey, Michigan.

In political sympathy Dr. Stott is a Republican, but in local matters is very liberal, his methods while in the city council demonstrating that his aim was not to advance party, but to faithfully serve the city. When he accepted his position as head of the great educational institution, which has been previously mentioned, it was at a time when a debt of $13,000 with no assets, had to be provided for. His years there were not only fruitful in the advancement of educational standards and attainments, but in the placing of the college on a firm footing, with assets at $464,000 and with only a small floating indebtedness. To his present position as superintendent of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home he is bringing to bear these same talents, and not only has he won the approval of those in authority, but he has the love and respect of his charges. For the past three years he has been a member of the State Board of Education. In 1880 he served as president of the Indiana Baptist convention, and is prominent in all the leading movements of his religious body. Dr. Stott had a delightful home at No. 847 East Jefferson street, where he resided for about twenty-five years. There he delighted to meet his chosen friends, by whom he is held in high esteem.

PROF. EDWIN PRITCHARD TRUEBLOOD, one of the best known educators of Indiana, who has been connected with Earlham College, of Richmond, Ind., since 1888, was born May 16, 1861, a member of an old Colonial Quaker family of English stock.

Caleb Trueblood, grandfather of Edwin P., was a native of North Carolina, and the first of the family to come to Indiana. In 1814 he removed to this State, settling in Washington county, after a hard and perilous journey by horse and wagon. He entered 160 acres of land near Canton, ten miles northeast of Salem, cleared his land from the woods, and replaced his original log cabin with a good, substantial two-story frame dwelling. This homestead he later sold and removed one mile south, where he bought 100 acres, which he also cleared, and on this latter tract continued to reside until his death.

Jehu Trueblood, father of Edwin P., was born March 18, 1819, in North Carolina. He received a common school education, was reared a farmer, and this occupation he followed throughout life. He was married June 11, 1840, to Louisa Pritchard, born Jan. 24, 1822, in North Carolina, who in 1829 came to Washington county, Ind., where the family settled about one and one-half miles east of the Trueblood homestead. She was the daughter of Benjamin and Milea (White) Pritchard, both of Quaker stock. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Trueblood settled on the original Trueblood homestead, but after the birth of three children removed to the neighborhood of the old Blue River Friends' Church, five miles distant, where he purchased 160 acres of land, partly improved. On this property stood a block house, built by the original settlers as a protection against the Indians. Jehu Trueblood completed the clearing of this tract, and here he died in 1877 at fifty-eight years of age, his wife passing away at Whittier, Cal., in 1892. Both Mr. and Mrs. Trueblood were faithful members of the Blue River Friends Meeting, where he was overseer, elder and clerk for many years, his home being the stopping place of many of the early Quaker ministers. Mr. Trueblood was a strong Abolitionist. At the time of the Morgan raid, the old homestead was directly in the path of both pursued and pursuers, and the Truebloods were compelled to conceal their horses in the neighborhood known as "The Knobs," a tract covered with timber near the White River. Jehu Trueblood was a hard-working, industrious farmer, and a God-fearing man, noted for his honesty and integrity, and esteemed by his fellow men for his many sterling qualities of character. To such sturdy pioneers Indiana is indebted for its present greatness as a State.

Edwin Pritchard Trueblood was reared on his father's farm, and received his early education in the district schools of his native locality and the Friends school at Blue River, his early teachers being William Pinkham, Albert Votaw, Angie Huff White and Amos Sanders. Later he entered the preparatory department of Earlham College, where he continued from 1879 until 1885, graduating in the latter year, in the meanwhile having taught school in 1883 and 1884 in Blue River Academy, his home school. For one year, 1885-6, he taught at Raysville, near Knightstown, Ind., after which he spent one year at the University of Michigan, from which institution he received the degree of B. L. For one year he was superintendent of schools at Carthage, Ind., and in 1888 he came to Earlham College as Professor of Oratory and Public Speaking, which position he still holds. Here Professor Trueblood has been remarkably successful. During his tutorage Earlham College has taken part in fifteen inter-collegiate debates, winning twelve of the fifteen, and has been represented in four inter-State contests. Professor Trueblood is very popular with the students, and largely through his efforts the gymnasium, which cost $2,500, and Reid Field, the athletic park, named for Daniel Reid its largest donor, were secured for Earlham.

On July 2, 1889, at Carthage, Ind., Professor Trueblood was married to Pennina Henley, born in Carthage, daughter of Robert and Mary (Newby) Henley, and granddaughter of Joseph and Pennina (Morgan) Henley.

Joseph Henley was born in Randolph county, N. C., in 1768, of Welsh stock, and was an early settler in Rush county, Ind., where he entered 160 acres of land, cleared it from the woods, and made a good home. His son, Robert, born in 1822, was fifteen years of age when the family came to Indiana, and afterward for one year was a student at Earlham College, then a boarding school. Robert Henley married Mary Newby, daughter of Henry and Sarah (Thornburg) Newby, in 1856. After marriage they settled on the old Henley homestead, where the rest of their lives was spent, he dying in 1879, and she in 1881. Robert Henley was an overseer in the Friends' Church, and his wife was clerk of the monthly meeting for many years. He was trustee for the Friends' Academy, and was township trustee for several terms. In politics he was a Republican, and he was a staunch Abolitionist.

Mrs. Trueblood received her education in the Friends Academy at Carthage, as well as the high school of that city, and in the fall of 1882 came to Earlham College, where she was in school for two years. The following year she remained at home, but in 1886 and 1887 completed her studies.

HON. FREDERICK A. JOSS, member of the firm of Jameson & Joss, prominent in legal matters in Indianapolis, who have offices in the Brandon Block, was born in Center-ville, St. Joseph Co., Mich., May 5, 1867, son of John C. and Mary M. (Merrell) Joss. The father was born in Germany, and the mother in New York.

John C. Joss was an editor in early life. About 1856 he removed to this country, locating in Constantine, St. Joseph Co., Mich., where he conducted a weekly paper known as the Constantine Commercial and Advertiser. During the Civil war he enlisted in Company A, 2d Mich. V. I., and rose from the ranks to the rank of captain. At Knoxville, in 1863, he was severely wounded, and on the third day of the battle of the Wilderness lost his left leg. He served between three and four years and was in both battles of Bull Run, Chantilly, Fair Oaks, and the siege of Vicksburg, participating in all in some seventeen of the important battles of the war. After the war Capt. Joss was elected county clerk of St. Joseph county, Mich., and was retained in that position fourteen years. For a few years prior to his death he was retired, though he was somewhat interested in manufacturing. On Feb. 2, 1881, he was killed in a railway accident on the Michigan Central, near Niles, Mich., while returning from a Soldiers' reunion. Mr. Joss had been a student in the Heidelberg and Halle Universities in Germany, and was a man of unusually broad and thorough education. He and his wife had two sons: Frederick A.; and Harold, a soldier in Manila, though his home is Chicago. Mrs. Joss survived her husband until June 3, 1891, when she passed to her rest, at the age of fifty years, which was her husband's age at the time of his departure. She was a member of the Episcopal Church, while the Captain was a Lutheran.

John Joss, the grandfather of the Hon. Frederick A., was a soldier, came to this country from Germany, and locating at Constantine, Mich., lived retired. He was in receipt of a pension from the German Government. He had four children, and died at a very advanced age.

Robert Merrell, the maternal grandfather of Frederick A. Joss, was born in New York, and came of English stock. When he died he was still a young man. He had a family of two daughters. Considerable milling property was established and owned by him in the vicinity of Paw Paw, Mich., where he constructed a large dam. This was about 1850, and he became quite a prominent character in that part of the State, where he died.

Hon. Frederick A. Joss was reared in Centerville until he was thirteen years old, and was graduated from the local high school. His education was continued in the high school at Ann Arbor, and then in the University of Michigan, from which he was graduated in 1889. For about a year and a half he was employed by mining interests in the Province of Quebec, Canada, when he came to Frankfort, Ind., to study law in the office of the Hon. S. O. Bayless, now assistant general counsel of the Big Four System, with his office at Cincinnati. Mr. Joss was admitted to the Bar in 1891, and at once took up the practice of his profession at Frankfort, where he remained until June 12, 1892, when he came to Indianapolis to take a position in the office of Ovid B. Jameson, with whom he afterward formed a partnership, as noted in the opening paragraph of this article. The firm still continues, and does a very large business.

Mr. Joss was married Sept. 2, 1891, to Miss Mary Quarrier, a daughter of John R. and Lucy (Clark) Hubbard, of Wheeling, W. Va., the latter a daughter of a physician. To this union have come two children, Mary and Lucyanna. Mrs. Joss belongs to the First Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Joss to the Dutch Reformed Church of America. Mr. Joss is a 32d degree Mason, and belongs to Mystic Tie Lodge, F. & A. M., and also to Murat Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

In politics Mr. Joss is a Republican, and he was elected State Senator from Marion and Morgan counties in 1898, serving in the General Assembly of 1899 and 1901. While in the Senate he introduced the famous Joss Consolidation Railroad Bill, and was also the author of the Joss Primary Law, which is now in force in Marion and Vanderburg counties, and which is the initial step in this State toward primary reform. In the session of 1899 he was one of the original Beveridge men, and was his manager on the floor of the Caucus, when he became the nominee of the Republican party for the office of United States Senator. Mr. Joss is prominent in the councils of the younger Republicans of the State, who have wrested Indianapolis from the hands of the Democrats. At present he is city attorney of Indianapolis. His comfortable and attractive home is at No. 226 East Tenth street, which is the center of many warm and genial social and domestic relations and friendships. He has a fine summer home in Noble county. In Indianapolis Mr. Joss is a member of the following organizations: The Columbia Club, the Marion Club and the University Club; Das Deutsche Haus, and the Maennerchor.

FRANCIS WILLIAM BROWN, PH. D., Professor of Latin in Franklin College, at Franklin, Ind., is an educator whose ability and versatility are known in more than one State. Prof. Brown descends from old and honorable families of New England, who have taken prominent part in the political, educational and religious development of their communities. He was born Feb. 18, 1838, near Chardon, Geauga county, Ohio, son of Laban and Dameris (Barney) Brown, and was one of a family of nine children.

The Brown family were early residents of the State of Vermont, where William Brown, the paternal grandfather of Prof. Brown, lived a quiet, useful life, performed his duties to family, church and country, reared a large and respected family, and died at the age of sixty-five years. On the maternal side the ancestry also reaches to Vermont, in which State the family is numerous. It has been particularly noted for its liberality in the cause of education. Dr. Edward Barney, the maternal grandfather of Prof. Brown, was, no doubt, in his earlier years, a soldier in the Revolutionary war. His descendants were many. In 1835 his death occurred in Belleville, N. Y., at the age of eighty-six years, and there his burial took place. He was long a man of prominence there, and was one of the charter members of the Baptist Church.

Laban Brown, father of Prof. Brown, was born in Connecticut, moved to Ohio, and thence to Indiana in 1839, locating in Jackson county, where he purchased a farm. About 1870 he sold this property and removed to Seymour, Ind., where he died on his eighty-seventh birthday, Nov. 23, 1882. During the war of 1812 he had been one of the minute men, and through life was to be found ready when an emergency of any kind occurred, living up to the highest ideal of Christian citizenship. His wife died in January, 1871, aged sixty-nine years, a woman of estimable character, displaying through life the homely virtues of devotion to family, love of home and exercise of neighborly kindness. Both were consistent members of the Baptist Church. Their surviving children are: Sophronia, widow of John Gibson, of Seymour, Ind.; John M., of Seymour; and Prof. Francis William.

The boyhood days of Prof. Brown were spent in Jackson county, Ind., on the farm, and he acquired his primary education in the old log school-house near Seymour. Later he became an ambitious student in Elutherian College, in Jefferson county, subsequently studying under private tutors, continuing during much of his college course. His entrance to Franklin College followed in 1858, and he would have been a member of the graduating class of 1864, had not financial troubles closed the school at this time. Later, upon its reorganization, he returned, and acquired the degree of A. M., and in 1887, the college conferred upon him the degree of Ph. D. From 1867 until 1871 he was employed as a professor in this college, the duties of which position, after his long period of close mental application, proved, however, too exhausting. Nervous prostration followed, and he was obliged to seek an entirely different environment.

Prof. Brown then embarked in the mercantile business in which he continued for some twelve years. During a visit to the South, he was prevailed upon to enter again the educational field, and he took charge of the Covington Institute, at Springfield, Ky., going thence to Ewing Institute at Perryville, Ky. The following year was spent as president of the Bethel Institute, at Bath, Ky., where he received a telegram announcing the honor conferred upon him, by an election to the chair of Latin, in Franklin College. His return to the college was in 1887, since which time he has carried on his educational work here. His ability as an instructor is well-known, and he is one of the foremost men in the faculty of a college which has a national reputation. Since 1893 Prof. Brown has been a member of the American Philological Association.

On Oct. 27, 1863, Prof. Brown was united in marriage with Sarah J. McCoy, daughter of Spencer Collins McCoy, and two daughters were born to this union, namely: Ida, who died in infancy; and Mrs. Minnie Bruner, who has one daughter, Lena. Mrs. Bruner is a lady of education and cultivated tastes, and has charge of the music department in Franklin College. Both Prof. Brown and wife are members of the Baptist Church. In politics the Professor affiliates with the Republican party.

The parents of Mrs. Brown were early settlers in Clark county, Ind., and were active supporters of the Baptist Church and liberal in gifts to Franklin College. Mr. McCoy was a farmer of large means and a most estimable man and valuable citizen. His family consisted of six sons and two daughters. Miss Eliza McCoy, an aunt of Mrs. Brown, was for many years a missionary among the Indians. She was a woman of wealth, who, at her death, left her fortune of $60,000 to be divided equally between the Louisville Baptist Theological Seminary, and the Foreign Mission Board of the Baptist Church.

ALLEN MILLER FLETCHER, for a number of years one of the most prominent figures in business life in Indianapolis, bears a name which has been a power in financial circles in the city for almost seventy years. The Fletcher National Bank is the successor of the private bank of the same name, so that the institution has flourished from its foundation, in 1839.

Mr. Fletcher was born Sept. 25, 1853, in Indianapolis, where his father, Stoughton A. Fletcher, Sr., had settled in young manhood. His grandparents, Jesse and Lucy (Keyes) Fletcher, were both born in Westford, Mass., and were pioneers of Ludlow, Vt., where they settled in 1783. Jesse Fletcher was a farmer by occupation, and he was active in the public affairs of his locality, which he represented in the State Legislature. Stoughton A. Fletcher, Sr., was born at Ludlow in 1808, and left his native place when a young man of about twenty-two, coming West to Indianapolis, where he passed the remainder of his life. He made a great success as a business man, acquiring a substantial fortune, and he was the founder of the Fletcher Bank in 1839. Mr. Fletcher married Julia Bullard, a native of Massachusetts.

Allen Miller Fletcher was educated at the Jacob Abbott School, in Maine, at the Swedemborgian School, Waltham, Mass., and at Williston Seminary, Easthampton, Mass. He also traveled extensively before returning to Indianapolis to engage in the serious work of life. In 1875 he was elected vice-president of the Indianapolis Gas Company, and in 1878 president, and served as such until 1890, when he sold out his interest in that concern.

In 1893 he became identified with the Fletcher Bank, at that time a private concern, which he changed to its present standing, as a national bank, just before severing his connection therewith. Mr. Fletcher went to New York in 1899, but spent most of his time in foreign travel until the fall of 1900, when he established a private bank in New York City at No. 128 Wall street, opposite old Trinity church. Later he was located at No. 7 Wall street, where he remained in business until his retirement, in 1905. At that time he settled upon the old Fletcher farm, the home of his ancestors, near Proctorsville, Vt., where he has a handsome residence situated between Proctorsville and Ludlow. Mr. Fletcher has taken the keenest interest in the public affairs of that locality since he established his home there, and has given his services in the Vermont Legislature for three terms. He presented the Memorial Library at Ludlow to that town in honor of his father's memory, and various improvements in the vicinity testify to his interest in its welfare and his public-spirited efforts to enhance the natural beauty of the region.

On April 26, 1876, Mr. Fletcher married Miss Mary E. Bence, of Indianapolis, daughter of Dr. Robert F. and Caroline (Coburn) Bence, the latter a daughter of Henry P. Coburn, one of the most noted of the early residents of Indianapolis. He is mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Mrs. Fletcher's father was born in Brunerstown, or Jeffersontown, Ky., son of George and Elizabeth Hughes (McKeown) Bence, the latter the only child of Robert McKeown, of Brunerstown, and his wife Mary (Mayfield), of Carolina. Robert McKeown's brother John was the grandfather of Mr. Volney T. Malott, a prominent citizen of Indianapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher have had three children, Mary C., Fannie B. and Allen Miller, Jr. The family attend the M. E. Church, although Mrs. Fletcher is a Presbyterian, belonging to the Second Church in Indianapolis. Mr. Fletcher is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

HENRY COBURN, president of the Henry Coburn Warehouse & Storage Company, of Indianapolis, and previously the head of the Henry Coburn Lumber Company, of this city, is a man whose business standing has been irreproachable throughout an extended and active career. He bears a name which has been a synonym for the highest ideals of citizenship in Indianapolis from its early days, and he himself is one of the representative, progressive business men. For over forty years from 1859 to 1903, he was engaged in the lumber business, and he has since been established in his present business on the site of his old lumber yard.

Mr. Coburn was born in Indianapolis Sept. 17, 1834, son of Henry P. and Sarah (Malott) Coburn, and was educated at the Marion County Seminary. In 1859 he engaged in the lumber business in which he was successful from the start. On May 8, 1862, he was married to Miss Mary Jones, who was born in Indianapolis, daughter of William H. and Jane (Simcox) Jones. They were born in the vicinity of Chillicothe, Ohio. Mr. Jones came to Indianapolis in 1824 with his parents, and not long after was left an orphan, his father dying in 1827. He learned the trade of carriage maker, at which he was engaged for several years, when he formed a partnership with his son-in-law, Henry Coburn, in the lumber business. They continued together until the death of Mr. Jones, in 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Jones were members of the First Baptist Church. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. He and his wife had three daughters: Anna, the wife of Fred B. Brownell, late of St. Louis, a manufacturer of street cars; Fannie J., who married James S. Cruse, a real estate dealer who has his office in the Lemcke building, Indianapolis; and Mary, Mrs. Coburn.

Mr. Coburn withdrew from the lumber business in 1903, and having the right of way and track, he conceived the idea of building his present large storage house, the only one of the city containing a railroad in which a train of cars can enter, unload and load merchandise, such as agricultural implements, etc. Mr. Coburn's enterprise has been directed chiefly to business ends, and outside of business he has been quite prominent among the best social organizations of the city, belonging to the Columbia and Commercial Clubs. He is also a member of the Board of Trade. Mrs. Coburn is equally prominent in club life and has been president of the Women's Club. Mr. and Mrs. Coburn attend the Second Presbyterian Church. Of their family of five children, (1) Mary is the wife of W. B. Allen, a real estate and fire insurance man of Indianapolis, representing the Home Fire Insurance Company. (2) William H., a lumber and coal merchant of Indianapolis, a graduate of Yale, married Miss Helen Erwin, daughter of Daniel P. Erwin, deceased, a wholesale dry goods merchant of Indianapolis. (3) Augustus, who owns the Michigan Lumber Company, is a graduate of Yale; he married Annie Peck, daughter of B. B. Peck, deceased, State manager at Indianapolis of The Mutual Life Insurance Company of Kentucky. (4) Henry P., secretary and treasurer of the Coburn Warehouse & Storage Company, graduated from Yale; he married Louise Erwin, daughter of Daniel P. Erwin, deceased. (5) Myla L. is the wife of Frank F. Powell, cashier of the Coburn Warehouse & Storage Company; he was born and raised in Cincinnati, son of a hardware merchant of that city, and is a graduate of Princeton.

SIMON YANDES died on the 5th day of October, 1903, in the city of Indianapolis, at the ripe age of eighty-seven. He was born in Fayette county, Pa., Jan. 5, 1816. His father, Daniel Yandes, was of German origin, and his mother, Anna Wilson, was of Scotch-Irish descent, a Presbyterian of the strictest sect. His father and mother moved from Pennsylvania to Indianapolis on the 20th day of March, 1821. He was born in the birth year of the State of Indiana, and his parents located in the village of Indianapolis the year in which the town was laid out. Indianapolis continued to be the place of his residence until his death.

The opportunities for a thorough primary education in the little town of Indianapolis, when he was a boy, were not of the best; yet he availed himself of the best possible. His preliminary training was obtained in a private school kept by Mr. Ebenezer Sharpe. Later he attended the Indiana State University for one year. Subsequently he read law for a short while, and in 1838 went to the Harvard Law School, and obtained his degree in 1839. Judge Story and Simon Greenleaf were then the instructors. There was a notable list of young men who were his fellow students in the Law School. William M. Evarts, E. Rockwood Hoar, Charles Devens, William W. Story, Charles T. Russell, Nathaniel Holmes, John R. Shepley (of St. Louis), George F. Shepley, James Russell Lowell, Richard Henry Dana, Marcus Morton, Rufus King and George V. Lothrop were among the number. And we have the testimony of James Russell Lowell that Simon Yandes made the distinct impression of being one of the best men in his class; and Judge Story predicted for him a future as a lawyer, took much interest in him, and corresponded with the young man several years after he left the Law School. The predictions of Mr. Yandes' friends and fellow students were justified by his subsequent career at the Bar of Indianapolis. On his return to Indianapolis he was invited into the firm of Fletcher and Butler, then the leading law firm in the State of Indiana; this was in 1839. He remained as an associate of these two distinguished lawyers for four years, when Mr. Fletcher retired. Subsequently Mr. Yandes practiced law alone for four years, and then Oliver H. Smith and Mr. Yandes formed a partnership, which took the lead in the State, and maintained it for four years. Mr. Smith then retired, and Mr. Yandes associated himself with Cyrus C. Hines, the latter becoming subsequently the associate of Gen. Benjamin Harrison for years in the practice.

S. Yander

In 1858 Mr. Yandes was candidate for the Supreme Bench, but was defeated at the polls. Just before the war he retired, having accumulated what was then deemed a fortune. Subsequently he devoted his attention to his business affairs. As a lawyer, his practice was extensive and varied in all of the courts, Federal and State, and when he retired from the practice he was regarded by the Bar as one of the most accomplished and able lawyers within the State of Indiana.

One who knew him well has stated that "he was precise, but not technical; logical, but not coldly analytical; well read in the law, but not embarrassed by precedents. His moral integrity was a granite rock, and his intellectual poise was akin to it. He did not have that large imaginative power that is needed for the making of an orator, but his full information, happy humor and power of accurate statement made him a strong speaker. As a counselor he was at his best. His fair-mindedness, his wide foresight, and his strong mental grasp, qualified him to see all sides of the question, and to advise a course which always proved to be the right one. * * * Intellectuality was the dominant characteristic of his mind. His moral fibre was without a flaw or twist. His mold was the mold of Abraham Lincoln. Under an exterior of reserve, he kept an equable and generous nature and courageous spirit."

Upon his retirement from the practice Mr. Yandes, by wise economy and judicious investments, accumulated money very rapidly. In this he had a definite purpose to accomplish; it was to accumulate a sufficient sum with which effective work could be accomplished in educational and religious matters. He avoided, therefore, frittering away his accumulations in little matters. Some years ago he was asked by an acquaintance for a contribution of a small sum to a cause that one would have thought appealed to him. This he refused, saying that the man who was diffuse could not concentrate; if he chose to aid by bits everything that appealed to him, he could never reach the position where he could do a thing greatly, and one or the other of these all men should do. In other words, there could be no diffusion and identification in small degrees with everything, and concentration for the purpose of larger effort. He chose the latter as his course.

Before he arrived at the age of seventy years, Mr. Yandes stated a number of times to the writer of this little sketch that three-score years and ten measured the compass of the average man's capacity, and that when he arrived at that age he proposed, as he put it, to quit business, and wind up his affairs. He never married. And when he reached seventy years, he began to administer upon his estate. In this he acted with great care, caution and critical examination. He looked long and carefully to see where he could put his accumulated wealth to the best advantage, regarding himself in the light of a trustee of his holdings; modestly, quietly, and even secretly, he began to make his gifts, and for fifteen years only those closest to him had any knowledge of his large benefactions. In the latter part of the spring of 1902 some of the facts concerning his gifts commenced to leak out. Curiously inaccurate and even untruthful statements were published in the newspapers—caricatures of the man and of his doings. One of the results was that hundreds of begging letters came to him from people of whom he had never heard, and for objects of which he knew nothing. It vexed him much, and he was advised to put an end to this by a published statement of his donations, and let the public know that he had practically given away his fortune. He objected, on the ground that these were private and confidential matters. The pressure, however, became too great, and he dictated a short statement concerning his benefactions, in the following words:

"When I got to be seventy years old, I thought I ought to be settling up my estate, and in the course of a few years thereafter I gave to Wabash College $150,000. Later, I gave a small sum to another college; and I have given away, from time to time, about $400,000, to church and charities. During the period from 1886, when I was seventy years old, to the present time, I have given to relatives at least $400,000. During this time I was accumulating what I could, and reducing my funds by gifts. And while I gave away $800,000, or thereabouts, I have not had $800,000 at any one time. Among these donations, I have given $60,000 to the Indiana Missionary Society; I have given, at least, $100,000 to the Foreign Missionary Societies—Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist. I have given $40,000 or $50,000 to Home Missionary Societies—Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist."

Commenting on this, at the time, the Boston Globe truthfully said: "Andrew Carnegie has given millions of dollars to found free public libraries, but he continues to receive sufficient dividends from steel stock to pay for a first-class passage to his castle in Scotland. He has millions left in his possession.

"John D. Rockefeller has contributed magnificently to educational and religious institutions, yet never has he reduced his principal or his income to a point where he would lose his power and prestige in the financial world.

"The Indianapolis lawyer, however, has, to all intents and purposes, stripped himself of an entire fortune, which he might to-day have counted in seven figures, and is content to live among his books, in a city block, on plain food, and clothed in raiment just fine enough to be respectable. * * * The Hoosier philanthropist practiced economy, as well as law, maintained his integrity, and has thereby been enabled to help the poor, educate aspiring boys and girls of parents who are strangers to him, spreading the gospel at home and abroad, and, without forgetting his own worthy relatives, making the world better and brighter."

Simon Yandes was of a profoundly religious nature. No man with his intellectual vigor, and the love of truth which marked him, could live long without inevitably being brought to investigate the great moral laws governing life; and few men studied more critically and carefully, than he did, these matters. The two subjects of his most careful and constant study—and he was a bachelor student—were theology and economics—the laws governing moral life and the laws of business. He accumulated on these topics an admirable library. Few theologians had his learning on theology. Not many of the professors teaching the science of economics had his attainments on the latter subject.

He was much attracted by the life and writings of Dr. Samuel Johnson, and he made an exhaustive collection of Johnsoniana. It was Johnson's profoundly religious nature and powerful defense of the Christian religion, in an age of skepticism, that won the admiration of Mr. Yandes.

Simon Yandes was a strong man; a strong man intellectually, a strong man morally; successful in all he undertook; at the Bar he arose rapidly to the first place; in business, in an inland town, he accumulated a large fortune; and as a philanthropist acted so wisely and judiciously as to merit the approval of all interested in the welfare of humanity.

There was one quality in his nature of which mention should be made—one that was known only to a few. Reasoning from a knowledge of human nature, we would have a right to say that a man of his intellectual and moral character must have had strong affections; he did; and these ran quietly, but beautifully, in a channel almost out of sight. His dominant affection was for his mother. The writer remembers hearing, some years ago, a woman, now dead, who knew him as a boy, say of Simon Yandes that his relationship as a boy and young man to his mother, his affection for her, his respect for her, the beautiful understanding that seemed to exist between them, made him an ideal son. More than once, when sitting in his room, has the writer's eye been caught by a picture, framed, and hung where it could be seen from any point of the room—the picture of a woman, old and wrinkled, with a wise and gentle face—strong, clear, intellectual eyes—this was the picture of Mr. Yandes' mother. The writer has heard him say, with a strange sort of pathos, that this was a beautiful picture; that his mother was one of the strongest in character and intellect of all the persons he had known; and he added once, half jocularly, that if he, by Nature, possessed any particular merit of intellect or character, he owed it largely to her. He admired his younger brother, George, and spoke of him often as a father would of a son. He was devoted to his near kin, and provided for them liberally; yet, it was to his mother that he gave his tenderest affection; he honored her, when living, and he cherished her memory, when dead, with an affection that was beautiful. We all know what a mother's love is. Simon Yandes was a living example of the absorbing power of a son's love for his mother. From boyhood to old age, to the last hour of his life, this was the one peculiarly tender sentiment of his soul. When the shadows of death were fast approaching, when the darkness was beginning to shut out the light, in a lucid interval, the thought of his mother came to him, and found utterance from lips that were about to be closed forever.

GEORGE WHITE SLOAN, M. D., PHAR. D., late president of the Sloan Drug Company, Inc., at No. 22 W. Washington street, Indianapolis, Ind., was a distinguished citizen and ex-soldier. He was born in Harrisburg, Pa., June 28, 1835, son of John and Mary (White) Sloan, natives of New York and Pennsylvania.

John Sloan, the father, was a cabinet-maker, and came to Indianapolis in 1837, where he followed his trade until his death in 1874, aged sixty-two years. His wife, Mary (White), died in 1847. They were both earnest and consistent members of the Presbyterian Church. They were the parents of six children—three sons and three daughters—of whom two are still living: Mary R., widow of William Clark of Philadelphia; and Sarah M., of the same city.

Robert Sloan, the grandfather of George W., was a native of Pennsylvania of Scotch-Irish descent, and died in Pennsylvania. He was also a cabinet-maker, and had three sons and three daughters. The maternal grandfather of George W. was George White, a native of Pennsylvania of English descent. In religion he was a Quaker. By trade he was a machinist and a builder of fire engines. He died in middle life, the father of two sons and two daughters.

Dr. George W. Sloan was reared in Indianapolis and attended the public schools. When thirteen years of age he began clerking in a drug store, later taking the course in Pharmacy at the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy. In 1880 Dr. Sloan received the honorary degree of Doctor of Medicine from the Medical College of Indiana, at Indianapolis. In 1891 he received the degree of Doctor of Pharmacy from Purdue University.

On April 3, 1866, Dr. Sloan married Miss Caroline Bacon, youngest child of Hiram and Mary Alice (Blair) Bacon, prominent pioneers of Indiana. They have three children: (1) George B., who was a partner in the firm of the Sloan Drug Company, and later the representative of Eli Lilly & Co., was married, June 28, 1906, to Miss Alice M. Spalding, daughter of George A. and Sarah C. Spalding, of New Albany, Indiana. On June 10, 1907, a son was born to them, George Spalding Sloan. (2) Frank T. is the Insurance Inspector for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and also for the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, of New York City. (3) Mary Alice is living at home with her mother.

Dr. Sloan enlisted for service during the Civil War, in Company B, 132nd Ind. V. I., for four months, and was made first lieutenant at the organization of the company. The captain of the company was taken sick, and Dr. Sloan was made acting captain in his absence. After the war he returned to the drug business in Indianapolis, and became a partner in the firm of Browning & Sloan, druggists. That firm failed in 1886, and in 1887, the Doctor started a drug business on his own account, which he conducted in his own name until March, 1897, when the Sloan Drug Company was organized. It was incorporated with the Doctor as president, his wife as vice-president, and his son, George, as secretary and treasurer. After the death of Dr. Sloan the company went out of existence, and the business with which he had been actively identified for more than fifty-five years was sold. In politics Dr. Sloan was a staunch Republican. He was actively connected with the Indianapolis Board of Trade from the time of its organization, was long a member of its board of governors, and for one year was its president. He was a member of the Marion County Medical Society, and of the State Medical Society, and a member of the Commercial Club. He filled the position of president of the American Pharmaceutical Association, which includes both Canada and Mexico, as well as the United States. He was a member of the Indiana Board of Pharmacy, as president, and was its secretary at the time of his death; a member of the board of School Commissioners, and president thereof.

Dr. Sloan and his wife became identified with Christ Church (Episcopal), where he was vestryman for thirty years. He was an active member of the Masonic fraternity in the following lodges: Mystic Tie Lodge, No. 398, F. & A. M. (treasurer); Keystone Chapter, No. 6, R. A. M.; Adoniram Grand Lodge of Perfection, Scottish Rite Masons; the Saraiah Council; Rose Croix Chapter, Indianapolis, Indiana Consistory; and was exalted to the thirty-third degree. He was always interested in the development of Indianapolis, which he had seen grow from a town of 2,500 to a city of 200,000 inhabitants.

In October, 1902, Dr. Sloan was stricken with apoplectic paralysis, and from that time was unable to attend to his business. He was bedfast most of the time from October until his death Feb. 15, 1903. There was a memorial service held in Christ Church in memory of Dr. Sloan, Nov. 15, 1903, nine months after his death. Many tributes were paid to his public services by those who had known him from boyhood. A beautiful memorial volume, a tribute to his valuable service on the board of trustees of the United States Pharmacopoeial Convention, was presented to his family some months after his death.

HIRAM BACON was born in Williamstown, Mass., in 1800, and attended Williams College, where he studied law. In 1820, on account of broken health, he gave up practicing law, and came West with a Government surveying party to Indianapolis. He entered and purchased a tract of land which is now known as Malott Park, then returned to Williamstown and in the autumn of 1821 married Mary Alice Blair. They came immediately to their new purchase to make a home, for at that time it was considered that the noblest thing the youth of the East could do was to become pioneers in the new country. When the young couple reached this region, there were only three log cabins where the beautiful city of Indianapolis now stands, and they were located on the banks of White River. The Miami and other Indian tribes were numerous when they first came to this part of the country, and Mrs. Bacon used to tell of some thrilling experiences with them. One day, ten Indian braves in their war paint fled into the cabin home, brandishing their tomahawks and demanding food of the fair little eastern woman, who was alone except for the baby in the cradle. (This cradle was, by the way, the first cradle made in Indianapolis, and was constructed by Caleb Scudder, or Squire as he was called). When these braves saw the baby, they took it and passed it from one to the other, offering to buy it from her. After eating all the food in the house they relented and left the baby.

Hiram Bacon and his wife were two of the first six persons to join together to form the nucleus of the First Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis. The first meetings were held in Caleb Scudder's cabinet shop. When it was decided to erect a church building, Hiram Bacon gave the lumber, cutting the trees on his farm, hauling them to the mill, and delivering the lumber on the ground, ready for the building, which was erected on the west side of Pennsylvania street, just south of Market street. Mr. Bacon was always Justice of the Peace in his region, and always kept in advance of his neighbors in all enterprises for the good of the community. After some years, it was thought by the Presbyterians that it was his duty to build a church on his place. He did so, and maintained it for many years, taking out to his home from time to time such men as Dr. Isaac Coe, John Gurley, William McClung, Henry Ward Beecher (the last named the greatest Presbyterian preacher of his time) and others to preach in the "Washington" church, as it was called for the township in which it was located. Dr. Isaac Coe was a great man, and a distinguished Presbyterian of early Indianapolis, whose daughter married James M. Ray, the great Sunday school superintendent. Mr. Bacon was a close associate of Dr. Coe, Mr. Ray, Mr. James Gurley, and helped spread Presbyterianism throughout this section by his practical personal aid, donating material for the first three churches in Indianapolis, in addition to "Washington" church erected on his land.

Mr. and Mrs. Bacon had ten children—seven daughters and three sons—whom they reared and educated with unusual advantages for that time. They lived together for nearly fifty years on the farm where they first settled until Mrs. Bacon's death in 1865. Mr. Bacon lived until 1880. Their children were: (1) Harriet married Upton J. Hammond, son of Rezin Hammond, the first M. E. circuit rider of this district. (2) Electa married Dr. William P. Thornton, of Logansport, afterwards of Cincinnati, founder of a medical college, an eminent man, who left $150,000 to Wabash College. (3) Sarah Maria. (4) Hellen married Charles A. Howland, son of Powell Howland, a pioneer of Senate township. (5) George, a farmer, married Harriet Steers. (6) Hiram, Jr., a farmer and miller, married Priscilla Given. (7) Mary Alice, married Benjamin F. Tuttle, a wholesale grocer of Indianapolis. (8) William, a farmer, married Sallie James. (9) Caroline married Dr. George W. Sloan. (10) One died in infancy.

HON. MARCELLUS A. CHIPMAN, of Anderson, comes from Revolutionary ancestry. His great-grandfather, Darius Chipman, as well as the latter's brothers, Nathaniel and Daniel, participated in several battles, including the battle of Lexington and the capture of Fort Ticonderoga, and they also took part in a night attack upon a British battle ship on Lake Champlain. Nathaniel was with Washington at Valley Forge. Daniel, the eldest brother, lived at Rutland, Vt., at one time, and was a member of the Legislature of that State for twenty years.

Horace Darius Chipman, son of Darius, was born in Vermont, and he died in Cincinnati at the age of about eighty-five years. He was in a general commission business in that city.

Hon. De Witt C. Chipman, son of Horace D., at present residing in Anderson at the age of eighty-three, and father of Judge Chipman, is one of the best known men in the State, and is a pioneer lawyer. He was born in Middlebury, Wyoming county, N. Y., Sept. 21, 1824. His wife was Miss Cassandra Clark, born at Noblesville, Ind., daughter of Dr. Haymond W. Clark, a native of Virginia.

Judge Marcellus A. Chipman, son of the Hon. De Witt C., was born in Noblesville, Ind., Sept. 27, 1852. His early life was passed in his native town, where he attended school. He came to Anderson with his parents in 1870, and began the study of law with his father. In the fall of 1872, he entered the law department of Indiana University, at Bloomington, and was graduated in 1873, with the degree of LL. B. On returning from College he commenced the practice of his profession with his father, and after the latter removed to Richmond in 1875, he practiced alone until 1876. He then entered into partnership with H. C. Ryan, and the firm of Chipman & Ryan existed until 1879, when it was dissolved. Later with Hon. James W. Sansberry a partnership was formed which continued until 1886, when Mr. Sansberry retired to become president of what is now the National Exchange Bank. Judge Chipman again engaged in practice alone and continued until Feb. 22, 1889, when he was appointed Judge of the Fiftieth Judicial Circuit by Gov. Alvin P. Hovey, to fill a vacancy created by an Act of the Legislature in constituting Madison county a Judicial Circuit. He held this position until Nov. 22, 1890, when his successor by election qualified. He was nominated by the Republicans for re-election, but although the Democrats controlled the county by five hundred and ten majority, Judge Chipman was defeated by only three hundred and forty votes. On Dec. 1, 1890, he entered into partnership with F. A. Walker, and the partnership continued until June 1, 1893. In 1893 the firm of Chipman, Keltner & Hendee was formed, making altogether the most formidable legal combination in this part of the State. Mr. Keltner was formerly of the firm of Robinson, Lovett & Keltner, and Mr. Hendee was for many years the partner of Charles L. Henry.

At the time of his appointment as Judge, Mr. Chipman was secretary of the board of trustees, also secretary of the Republican County Central Committee. He is a member of the State Bar Association, and American Bar Association. Judge Chipman as chairman of the Indiana commission, appointed by Governor Durbin, for the Codification of the Laws of Indiana, rendered most valuable service to the State. The most important of the many bills proposed was the one on Municipal Corporations, which was adopted by the Legislature to give uniform government to all cities of the State. The Commission prepared a bill on Eminent Domain, which passed the Legislature; revised the Criminal Code; a bill on Highways; one on Drainage, and one regarding Private Corporations; and all passed the Legislature except the last. It is doubtful if any other State Codification committee ever passed successfully so many bills.

Judge Chipman has been affiliated with the I. O. O. F. since 1875, being at one time grand master; at the present time he is a member of the board of trustees for the erection of the magnificent new fourteen-story stone office building, at the corner of Pennsylvania and Washington streets, in Indianapolis, the two upper stories to be occupied by the Grand Lodge. The building is about completed. The Judge is also a member of the K. of P., and the Elks.

On June 22, 1875, Judge Chipman was married at Paoli, Orange county, Ind., to Miss Margaret B. Buskirk, daughter of John B. Buskirk, a prominent merchant of that place. They are the parents of two living children, Katherine Carpenter and Mary C. Lennox.

PROF. CYRUS WILBURN HODGIN, who holds the chair of Professor of History in Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., is one who, by reason of natural inclination, scholarly attainments and years of practical experience has become one of Indiana's leading educators, and he belongs to a family which can trace its honorable ancestry back to the seventeenth century.

The Hodgkin family is of old English stock and nomenclature, the name having been derived from the noun "hodge," meaning a farmer, as the early representatives were mainly agriculturists. Probably from this branch came the similar names: Hodgson, Hodson, Hodgen, Hodgins and Hotchkiss. The American founder of the family was Robert Hodgson, a Quaker preacher, who with several zealous Friends and missionaries came to New Amsterdam in 1657. As recalled they were: William Robinson, Christopher Holder and Robert Hodgson, all of whom had crossed the ocean in Capt. Robert Fowler's vessel, "The Woodhouse," in 1657. Concerning their visit, William Robinson wrote George Fox from the Boston jail, where he was hanged in the next year on account of religious persecution. It is probable that Robert Hodgson was a native of Skepton, Yorkshire, England, and that he had suffered persecution in his native land as he subsequently did in New Amsterdam, being one of the sixty missionaries sent out by George Fox, the founder of the Quaker faith. Capt. Robert Fowler had also been a Quaker preacher in England. After landing at New Amsterdam Robert Hodgson began preaching his doctrines in the streets, which did not meet with the approval of the Manhattan governor, old Peter Stuyvesant, and the missionary was confined in a cold, damp and filthy cell. It is told, however, of the impression which he had made on the people who had listened to him, and how they gathered around his cell window and listened as the missionary preached within. Before he was released he was provided for by devoted followers who brought him food. Robert Hodgson went to Long Island after his release, and later became connected with the New Jersey settlements of Friends under the general domination of William Penn.

The descendants of Robert Hodgson settled in Pennsylvania. He had many children, but this record is concerned with George, who went to Center, Guilford county, N. C., and became a member of New Garden Meeting, about 1750. He had four sons and two daughters: George, Robert, John and Joseph, Sarah and Susannah. George Hodgson and wife both died in Guilford county, N. C., the latter in 1764. Their son, Joseph, was born in Guilford county, and is next in the present line of ancestry. In Center he was one of the influential members. His occupation was farming, and the two-story frame house in which he lived, and which was erected early in the 1800's, is still standing. He married Hannah Williams, and they were the parents of fifteen children, namely: John, William, Joshua, Joseph, Jonathan, Isaiah, Jacob, Rebecca, Nancy Ann, Lydia, Susannah, Sarah, Jemima, Solomon and Peggy. His will is dated, 20th day of 4th month, 1826, and was filed at Greensboro, North Carolina.

Joseph Hodgkin, son of Joseph, and the grandfather of Prof. Hodgkin, was born in Guilford county, N. C., and was reared on his father's farm. He married Ruth Dicks, born at Dicks's Mills, now Randleman, N. C., daughter of Peter Dicks. The latter was a Welsh Quaker, and was an early settler in Guilford county. Joseph Hodgkin became a successful farmer for his day. In 1834 he removed with his wife and several of his younger children to Randolph county, Ind., making the long journey in a covered wagon in regular pioneer style. After reaching his destination, he bought land in the woods which he cleared, and erected a log house similar to that of his neighbors, in which he lived to old age, dying in 1850, aged eighty years. His wife was a victim of cholera in 1849. He was a magistrate, and the record has come down to his descendants that he was a man of straightforward life and excellent judgment. His children were: James, Elizabeth, Elias, Asenath, Nathan, Benjamin, Tilnias and Rachel. After settling in Indiana he gave each of his children forty acres of land.

Tilnias Hodgkin, son of Joseph, and father of Professor Hodgkin, was born in 1817, at New Salem, Center Meeting, N. C. Although he had but limited school advantages, he became a man of high character, and was looked up to by his neighbors and friends. He was about seventeen years old when the family moved to Indiana, and he assisted in clearing the pioneer farm. He was married at Lynn, Randolph county, Ind., in the Lynn Meeting, to Rachel Hinshaw, born in Randolph county, N. C., in 1819, daughter of Jacob and Phoebe (Allen) Hinshaw. The Hinshaw children were: Nathan, Allen, Solomon, Elijah, Rachel, Hannah and Jacob. The widow Hinshaw's children cleared up her farm of eighty acres, on which she lived many years. She was later married to Jeremiah Cox, of Cox's Mills, Ind., with whom she lived to the age of eighty-five years, dying in 1868.

The father of Tilnias Hodgkin having given him a forty-acre farm in the woods, situated on Cabin Creek, two miles south of the village of Farmland, he built here a pioneer cabin of poles, with a stick and clay chimney, where he lived for two years, when he sold and bought another forty acres within one mile of Lynn, which property he completed clearing, residing upon it for six years, and when he disposed of it in 1850 he moved to Newport, now Fountain City, where he kept the toll-gate on the Richmond and Newport turnpike, residing at this place until 1855, when he removed to Richmond, and kept the toll-gate most of the time until 1884. For a time he was engaged in a mercantile business at Lynn, but subsequently traded it for a farm between Lynn and Winchester, where he lived for three years, and then resumed keeping the toll-gate. His death occurred at Richmond, Ind., Jan. 13, 1884, aged sixty-seven years. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and was a man of deep religious character. For a number of years he was an invalid, for five years being entirely bedridden, but he had an active mind, and was an excellent manager, having the judgment to choose the right people to serve him. He was greatly interested in seeing his children educated, and three of them reflected the greatest credit upon him in the educational line.

The children of Tilnias and Rachel (Hinshaw) Hodgkin were as follows: Cyrus W., born Feb. 12, 1842; Joseph N., born Jan. 27, 1844; Elias M., born Oct. 1, 1845; Eli Linden and Hannah Melvina, twins, born in 1847, died in 1849; Asenath Adeline, born in 1849, died in 1852; Phoebe Alice, born Aug. 11, 1853; James Orlando, born Aug. 27, 1856, died in 1864; Charles Elkanah, born Aug. 21, 1858; Emma Eldora, born March 24, 1860, died in 1864; and William Percival, born Jan. 10, 1863, died Jan. 10, 1904. Prof. Charles E. Hodgkin was educated in Hadley's Academy, the Indiana State Normal school, the University of Chicago, and the University of California, and is now Dean of the University of New Mexico, and principal of the Department of Education. Phoebe Alice Hodgkin was educated in the Hadley Academy, and the Indiana State Normal school, and was a teacher in the public schools of Henry county, Ind.; she is now (1908) in Pasadena, California.

Prof. Cyrus Wilburn Hodgkin spent his boyhood on the home farm and assisted in its clearing. His primitive education was secured in an old log schoolhouse standing near his father's home, but when he was fifteen years old he began to prepare himself for teaching and spent two years at Hiram Hadley's Academy at Richmond, Ind. Mr. Hadley was one of the well-known pioneer educators of Indiana, and an early student at Earlham, and is now Territorial Superintendent of Education in New Mexico. Mr. Hodgkin was then engaged with friends in a mercantile business for three years and after one more year of school attendance under Mr. Hadley became his assistant at Richmond. Later he taught the village school at Lynn, attending Mr. Hadley's Summer School at Richmond in 1864, and in the fall of that year entered the Illinois Normal University, near Bloomington, where he remained three years, working for his board at the home of Dr. Edwin C. Hewett. After graduating in 1867 he returned to Richmond, where he was principal of the Hadley Academy for one year, and principal of the Richmond high school for two years. His next engagement was as principal of a graded school in Dudley township, Henry county, Ind., the first township graded school in the State, where he remained for three years, and then became Professor of History in the Indiana State Normal School at Terre Haute, Ind., where he remained from 1872 to 1881. He was then superintendent of the city schools of Rushville for one year, and upon his return to Richmond, in association with other competent teachers, opened the Richmond Normal School, of which he remained principal for four years. In 1887 he became Professor of History in Earlham College, a position he still fills. In 1892-3 he was given a leave of absence and spent the year in Chicago, doing post-graduate work under direction of the famous Dr. Von Holst.

Prof. Hodgins was married Aug. 22, 1867, at Kankakee, Ill., to Emily Caroline Chandler, born April 12, 1838, daughter of Robert A. and Mary Ann (Dodd) Chandler, and granddaughter of Andrew and Ann Elizabeth Chandler.

Andrew Chandler was born in Passaic county, N. J., where he owned a farm and his old homestead was recently occupied by his descendants. His children were: Robert A., born Oct. 28, 1798; John, born Jan. 29, 1801, died at New Orleans of yellow fever; William B., born Oct. 2, 1805; Sarah Ann, born Feb. 6, 1809; Henry, born July 1, 1812, died May 2, 1883, the last survivor of the family; Peter, born Aug. 10, 1814; and David, born July 31, 1819.

Robert A. Chandler, father of Mrs. Hodgins, was born in Passaic, N. J., and was a well-informed and well-educated man, although he had few advantages. His early ambition had been to enter college, but as he was the eldest of the family he knew that his father was not able to gratify his wish, and when sixteen years of age he left home to take care of himself. He worked hard and devoted all his spare time to study, educating himself in Latin and English, and was also a fine mathematician. He subsequently read law, and after his marriage settled at Orange, N. J., and later lived one year at Newark. In 1833 they removed to Indiana, and settled in Williamsport, Warren county, where Mr. Chandler practiced law and subsequently became one of the most prominent lawyers in the State. From 1849 to 1850 he served in the State Legislature, and was one of the organizers of the Republican party in this section, later voting for Fremont and Lincoln. At the time of his death he owned 1400 acres of land in Kansas, in addition to a section in Illinois and many acres in Indiana. He was one of the early Masons in the State, and had advanced to the office of High Priest. His death occurred March 10, 1861, at Williamsport, Ind., when he was aged sixty-three years.

Mr. Chandler was married in New Jersey, Sept. 19, 1823, to Mary Ann Dodd, and their children were: Margaret Almira, born July 25, 1824, at Orange, N. J.; Lydia Ann, born April 7, 1827; David Dodd, born Oct. 24, 1828, died in infancy; Andrew Washington, born Dec. 26, 1829; Sarah Eliza, born Jan. 1, 1832; Maria Sophia, born March 29, 1834; William Augustus, born May 20, 1836; Emily Caroline, born April 12, 1838; Laura Catherine, born April 5, 1840; Lila Florence, born Oct. 3, 1844; George Dodd, born April 13, 1842, and Mary Ann, born Dec. 8, 1846. The above were the children born to the first wife, who died at Williamsport, Jan. 26, 1847. Mr. Chandler was married (second) May 29, 1849, to Deborah Fleetwood Bryant, born June 10, 1822, and died April 6, 1905. She was a daughter of James M. and Dorcas G. Bryant, and the children of this marriage were: Robert A., born May 24, 1852; Dorcas J., May 25, 1854; James Bryant, June 9, 1856; Henry Bryant, Sept. 10, 1860; and Ella Rose, in 1858.

Mary Ann Dodd, the first wife of Robert A. Chandler, was born May 5, 1806, at Orange, N. J., daughter of David and Lydia Ann (Ward) Dodd, the former of whom was a son of David and Sarah (Harrison) Dodd.

David Dodd, the first ancestor of this family in America probably came to this country in 1646, and died in the winter of 1664-5, and his wife died in 1667, both being buried at Bradford, Conn. Their children were: Mary, born in 1647, who married Aaron Blakeley; David, born in 1649; Ebenezer, who died in 1675; a daughter who died in infancy; Stephen, born in 1655, died at Guilford, Conn., in 1691, who married Mary Stephens; Samuel, born in 1657; and Ann, who married a Mr. Fowler.

David Dodd, Jr., had these children: Daniel, Stephen, John and Dorcas.

John Dodd, son of David, Jr., married a Miss Sampson, and their children were: John, David, Abigail, Mary, Phoebe and Elizabeth.

David Dodd, son of John, who was a farmer near Orange, N. J., was a Minute man in the Revolutionary war. He married Sarah Harrison, and they had these children: Polly, Zebina, Elizabeth, David J., Sarah, Abbie, Phoebe and Lydia.

David Dodd, Jr., son of David, followed farming on the old Dodd homestead. He married Lydia Ward, and their children were: John, Eliza, Mary, Chandler, Reuben, Jonah, Margaret and Almira.

Professor Hodgkin is a member of the Society of Friends, to which his wife also belonged, and he has been one of the clerks of Whitewater quarterly meeting. He is a recognized minister of the Gospel. In political opinion at one time he was a staunch Republican, but since 1884 he has been identified with the Prohibition party. He has always taken an active interest in public questions, especially when they have touched on peace or temperance. On many occasions he has delivered temperance addresses, and on numerous occasions he has made peace addresses before different yearly meetings and other assemblies. Professor Hodgkin is also known as an author, having contributed largely to the educational press of the day, notably a series of articles to the Indiana School Journal, and another series to the Minnesota Journal of Education. He has placed the following books upon the market, all of which have met with public approval: "Civil Government of Indiana," "Historical Sketch of Indiana," "Historical Sketch of Indiana," as supplement to Redway's "History of the United States," and in collaboration with Prof. Woodburn of the Indiana State University, "A Study of the American Commonwealth," being an edition of the speeches of Burke and Webster that have political reference to United States history. He also edited a revision of Page's "Theory and Practice of Teaching."

Professor Hodgkin has a pleasant home at Richmond, and takes part in the intellectual, religious and social life of the city. Mrs. Hodgkin was a Daughter of the American Revolution. She died Nov. 13, 1907, leaving one daughter, Laura Alice, born at Richmond, April 27, 1869.

LUCIUS LORENZO BALL, M. D., has been engaged in the general practice of medicine at Muncie, Delaware Co., Ind., since 1894. He is a busy man, his wide patronage in and around the town, and his duties as surgeon of the Ball Brothers Glass Manufacturing Company, fully absorbing his time. Dr. Ball is a native of Ohio, and comes of old Colonial stock well known in New England and Virginia, where there have been many illustrious representatives of the name.

Lucius Styles Ball, father of Dr. Lucius Lorenzo Ball, of Muncie, was born Jan. 6, 1814, at Ascot, Sherbrooke Co., Quebec, Lower Canada, and there he grew to manhood, receiving such schooling as was afforded in the days of his boyhood in a pioneer neighborhood. When twenty years old he left the home at Sherbrooke for the United States, first going to New York City, where he bought produce for his uncle, Silas Harvey. He then went to Florida, where he was promised a railroad position, but owing to a change of management he after a short time found himself without position or money. He concluded finally to learn the carpenter's trade, being handy with tools, and in this trade he became very proficient. He worked at it five years in Florida, and then visited his home in Greensburg, Trumbull Co., Ohio, whither his parents had removed from Canada, and he built a substantial frame house to make the old folks comfortable. Returning again to the South he was employed at his trade, becoming a master workman, at Natchez, New Orleans and other points. Returning once more to his home in Ohio, about 1845, he married Miss Maria P. Brigham, who was born Jan. 14, 1822, in Stanstead, Quebec, daughter of Benjamin and Lydia (Beebe) Brigham. She had been a very successful and popular teacher, having taught in several important schools. Mr. Ball purchased his father's farm and the young couple settled there, remaining two years. He then purchased a larger farm, which was known as the Dr. Bascom farm, and which was improved with a large two-story house, besides complete buildings for dairy purposes. Mr. Ball then began dairy farming, and besides his own dairy he engaged in the business extensively, buying all he could of neighboring farmers, and shipping in large quantities to New York City. In 1856-57, having rented his farm, he established a large and profitable produce business in Minneapolis, Minn., and planned to move his family to that State, but just when business seemed most prosperous came the panic of 1857, and the failure of his creditors caused him to return to his farm. Just about this time he invented and began the manufacture of the first horse rake on wheels in the United States. In 1860 he took two droves of breeding mares to be sold to stock breeders in Bourbon county, Ky., selling these on one year's time. He was also engaged with other parties from Ohio in developing oil lands in Bourbon county. The Civil war breaking out in 1861, his southern creditors informed him that they had repudiated all northern debts, and at the same time they served notice upon him to leave the State within three days. This entailed such severe financial losses that he then returned to his farm in Ohio. In 1863 he sold his farm and moved to Grand Island, Erie county, N. Y., where he lived for two years on the farm of his brother, the Rev. G. H. Ball. He next moved to Tonawanda, N. Y., and engaged in the oil business and in shipping hay. In 1867 he went to Canandaigua, N. Y., and went into the grocery business with a Mr. Bates, under the firm name of Ball & Bates, this partnership lasting three years when it was dissolved. Mr. Ball then purchased a small fruit farm, upon which his family lived, and while there he invented a patent egg carrier and also a paper barrel. He died Jan. 25, 1878, in Canandaigua. He was considered a man of rare good judgment and intelligence, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him. He left a widow and five sons and two daughters, the children all born in Greensburg, Ohio, as follows: Lucina Amelia, born Aug. 20, 1847 (died Jan. 14, 1901); Lucius Lorenzo, March 29, 1850; William Charles, Aug. 13, 1852; Edward Burk, Oct. 27, 1855; Frank Clayton, Oct. 27, 1857; Mary Frances, Aug. 7, 1860; George Alexander, Nov. 5, 1862. Several of the sons are members of the Ball Brothers Glass Manufacturing Company, of Muncie, Ind., Frank C., being president; Edward B., vice president; William C., secretary; and George A., treasurer of the Company.

Lucius Lorenzo Ball, a representative of the eighth generation of the family in America, was born on his father's farm in Trumbull county, Ohio, and attended the district school in the neighborhood, during the summer working on the home farm. He was seventeen years old when he removed with the family to Canandaigua, N. Y., where he studied at the old academy for about two years. In was an excellent institution, and many famous men of his generation and the one preceding there gained their literary training, the higher branches having been thoroughly taught. Lucius L. Ball later engaged with his brother, William C. Ball, in the manufacture of cigars, in which business he continued for about five years, also assisting his father in carrying on a farm for the raising of small fruit. In 1882 he went to Buffalo, where he and his brothers Edward B. and Frank C. carried on the manufacture of oil cans. About this time he entered upon what has proved to be his life work, the study of medicine. He took the regular course at Buffalo Medical College, receiving his degree in 1889, and the same year began practice in the Adrian (Pa.) Hospital, where he was house physician and assistant physician to the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg Iron & Coal Company. For three years he was physician and assistant physician to the Buffalo, Portland & Pittsburg Iron & Coal Company, and after that experience returned to Buffalo, where he practiced until his removal to Muncie in 1894. There he has built up a lucrative patronage, and is chief physician for the Muncie & Portland Traction Company, medical director of the Western Reserve Life Insurance Company (home office, Muncie, Ind.), which with his duties as surgeon to the Ball Brothers Glass Manufacturing Company keeps him thoroughly employed. The last named company has two thousand employees, and the nature of the business makes expert medical attendance necessary. Dr. Ball is a prominent member of his profession in Muncie, and indeed enjoys high standing throughout Delaware county. He has a valuable medical library and keeps well-abreast of the times and modern research through the leading professional journals. He is an active member of the Delaware County Medical Society, the State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In politics he is independent, his professional labors occupying so much of his time that he has not interested himself in public matters or office. In fraternal connection he is a 32d degree Mason.

On June 1, 1893, Dr. Ball was married, in Bay City, Mich., to Sarah Rogers, a native of New York State, and they have had one daughter, Helen, born in Muncie March 23, 1895.

THE BALL FAMILY. During the days of religious persecution in England many Balls came to America, and Dr. Lucius L. Ball is a descendant in the ninth generation from the common English ancestor of the New England and Virginia Balls, William Ball, of Wiltshire, England. This William Ball of Wiltshire, formerly of Northamptonshire, is looked upon as the progenitor of both the New England and Virginia Balls, as the coats of arms preserved in both branches are the same, differing only as to crests and mottoes. Arms have been granted to which the crest has never been added. Moreover, minor changes, say the authorities, were often made in the coats of arms to distinguish different branches of a family. In the present case, as the field and charges on the shield are the same, it is evident that both arms belonged to the same family, or the devices on the shield would not be similar. These arms are given by Burke, in General Armory, as those of Northamptonshire, granted in 1613, probably to the father of the William Ball (of Wiltshire) whose six sons came to America in 1635, and indicate that he was an esquire. The arms were displayed on the shield, as usual, and the crest surmounted the casque, or head piece. The six sons mentioned, Alling, John, Samuel, Richard, Francis and William, came to America in the ship "Planter" in 1635, the church of which most of them were members coming in a body. Alling Ball was the ancestor of the Ball Brothers of Muncie, and is said to be identical with the great-grandfather of General Washington, whose mother was Mary Ball.

There is other evidence pointing to this close relationship between the New England and Virginia families. In Col. William Stone's history of Saratoga county, N. Y., is found the statement (on page 379) that Rev. Eliphalet Ball, of Ballston, N. Y., claimed to be third cousin to General Washington, whose mother was Mary Ball, granddaughter of Col. William Ball, who was one of the six brothers from England. This claim is supported by the statement that when Washington visited Ballston in 1783 he was the guest of Rev. Eliphalet Ball and recognized the relationship. Washington spent a large portion of his time during the Revolution in New Jersey, and always recognized the descendants of the New England Balls as his cousins. There were many descendants of Edward Ball, of Connecticut, in New Jersey at the time, and more than thirty of them were connected with different branches of the American army. The fact that he recognized them as cousins is abundantly attested in their family records and traditions. After the war he wrote to Deacon David Ball, recommending a former officer in the army to his friendship, and addressed him as cousin.

The Ball coat of arms (the Northamptonshire arms) was brought to America by Alling Ball, and is preserved in the book plate of his son, Col. John Ball, the grandfather of Rev. Eliphalet Ball. Col. William Ball (brother of Alling), the founder of the Virginia line, brought the same arms to Virginia. The most remarkable similarity of names and general family resemblance may be only circumstantial evidence, but it is very strong. It is usually understood that General Washington inherited his tall and commanding figure from the Balls, who were large and strong men.

(I) Alling Ball, born in Wiltshire, England, landed at Boston from the ship "Planter" in 1635, and thence went to various forts. One of the leaders of the church company to which he and his brothers belonged was William Tuttle, who came in the same ship with his wife, Elizabeth, and three children. This family was intimate with the Balls, and they intermarried, and thus the date of the arrival of the Balls in America is authenticated from the carefully prepared history of the Tuttle family. The Tuttle and Alling Ball and wife remained in Boston until 1639, when they removed with their church to Connecticut, locating in New Haven, where they owned adjoining property, now owned by Yale College. Alling Ball had charge of the farm of Rev. John Davenport, in East Haven, from 1640 to 1650. No record has been discovered of the births of children there until that of his son John, which occurred in 1649. After leaving the Davenport farm Alling Ball settled in New Haven, where he died. The Branford and East Haven settlements were practically one, with one Independent (or Congregational) Church, under one pastor.

Alling Ball married, probably in London, Dorothy Fogal, and their children were: Edward, born about 1642; John, April 15, 1649, at East Haven; Eliphalet, born Feb. 11, 1651, at New Haven; Alling, born June 27, 1656, at New Haven, and Mary, who married George Pardee. There may have been others, of whom no record has been found.

(II) Edward Ball, the noted Puritan, was according to Rev. George H. Ball, D. D. (editor of "The Union Record," the official record of the Ball family, founder and president of Keuka College, Keuka Park, N. Y.), a son of Alling Ball, but though the fact is almost conclusively proved there is no written evidence. He was born at East Haven, Conn., about 1642-43-44, during the time his father had charge of Rev. John Davenport's farm, and married in Connecticut about 1664 Abigail Blatchley, of Connecticut. They became the parents of six children, namely: (1) Caleb was born probably about 1663, therefore in Connecticut, and the last trace of him as being alive is found in 1716, when he witnessed a deed. He owned the homestead at Newark, N. J., on May 1, 1704, returning it to his father. At the time of his death he was probably living with his sons, Caleb, Jr., and John, at Millbrook. The name of his wife, Sarah, appeared once only, on a deed dated Feb. 19, 1705-06. (From chart made Feb. 3, 1888, by Joseph Harrison Vance, Erie, Pa., from manuscript of John R. Burnet, of Northfield, N. J., deceased, and the authority on the early Ball families). (2) Abigail married Daniel Harrison, who died in December, 1738, aged seventy-seven years. (3) Joseph fell heir to his father's home lot, in Newark, N. J., which remained in the family until sold by his great-grandson, Joseph Hadden Ball, in 1849. He was twice married, first to Hannah Harrison, who died probably in 1711, and subsequently to Elizabeth (supposed to be daughter of Lydia (Ball) Peck); there were three children by the first union and four by the second. Joseph Ball died April 25, 1733, aged sixty years. (4) Lydia, who died Aug. 22, 1742, aged sixty-six years, was the wife of Joseph Peck, who died Jan. 9, 1746, aged seventy-one years, three months. Joseph Peck came from Connecticut. He was apprenticed to Mr. Alling or Allen, the first blacksmith in Newark, and lived on Washington street, Newark, on the northwest corner of Edward Ball's home lot. He was deacon of the First Presbyterian Church. (5) Moses, born about 1685, died April 20, 1747. He probably resided in Newark, N. J. He married Mary Tichenor, who was born in 1684-85, and died in December, 1747. They had no children, and numerous bequests were left to nephews, nieces, etc. (6) Thomas is mentioned further on.

Edward Ball, the father of this family, was in 1666 a member of the church at Branford, of which his father was one of the founders. Rev. Abraham Pierson, pastor of this church, led his congregation to emigrate to Newark, N. J., in 1666, naming the new settlement after Newark, in England, where he formerly was pastor. About thirty families had moved there from New Haven the year before. The East Haven and Branford churches were closely allied, and readily united in the scheme of planting a Puritan city in New Jersey. The historical facts are as follows: East Haven, Milford, and Branford constituted a special settlement of Puritans who insisted that none but church members should participate in governmental affairs. About 1666 the Colonies of Connecticut and New Haven were united by royal charter, which admitted non church members to the privileges of voting and holding office. Alarmed by this license to worldliness, and attracted by promises from the lord proprietors of the Province of New Jersey, Rev. Abraham Pierson led a company of his church members to emigrate. They appear to have consisted of members of the Congregational Church of Milford and Branford, styled "Friends from Milford and the neighboring plantations thereabout." "It was agreed upon mutually that the aforesaid persons from Milford, Guilford and Branford, together with their associates, being now accepted of, do make one township that through God's blessing, with one hand, they endeavor the carrying on of spiritual concerns, as also civil and town affairs, according to God, and a goodly government, these to be settled by them and their associates." These emigrants signed what they called "The Fundamental Agreement, to provide with all care and diligence for the maintenance of the purity of religion." They carefully restricted civil power to those who should be members of one or the other Congregational churches. (The Congregational Church which these emigrants founded afterward became Presbyterian, being now the First Presbyterian Church of Newark.) Edward Ball was one of the signers of the "Agreement," Oct. 20, 1666, and an active and influential member of the new colony, he himself removing to Newark in 1667. He was then about twenty-two or twenty-four years of age. During his life he held many important offices, and did most valuable service. In a few years he became high sheriff of Essex county, N. J., and in 1693 he is mentioned as holding several public positions, such as commissioner on delicate and important trusts, committeeman on boundaries, on settlement with the lord proprietors and Indians. The territory selected for the city of Newark was laid out in sections, and a lot of six acres was assigned to Edward Ball. A portion of that lot is still owned by his descendants bearing the name of Burnet. The residence is No. 1 Warren street, in the heart of the city, and the six acres assigned to Edward Ball lie between Broad and Washington streets, being now worth millions of dollars. The living descendants of Edward Ball probably number between two and three thousand. They are more numerous in New Jersey than elsewhere, but are found in large numbers in nearly every State in the Union. It is not known when Edward Ball and his wife died. The last record of him alive is in 1724, when he was eighty-one or eighty-two years of age.

(III) Thomas Ball, son of Edward, born in 1687-88, died Dec. 18, 1744. About 1710 he married Sarah Davis, who died Feb. 1, 1778, aged eighty-eight years. He was a blacksmith by trade, was constable of Newark in 1715, and removed—probably about 1718-20—to a tract of land between Hilton and Jefferson village, N. J., where he died, near the site of "Tuscan Hall," built by his son Ezekiel. Thomas Ball was the father of twelve children by one wife, his being the largest family of any of the children of Edward Ball. The record of this family is as follows: (1) Timothy, born Oct. 26, 1711, died Jan. 9, 1758. He was a farmer on the mountainside west of Maplewood station, near South Orange, N. J. In December, 1734, he married Esther Bruen, who was born Sept. 25, 1715, and died Oct. 10, 1803. (2) Aaron died Sept. 22, 1752, aged thirty-nine years. He married Hannah Camp, widow of Samuel Johnson, blacksmith, and resided near South Orange, N. J. Mrs. Ball married for her third husband Timothy Peck, and died Dec. 23, 1790, aged seventy-eight years. (3) Affie died in 1785, aged about seventy years. She married Simon Searing, who died in April, 1760, and they lived at Connecticut Farms, N. J. (4) Nathaniel died in 1780. He married Esther Osborn and lived at Connecticut Farms. He was a blacksmith by trade. (5) David, born in 1729, died April 19, 1789. He was a blacksmith, and resided at Springfield, N. J. He married (first) Phebe Brown, who died July 10, 1748, and his second wife was Joanna Watkins, who died Feb. 18, 1776. He was married (third) on Dec. 12, 1776. (6) Ezekiel, who died Dec. 19, 1804, aged eighty-three years, inherited the homestead, the site of "Tuscan Hall," at Hilton, N. J., which he built. He was a carpenter by trade. He married Mary Jones, of Sag Harbor, Long Island, N. J., who died March 25, 1810, aged eighty-four years. (7) Jonas, who died about 1787, aged about sixty-four years, at Headleytown, near Irvington, N. J., was a cooper by occupation. He married Hannah Bruen, who died in 1805. (8) Mary, born June 4, 1726, died in 1817. She was first married to John Bruen, a sailor, who was lost off Newfoundland Sept. 24, 1758, and by whom she had three children. Her second husband was Thomas Longworth, Esq., of Newark, N. J., and three children were also born to that union. (9) Rachel, born in 1728, died in 1750. She was the wife of Samuel Headley, who died Nov. 7, 1787, at the age of sixty-four years. (10) Thomas, born about 1731, died May 20, 1806. He was a lawyer by profession. He married Mary Crane, who died May 27, 1806, and they made their home in Jefferson village, near South Orange, N. J. (11) Amos, born about 1733, probably survived the Revolutionary war, but the time and place of his death are not known. (12) Moses is the next in the line we are tracing.

(IV) Moses Ball, born about 1735, died about 1775. His home was in Springfield, N. J. His children were: Jonathan, Samuel, and others whose names are not known.

(V) Jonathan Ball was born in New Jersey, about 1759 or 1761, and married Sarah Stiles. In the year 1799 he removed with several Springfield (New Jersey) neighbors, to the northern wilderness, locating at the present site of the town of Sherbrooke, Province of Quebec. There he bought a tract of land from the English government, and improved his property, his sons helping him to clear two farms from the wilderness. He became a prosperous and prominent man of his community. Sherbrooke, now a flourishing manufacturing place, is built on one of his farms. He erected the first lumber mill at that point. A street in Sherbrooke is named for some member of the Ball family. Jonathan Ball was the father of the following named children: William, David, Moses, Alexander and Lucindia, of whom William was the grandfather of Dr. Lucius L. Ball, of Muncie, Indiana.

(VI) William Ball was born (according to the records in the family Bible) Dec. 31, 1784, at Sherbrooke, Canada, growing up among surroundings which made it necessary for him to become self-reliant and independent. He remained in his native country until about 1835, when he migrated with all his family except one son (Lucius S., who had gone to Florida about a year before) to the United States, settling in Greensburg, Trumbull county, Ohio. He bought 150 acres in the timber, repeating his father's experience as a pioneer. Building a log cabin, he and his sons immediately began the improvement of the land, and when Lucius S. Ball returned from the South he joined the family and did his share of the work at home. He was a carpenter, and helped his father to erect a frame house. In about ten years William Ball sold this place and purchased a tract of 150 acres which had been partly improved, and upon which stood a frame house. Here he passed the remainder of his active days, the last few years of his long life being spent in the home of his son Lucius S. Ball, near Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Ball was a large man, standing six feet, was heavily built and very powerful, possessed an intelligent mind and held to sound principles. He was hard-working and industrious, and enjoyed the respect and esteem of all who knew him.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM R. MYERS, in his lifetime one of the most prominent members of the Madison county Bar, who also won distinction in lines outside of his profession, was born June 12, 1836, in Clinton county, Ohio, son of Samuel and Caroline (Cather) Myers.

The Myers family are of German Huguenot stock, the originators of this branch of the family coming through France to America and settling in North Carolina about 1768-9. Ralph Myers, grandfather of Captain W. R., was born March 6, 1785, son of Elijah Myers, and he lived and died in North Carolina. In religion he was a Quaker. He was twice married, his first wife being Prudence Baker, by whom he had these children: Nathan, who settled in Hamilton county, Ind., in 1836; Mary, who married Lin Jessop; and Samuel. He married (second) the Widow Elmon, who had by her first husband a daughter, Mahala, who married John Arnold. Ralph Myers was a substantial citizen and owned a considerable tract of land, and, although living in the South was not a slave owner. He located as a pioneer in Clinton county, Ohio, in early times and died there about 1820.

Samuel Myers, son of Ralph, was born Nov. 4, 1812, in Clinton county, Ohio, on his father's farm. He received a common pioneer education, but became a well-informed man, and took a great interest in educational matters. After his first marriage Samuel Myers lived one year in Clinton county, Ohio. He had early been left an orphan by the death of his father, and when a boy was bound out to a weaver, which trade he had learned and followed in conjunction with school teaching. He located in Indiana in 1836, arriving in Anderson, in October of that year. Here he bought 220 acres of timbered land, east of where the asylum now stands and partly within the present corporation of the town of Anderson. He built a log house, which is still standing, covered with weather boards, and proceeded to clear up his farm. In 1849 he built a pleasant residence, in which he resided until his death, at the age of eighty-two years, in February, 1895.

Samuel Myers was twice married. His first wife was Caroline Cather, born in Rockingham county, Va., daughter of Robert W. and Rebecca (Johnston) Cather, the latter of whom was a full cousin of Joseph E. Johnston. Mrs. Myers died in May, 1839, and he married (second) Elizabeth Cather, sister to his first wife, and she lived to be about seventy years of age, dying in 1894, in Anderson. To the first union two children were born: William R., and Jasper C., both of whom were officers in the Civil war. The children of the second union were: Mary, Caroline, George, Oliver, Frank, Kate and Jesse. Samuel Myers was in the 100-day service in the Civil war, and took part in the Morgan Raid. Originally he was an old-line Whig, but he became an Abolitionist and voted for James G. Birney, the "Liberty" candidate. He supported and voted for John C. Fremont, the first Republican candidate for President, and also cast his vote for Abraham Lincoln. Samuel Myers was an honored citizen and was highly respected among the pioneers. He held the position of township trustee and school director, and took an active interest in anything pertaining to the welfare of his county. He was noted, even among the pioneers, for his liberal hospitality, and the saying was true of him, that his "latch-string was always out." He engaged extensively in contracting, and many of the old Anderson buildings were built on his contracts. Fraternally he was an Odd Fellow, being one of the early members of the Anderson Lodge, and passed all the chairs, including that of Noble Grand. He was a man of broad views and was liberal in his religious beliefs. His son, Jasper C., graduated from West Point in 1862, and entered the ordinance department as 2nd lieutenant. He was promoted to 1st lieutenant and served through the war. He was on the staffs of Generals Butler and Schofield, and had been a class-mate of the latter.

William R. Myers was about three months old when brought to Indiana, in 1836, by his parents. He was thus reared among the pioneers of Anderson and attended the old log cabin schools. He was brought up on the home farm, and at the age of nineteen began teaching school, working on the farm during vacations. On June 7, 1858, he married in Anderson, Mary F. Mershon, born Oct. 20, 1839, in Pendleton, daughter of William H. and Mary J. (Bourne) Mershon. William H. Mershon was the son of Franklin Mershon, of New York State, and was a class-mate of William H. Seward at Princeton. He moved to Pendleton in 1827, where he was one of the county judges, and a man of influence in the early days. His children were: John D., William B., Mary F., Emma S., Sonora and Henry. Mr. Mershon died at the age of seventy-eight years, in 1876.

Captain Myers enlisted at Anderson, in April, 1861, in the three months service, but as the three months men were not accepted he again enlisted in October, 1861, as a private of Company G, 47th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. He served until honorably discharged at New Iberia, November, 1863, and re-enlisted in the same organization for three years, becoming a veteran. He was honorably discharged in November, 1865, and was mustered out of service at Indianapolis, Ind. Among the battles in which Captain Myers participated were the following: New Madrid, Mo., March, 1862; Island No. 10, April, 1862; Riddle's Post, April, 1862; Arkansas Post, 1863; Siege of Vicksburg from April until July 4, 1863; the Red River expedition, being in several skirmishes during this arduous campaign; the battle of Champion Hills, and many minor battles and skirmishes. With the exception of eight days when he was confined to the hospital on Porcupine Island, Yazoo Pass, he was with his regiment every day of his enlistment and never missed an engagement of any kind. The history of the 47th regiment is the history of Captain Myers. He was promoted to second lieutenant for meritorious conduct, June 18, 1862, to first lieutenant in June, 1863, and for gallant and efficient conduct to the rank of captain, in November, 1863, commanding his company in the Red river expedition.

After the war the gallant captain returned to his home, to find that his only child, Claude, the son of his first wife, had died while he was serving his country. The Captain and his wife thereupon adopted two nephews—Captain Percy Myers Kesler and Claude H. Kesler, whom they brought up as their own children. Mrs. Myers died Feb. 23, 1892, and the Captain was married (second) in September, 1894, to Miss Florence M. Stewart.

Captain Myers read law with Davis & Goodkuntz in Anderson, where he practiced successfully up to the time of his death, in April, 1907, being one of the leading members of the Madison county Bar. He served as school trustee until 1878, and was one of the early county surveyors, being elected to that office in 1858. He was elected to the National Congress in 1878, on the Democratic ticket, and served on a special committee investigating the pension department, which exposed the conduct of the department under Pension Commissioner Bentley. The Captain was Secretary of State in 1882, and was re-elected in 1884. In 1887 he bought the Anderson Democrat, a weekly paper, which he started to edit in 1888. The same year he received the nomination for Lieutenant Governor, but was defeated. In 1892 he was again nominated on the Democratic ticket for Secretary of State.

In April, 1891, Captain Myers was in a railroad wreck on the Big Four railroad, near the insane asylum, and was badly injured. He was confined in the St. Vincent Hospital for 103 days, was on crutches for nine months, and never fully recovered from the injuries. He was one of the early members of the I. O. O. F., of Anderson, having joined that lodge in 1857, and was made Grand Master of the State in 1877, and represented the State at the Sovereign Grand Lodge. He was also a Scottish Rite Mason, and was an honored member of the G. A. R. and Loyal Legion. He and his estimable wife were both devoted and consistent members of the First Presbyterian Church of Anderson, in which he was a member of the board of trustees. He was a man of unimpeachable honor and honesty, strong intellect and excellent business ability, and though of few words was very popular with all who knew him. He was a strong speaker, an able thinker, and a clear-headed counselor.

IGNATIUS BROWN (deceased) was born Aug. 11, 1831, in Indianapolis, and lived to become one of the honored and distinguished citizens of his native place, having been identified with the movements in the direction of education and development which made the years of his active manhood fruitful ones for this prosperous city. His ancestors came from Wales, about the year 1700, the founder of the family in America having been Evan Bruen (as the name was then spelled); succeeding generations came westward from the coast, Thomas Brown having been the founder and proprietor of Brownsville, Pa., at the site of the prehistoric fortification known as Redstone Old Fort; and at Brownsville, July 18, 1782, was born Hiram Brown, son of Thomas Brown.

Hiram Brown was a man of strength, mental and physical; not only was he deeply read in the law (his preceptor having been the great Thomas Corwin, of Ohio), but as an advocate he was easily the most powerful man before a jury in central Indiana, in a day when oratory meant much more than it does now; when few people read the few newspapers and men's minds were swayed only by the personal appeal. Hiram Brown married Judith, daughter of Rev. Thomas Smith, one of the earliest and foremost of the Methodist preachers of this country. Of this union, Ignatius Brown was born.

With this heritage of intellectuality, the education of Ignatius began with Kemper and Lange, in the famous old Marion County Seminary, which stood for years in what is now known as University Park. The son of a family of lawyers, the young Ignatius chose to follow the law, beginning as a student in his father's office. Later, he entered the Law Department of the State University, at Bloomington, being graduated therefrom in 1852. From college he came home to practice law with his father; after the death of the latter in 1853, Ignatius continued alone; after the year 1868, he limited his field to the law of real estate, and to the preparation of abstracts of title, acquiring an enduring reputation for the excellence of his work. In this special branch of the law he continued until his death, July 8, 1903.

In his youth, like most young lawyers, Mr. Brown went into politics with great enthusiasm. He aided in organizing the Republican party, and in his home county he introduced and carried through the county convention the first anti-slavery resolutions adopted in Indiana. He was President of the Young Men's Republican Club in the Fremont campaign. In later years, he was content to leave active political strife to younger men. Though never the holder of an elective office, he served for two years as Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, preparing the reports of that body for 1856 and 1857, the State Fair ground then being what is now known as Military Park.

In conjunction with Dr. R. L. Gatling (afterward widely known as the inventor of the Gatling gun) Mr. Brown organized the first Board of Trade of Indianapolis (not the present Board) preparing circulars and maps issued by the Board, setting forth the advantages of the town as a manufacturing and commercial center. At a subsequent period, in 1873, at the solicitation of a committee of the City Council, he prepared a large pamphlet with maps and statistics, showing the commanding position of Indianapolis for business purposes. This pamphlet was widely distributed by the City authorities and business men, and it aided in producing the "boom" of 1873-4-5.

It is, however, as the first and best historian of his own city that Ignatius Brown has earned his place in the memory of his fellow-citizens. In 1857, for the directory of that year, he prepared the first historical sketch of Indianapolis, with maps showing the extent of the town at successive periods of development. For the directory of 1868, the publishers asked a more extended article, and this Mr. Brown furnished, covering a hundred closely printed pages with a wonderfully compact statement of the history of this community from 1819 to 1867; so thoroughly did he do this work that every author who has since written upon this or any allied subject has gladly acknowledged his indebtedness to Ignatius Brown for the facts placed at his disposal. To his labors in this field Mr. Brown brought sterling honesty, accuracy, industry and that fine-fibred, evenly-balanced sense of justice without which real history cannot be written. Too much stress cannot be laid upon the fairness, the lack of bias, and the absolute accuracy of Mr. Brown's historical works. His was a fine mind, well cultivated. All his life a student, of quiet and retiring nature, he avoided society and gave himself to his books. It may safely be said of him that he had read more of the books in the city Public Library than any other of its patrons.

Such recreation as Mr. Brown permitted himself, he enjoyed along the wooded banks of river and creek, fishing, with rods of his own making, and flies of his own tying; fishing, yet with much more thought of the joys and beauties of Nature than of the number of fish he might bring home. And this was really typical of his life, that he did what he could, for its own sake, without regard to the result when measured by any sordid standard.

On May 5, 1857, Mr. Brown was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Joseph Marsee, a Methodist minister of the good old pioneer stock; she died Nov. 30, 1873. To them were born four children: Hiram Brown, Lyndsay M. Brown, Mrs. Francis A. Carvin and Mrs. Herbert M. Adkinson, all of whom are living in Indianapolis.

WHEELER. The connection of the Wheeler family with the development of Indiana is almost contemporaneous with its history as a State, for the first Wheeler to join the pioneers reached Hamilton county in 1828, only twelve years after Indiana's admission to the Union. The Wheelers were an old Colonial family, but at what exact point along the coast they settled is not definitely known. The earliest records are of two brothers, William and Thomas, who were taken to Virginia in childhood and there grew to manhood.

The ancestor of the Indiana branch of the Wheeler family was William, who was born April 27, 1768. When in their early days both brothers pushed on to Kentucky, where William settled in Nicholas county, while Thomas remained only a short time and then went on to Ohio. He located near Chillicothe, married and reared a family, and many of his family are scattered throughout that section. William farmed in Kentucky for years, but in 1828 moved to Hamilton county, Ind., where a son had gone two years before, and he settled near him in the township of Noblesville, three miles from that village. The journey was made with horses and wagons and required considerable time. The rest of his life was passed on this farm, and he died in February, 1833. William Wheeler was a typical pioneer, of strong physique, six feet tall and weighing about 180 pounds. During the war of 1812 he enlisted, with two comrades from Kentucky, John Stoops and George Burt, and saw considerable service in Canada. In politics he was an old-line Whig. William Wheeler was married three times. His first wife, whose name is not known, had two daughters, Margaret and Mary, of whom Mary died in Kentucky. He next married Miss Rose Ann Ishmaul, a native of Wales, who had come to Nicholas county, and she, too, died in Kentucky. Her children were as follows: John, born Sept. 29, 1807; Nancy, Oct. 3, 1809; Roseann, Jan. 2, 1812; and Thomas, Feb. 3, 1814. The third wife was a widow, Mrs. Sarah (Ferguson) Burns, and she bore him two children, namely: William, born Oct. 5, 1816; and Moses, March 11, 1819.

John Wheeler, oldest son of William, born Sept. 29, 1807, grew up on the Kentucky frontier and had no chance for even the rudiments of an education during his boyhood, but after his marriage his wife taught him to read and write. His main book was the Bible, and he became a close student of its teachings. His father's farm on Licking river was close to that of Philip Stoops, another pioneer, who had a daughter, Mary, and the two young people fell in love with each other and were betrothed. Early in September, 1826, Philip Stoops and his family started for Indiana, traveling with an ox team and a team of horses, and John Wheeler accompanied them. He drove the oxen, and led a two-year-old colt. The party camped out along the way in true pioneer style and were five weeks in making the journey, arriving at their destination Oct. 1, 1826. On March 5th, following, the young couple were married and began their long life together.

John Wheeler had taken an eight-year lease from Aaron Finch for twenty acres of heavily timbered land about three miles southeast of Noblesville. He built a log cabin and gradually cleared the land, and meanwhile, to support his family, did much clearing for others in the vicinity. There was no money in the community, so his work was paid for in small produce or barter, and altogether the family lived in a most primitive way. The log cabin, while warm and comfortable, was rough in the extreme, with puncheon floor, a door of clap boards with wooden hinges, a single glass window, and a stick and clay chimney. The clothing for the family was made from the wool and flax which Mrs. Wheeler spun and wove. In 1834 Mr. Wheeler determined to follow the Indian trail to Fort Wayne, 100 miles distant, in order to get work there on the Wabash and Erie Canal. Provided with only simple provisions and a blanket to cover him at night, he set out on his journey. He secured the work, receiving sixteen dollars a month, and worked for three months, after which he walked home again through the woods. He had earned enough money to buy forty acres of forest land, two and a half miles east of Noblesville, and there he built a new cabin and settled down with his family. Industrious and thrifty, he prospered and was able to add to his property until he owned a fine farm of 224 acres. In time he built a frame house, and during the latter part of their lives he and his wife enjoyed all the comforts of life. He lived to be seventy-two years old, passing away at the home Aug. 17, 1880. His wife died April 7, 1881, while visiting her grandchildren, George and Eva Fisher, of Noblesville. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler were converts to the teachings of Alexander Campbell, who often journeyed through Indiana in those early days. He founded a church at Noblesville, and the Wheelers were among the most interested and sincere members. John Wheeler was a deacon in it for many years. In politics he was a Whig at first, but later was a strong Abolitionist. In his locality he was noted for his sound judgment and was more frequently called upon than any other man there to serve upon both grand and petit juries.

Mrs. Mary (Stoops) Wheeler was in many respects a most remarkable character. While she had only an ordinary education, she had an excellent mind and retentive memory, and was very well informed for her times. She was especially familiar with the Bible and could readily quote almost any passage from it. She was really the educator of her children, and by her strong character exerted an influence over them to which was largely due their success in the world. Her word was law to them, and they all felt the greatest reliance on her judgment. A single incident will illustrate her force of character and ability to dominate a situation instantly. During her husband's absence in Fort Wayne, a deer that had been grazed across the back by a bullet sought shelter in Stony Creek near her cabin, and was chased into the water by their hound "Tusmer." Mrs. Wheeler seized an ax, rushed out on a log, and as the deer came down upon her, struck it between the eyes and killed it instantly. Mrs. Wheeler's influence was not confined to her own family, for she had a wonderful knowledge of human nature, and became an authority among her neighbors, among whom she was very generally called "Aunt Polly." John and Mary (Stoops) Wheeler were the parents of eleven children, Margaret, Philip S., William T., Ann G., John H., George W., Jane, Sarah C., James W., Martha M. and Henry P. The oldest child, Margaret, was born Jan. 3, 1829, and died the same day.

Stoops. The Stoops family, from whom the posterity of John Wheeler are descended on the maternal side, has a history similar to that of the Wheelers, coming from the same State originally, and sharing like experiences on the frontier. Tradition has it that the first one of the name in America was Philip, and that he came from Germany. Although he settled in Pennsylvania he never learned to speak English. A descendant, Philip, the father of Mrs. Wheeler, was born June 17, 1768, probably in Virginia, and is thought to have been a son of Story Stoops. His old family Bible, containing many records, is now in the possession of a grandson, William Stoops, of Tama county, Iowa. It is bound in deerskin, and printed in English, and has been handed down from father to son.

Philip Stoops married Miss Mary Ferguson, of Scotch-Irish stock, and they settled in Kentucky, where he cleared a good farm from the woods in Nicholas county, near Alexander Blair's place. But he was strongly opposed to slavery, and finally left Kentucky to get his family out of its influence. On arriving in Hamilton county, as already narrated, he bought a half section adjoining the present corporation of Noblesville, built a cabin and went to work to clear the land from the heavy timber. He got his farm under cultivation, built a two-story frame house, and became one of the prosperous and influential men of that section. He died at home, Jan. 23, 1841. He and his wife were strong Presbyterians and helped to found the church of that denomination in their county. In politics he was a Whig.

Philip Stoops was married twice, both times in Kentucky. His first wife, Mary Ferguson Stoops, died March 12, 1811, leaving children as follows: John, born Sept. 10, 1793, who served in Canada in the war of 1812, with William Wheeler and George Berk; Ann Gray, born Oct. 1, 1795; Alicia, Nov. 29, 1797; William, Dec. 23, 1799; Philip, April 17, 1802; Rebecca, Sept. 30, 1804; Mary, March 3, 1807; James, April 3, 1808; and Judith, March 2, 1811. By his second union to Miss Agnes Morgan, who was born Sept. 16, 1778, Philip Stoops had five children: Thomas, born Sept. 2, 1812; Agnes and Sara, twins, June 22, 1814; Margaret, Sept. 16, 1816; and Jesse A., March 22, 1819. One of these children, William Stoops, became a specially prominent man in Hamilton county, and was a member of the State Legislature in 1848.

WILLIAM T. WHEELER, son of John and Mary (Stoops) Wheeler, was born on the farm first leased by his father, and as a boy and youth growing up on the frontier, he knew practically all of the sturdy men who laid the foundation for the present prosperity of Noblesville and the surrounding country. His first school days were spent in a log cabin school house some two miles from his home, which had been built for a home and then abandoned by some settler. Its structure and appointments were all after the rude fashion of the rude frontier, and it was lighted only where a hole had been cut out and the space covered with greased paper. Another school, to which he went next, was on the same primitive order, with slab desks and seats, supported by pins. This one he attended from forty to sixty days a year, but with all these disadvantages he learned to read and write well. When he was nineteen he spent one winter at a school near Noblesville, where the school house was a frame building with more conveniences. All through his early life Mr. Wheeler worked hard on the home farm, but when twenty years old he began hiring out to other farmers. His first job was in Noblesville township, grubbing for John Guilkey, at thirty-seven and a half cents a day. The money thus earned enabled him to pay for a license and settle down to married life. He was married in 1850 to Miss Christiann Burk, the ceremony being performed by Elias Caylor, a Dunkard preacher, who made the young people a wedding present of his services on the occasion. Miss Burk was born in Wayne county, Sept. 16, 1830, daughter of Jacob and Barbara (Heiny) Burk, and as she was left an orphan when eleven years of age, she was brought up by strangers. Her father, Jacob Burk, was born in Lancaster county, Pa., son of a farmer there, and his wife also came from the same locality; they moved to Wayne county, Ind., and entered 160 acres between Hagerstown and Cambridge City, on Simon's Creek. After clearing this land he sold out and moved to the northern part of Carroll county, where he bought 320 acres in the woods. There he died aged about sixty years, his wife surviving him. Their children were: Samuel, Jacob, Peter, Christiann, John, Barbara, Martha and Henry.

After their marriage Mr. Wheeler settled with his wife about half a mile from his father's home, on a tract of forty acres, partly cleared, which he had leased. There was a cabin already on it, with windows and doors, which was somewhat in advance of many of the cabins of that day. After two years there Mr. Wheeler began peddling clocks for Abner D. Bond, an old peddler, who purchased in Connecticut the Seth Thomas eight-day clocks, and had several wagons on the road. Mr. Wheeler did well at this, selling in Tipton, Howard, Cass, Fulton and Knox counties. He then bought fifty acres of land, three miles southeast of Noblesville, with twenty acres deadened, moved onto it a hewed log cabin, which stood just across the road and which he had purchased, and made his home there until 1862. By that time he had cleared thirty acres of the tract, but decided to leave it, and moving into Noblesville was engaged for three years in the stove and heading business. From 1865 until 1870 he had an interest in a brick making concern and also bought and sold stock, but he finally returned to farming, and from 1870 to 1889 occupied the 160-acre Evans place, northwest of Noblesville. On leaving that he bought fifty acres north of Noblesville, although this was almost in the woods, and life there would in many ways be like a return to the earlier times. There was a log cabin on the place, but his son Samuel settled in this, and the father bought twenty acres more for his own home. He built a good frame house there and moved into it in November, 1889. He still occupies this place.

In the eighteen years that Mr. Wheeler has lived on this farm he has continually been adding improvements and bringing it to a high state of cultivation. He has set out orchards and besides has five acres in various fruits and the place is known as the Glencove Fruit

Farm. In 1887 a remarkable gas well was struck on his farm. There was a six-inch casing in the well, and when on one occasion the gas was accidentally set on fire it rose with great force for eight feet without any flame and then suddenly bursting into a blaze threw a mass of fire into the air eighty-five feet in height and of an enormous fan shape. This burned six weeks before it could be brought under control. Soon after this more wells were struck but they were of less value than the first one.

Mrs. William T. Wheeler passed away at their farm home July 21, 1903, a woman of many virtues and one whose death was deeply felt. She was a member of the Christian Church, and her husband belongs to the same organization, in which he has served as treasurer. He has been a prominent man in his section, and from 1890 to 1895 was trustee of Noblesville township, besides serving four terms as deputy assessor. Mr. Wheeler's first vote was cast for Franklin Pierce, his next for Buchanan and his third for Stephen A. Douglas, but when Lincoln was a candidate the second time he voted the Republican ticket, and has done so for every Republican Presidential candidate since. Fraternally he is a Mason, a member of Lodge No. 57, and he has been an Odd Fellow since 1863. He has filled all the chairs in this latter order, including Noble Grand, and has several times represented his lodge at the State Grand Lodge. Mr. Wheeler has the universal respect and esteem of the community in which his life has been spent, and is one of the finest types of citizens.

Four children were born to William T. and Christiann Wheeler, and three of these reared large families:

(1) Elizabeth, born Feb. 13, 1851, married Dec. 13, 1874, Henry Berg, a farmer of Noblesville township. They had children, born as follows: Daniel P., Oct. 8, 1875; Prof. William T., Jan. 26, 1877; Fannie, Nov. 10, 1879, who died in infancy; Benjamin, July 10, 1881; Christiann, Sept. 7, 1883; John H., Sept. 20, 1885; Walter B., Oct. 8, 1887; Ralph W., Jan. 9, 1889; and Elizabeth, Nov. 26, 1891. The mother died Dec. 6, 1891, and Christiann and Elizabeth, the latter only ten days old, were taken to their grandmother's home. Henry Berg died Oct. 6, 1895, and all but the two oldest children were brought up by the grandparents. Four still live at the homestead. Prof. William T. Berg married

PHILIP S. WHEELER, son of John and Mary (Stoops) Wheeler, and brother of William T. Wheeler, was born Jan. 7, 1829, and died Dec. 29, 1898. His first wife, Rebecca D. Burcham, to whom he was married May 3, 1849, died March 10, 1871, the mother of three children, born as follows: Mary, born March 7, 1850; John, born Nov. 21, 1852; and Emma, born Feb. 9, 1857. The oldest daughter, Mary, married Benjamin Shoemaker, and had three children, Rebecca, Philip and John H. Mr. Wheeler was married (second) Nov. 14, 1897, to Caroline Bolton, now also deceased. Philip S. Wheeler was the owner of one hundred acres of fine land besides a number of houses in Noblesville. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and for two years served efficiently as township assessor. It would, indeed be a great injustice to his memory not to mention his philanthropy. While his own family was not large, his house looked more like a kindergarten than a residence, as he reared several orphans. He aided the destitute to a marked degree—in fact none who appealed to him for help was refused, and he gave to charity more than many men ever made. His last intelligent expression was that he wished his brother, William T., to see that his own children did not exact any share in the property owned by his second wife, "For," he said, "my children would then have more than hers. Thus I will have made good my promise to her, which has been my chief aim." This was done as he wished.

ANN GRAY WHEELER, oldest daughter of John, was born Feb. 28, 1833. At the age of twenty, July 22, 1853, she married Henry Fisher. Both died in middle life, she Feb. 8, 1870, and he Sept. 5, 1876. They left three children: (1) Mary Eva, born Oct. 29, 1854, married Orlando Lock, May 1, 1882, and died ten years later, Oct. 16, 1892, leaving no issue. (2) George W., born Dec. 20, 1856, was married June 5, 1883, to Miss Mattie Bare, who died Aug. 5, 1890, leaving two children, Emma Pearl (born Feb. 11, 1885) and William H., (born May 12, 1888). George W. Fisher married (second) Rebecca Jones, June 30, 1901. (3) John H., born July 24, 1860, married, March 1, 1883, Miss Fannie Gascho, and they have had three children: Henry L., born Jan. 29, 1884; Nellie M., born Aug. 25, 1888; and Roland N., born Dec. 5, 1886.

JOHN H. WHEELER, third son of John, was born Dec. 17, 1834, and was reared on the old homestead near Noblesville. From an early age he showed a marked adaptability for business and became a dealer in hogs and cattle. He was very successful and was one of the substantial men of the township, in which his real estate holdings were 330 acres. During the Civil war he enlisted in the first company and regiment accepted in Indiana, the 6th Ind. V. I., for three months' service; and was in one battle in West Virginia. On Dec. 16, 1862, he was married to Miss Louisa Jones, who was born March 1, 1837, in Noblesville township, daughter of Abner and Nancy (Carlin) Jones. Two children were born to this union; Nancy A., May 16, 1868; and George, Aug. 14, 1878, who died March 20, 1887, in Noblesville. The daughter married C. B. Ward, of Indianapolis, and died Nov. 24, 1893, the mother of one son, Newell, born Oct. 19, 1889. Mr. Wheeler died Sept. 17, 1898, and his wife passed away Jan. 17, 1901, both in Noblesville. Mrs. Wheeler was a member of the Methodist Church, and her husband belonged to the Christian Church. He was a good Republican in his political views, and fraternally belonged to the Noblesville Lodge of Masons.

JANE WHEELER, daughter of John, was born Oct. 17, 1838, and became the wife of S. H. Foland, Oct. 27, 1857. She bore her husband six children: (1) John J., born Aug. 25, 1858, married Feb. 8, 1883, Miss Laura Ellen McKenny, who was born Feb. 22, 1861. They have had five children, namely: Dora M., born July 23, 1887; Walter E. Dec. 23, 1891; Blanche E., Nov. 30, 1893; Grace J., Aug. 28, 1896; and Pauline Anne May, July 14, 1898. (2) Dora was born Nov. 14, 1860, and died Jan. 5, 1880. (3) Philip S. was born July 22, 1863. On May 5, 1889, he married Miss Amanta James, who was born Jan. 17, 1870, and they have had children as follows: Maggie, born Dec. 11, 1890; Lester H., June 4, 1893; George R., May 3, 1895; Rex F., Aug. 22, 1900 (deceased May 7, 1903); and Cecil A., Aug. 13, 1903. (4) Henry O. was born Dec. 19, 1865. (5) Mary E., born March 26, 1870, died April 18, 1901. (6) Fred R., born July 8, 1873, married Maud (Duggins) Foland, who was born Feb. 5, 1876, and they have had three children: Opal F., born June 14, 1897; Otis S., Feb. 26, 1901; and Hugh H., Feb. 19, 1903.

SARAH C. WHEELER, daughter of John, was born in January, 1840. She married Isaac Fisher, by whom she had two children: Henry and Belle, who married Watt Love.

JAMES W. WHEELER, fifth son of John, was born Feb. 27, 1843, and grew up amid the same influences as other boys of the frontier. His father and mother both did all they could to insure their children getting all the educational advantages possible, and they were all fairly well educated for that day. James W. Wheeler attended several of the subscription schools during the winters, and in summer worked on the farm. On April 20, 1864, he enlisted, at Noblesville, in Company B, 136th Ind. V. I., for 100 days, and was honorably discharged four months later, in August, in Indianapolis. He served mainly in Tennessee on guard duty near Murfreesboro, and on one occasion was detailed with ten comrades to guard the railroad thirty miles south of the city, being stationed at Bellbuckle. For two weeks he was sick in the hospital, but for the rest of the time was in active service. After returning from this experience, Mr. Wheeler engaged in business as a butcher, opening a meat market in Noblesville, which he ran until about 1866 or 1867. He then traded his property for seventy-two and a half acres on the Greenfield road, three miles southeast of Noblesville. There was a cabin on the tract and twelve acres had been cleared. Mr. Wheeler finished clearing it, drained the land and built a good frame house, besides adding to the land until he owned 320 acres. Later he became interested in real estate transactions, town property, sawmills and land in Arkansas and Georgia, and residence property in Noblesville, becoming quite wealthy. He is an influential man in the community and prominent in the work of the United Brethren Church, where he is president of the board of trustees. In politics he has always been a strong Republican, since the day when he cast his first vote for Lincoln for President. He belongs to Noblesville Post, G. A. R.

Mr. Wheeler's first wife, to whom he was married in Noblesville, Dec. 28, 1864, was Miss Sarah Ann Horsh Haverstick. She was born in Carroll county, Ohio, Feb. 18, 1847. The Haverstick family came from Lancaster county, Pa., and were of Dutch stock. Mrs. Wheeler's grandfather, Christian Haverstick, was a farmer and wagonmaker. He married Maria Gall, and they moved, in 1843, to Carroll county, Ohio, and settled on 200 acres of improved land. There Mrs. Haverstick died, and in 1859 her husband traveled by wagon with all their goods to Noblesville, and located on a farm, adjoining the Wheeler place, where he died during the seventies, aged eighty-four years. He and his wife belonged to the German Reformed Church. They had an only child, Amos G., father of Mrs. Wheeler.

Amos G. Haverstick was born in Pennsylvania. While living in Ohio he married Sarah Ann Horsh, also of Pennsylvania Dutch stock, and they had two children, Sarah Ann, Mrs. Wheeler; and Horsh A. His first wife dying, Mr. Haverstick married (second) Susannah, daughter of Stephen and Susannah (McFern) Staley, who was born in Carroll county, Ohio, Dec. 5, 1837. Mr. Staley was a son of Joseph and Zilpha (Fern) Staley, residents of near London, and when a young man accompanied his parents from England to America, and they settled in Carroll county, Ohio, where Stephen Staley lived to be about seventy years old. He married Miss McFern in Cambridge, Pa., and they had ten children: Mary, Zilpha, Nancy, Priscilla, Henry, Stephen, Joseph, Susannah, Benjamin, and a daughter who died young. Amos G. and Susannah (Staley) Haverstick had two sons: James B., born Jan. 6, 1858; and George W., born in 1863. Mrs. Sarah Ann (Haverstick) Wheeler died in 1885, the mother of fourteen children. She was a member of the United Brethren Church, and a woman of many virtues. After her death Mr. Wheeler married (second) Aug. 15, 1886, in Anderson, Ind., Miss Miranda Malvina Sample, who was born in Hancock county, Ind., Feb. 6, 1848. She was a daughter of John G. and Elizabeth (Darke) Sample, and a granddaughter of James and Mary (Barsett) Sample, pioneers of Indiana from Virginia. The children of James W. Wheeler were all by the first wife, and several died young. Eight are living: (1) Christian L., born Oct. 1, 1865, a lumber merchant of Memphis, Tenn., married Miss Nancy Landig, and has one son, James L., born in Noblesville Oct. 21, 1887. (2) Franklin A., born Oct. 23, 1868, was graduated from the Noblesville high school when only sixteen, and for the next three years taught school. He then entered Purdue University, but did not complete the course. He is now a farmer in Hamilton county. He married Sept. 21, 1886, Miss Ella Harris, daughter of Capt. James Harris, warden of the U. S. prison, in Washington, D. C. They have one daughter, Vola Verne, born April 11, 1887, who married George Webster, a farmer of Noblesville, and has a son Harris. (3) Nellie D., born Oct. 18, 1870, was married Feb. 15, 1890, to Harvey Landig, in the real estate business in Noblesville. Their children are: Griffith W., born Aug. 30, 1891; Mary Rose, born March 17, 1898; and Aaron W., Jan. 9, 1906. (4) Polly Ann, born July 7, 1872, was married Sept. 6, 1898, to Eldon Robb, a lawyer in Greenfield, Ind. A daughter, Gladys Ione, was born June 16, 1899. (5) Amos G., born Aug. 6, 1876, was married Aug. 6, 1899, to Miss Jessie Epps, of Madison, Ark.; he is in the lumber business in that State, at St. Francis. (6) Sarah Caroline, born Dec. 9, 1878, has like all the family received a good education, being a graduate of the Noblesville high school and DePauw University, class of 1903. (7) Susannah A., born Dec. 11, 1880, is a graduate of the same institutions, being in the university class of 1904. (8) Hulda Verne, born Jan. 24, 1884, was graduated from the Noblesville high school, then taught in that town, and later attended the Metropolitan School of Music in Indianapolis, of which she is a graduate.

MARTHA M. WHEELER, youngest daughter of John, was born Feb. 28, 1845. At the age of twenty-four she was married, Aug. 12, 1869, to Joseph R. Bell. Mr. Bell, who was born June 4, 1844, was a soldier in the Civil war, and later was sheriff of Warren county, Iowa, for two terms. The family now resides in Alvin, Texas. Three children were born to this union: Orville J., born July 13, 1870; Mary L., born Sept. 7, 1877, deceased June 9, 1879; and Floss A., born Feb. 27, 1889, who married H. J. Hooper.

HENRY P. WHEELER, son of John, was born Sept. 29, 1847. His wife was Frances A. Boden, to whom he was united Dec. 29, 1869. Their children are: Linnie, born Oct. 11, 1870, wife of William Lindsay; Harvey M., born March 11, 1876, who married Miss Ettie Epps, and has three children, Henry R., Virginia and Frances; Zune, born June 29, 1881, who is the wife of Charles Eaton, and has a daughter, Dorothy; and Pansy, born June 30, 1885.

GEORGE W. WHEELER, another son of John, born Nov. 17, 1836, after finishing his own education in the public schools, began teaching, and held a position in Fishersburg, Ind., for several terms. An attack of lung fever compelled him to give up this work, and he turned again to agricultural pursuits, with which he had been familiar in boyhood. In company with his brothers John H. and James W., he took up farming and stockraising. He and John H. had bought 120 acres of partly cleared land two and a half miles southeast of Noblesville, and while the second brother lived in town, George W. occupied the farm, living in a house of hewed logs. He finished clearing the land and continued farming there until 1873, when the two brothers divided their property. George W. bought more land until he owned 265 acres, 185 near Noblesville and the rest in Fall Creek township. He also, with his brothers, was engaged for sixteen years in manufacturing tiles. He was a pioneer in that industry, and has been a prominent member of the National Association of Tilemakers. Since 1905 he has resided in Noblesville.

Mr. Wheeler has always been a strong Republican, his first vote having been cast for Lincoln. He is influential among his fellow citizens in the township, and was one of the earliest men chosen as county commissioners. He, as well as his wife, belongs to the Christian Church. In physical make-up Mr. Wheeler, like all his brothers, is over six feet in height and weighs in the neighborhood of 200 pounds.

George W. Wheeler was married March 18, 1863, in Noblesville township, to Miss Hulda George, who was born in 1841, daughter of James and Maranda (Sinclair) George. They are the parents of six children, all of whom finished the common schools and then attended the Noblesville high school, but not all of them attended college: (1) William T., born Sept. 7, 1865, served three years and ten days in the Philippines in the 13th regiment, and although he took part in twenty-seven engagements escaped without injury. He married Sept. 6, 1886, Miss Emma Boden, and they have had two children, born as follows: A. Marie, Nov. 24, 1888, who graduated from the Noblesville high school in 1907; and Irwin Glenn, born June 14, 1890, at present a student in the Noblesville high school. (2) Laura M., born May 30, 1868, completed high school and began teaching at the age of seventeen years. She married, July 24, 1895, Albert Keiser, who has been principal in the First Ward, Noblesville schools, for thirteen years. (3) Charles J. was born Dec. 2, 1871. (4) Anna L., born March 9, 1874, graduated from the Noblesville high school in 1893, and became the wife of Bedford Russell, Sept. 23, 1903; they have two children, Robert R., born Oct. 12, 1904, and Louise May, born April 15, 1907. (5) Orpheus H., born Jan. 24, 1876, also served in the Spanish-American war, in the hospital corps of the 11th ward, Porto Rico. On Nov. 25, 1901, he married Miss Myrtle Reed, and they have two children, Alice H., born March 29, 1903; and Orpheus C., born June 13, 1905. (6) Ella N., born Sept. 11, 1879, married June 11, 1907, Frank S. Campbell, a graduate of the Noblesville high school and also of the University of Michigan.

The GEORGE family, to which Mrs. George W. Wheeler belongs, was formerly of Virginia. The grandfather, James George, was a farmer there in Hampshire county, near Winchester. He was twice married, both times in Virginia. By his first wife, Hannah Youley, his children were: Lewis, Silas, Maria, Joel, James, Jesse and David. Ten years after the death of his first wife he was married to Mary Barrett, but they had no family. Somewhat later than 1820 he moved to Highland county, Ohio, entered land in the woods, and settled there in a log cabin, soon clearing up his property. He also went to the present site of Indianapolis, and entered land where the city now stands. His sons, David and Joel were early settlers in West Newton. James George died on his farm, advanced in years.

James George, Jr., father of Mrs. Wheeler, was born in Virginia in February, 1811, and received a much better education than usual then, besides being a great reader of books and newspapers and a close student of the Bible. For years he took the New York Tribune. Early in life he learned cabinet making from William Horsman, a very skillful workman. Before he had finished he went to Ohio to visit his father, who had moved there, and was so well pleased that he decided to settle there, too, though he returned to Virginia to complete his apprenticeship. Afterward he followed his trade in Ohio, residing with his parents.

In the fall of 1840 James George moved to Hamilton county, Ind., transporting his family and goods in wagons. He settled two and a half miles northwest of Noblesville, in a log cabin, on a woodland tract of 240 acres, which he had bought. He not only built his cabin, which was constructed wholly without nails, and with puncheon floors and clapboard doors, fastened by wooden latch and hinges, but also made much of his furniture. Besides the table and cupboard, he fashioned a bedstead out of split rails with holes bored through for ropes. This primitive furniture was replaced by better later. After clearing his land he sold it and about 1853 moved to another farm of 240 acres, three miles southeast of Noblesville. There were some improvements on the farm, and he added others, and built a two-story frame house. In 1875 he moved to Kansas, bought 220 acres, extending half way round the city of Erie, county seat of Neosha county. Here the rest of his life was passed, and he died Aug. 9, 1875.

While living in Ohio Mr. George was married, in Barnesville, to Miss Maranda Sinclair. Her father, James Sinclair was of Scotch descent, and was in early life a farmer but was obliged on account of breaking his leg to give this up. He moved to Barnesville and kept a hotel there until he died, at a good old age. By his first wife, there were three daughters, but the names of mother and daughters are forgotten. By the second wife, Mary Bundy, there were seven children: Hulda; Dempsey; John; William; Emily, who died in 1906, aged ninety-one years; Maranda; and Matilda. This family were members of the Friends Church. The two first children of James George were born in Highland county, Ohio, and were named for the father's old employer and his wife, who had treated him like a son. Their names were Lydia, born Oct. 21, 1837; and William, born May 24, 1839. The other children were born in Indiana as follows: Hulda, born Aug. 23, 1841; Dempsey, April 5, 1843; Minerva, May 9, 1845; Rachel, July 9, 1847; Harriet, July 28, 1849; Isaac Newton, Feb. 5, 1852; and Maria, Sept. 5, 1854. William and Dempsey were in the Civil war, the former for the first three months and the latter for a three-year service. Mrs. Maranda (Sinclair) George died in Noblesville, April 2, 1879. She was never a member of any church, though a Friend in belief. Her husband was in early life a member of that Society but did not remain long in that faith, and he died a member of the Methodist faith. He was prominent in his community, and was for some time a trustee of Noblesville.

CHARLES J. WHEELER, son of George W., born in Hamilton county, Dec. 2, 1871, received a good education, as his father was deeply impressed with the necessity of giving all such advantages possible to his children.

Charles J. advanced from the grammar schools of Noblesville to the high school and was graduated from it in 1891 with the class honors. He was then sent to the Indianapolis Business University and after completing his course there returned home to relieve his father of the management of the farm. He proved himself well fitted for the task and has won the confidence of the community by the ability and integrity he has uniformly shown. He has always been active in local politics, and in November, 1902, was elected county clerk on the Republican ticket, receiving a good majority. He entered upon the discharge of his duties Jan. 1, 1904 and has been a most efficient county official.

On March 8, 1893, Charles J. Wheeler and Miss Etta M. Wheatley were joined in matrimony. Mrs. Wheeler was born in Noblesville, July 23, 1871, and was the daughter of William and Angeline (Neidigh) Wheatley. They have a family of two sons and two daughters, born as follows: Ruth A., Dec. 15, 1893; Thomas W., Dec. 1, 1895; Mabel R., April 5, 1898; and George W., Feb. 3, 1904. Mr. Wheeler and his family attend the United Brethren Church, and he is particularly active in its work. A trustee of the church he has also been a teacher in the Sunday-school for some time, is president of the local Young People's Society and also of the branch Y. P. C. U., White River Conference, and secretary of the Quarterly Conference. In fraternal work Mr. Wheeler is also prominent. He belongs to the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias; and has passed all the chairs and held the State offices in the Jr. O. U. A. M. and belongs to the I. O. R. M., Modern Woodmen, Masons and Elks. In January, 1906, he was elected chairman of the Republican County Central Committee, and in January, 1908, was re-elected by acclamation.

WILLIAM B. JENNINGS, one of the most prominent men of Franklin, Ind., and a man of wide influence throughout this portion of the State, was born in Franklin, Jan. 4, 1852, son of William H. and Margaret J. (Lyons) Jennings, natives of Kentucky.

Thompson Jennings, the paternal grandfather, was an early settler in Kentucky, where he died, the father of four sons and two daughters. The maternal grandfather, Robert Lyons, a native of Pennsylvania, was an early settler in Johnson county, and was a tanner and farmer in White River township.

Here he died aged about eighty-seven. His wife was a Van Arsdal, and four sons and five daughters were born to them.

Hon. William H. Jennings, father of William B., was a farmer and stock dealer, who came to Indiana at an early date, and settled in White River township, where he resided a number of years, and served as sheriff of the county two terms during the forties, and while in office removed to Franklin. In addition to this office, he was county treasurer two terms; joint senator by appointment; mayor of Franklin one term and re-elected to this office, but died Jan. 30, 1873, in his fifty-fifth year, while serving his second term as mayor. His wife died April 11, 1907, aged eighty-two years, in the faith of the Methodist Church. The father was very prominent in the Masonic fraternity, and belonged to Raper Commandery, in Indianapolis, and also took an active part in Franklin Lodge, I. O. O. F. In politics he was a Democrat, and took an active part in the deliberations of the party. Four sons and one daughter were born to him, four of whom are now living: William B.; Laura E., wife of Edward Cutsinger, of Amity, Ind.; Robert, deceased; Harry B., of Franklin; and Emil H., a book-keeper in Frenzel's bank, at Indianapolis.

William B. Jennings was reared in Franklin, attending the public schools of that city, and Hanover College. Returning home in February, 1872, he became deputy county auditor, under E. Newton Woollen, and served four years, after which he was for four years in the deputy auditor's office in Indianapolis, under William K. Sproule. While serving in this latter capacity, Mr. Jennings retained his residence in Franklin, and was honored by election to the office of county auditor of Johnson county, and re-elected, thus serving in this capacity for eight years, and giving his constituents as well as the county, a fair, honorable and satisfactory administration. Having confined himself so closely to his duties, at the expiration of his second term as county auditor, Mr. Jennings took a trip to California, and upon his return was called upon to take the office of deputy auditor for four years under Thomas J. Coyle. During this time he was elected county treasurer, and re-elected, serving four years. He then was assistant in the auditor's office for five years, until his election in 1906 as county auditor, and is still serving in that office. During his entire political career Mr.

Jennings has been steadfast in his devotion to the principles of the Democratic party, and in the several offices with which he has been honored, he has given the people good service, and brought about many desirable reforms. Pleasant, genial in manner, he has many friends, and all recognize his ability and personal popularity. In 1882 he and M. L. Johnson, now deceased, secured the franchise for the Franklin Water, Light and Power Company, which franchise they transferred to Mr. R. G. Reeves, of Chicago.

On Dec. 10, 1895, Mr. Jennings was married to Miss Claudia B. Cutsinger, daughter of Edward and Clara Cutsinger, and one daughter, Clara Margaret, has been born to this union. Mr. Jennings is a consistent member of the Methodist Church, and Mrs. Jennings and daughter are members of the Christian Church. Fraternally Mr. Jennings is a member of Franklin Lodge, No. 107, F. & A. M., Franklin Chapter, No. 65, R. A. M., and Franklin Commandery, No. 23, K. T.

VOLNEY THOMAS MALOTT, a distinguished financier, president of the Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis for the past twenty-five years, is a man of national reputation in his line. He has been associated with the banking business of the city since the early fifties, and the great institution of which he is the head ranks second in the volume of business transacted and has the greatest surplus of any bank in the city. Mr. Malott has been spoken of in New York by two men eminent in financial circles as the greatest banker west of the Alleghany mountains. Inheriting mental qualities of a high order, he has in the prosecution of his business interests developed a degree of prudence and foresight rare even among the men whom he counts as his noteworthy associates. His interests are numerous and varied, demanding a wide range of ability and understanding, and his long-continued active career has made him master of the commercial situation in Indianapolis to an extent which could scarcely be realized by one unfamiliar with the man himself.

Mr. Malott's life story is an interesting one, and he comes of an ancestry which has helped to make history in more than one section of the United States. His forefathers have been distinguished for intelligence, ability and patriotism. In the direct paternal line he is a grandson of Hiram Malott, a native of Maryland of French Huguenot stock. Hiram Malott was reared to farming, and followed that vocation all his life, about 1785 or 1790 moving to Kentucky, where he owned and managed a plantation of considerable size in Jefferson county. There he passed the greater part of his mature life, and died at the age of sixty-three. He bore a gallant part in the war of 1812, in which he served as captain, and by reason of his services in the Kentucky militia after that war he was known as Major Malott. His brother, Col. Daniel Malott, was intimately associated with the political history of the State of Ohio in its early days and made the government survey of that State. Hiram Malott married a daughter of Peter Haas, and to them was born a large family.

Through Peter Haas, his great-grandfather, Mr. Malott comes from the Swiss Mennonite stock which has made certain sections of Pennsylvania justly famous. Peter Haas was a Swiss Mennonite pioneer of Lancaster county, that State, noted for his religious principles and patriotism. He was a man of influence, thrifty and wealthy, owning large bodies of land in Berks, Lancaster, Chester and Northampton counties, and he was one of the earliest advocates of the patriot cause in that section. He was chosen a member of the committee of safety and observation from Lancaster county, and to represent his county in the election of two brigadier-generals of Pennsylvania Associates. He was a zealous and fearless member of the committee, active in ferreting out and arresting those unfavorable to the patriots, and himself gave active service in the Revolution as a soldier from Pennsylvania [see American Archives and Pennsylvania Archives], being a member of the first company (1775) that passed the committee of observation. Peter Haas married Mary Boyer, who was descended from Scotch-Irish Presbyterian stock, which has borne so important and prominent a part in the development of Pennsylvania, her progress and history, and has formed the backbone of the intellectual strength of that Commonwealth.

William H. Malott, father of Volney T. Malott, was born in Kentucky. He was a farmer until 1841, when he came to Indiana to enter into business as a merchant with his brother, Maj. Eli W. Malott, under the firm name of Eli W. and William H. Malott. They engaged in what was called the "lower river trade," furnishing planters in Louisiana with breadstuffs and provisions. The business had been established by Major Malott, and was very profitable. William H. Malott survived only a short time after his removal to Indiana, dying in November, 1845, at the age of thirty-two years. In religion he was a Methodist, and his wife also belonged to that denomination.

Mr. Malott married Leah Patterson McKeown, a native of Indiana, and they became the parents of four children, two of whom died in infancy, Volney Thomas and Mary Catherine living to mature years. The latter married Stephen Keyes Fletcher, of Indianapolis, and died in 1876. Mrs. Malott was married in 1847 to John F. Ramsay, and lived in Indianapolis from that time until her death, which occurred in May, 1904. By this marriage she became the mother of five children, all but one still living: John W., of Indianapolis; Ella R., the wife of Dr. Frank M. Chaplain, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Elizabeth R., the wife of Augustus W. Ritzinger, of St. Paul, Minn.; and Robert C., of Indianapolis. Mr. John F. Ramsay died in 1884, at the age of seventy-five years.

On his mother's side Mr. Malott is related to the McKeowns and the Pattersons. She was a daughter of John and Catherine (Patterson) McKeown, granddaughter of Robert and Leah (Hughes) McKeown, and great-granddaughter of Capt. John McKeown, of Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa., who was a prominent man during the Revolutionary period, as a most active patriot and soldier. He was a member of the Flying Camp, having enlisted early, first in 1775. He was appointed adjutant of a Pennsylvania Rifle Regiment by the Pennsylvania Assembly May 25, 1776 [page 856, Vol. VI. 4th Series, American Archives]; was later a captain in the 1st Pennsylvania Rifle Regiment, and also presumably in the 6th Pennsylvania Regiment, a Capt. John "McCowan" being given in the Pennsylvania Records as of that regiment. They are probably the same, as Capt. John "McCowan" took the oath of allegiance at Mt. Joy, Pa., while Capt. John "McKeown" took the oath of allegiance the second time, in Hanover township, Sept. 3, 1777. Capt. John McCowan was at Valley Forge in 1778. Captain McKeown is known to have served in various Pennsylvania regiments, was in the battle of Long Island, and saw active service in the Jerseys. He had represented Hanover township as a member of the committee of safety and observation, being elected Nov. 8, 1775. He was a Revolutionary pensioner.

In the history of Kentucky by Z. F. Smith, we find (page 56) that John "McCown" was with Capt. James Harrod's party of surveyors, who made the first cabin improvements in Kentucky, at Harrodsburg, in 1774, and he was later associated with Col. Robert Patterson, at Lexington. The McKeowns were pioneers in Jefferson county, Ky. Robert, John and Morgan McKeown, sons of Capt. John McKeown, shared the most trying experiences of pioneer life in that section. Capt. John McKeown when he came into Kentucky was put in command of the blockhouse on the site of Louisville, to which the settlers were wont to repair for refuge on the occasion of Indian alarms and forays. He himself had a fort called McKeown Station, near Brunerstown, Kentucky.

Robert McKeown married Leah Hughes, and they had three sons, John, Robert and Morgan.

John McKeown, grandfather of Volney T. Malott, was a resident of Jefferson county, Ky., and was a saddler by trade, following that vocation at Jeffersontown. He took part in the Indian war in Indiana, serving in the battle of Tippecanoe. About 1808 he married Catherine Patterson, and his sudden death, in 1816, while he was still a young man, was caused by poisoned milk. At that time his daughter Leah (who became the wife of William H. Malott) was but an infant. When Corydon was made the capital of Indiana, John McKeown moved to that point, and there his death occurred. He and his wife had five children, Rachel, Delilah, Eliza, Leah (Mrs. William H. Malott), and Robert P. (who died just after ordination at Princeton College). Mrs. McKeown survived her husband with four children, and after the father's death the family returned to Kentucky.

Mrs. Catherine (Patterson) McKeown was born May 14, 1788, daughter of James Patterson, who married Miss Kinslow. Their children were: Peggy, Polly, John, Squire, Isaac, Delilia, Catherine (Mr. Malott's grandmother) and Zeruey. The McKeowns were of Scotch origin.

Volney Thomas Malott, son of William H. and Leah Patterson (McKeown) Malott, was born Sept. 9, 1838, in Jefferson county, Ky., and was eight years old when his mother brought her family to Indianapolis. The princial part of his education was secured at the seminary at Salem, Ind., which during his attendance was in charge of John I. Morrison, and later went to private schools, being a pupil for some time of Rev. William A. Holiday; he also went to the Marion County Seminary and the Indianapolis high school. Mr. Malott began his banking career in the banking house of John Wooley & Company, which subsequently became the Bank of the Capitol, and there he remained until 1857, when he entered the Indianapolis branch bank of the Bank of the State of Indiana, which had been recently organized, and of which he became teller. In this capacity he served until September, 1862, when he was offered the position of cashier. This proposal he declined, that he might accept the office of secretary and treasurer of the Peru & Indianapolis Railroad Company, of which he was also chosen director. His connection with the bank was continued through his position as a director in its management.

In the spring of 1865 Mr. Malott organized, in company with several others, the Merchants' National Bank of Indianapolis, which he served as cashier until 1870, meantime continuing to act as treasurer of the railroad corporation previously named. This road had, however, been reorganized, as the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago Railroad. In 1870 he left the bank to devote himself to the building of the Indianapolis & Michigan City Railroad, which was an extension of the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago road, and in 1871 he was appointed assistant president of that corporation, in 1875 taking the general management. From that time he was general manager and vice-president, later acting as president, until 1881. That year the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago was sold to the Wabash Railroad Company, but Mr. Malott continued his connection with the road, acting as vice-president until 1883, when he was elected vice-president and manager of the Indianapolis Union Railway Company, a position he retained until August, 1889, when he resigned, having been appointed, in May of that year, by Judge Walter Q. Gresham, receiver for the Chicago & Atlantic Railroad Company. During his connection as executive with the Indianapolis Union Railway Company and the Belt Line the company was reorganized and the Union Station built. In 1890 Mr. Malott was elected president of the Chicago & Western Indiana Railroad Company, a terminal line of Chicago, furnishing terminal facilities for six railroads entering that city, and operating a belt line. The following year he resigned the office of president, but was made chairman of the board of its board of directors having charge of its principal financial affairs. While Mr. Malott was on the board several millions of dollars were spent in vast improvements of this line, and as a consequence it has become a very valuable property. Mr. Malott gave up this position in 1895, and, taking a long vacation, made an extended tour of Europe with his family. In 1896 Judge W. A. Woods, of the United States Circuit Court, appointed him receiver for the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, which with its leased lines is known as the Vandalia system.

Mr. Malott was elected president of the Merchants' National Bank of Indianapolis, in which capacity he served from 1878 until 1882, when he transferred his interests to the Indiana National Bank, of which he became president. This bank is the successor of the Indianapolis branch of the Bank of the State of Indiana, and it is with this institution that he is still associated.

The Indiana National Bank, which dates its inception back to 1865, during the dark days of the Civil war, is one of the leading banking corporations of Indianapolis. It is the direct descendant of an honorable ancestry, the State Bank of Indiana, one of the earliest and most widely known banks of the West, of which it is the successor, having been chartered by special act of legislature in 1834. Its managers were men of sterling integrity and great business ability. In those early days, when the State was slowly filling up with hardy toilers from the East and South, and when currency was scarce, an institution of such strength and character was a great aid in marketing the rich products of these new and distant settlements. Upon the expiration of its charter, in 1856, the State Bank of Indiana was succeeded by the Bank of the State of Indiana, with branches in Lawrenceburg, Madison, Terre Haute, Lafayette, Fort Wayne, Richmond and elsewhere. In an address before the American Bankers' Association at Detroit a few years since Mr. William C. Cornwell, a financial writer of eminence, in speaking of this bank said: "It was one of the best banks the world has ever known. A monumental bank, great and beneficent, it lived through two terrible panics, never suspending specie payments. From the day it opened in 1834 until it was shut out by the operation of the tax on State banks it was the most highly profitable to shareholders and most advantageous to the public of any institution we have ever had." It is a matter of history that the Chemical Bank of New York, the State Bank of Kentucky at Frankfort, and the Bank of the State of Indiana were actually the only banks in the United States that did not suspend payment during the panic of 1857.

When the war of the Rebellion had reached its height, and the Government proposed the organization of National banks, and called all patriotic bankers to its aid, the directors of the local branch of the Bank of the State of Indiana organized the "Indiana National Bank," with George Tousey as president, and David E. Snyder cashier. From the beginning it has greatly prospered, its growth being one of the marvels of modern financiering.

In the fall of 1895 the bank received a baptism of fire. Nothing perhaps could more plainly show the enterprise of this institution than what then occurred. The fire started at six o'clock in the morning, and while the fierce flames were leaping a hundred feet high over the fire-proof vaults containing their books and securities, and their million dollar gold coin reserve, the officers were busily engaged looking for suitable quarters; and amazing as it may seem, the bank opened for business at nine o'clock, in a hastily improvised bank room, and began receiving deposits and paying checks as usual! The bank building, which had been recently refitted at a great cost, was, with the exception of the vaults, entirely destroyed. To prevent the recurrence of such a calamity, the directors now determined to build a new structure that would last for all time, and accordingly the present magnificent building was erected at a cost of nearly $300,000. The building is of classic architecture, somewhat resembling the Bank of England, in London. It is conveniently located, and bears the distinction of being the only fire-proof structure of its kind in Indiana. Its immense vaults are built of laminated chrome steel overlapping plates, no cast steel or chilled steel entering into their construction. The business of the Indiana National Bank has increased very greatly since the new building was erected. The deposits, which then were about three million dollars, have now reached seven million, five hundred thousand dollars, and the total assets exceed nine million dollars.

Mr. Malott is the third president the bank has had since the organization, in 1865. George Tousey having been at the head of its affairs from its foundation until 1875; he was succeeded by William Coughlin, who was president from 1876 to 1882, since when Mr. Malott has been the executive head. Mr. Coughlin served as vice-president from 1882 to 1893; was succeeded by George B. Yandes, who served until 1896, since which time Edward L. McKee has filled the vice-presidency. Mr. D. E. Snyder, the first cashier, was succeeded in 1866 by David M. Taylor, who held that position until 1882; William E. Coffin served from 1883 to 1884; and Edward B. Porter, the present incumbent, has served since 1885; he had been connected with the bank for several years previous to his promotion to the cashiership, as general bookkeeper and teller. The directors of the institution have included such eminent figures in the commercial and financial world of Indianapolis as Oliver Tousey, George Tousey, William Coughlin, George Merritt, Omer Tousey, Jacob P. Dunn, David M. Taylor, Frederick Rand, Daniel Stewart, John H. Stewart, George T. Porter, Frank A. Fletcher, Morris R. Eddy, T. B. Boyd, Robert S. McKee, William J. Holliday, Charles H. Brownell, Simon Yandes and George B. Yandes.

Mr. Malott was married Sept. 2, 1862, to Caroline Macy, daughter of Hon. David and Mary A. (Patterson) Macy, the latter a daughter of Robert Patterson. To this union have come six children: (1) Florence M. is at home. (2) Macy W., who is engaged in business as a merchant in Indianapolis, married Miss Anna Cotter, and they have two children, Caroline and Anna Macy. Their home is on North Delaware street. (3) Caroline Grace married Edwin H. Forry, and they have their home on North Meridian street. (4) Catherine F. married Arthur V. Brown, and is the mother of two children, Volney Malott and Arthur V., Jr. (5) Ella L. married Edgar A. Evans, and they live on North Delaware street. They have three children, Eleanor Macy, Mary Robertson and Caroline Malott. (6) Margaret P. married Paul H. White, and they have three children, Caroline Margaret, Volney Malott and Paul Helb. This family lives on Talbot avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Malott are members of Meridian Street Methodist Church, and he is serving as president of the board of trustees. He belongs to the Union League Club of Chicago, is an honorary member of the Bankers Club of Chicago, president of the University Club of Indianapolis, and a member of the Commercial and Columbia Clubs of the latter city. He is a member of the Indianapolis Board of Trade, and is a director and chairman of the Finance committee of the Indianapolis Art Association. His handsome and well-appointed home is at No. 524 North Delaware street, where he has lived since he built the residence, in 1867.

Mr. Malott acted as receiver of the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad and its leased lines, as previously mentioned, until Jan. 1, 1905, and is still a director of that road. He also operated for the owners, as trustee, the Terre Haute & Logansport Railroad and the Logansport & Toledo Railroad. He is a director of the Vandalia system, of the Indianapolis Union Railway Company and of the Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville Railway Company, whose line is popularly known as the Monon Route.

This brief review of a career packed to the brim with interlacing activities and multiplied interests gives some hint and suggestion of a most interesting life story, that of a man who has taken a high position in the business affairs of Indianapolis and of the West, and has maintained through long and strenuous years an enviable reputation for ability, honesty, integrity and a most comprehensive grasp of affairs.

HON. DAVID MACY was the last of an old-time circle of brilliant men who made the laws and set the pace for progress in the early days of the Commonwealth of Indiana. A lawyer by profession, he devoted all his time to legal work during the early part of his career, and was in successful practice in several locations. Before his removal to Indianapolis he had sat in the General Assembly five terms, three from one district and two from another, and won notable honors as a statesman in the public service. Thus he was well known in the State as a legislator and professional man before his affairs took him into business life, in which he found his previous experience invaluable. It may be that he is best remembered by the present generation as the promoter and organizer of railroad companies, and as one of the ablest financiers of his time in the State, but nevertheless his way to success as such was paved by the evidences of reliable ability he had given in the discharge of every previous trust. A brief history of his early life and associations will be interesting as showing the possibilities open to the ambitious man, even in what may seem to be the most unpromising circumstances. Mr. Macy lived in the days when Indiana was coming out of pioneer obscurity to the advanced position her awakening industries and developing resources entitled her, and his enterprise broadened with the spirit of the times, keeping pace with the leading progressive movements of importance.

David Macy was born Dec. 25, 1810, in Randolph county, N. C., son of Albert and Nancy (Wall) Macy. Though of Southern birth he was of New England ancestry, being a direct descendant of Thomas Macy, who lived in the parish of Chilmark, near Salisbury, Wiltshire, England, until his emigration to America, in about 1635. He was living near Newbury, Mass., in 1659, when driven from his home charged with providing shelter and comfort to Quakers, who were obliged to flee for their lives from the persecutions of the Puritans. Unable to live in peace in Massachusetts Colony, Thomas Macy and nine others negotiated with the Indians and effected the purchase of the whole island of Nantucket, which has afforded a home for his posterity through all the intervening generations to the present, many of the name living there yet.

Joseph Macy, a direct descendant of Thomas, and the grandfather of Hon. David Macy, married Mary Starbuck, of Massachusetts, and lived in Nantucket until he was thirty years old, at that time moving South with his young family. They settled at Guilford Court House, North Carolina.

Albert Macy, son of Joseph, was born in Nantucket, Mass., in 1774, and was only a boy when the family went South. He married Nancy Wall, of Virginia, and they had a family of eight children, four sons and four daughters, David being the fourth in order of birth. He was only ten years of age when his father moved out to the then frontier region in the new State of Indiana, settling in Randolph county. His youth and early manhood were passed there and in the two adjoining counties of Wayne and Henry.

Thus David Macy received his early impressions in the two localities as distinct in elements and influence as might be found. His boyhood and youth were about evenly divided between his native State and that of his adoption, and his personality never lost the softening effects of the one nor the ruggedness of the other. His father was confronted with the customary work of the pioneer in those days, that of clearing a farm from the heavy forests which then covered the region, and the sons were obliged to take their share of the hard labor incidental to such an undertaking, David working with the rest. Felling trees, building log cabins, putting up fences, and performing the numerous other tasks necessary to transform the wilderness from its natural state to a cultivated condition, hardened his muscles and toughened his sinews, and taught him lessons of self-reliance and economy. When he was eighteen he went to learn the trade of millwright with his brother Hiram, but after an apprenticeship of three years he concluded that professional life appealed more strongly to him and he determined to devote his energies to work of his choice. Though his training in manual labor had been thorough and comprehensive he had received meager scholastic training, having been dependent therefor on the unpretentious district schools deemed sufficient by most of the backwoodsmen. But he had been a close observer, and had shown practical appreciation of the opportunities at hand, and accordingly he entered upon the study of law, at Centerville, Wayne county, with a due sense of the importance of steady application and the practical mind which was characteristic of the times. Lack of means and the consequent economy in physical matters produced a similar tendency with regard to the mental acquirements of the young men of those days—they cared little for knowledge that could not be directly applied. The same feeling, in a broader sense, possessed David Macy, and his eminently practical character made him a real student of law, not merely a reader of text-books. It was of no use to him except as it could be turned to account in the business or legislative affairs of the day and place, and he found meaning in every paragraph. By hard study he had fitted himself for admission to the Bar by the end of two years, passing a rigid examination, conducted by two of the prominent Circuit judges, Hon. Charles H. Test and Hon. Mr. Eggleston. It was under the old regime, when other qualifications besides good moral character and the ordinary course of study were required of men who expected to be active practitioners of one of the most learned and honorable of the professions. Moreover, the Bar of Wayne county, to which he was admitted, was composed of an unusually strong and able set of men, association with whom was in itself an opportunity and a privilege, as well as a challenge to the best that was in a man to manifest itself. That he not only retained his place among these men, but gained honorable standing, speaks well for both his character and his ability. Mr. Macy first located for practice, however, at Newcastle, the county seat of Henry county, which adjoins Wayne on the west, moving thither from Wayne county in 1832, almost immediately after qualifying. After one year at the Bar he obtained his license to appear before the judges of the Supreme court in the argument of cases appealed. He was one of the early attorneys at Newcastle, and his strength received quick appreciation from his fellow-citizens, for he was soon given a foremost place in the public life of the town. In 1835 he was sent to the Legislature, and was re-elected in 1836 and again in 1837, his services in that body reflecting honor on his district. At that time there was an ambitious movement on foot in Indiana which had the double purpose of promoting internal improvements on a very large scale and bringing the State much needed revenues. The scheme was to construct turnpikes and canals, open highways across the State, and even railroads, which were then only remote possibilities, at the expense of the State, as the development of its resources seemed to be retarded by the lack of proper transportation facilities. The interior towns, with all their possibilities, were still regarded as frontier posts, and were likely to remain so, and leaders in the Assembly saw an opportunity to mend this condition of affairs and at the same time improve the fiscal condition of the State. A bill authorizing the loan of $10,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out these plans was introduced into the Assembly, and Mr. Macy was one of its active advocates. The interest in transportation thus aroused undoubtedly awakened the commercial instincts in his nature which eventually caused him to give almost his whole attention to the railroad business.

In 1838, at the close of his experience as a legislator from Henry county, Mr. Macy was retained in the public service by being elected prosecuting attorney of the Sixth Judicial district, which included Henry county, and in 1840, on the expiration of his term as such, he removed to the eastern edge of the State, settling in Lawrenceburg, Dearborn county. There he remained for twelve years, active in the practice of his profession, and quite naturally, as in his former home, taking an important part in public affairs. He served two terms as mayor of the city, being the first incumbent of that position, giving an able administration, as had been expected of him, and in 1845 and 1846 he represented the district in the Legislature. In 1852 he removed to Indianapolis, with which city he was afterward identified to the close of his long life. He formed a partnership with David McDonald, but except for the legal work which his financial interests required he was not active in his profession from this time. It was the threshold of the great era of railroad building in the State, and as an organizer and promoter of railroads he proved second to none in his day. He had positive genius for the successful promotion of this particular utility, a genius which went beyond the inceptive stages and made him successful as manager and financier also.

In 1855 Mr. Macy was elected president of what was then known as the Peru & Indianapolis Railroad Company, which had the seventy-five miles of railroad between those two points, now a part of the Lake Erie & Western system. He held the position for a quarter of a century almost continuously—the exceptions being one or two short intervals—voluntarily retiring from active railroad management in 1880, and during that period the office became vastly more important with the extension of the road, a line being built from Michigan City to Laporte and the control of a line already constructed, between Peru and Laporte, being acquired. These beneficial changes were all made under Mr. Macy's management and by his advice. He recognized the fact that the road was the principal means of transporting lumber from the lake ports to the interior of the State, and ice from the small lakes of northern Indiana to points in the southern part. His first accomplishment was to put the short line which was the nucleus of this system upon a paying basis, and then, as opportunity offered and patronage demanded, his policy was to increase the same by judicious purchase and carefully considered additions, until the company had a through line from Indianapolis to Lake Michigan, known as the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago road. Perhaps his judgment was never better shown than in his selection of his assistants in this work, for he rarely made a mistake in estimating a man's capabilities, and he relied upon the men he chose for the successful maturing of his plans. Neither was he slow to give them credit, and as a consequence he had the affectionate esteem of his subordinates to an unusual degree. They considered him their friend, and he repaid their confidence in kind. He was never arrogant in his position, nor indifferent to theirs, and he was always approachable and invariably kind. He had enough of the old-fashioned pride in their welfare to make it the object of an almost paternal solicitude, and men who had grievances, real or fancied, were sure of a reception from him devoid of ceremony or formality that awed or of conditions that humiliated and affronted their self-respect. He did not believe in imposing conditions or assigning a man duties that would involve the sacrifice of his manhood, nor did he ask for service without just compensation. And his employees, recognizing these traits, did their work with a readiness and efficiency which made his executive ability the more effective.

While directing his railroad interests Mr. Macy also became engaged in banking, and in 1876 he was elected president of the Meridian National Bank, continuing in that office by annual re-elections until 1889, when he declined, wishing to retire to rest in the enjoyment of the ample fortune which he had acquired. In this as in every other line which he entered Mr. Macy was highly successful. During his young manhood and middle age Indiana was passing through the most important stage of its development, a time when men of breadth and action were needed to lay the foundations of a prosperous commonwealth, and he had the faculty of penetration to an extent possessed by few, and the ability to grasp his opportunities, with the force to pursue them to successful issue. All his principal interests were centered in projects that benefited his fellow-citizens generally, and his personal affairs prospered accordingly. His tireless energy and large capacity were backed by an integrity that gained him universal confidence which was in itself an incentive to right-doing. It is said that every one of his investments yielded large profits; every important work he undertook was accomplished. The causes are as simple as the bare statement. He was a close observer of the principles that govern material things, and in business affairs manifested one of his physical characteristics that was noteworthy in a man of affairs—he was never in a hurry. He moved with precision at the proper time, and so he acted in business matters. Every detail was attended to, every precaution taken, and then he was content to wait for the maturing of his plans with the wisdom of those who know that forced growth is not generally healthy growth.

Mr. Macy's winning personality and high character reflected both the unassailable integrity of his New England ancestors and the graces of his Southern birth and influences. The granite was there, but its hard exterior was made beautiful by all the courtly dignity of the old-school gentleman, and an unstudied charm of manner which made him welcome socially wherever he went, in high circles or among the humblest. His manners were easy, but not suggestive of any lack of strength. An acute sense of justice, and a tendency to deep thinking which grew with his years, made him known as a man of rather few words and a good listener more than a talker. "He gave his ear to all men, his tongue to few," though he was naturally frank, and his reserve was cultivated of necessity. As "words half reveal, and half conceal, the soul within," so he comprehended more than he disclosed.

On Jan. 19, 1837, while attending a session of the legislature, Mr. Macy was married to Miss Mary Ann Patterson, and they had a happy wedded life of over fifty-five years. Their only daughter, Caroline, is the wife of Volney T. Malott, a leading banker and wealthy citizen of Indianapolis. The family home in Indianapolis is a spacious and well-built residence, and Mr. Macy was particularly blessed in his home life, which was marked by a rare depth of affection, gentleness and evenness of disposition, and generous hospitality, which endured until his death, on Sunday morning, May 29, 1892. He peacefully passed to rest at his home, surrounded by his devoted family, the last of the "old guard," the pioneer Indiana lawmakers of a former generation. Of his colleagues during his first term in the Indiana Legislature—1835—Col. Richard W. Thompson alone survives. Mr. Macy was a professor of Christianity, a communicant of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, and gave liberal support to that body and to objects of charity.

JUDGE MILTON HITE PARKS (deceased). The State of Indiana has many honorable names on the pages of its history, and the one borne by Judge Milton Hite Parks will be found among the early settlers, and among those which have been identified with much of the progress and development of Morgan county.

Judge Parks comes of combined Irish and Holland ancestry. His paternal grandfather, James Parks, was born in North Carolina, of Irish parentage, and as early as 1816 he migrated to Indiana and secured Government land in Monroe county, in the vicinity of Ellettsville. This land he cleared and improved, and here he reared his family. James Parks was twice married, first to Nancy Moore, and second to Frances Kendrick, the latter of whom lived to the age of ninety-eight years, while his life was extended to the unusual age of 102 years. James Parks was a man of affairs, a leading member of the Democratic party and was a member of the first Legislature convened in the State of Indiana. On the maternal side, the grandfather of Judge Parks was William Hite, a native of Kentucky but of Dutch ancestry. He also became an early settler in Monroe county, Ind. He was a miller by occupation, and he died in middle life. He married a member of the May family, an old and prominent one in Kentucky.

Judge Parks was born Oct. 29, 1842, in Martinsville, Ind., son of Perminter M. and Lucinda (Hite) Parks, the former of whom was born in North Carolina, and the latter in Kentucky. They had seven children born to them, five sons and two daughters, of whom Marietta is the wife of John Simpson, of Martinsville; Tilman H. resides at Martinsville; Milton H. is mentioned below; Perminter M. is also of Martinsville; Alice A. married Frank Branch, of Martinsville, and is deceased; and Paschal S. and Willard E. are also both deceased.

Perminter M. Parks, the father of Judge Parks, was a merchant in Morgan county, for many years, a man of substance and of prominence in business life. He came to Indiana in 1816, and grew to manhood in Monroe county, and a few years after attaining his majority, came to Morgan county. He organized the First National Bank of Martinsville, in 1865, it being one of the oldest in the State, and he continued its president until his death. He owned large tracts of land both in Indiana and Iowa, and was interested in farming and pork packing. In political life he was very active, and was twice elected to the State Senate from Morgan county, on the Democratic ticket. He died in 1867, aged fifty-nine years. His widow survived until 1875, dying at the age of sixty-four years. Both parents were most worthy members of the Christian Church, in which he was an elder. Mr. Parks with Gen. Ebenezer Du Mont and Hugh McCullough, was for twenty years, a member of the sinking fund board of the State of Indiana. He was a man held in the highest esteem by his fellow citizens, as was his father, who was honored every year for fifteen years prior to his death, by a visit of prominent men from all over the State, to pay their respects on his birthday anniversary.

The venerable Noah J. Major says of him: "Perminster M. Parks, Sr., came from Kentucky to Monroe county, Ind., and to Morgan county about 1836. He was a distinguished pioneer citizen of Morgan county. He was very energetic, was a merchant and pork packer and shipper to New Orleans. He was a leading politician, and a man of great ability. He was one of the ablest men Morgan county has ever had. He was an able member of the State Senate. He was interested in public education, and was one of the earliest advocates of the free public school system. He was a liberal contributor to the Church. I regarded him as one of the most useful and able men of Morgan county and Indiana. He was a great financier. He started in life with limited means, but accumulated a fortune of $250,000."

Judge Milton H. Parks was reared in Martinsville, and in boyhood he attended the district schools. Later he became a student at the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis and the State University at Bloomington, and graduated from the law department of Harvard University in 1865. This was a notable class, numbering among its members some distinguished men, the names of William C. Whitney, Gov. Chamberlain of South Carolina and William Evarts appearing on the roll with Judge Parks. When Nebraska was admitted into the Union as a State, Judge Parks was then a young lawyer at Omaha. In 1875 he returned to Indiana and formed a partnership with A. M. Cuning, who afterward became Judge here, and that legal combination lasted for several years. Then a second partnership was formed, with Judge George W. Grubbs, and this continued for sixteen years, being severed by the election of Mr. Grubbs, on the Republican ticket, to the position of Judge. Judge Parks continued to practice alone for a number of years and then became associated with W. S. Shirley. Eight years later this partnership came to an end by the election of Mr. Parks to the Bench, a position he filled with dignity and efficiency for two years. Judge Parks was president of the First National Bank for about six years, and afterward continued as one of its directors.

On Aug. 10, 1871, Judge Parks was married to Miss Ida Griggs, daughter of Judge Algernon Sidney Griggs and Phoebe (Hutchinson) Griggs. Five daughters were born to this union, namely: Edna G. died in infancy; Gussie S. married William Yakey, of Bloomfield, county clerk of Greene county, and they have two sons, Joseph Parks and Milton Hite; Blanche M. married Karl I. Nutler, assistant cashier in the First National Bank, and they have one son, Parks A.; Georgia A. married Frank Eubank; and Scottie G. married Frank Crone, and resides with Mrs. Parks. Mrs. Parks is a member of the Methodist Church.

Judge Algernon Sidney Griggs was a native of Maryland, a son of Ebenezer Griggs, who is recalled in the mechanical world as the inventor of the governor for engines. Judge Griggs and his wife were early settlers in Indiana, and about 1840 he was made probate judge in Morgan county. His home was in Martinsville where he died in 1886, aged seventy-three years. During the Civil war he served as a soldier with the 33rd Ind. V. I. He was twice elected to the State Senate. Judge Griggs married Phoebe Hutchinson, daughter of Jonathan Hutchinson, who was a native of Iowa and a farmer there. The wife of Jonathan Hutchinson was Mary Jordan Walden, and they reared ten children. Mrs. Griggs died in 1873, aged forty-nine years, her birth having taken place in Iowa in 1824. The children of Judge and Mrs. Griggs were eight in number, two sons and six daughters, the four survivors being: Kate I., wife of John R. McBride, of Washington, D. C.; Viola, wife of Judge George W. Grubbs; Ida, widow of Judge Parks; and Phoebe, the wife of W. O. Smith, of Punxsutawney, Pa., congressman from the 27th district of Pennsylvania.

Judge Parks was a life-long Democrat. He was widely known in his official position as judge of the 15th Judicial Circuit of the State of Indiana, and enjoyed a large measure of public confidence. He died Jan. 9, 1907, of paralysis. His fraternal connections were with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

HON. CALEB B. TARLTON. Nothing in all the world evokes so much admiration and enthusiasm as a man who has reached the full zenith of an able and successful political career, unstained by questionable dealings. Such a leader, of undoubted integrity, of talents far beyond his fellows, stands, as it were, the admired of all admirers. To attain to such a position in a country of democratic customs, bespeaks a surpassing ability, a knowledge of men and things, and that rare faculty of winning the confidence and love of the public at large, without which no man can aspire to become the chosen one, who shall lead and mold the thought of his constituency.

In this order of genius, Caleb B. Tarlton of Franklin, Johnson county, Ind., fills a unique and brilliant place. He was born in Fayette county, Ky., May 27, 1827, his parents being Merritt and Catherine (Hutchinson) Tarlton, both natives of the same State. He had four brothers and six sisters, of whom five are now living: John, of Hendricks county; Miss Catherine, who lives at home; James, of Indianapolis; William, of Greenwood; and Susan, widow of Capt. Wightman, a soldier in the war of the Rebellion.

Merritt Tarlton was a successful stock man and farmer, and came to Indianapolis in the year 1833, where he bought a fine farm of 160 acres, about eight miles south of Indianapolis. This he improved, clearing it of the heavy timber, and here he lived until his death, which occurred in the year 1877, at the age of seventy-seven years. His wife survived him until 1885, her death occurring that year at the advanced age of eighty-five years. Both were influential members of the Missionary Baptist Church, and he was throughout his life an ardent Democrat.

The paternal grandfather of the Hon. Mr. Tarlton, also bore the name of Caleb, and was born at Hagerstown, Md. He married Nancy Bean and removed to Scott county, Ky., in 1806, buying a farm adjoining that of his brother Jeremiah, about three miles east of Georgetown, and one mile from Johnson's Mill. In 1809 he sold that tract, and bought 160 acres in Fayette, where he built a home which is now owned by his grand-daughter Ella Nichols. Some two years later he purchased additional land, and died there in the year 1841, at an honored old age. His wife followed him two years later. He was a grand old man, and held up as a model by later generations in his family. Twelve children were born to him, his youngest child Jackson being a soldier in the war of 1812.

A recent competent authority states that the Tarlton family is of Saxon origin and takes its name from Tarlton parish, Lancashire, England. The early home of the Tarltons was near Liverpool, and the eldest sons in the family were heirs to landed estates, and were living there until recent times. There were also other members of the family living in other parts of England, and also in London, prior to the year 1600, which shows that the Tarlton family is one of excellent ancestry and descendants of nobility.

Sir Banistee Tarlton, a son of John Tarlton, was born in Liverpool, England, in 1754, and at the breaking out of the Revolutionary war, he left the study of law, in which he had become deeply interested, and purchased a cornetcy of dragoons, and in December, 1776, commanded the advanced guard of the patrol which captured General Lee in New Jersey. He also served with Howe and Clinton in the campaigns of 1777 and 1778. After the evacuation of Philadelphia, he commanded as Lieutenant-Colonel, a cavalry corps of regulars and Tories, called the British Legion. This corps was constantly rendering important service to Lord Cornwallis in the South, until he and Tarlton surrendered at Yorktown.

The maternal grandfather of Senator Tarlton was Archibald Hutchinson, a native of Scott county, Ky., where he died at an old age, leaving a large family. He was successful and widely known as a hotel keeper, being familiarly called "Captain" Hutchinson.

Senator Tarlton was only six years of age when his parents moved to Indiana, and he was raised upon his father's farm in Franklin township, Marion county. He received his early education in the old fashioned subscription schools of that day, and remained at home until reaching his maturity, when he began his life-work by renting land for one year.

On Nov. 13, 1849, he was joined in wedlock to Evelyn M. West, a daughter of Marine and Sophia (DuVall) West. He began his early married life by running her father's farm in Pleasant township, Johnson county. This farm Mr. Tarlton now owns, and it is situated about two and a half miles east of Greenwood, originally containing 225 acres, to which he has subsequently added fifty acres, so that it now contains 275 acres of highly productive and valuable land. He and his wife resided there for about twenty-five years, and then moved to his present home, just east of the corporate limits of Franklin, in order to get the benefit of the excellent educational facilities offered by Franklin college, for their children. He has a beautiful home and about twenty acres of land in this place, and takes great pride in keeping it in excellent condition and entertaining his many friends there.

Seven children were born of this union, six sons and one daughter, John H., Merritt William, Eva, James A., Charles W., George and Caleb, the last named dying in infancy. All of the six survivors are now doing excellently in their varied walks of life. John H. is cashier in the Citizens' National Bank in Franklin, and bears the title of Major, having served in the Spanish-American war as captain of a company at Chickamauga, and was afterward promoted to the rank of Major; he married Jessie Gibson, and has two children, Marcia and Charlotte. Merritt W. married Mary Bell, and they reside in Greenwood. Eva married Hervey McCaslin, and lives in Franklin, having one child, Ethel P., now the wife of Edward Bailey. James A. is with L. L. Ayers in the dry goods business in Indianapolis; he married Jeanie Needham. Charles W. is a carriage trimmer in Franklin, married Elizabeth Funk, and has one child, Caleb B. George was an invalid, and lived at home, until his death, March 9, 1906.

Senator Tarlton's wife died Dec. 19, 1898, at the age of seventy-four years. She was a member of the First Baptist Church of Franklin, and was greatly beloved by all who knew her. Senator Tarlton is a member of the same church. He has been, since the year 1855, a Master Mason. In political affiliations he has always ably supported the Democratic party, being elected as joint representative of Johnson and Morgan counties in the year 1870, and serving in the Lower House of the Indiana Legislature one term. Six years later he was elected to represent Shelby and Johnson counties, and served for four years.

In addition to his successful career as an agriculturist and stock raiser, he has been exceedingly active in the political world. Throughout his career he has maintained the highest standard of honesty and integrity, and it has been said of him: "He is quiet and dignified in bearing, and is one of those men upon whom it can be depended that they mean just what they say, and will perform what they promise." He has been a resident of Johnson county since the year 1849 and in 1857 was elected president of the Johnson county Agricultural Society, which office he held for some eight or ten years.

Now, in the beginning of his journey toward the setting sun, the golden gleams of that luminous orb seem to have surrounded his head as in a halo of light and benediction, after his long life of usefulness in both public and private life. Of unassailable honesty and integrity throughout his strenuous career, Johnson county may well point with pride to him, and counsel the rising generation to emulate such qualities and a life of such completeness and success.

ELDER NOAH J. MAJOR. In recalling the representative men of Morgan county, Ind., one of the most respected and admired citizens, one of the best known men in the locality, and one whose influence has been felt in many phases of its development, is Noah J. Major. Although Mr. Major has devoted much attention to agriculture he has been prominently identified with other lines of activity. In political life he has been an important factor, while his long and devoted service of more than half a century in the ministry of the Christian Church entitles him to high respect.

Noah J. Major was born Aug. 14, 1823, in Brookville, Ind., a son of William A. and Rebecca (Clark) Major, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. The Major family is of Welsh descent, but representatives of the name have lived in America for five generations. Eddy Major, the grandfather of Elder Major, was born in Lancaster county, Pa. He was a trooper in the little army that suppressed Shays's rebellion in Pennsylvania, and when the war of 1812 broke out took part in that conflict, barely escaping with his life at the time of Winchester's defeat and the Indian massacre. By trade he was a stone-mason. He was a pioneer near Brookville, Ind., and died there at the age of fifty-four years.

Truly Yours
A. J. Majors.

Mr. Major was a high tempered man, given to very plain speech. His wife, Isabella (Applegate), was a woman of high character and good common sense, a rare good mother. Their family consisted of eight daughters and four sons, eleven of whom lived to maturity, and ten were married, as follows: Sally married John Coe, and had fifteen children. Polly married William Elliott and also had fifteen children, nine of whom were living when she died, at the age of ninety-four years. William A. married Rebecca Clark and had seven children. Hathea, who married J. G. Randall, had six children. Devore married Ruth Leslie and had eight children. Bessie married David Shoup and had six children. Harriet married Martin Shoup and had seven children. Isabella had seven children by her first husband, John Clark, and three by her second, William H. Craig. Robert B. married Sally Lanphere and had eight children. Susan married Nathan Wiere and had eight children. Isabella and Harriet were the only ones of the ten who married twice.

William A. Major was born in western Pennsylvania, and came to Indiana with his parents about 1810. Here he learned his trade of plasterer and brick-mason, in the prosecution of which he built the first brick court house in Connersville. Later he engaged in farming until 1832, in which year he left Brookville and located in Morgan county, where he entered 160 acres of Congress land. He also bought 520 acres, of Section 16, Town 12, Range 1, east (school land), in Washington township, about four miles north of Martinsville, and there he lived until his death, which occurred in 1847. He was only forty-eight years old at the time. Although Mr. Major died at a comparatively early age, he had accomplished great results in the improvement and stocking of his land, which even to the present is regarded as one of the fine farm properties of the township. He was not only energetic in the promotion of his business interests but likewise active in the politics of the day. About 1836 he was made county commissioner, and held that office for several terms. He and his wife were influential members of the Christian Church. Seven children were born to their union, two sons and five daughters, of whom three still survive, namely: Noah J.; William Sims, of Chicago; and Genevieve, wife of Dr. Charles Seaton, of Martinsville, Ind. Martha Jane, deceased, was the wife of William Williams, of Washington township; Emeline was the wife of Dr. Tilford, of Martinsville. Mrs. Rebecca Major died in 1856, at the age of fifty-four years.

The Clark family, to which Mrs. Rebecca (Clark) Major belonged, was of English origin, and her father, Joshua Clark, was born in Pennsylvania, east of the Alleghany mountains. He married Hannah Parsons, and they had nine children. In 1814, when their daughter Rebecca was twelve years old, the family moved out to Indiana, and settled among the pioneers in Brookville, where Mr. and Mrs. Clark spent the remainder of their lives. He died at the age of fifty-eight years. Their trip west was typical of the times, having been made by way of the Ohio river from Pittsburgh, whence their household belongings and wagons were conveyed by boat, the horses being sent around by land to Cincinnati, where they met the goods. From that point the journey was continued by wagon to Brookville.

Until he was nine years of age Noah J. Major lived near Brookville, where he had the common advantages for schooling available at the time. In 1832, when his parents removed to Morgan county, he continued in the winter schools of that day, finishing at the old County Seminary, under Prof. Edmondson, in 1842, after which he taught three years in the winter schools. He and his present wife became members of the C. L. S. C. (Pansy Class), receiving diplomas of high grade for a four years course of reading.

However, in spite of his early labors as a professional man, Mr. Major has always been deeply interested in agriculture, and with the exception of two years spent in Martinsville has enjoyed the pleasures and comforts of rural life. It has been his aim and delight to excel in agricultural pursuits. Since 1844 he has never missed raising a corn crop or feeding stock, and is still at it, in his eighty-fifth year. Until his marriage he lived at home, and his father then gave him a good start in life. For two years he worked his father's farm, at the end of that time buying eighty acres of the old homestead; he received fifty-six acres more at his father's death. This land was nearly all cleared, and he erected a house thereon, as well as barns and other buildings, and there made his home until 1878. During the year 1879 he lived in Martinsville, in 1881 returning to the country. At that time he settled on his present home, the property of his wife and her children. Together they own 340 acres of finely improved land, the home being situated in Section 13, Town 12, Washington township, five miles from Martinsville. They have every convenience enjoyed by the modern farming class, with the privileges of free gravel road, telephone and rural free delivery service.

On Sept. 5, 1844, Noah J. Major was married to Miss Hannah Hastings, daughter of Job and Keziah (Norcross) Hastings. Mrs. Major died when her first-born, Shelburn, was but eighteen days old, and he also passed away at the age of nine months. On Oct. 15, 1846, Mr. Major married (second) Miss Mary Eva Rudicell, daughter of John and Sarah (Stipp) Rudicell, and five children blessed this union, namely: (1) Isabella died in her fifty-first year. She was twice married, her first husband being Jared P. Hadley, by whom she had two sons, Clayton M. and Noah J. By her second union, to Benjamin R. Green, she had two daughters, Ora and Eva. (2) Sylvanus, who is a farmer on the old homestead, married Ella Hendricks, and their children are Horace, Isis, Otis, Mary, Noah J. and Marguerite. (3) Amanda died at the age of twenty-two years. (4) Harriet died in infancy. (5) Laura married Nathan H. Gilbert, and they live in Brown township. They reared four children to maturity, Earl, Don, Ralph and Floy, but Don died at the age of twenty-one years and Ralph at the age of twenty-two.

Mrs. Mary Eva Major died July 7, 1872, aged forty-four years, and on Nov. 4, 1875, Mr. Major was married (third) to Mrs. Margaret Ann Piercy. No children were born to this union.

At the time of her marriage to Mr. Major Mrs. Major was the widow of Joseph W. Piercy, and she was the youngest of four children of Dr. Samuel W. and Margaret R. (Coke) Brown, and granddaughter of Rev. Samuel Brown, of pioneer Methodism. She was born in Brandenburg, Ky., June 1, 1840. Her life from her fourth until her twelfth year was passed in Leavenworth, Ind., but in 1852 she returned with her parents to Kentucky. Her school days were spent in Owensboro and Hardinsburg. In December, 1859, she came to Cloverdale, Ind., where she made the acquaintance of Joseph W. Piercy, to whom she was married Jan. 12, 1862. In the winter of 1866 Mr. Piercy moved to Martinsville, where he and his brother John H. Piercy engaged in the drug business, purchasing the store now owned by William H. Tarleton. In 1870 Mr. Piercy was elected clerk of the Morgan Circuit court, and was serving in that capacity at the time of his death.

To Mr. and Mrs. Piercy were born five children, four sons and one daughter. Two sons died in infancy. Those surviving are: (1) Watt B. Piercy, of Boise, Idaho, was united in marriage with Miss Magdaline, third daughter of the Hon. and Mrs. Eb. Henderson, Feb. 1, 1888. Their children are Alice, Philip H., Joseph Ebenezer and Esther. (2) Joseph W. Piercy, Jr., resides in Indianapolis. On March 9, 1892, he wedded Miss Mary A., only daughter of Rev. John H. and Martha (Stark) Ketcham. They have one daughter Josephine. (3) Eleanor Piercy became the wife of Arthur Cunningham, of De Pauw University, Sept. 5, 1888, and closed her earthly life May 9, 1892, leaving one daughter, Eleanor.

Joseph W. Piercy, Sr., served for a time in the war of the Rebellion, as first lieutenant of Company K, 97th Regiment, Indiana Volunteers. He was honorably discharged on account of disability. He died July 6, 1872.

Mrs. Major is a woman of superior mind and training, and known throughout her acquaintanceship for high qualities of intellect and womanhood. She is a member of the Christian Church, the W. C. T. U., and the Martinsville Woman's Club.

Mr. Major became a member of the Christian Church when nineteen years of age, and has been preaching for over fifty years. His services have been sought in times of grief, and his words of encouragement and cheer have been welcomed at hundreds of marriages, while his sympathy and comforting help have lightened the gloom of many funerals. He has held the position of elder for over half a century.

Mr. Major is a man of deep convictions on political questions as well as in religious matters. Originally a Whig, he eventually became a Republican. The only political office he ever held, however, was that of representative in the State Legislature, of which body he was a member for four sessions—entering first in 1865, as a Republican; in 1870, as an independent; in 1878, as a Greenbacker. Since 1884 he has cast his ballot in support of the principles of the Prohibition party, and in the year mentioned was the only man in Martinsville who so voted. Mr. Major has been a total abstainer for sixty-five years, and he has the courage of his convictions. Where he sees a conscious leading, he follows. He does not hate the man that makes whiskey, nor the man that sells whiskey, nor the man that drinks whiskey, but the infernal whiskey.

Elder Major is a remarkable man in his community. He is a man of the backwoods, with something of the present day finish. There is no phase of the development of this section, from its primitive state, with which he is not familiar. The experiences of pioneer life are the realities of his youthful days, and the recollections of his intimate association with those vital forces of the early times are among his most cherished memories. Born in a log house, schooled for the most part in a log house, he courted and was married in a log house, and began housekeeping in a log house. He has carried up the corners of many log dwellings and log barns. He has plowed among roots and stumps, rolled logs, made rail fences, reaped wheat with a sickle, trod it out with horses, helped to build flat-boats and take them to New Orleans, laden with pork and lard. Notwithstanding this, he is an up-to-date man in the best sense of the phrase. His intelligence and business instincts have proved equal to every demand made upon them. He served the public as guardian, executor, administrator and assignee for forty-one years consecutively, until he utterly refused further appointments. In that capacity, and as a continuous resident of this section for so many years, he had the opportunity of acquiring valuable and reliable data concerning local affairs and families, which he has carefully preserved, and much of which he has published for the benefit of an interested public. Few men have been as highly regarded as authorities on such matters as he. He has written a number of pioneer sketches which from time to time have appeared in the Martinsville Republican and the Morgan County Democrat, and proved of great interest to the readers of his own and adjoining counties. It is quite probable they will appear in book form in the near future.

Elder Major believes in squaring every act of life by the Golden Rule, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. His influence on the moral development of his community has been a recognized factor in that growth for many years, and he is beloved, respected and admired, throughout a wide circle of friends, to a degree enjoyed by very few men. His counsel and aid now, as always, are highly regarded by all who have the privilege of seeking his help on any matter.

Judge George W. Grubbs writes of Mr.

Major, under date of April 13, 1908: "Noah J. Major is regarded as one of the best, most reliable and well informed citizens of Morgan county. He is of the highest character as a man and citizen, foremost in all movements for the best interests of the community, a man with probably the largest acquaintance and best historical knowledge of the people of his section of the State. He is a man of the highest moral character, foremost in all movements for the elevation and betterment of the community—a man universally respected and beloved by all the people of his section of the State."

The following sketch, from Mr. Major's pen, will be of interest to our readers:

MORGAN COUNTY was organized in 1822 with Martinsville as the county seat. Joshua Taylor, John Gray, James Cutler, Samuel Scott and Joel Furgeson were, jointly, the donors of 160 acres of land upon which the town was platted. Cyrus Whetzel is generally supposed to be the first settler (1818). Philip Hodges was the first land-owner (1820) and Humphry Roberts the first white child born in the county, date of birth unknown. He lived to be about sixty-nine years old; was a gunsmith by trade.

Among those born in Morgan county who have attained to some distinction is Franklin Landers, farmer, stock-feeder, merchant, politician, State senator and Congressman. A close second is Ebenezer Henderson, farmer, stock-feeder, pork packer, politician, county treasurer, State senator, auditor of State (four years), chairman of Democratic State Central Committee and presidential elector.

Among the eminent divines born in the county were W. B. F. Treat, Joseph Woods, D. D., and Urban C. Brewer. Mr. Brewer began preaching at sixteen years of age, and fairly won the distinction of the foremost boy preacher in the county.

Of native born lawyers we may name F. P. A. Phelps, Judge Milton H. Parks, Hon. E. F. Branch (Speaker of the House of Representatives), C. G. Renner, Oscar Matthews, Karl Minton, Murray Bain and S. C. Kivett. Of distinguished lawyers not born in the county, but local practitioners in the Morgan Circuit court, we may write W. R. Harrison, W. S. Sherlev, ex-Judge G. W. Grubbs, and James H. Jordan, now on the Supreme bench of Indiana.

Among the physicians, those born in the county are Drs. John and D. P. Kennedy, Drs.

U. H. Farr, H. C. Robinson and son Frank C., A. S. Tilford, E. M. Sweet of the National Sanitarium, Grant Monical, Otis Sweet, W. E. Hendricks of the Home Lawn Mineral Springs, Keylon Williams, Dr. Spoons and others. Among the old-time physicians who rode horse-back from house to house, night and day, in fair weather and foul, were Drs. John Sims, F. A. Matheny, McCorkle, B. F. Barnard, Walters, Freeman, Hoyt, Cal. Hendrix, Tilford, Blackstone, Tarleton, Clymer and Dozier, Tompkins, Thwing, H. W. Cure and Dr. Bradley. Dr. Hussey was about the first in Mooresville; then Fridinger, Hiner, Dr. Hawk and son, G. B. Mitchell, A. M. Reagan and others. Dr. Fridinger practiced for a time at Waverly, but Jeremiah Vincent was the principal physician for many years. Dr. White practised in Greene township, and Dr. Trower located in Morgantown in 1836. R. C. Griffith, another prominent physician, is still living in Morgantown. Dr. Lindley of Brooklyn, Dr. Wright, the well-beloved physician of Monrovia, Stogsdell, a good doctor, but an "undesirable citizen" who left the county for the county's good, Drs. Charles, Grafton and Guy Seaton are products of Hall.

MOVING IN. Men with their families came from their old homes in Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee and the Carolinas, over mountains of difficulties, landing in Marion, Morgan, Johnson and Hendricks counties in the spring and fall of 1820, some coming as late as the last days of November, to begin the settlement of central Indiana.

James Hadley and John Jones, from North Carolina, arrived in Monroe township, Morgan county, on the 20th day of November, 1820. They were brothers-in-law and members of the Friends Church. Their wives and children were kindly received, for the time being, in the scattered homes of the early settlers. Mr. Hadley with his hired man and four others began the erection of his log cabin the next day, and completed it in seven days, sawed a nail, a pane of glass or a strip of sawed timber, and the family moved in on the eighth day after their arrival. Mr. Jones' cabin was built in the same manner. Jones and Hadley were good representatives of the early settlers and their way of starting things in the wilderness was typical of all early settlers. The winter of 1820 found about fifty-four families in Morgan county to be trained to pioneer life, acclimated and have their "meat hardened."

There was a "nigger-head" corncracker on White Lick, where the town of Brooklyn now stands, but the hand-mill and hominy-mortar got most of the trade. It was up to the breadwinner to find something to "crack" for the first year. These fifty-four families numbered some two hundred and fifty souls. Within two years they were re-inforced by one hundred and twenty other families, giving a population of about eight hundred.

Peter Monical was, perhaps, the first local M. E. preacher in the county. Thomas Lockheart was a minister in the Christian Church, and Hiram T. Craig of the Baptist. Benjamin Bull was first local lawyer at Martinsville, Dr. John Sims first physician, Dr. Hussey first physician at Mooresville. Samuel Moore was the founder of Mooresville, and the first merchant and trader. Washburn, Allison and the Cutlers were first merchants at Martinsville.

The first commodities for export were ginseng, beeswax and bucks' horns, wagoned to Louisville, Ky. "Sang" was legal tender—also coon-skins and deer-skins. The cash system in those days was hardly known. Bartering and the credit system prevailed everywhere. What little there was of money consisted of gold, silver and later on paper. Nevertheless, the people succeeded in business fairly well, with their "bits" (twelve and one-half cents), picayunes (six and one-fourth cents), and Mexican dollars. The old-time copper cents were of little use, other than a plaything for the children and to tie around the necks of the babies, of which there was a good crop every year, wet or dry. "Uncle Sam," who was in the real estate business, absorbed most of the gold at $1.25 per acre, cash in hand. When a North Carolinian or Kentuckian had saved $100 in gold and landed in central Indiana on a 160-acre tract of land, he was "happy as a clam at high tide." He was now assured of a good home for himself and family in the near future, mixed up with enough adventure, privation and hard work to make life worth living.

Morgan county lies at the head of flatboat navigation on West White river to New Orleans, a distance of 1,800 miles. This mode of transportation began in 1825 and continued until the railroads were built in 1853. It has been computed that not less than 345 boats were sent along this water-way between 1829 and 1853. 4,500,000 feet of lumber were used in their construction, most of which was the finest poplar that ever grew on White river. They cost about $80,000, and the cargoes were worth $1,350,000. These boats were sent about fifteen in number once per year, in March and April, with sixty men to man them. When unloaded in New Orleans they were sold for about $25 each. They were loaded with pork, wheat, flour, corn and lumber, but pork was the principal commodity. For twenty years more money came to this county through this mode of transportation than through all other channels combined.

GRIST MILLS. Colonel Lyon bought and remodeled the Brooklyn Mills early in the '20's. Several other mills were soon started on White-lick Creek, by Messrs. Moon, Moss, Samuel Moore and Sutliff. Some of the remains of Moon's mill are still standing and visible from the I. & N. railroad bridge looking west, about a furlong's distance. John W. Cox built the first mills on White river about the year 1824 or 1825, at a point now called High Rock, or Kirkwood. These mills were in active operation for more than forty years. Cornelius Free built the celebrated Waverly mills in 1837. It was one of the finest mills in central Indiana. All of White river could be turned on the wheels of a dry time, with an eight-foot fall, given by the feeder-dam and a short section of the old Indiana Central canal. Mrs. McKinsey, daughter of Cyrus Whetzell, says she has seen as many as 100 wagons around this mill in one day. Other mills were built on White river, southwest of Martinsville, in a very early day, by Mr. Pumphrey, Freidrick Buckhart, Joshua Evilsizer and Mr. Myres. Myres' dam broke the back of many a flat-boat in its time. The mills on White river ran the year round, excepting during high tides, when they were stopped by back-water. The mills on the creeks were frequently closed on account of long periods of dry weather.

The first carding machine at Mooresville was built and operated by Mr. Worth. Tolbert and Israel Gilpin built the first carding machine in Martinsville, propelled by an inclined wheel with three blind horses.

HOME MANUFACTURES. Tanyards, hatter shops, blacksmith and wagon shops, tailor and shoe shops were established in various parts of the county in a very early day; also tin shops and potteries. John J. (Jeff) Graham is said to have had the first shoe store in Martinsville, connected with his tanyard, hiring journeyman shoemakers to make the shoes and boots. After the sheep industry and flax raising got under way, the every-day clothing was made at home, with the addition of cotton yarn shipped in by the merchants. Early in the spring the sheep were sheared and the wool washed and picked and sent to the carding machine to await its time, which would often be two or more weeks. Meantime the flax, having been rotted, dried, broken, "scutched" and hackled, all by hand, was ready for the distaff, from which it was transferred by deft fingers to the "flyers" of the little wheel, where it was made into thread and wound on the reel—120 threads to the cut. The little wheel was propelled by means of a treadle, much as the present-day sewing-machine, the spinner sitting on a stool or chair. Our mothers did not make "Irish" linen, but a good quality of Hoosier linen, which, fitted to a boy's back on a frosty morning, relieved him of the necessity of a shower bath. Towels, table-cloths, shirts, pillow slips and sheets were for many years made of flax. Tow-linen was used for straw-ticks, ropes, grain sacks and pantaloons. The flax fabrics of the pioneers gradually gave way to cotton cloth, as it was cheaper and more comfortable. But jeans, flannel and linsey stayed with us for years. When the rolls came from the carding machine, all neatly packed in a sheet, pinned together with thorns, our mothers ordered the big wheel set on the back porch and the girls became "floor walkers." When a girl could reel off eighteen cuts per day, and help mother do the kitchen work, she was fitted for marriage, with all the accompanying festivities. Where now is the bare-foot girl in the cotton dress, surrounded by morning glories and "touch-me-nots," turning the wheel or banging the loom, meanwhile humming "Old Sister Phoebe how merry were we," while her big brother went whistling to his plow, "The Girl I Left Behind Me," all lending enchantment to pioneer life? We have seen hundreds of lovely girls, good and true, all furbelowed, frilled and frizzled, but none more charming than the girl of old "in her calico dress," turning rolls into thread, and thread into cloth.

Slowly her shuttle swings to and fro,
Catching the hum of the river's flow,
Culling the song of the birds and bees,
Gleaning the murmur of forest trees.

Now she is blending the blush of rose,
Weaving it in as the shuttle goes;
Tips of the trees by the sunlight kissed,
Jewels of dew that the sun has missed.
God and contentment and love and play,
These are the skeins she wove every day.

The reader will perceive that we have woven in some of Byron William's "Dreams," changing the form so as to fit our girl of the loom.

For nine years after the county organization we were joined to several other counties for representation in the General Assembly. From 1822 to 1831 the senators were John M. Coleman, James B. Gregory, Levi Jessup and Lewis Maston; and the representatives were Hugh Barnes, Eli Dixon, Daniel Harris, Thomas J. Mattock, Dr. Hussey and Alex. Worth; the two last named were citizens of Mooresville, at the time of election. Under the old Constitution the elections were held once a year—first Monday in August—for representatives, and every third year for senators. The Legislature met once every year—generally in the fall season—until 1852, when the present Constitution was adopted, changing the election to once in two years. The date and order of their election from 1831 is as follows: John W. Cox, R., 1831-32; Grant Stafford, R., 1833-34, and senator, 1836-40; W. H. Craig, R., 1835; Hiram Matthews, R., 1836; Dr. John Sims, R., 1837; Jonathan Williams, R., 1838; John Eccles, R., 1839; Perry M. Blankenship, R., 1840; P. M. Parks, S., 1841 to 1847; Dr. Francis A. Matheny, R., 1841-42; A. B. Conduitt, R., 1844, S., 1848-56; Isaac W. Tackett, R., 1845-54; Oliver R. Dougherty, R., 1846-47; Alfred M. Delevan, R., 1848-49, S., 1850; William P. Hammond, R., 1850; Enos S. Taber, R., 1852; Algernon Sydney Griggs, S., 1854, Joint R., 1868; Cyrus Whetzel, R., 1858; John W. Ferguson, R., 1860; Jarvis J. Johnson, R., 1862; Franklin Landers, Joint S., 1860; Col. Samuel P. Oyler, Joint S., 1864; Ngah J. Major, R., 1864-70-78; Capt. John E. Greer, R., 1866; James V. Mitchell, R., 1868; Ebenezer Henderson, Joint S., 1868; James J. Maxwell, Joint S., 1872; Dr. Harvey Satterwhite, R., 1872; William S. Sherley, Joint R., 1872; Dr. John Kennedy, R., 1874; Major George W. Grubbs, 1876, S., 1878; Capt. David Wilson, R., 1880; Gabriel M. Overstreet, Joint S., 1882; James F. Cox, Joint S., 1886; George A. Adams, R., 1882-84-88; Alfred W.

Scott, R., 1886; William Harvey Brown, R., 1890; William Davidson Bain, R., 1892; Joseph J. Moore, Joint S., 1890; Adam Howe, R., 1894; Quincy Adams Blankenship, R., 1896-98; William E. McCord, Joint S., 1894; F. A. Joss, Joint S., 1898; James M. Bishop, R., 1900; D. P. Smith, S., 1900; E. F. Branch, R., 1902-04-06, elected Speaker of the House, in 1907.

From the beginning until 1854 the voters were divided into Whigs and Democrats, and the party lines were strictly drawn from 1828 to the last named date. The Democrats were: Cox, Williams, Eccles, Parks, Matheny, Delevan and Tackett. The Whigs were: Stafford, Matthews, Sims, Craig, Blankenship, Conduitt, Taber, Hammond, Dougherty and Griggs. After the Republican organization, Craig, Blankenship, Matthews, Dougherty and Griggs espoused the Republican cause, while Taber and Conduitt affiliated with the Democrats. Of the last named forty-three members, sixteen were members of the M. E. Church, twelve of the Christian Church, three Presbyterians, three Universalists, one Baptist, and one member of the Dutch Reformed Church. There were five doctors, fourteen lawyers, one miller, one blacksmith, one pastor and evangelist, four ministers, six farmers, who followed no other business, sixteen who connected farming with merchandising and other callings. The general character of the foregoing fifty-three men would compare favorably with that of any delegation sent to the State capital during the eighty years past since the county's organization.

We cannot yet lay claim to the birth and education of any great man, as men count greatness, but he may now be going to school or soon will be going, and when the supreme hour comes, he may arise and flash a story or a poem across Indiana's literary horizon as bright and lasting as a comet's tail. Or he may develop into a "Tall Sycamore of the Wabash" or a later Albert Jeremiah, "spell-binder." He is bound to come.

[NOTE—The writer has had the honor of a personal acquaintance with almost all of the members of the Legislature elected from this county during the last seventy-five years, and is glad to pay this little tribute of respect to their patriotism and moral worth, and preserve their names a while longer from inevitable forgetfulness.

N. J. MAJOR.]

DR. SAMUEL W. BROWN was born in Barren county, Ky., March 17, 1811. He was one of eleven children born to Rev. Samuel and Cassandra (Watt) Brown, and the eldest of three sons who, in time, became successful physicians. His father was a pioneer Methodist preacher, at one time a colleague of the Rev. James B. Finly. His labors were chiefly confined to Kentucky and Tennessee, but in the year 1820 he was appointed to what was then called "White Water circuit," with Arthur Elliott. This is believed to be the only year he preached in Indiana. He was a man of winning presence, possessed of a genial nature, a preacher of ability and ranked with the best theologians of his day.

The labors of the itinerant were arduous and required the absence of the husband and father a greater part of the time, it often taking weeks and even months to "make the rounds," for the Conference in those days included several States, or parts of States. An increasing family and a desire to give his children better educational advantages caused the elder Brown to locate in Brandenburg, Ky., where he practiced his profession, that of medicine, but continued to preach when not professionally engaged. He was a citizen of marked influence and died regretted by all. He was of Scotch-Irish descent on his father's side, and had a strain of French blood on the mother's side, she being a Montgomery.

The mother of S. W. Brown belonged to an old and sturdy Scotch family, noted for industry, intelligence and piety. She was eminently fitted for the life of an itinerant preacher's wife. When or where duty called she followed, with the unquestioning faith and courage of the true heroine.

As the son of a pioneer preacher, Samuel W. Brown passed his early years as the lives of all such were passed, in moving from place to place, as the interest of the cause seemed to demand. His education was obtained from the schools he attended wherever his father's lot was cast. After his father's location his advantages were better. He spent several years in the study of medicine with his father, making due preparation for his chosen profession.

On March 11, 1832, he was united in marriage with Miss Margaret R. Coke, of Breckinridge county, Ky. She was one of a family of twelve children, all of whom reached maturity. Her father, William Coke, was of English stock, born either in Virginia or brought there from England at an early age. He married Miss Elizabeth Gore, of Nelson county, Ky., a member of a family of fourteen children. The Gores were prominent citizens of the above mentioned county. Mrs. Brown was a woman of sterling qualities, not easily discouraged, and a true helpmate. Indeed, much of the Doctor's success in his profession was owing to her interest in his work, and her sympathy and assistance in all matters pertaining thereto. She was of sound judgment and a safe counselor at all times. Early in his professional career Dr. Brown moved to Leavenworth, Ind., where he soon became popular as a physician and where he formed a partnership with his younger brother, Albert Brown. But the latter's career was short though promising, for he soon fell a victim to consumption, and passed away almost in the beginning of his professional life. Dr. Brown's oldest daughter, Elizabeth C., was also smitten with the same fatal disease, and died in her eighteenth year. His only surviving child is the wife of N. J. Major. One daughter, Nancy, died when four years of age. The son, William C., died in infancy.

In the late summer of 1852 Dr. Brown returned to his native State, and located in Daviess county, where he purchased a farm and continued the practice of medicine with his usual success. Then after a few years there came a time when the political horizon became threatening and the Doctor disposed of his property and came North, locating in Cloverdale, Putnam county, Ind., in December, 1859. Although born and educated in the South and loving her people, yet he never could bring himself to believe in the "divine" right of one man to own and rule over another without his consent. Consequently he was anti-slavery in principle. Believing that trouble was coming to this nation in the near future, he left the South in time to escape personal strife, though at a financial loss.

As a physician Dr. Brown was sympathetic and conscientious, always responding to the call of the sick and suffering when not practically impossible. He did not stop to inquire what remuneration he was to receive for his services. He believed it to be his duty, as it was his greatest pleasure, to minister to the relief of suffering humanity. Not only that, but he frequently provided such comforts for his poorer patients as their condition demanded. As a citizen he was law-abiding, his influence being always on the side of right and justice. As a Christian his life was consistent. While a Methodist in every fibre of his make-up, yet he was large-hearted, and recognized all good men as brethren. He was, to quote the words of his friend, Rev. William C. Smith, "A man of commanding presence, a noble, dignified, Christian gentleman." The last five or six years of his life were passed in Martinsville, Ind. His death occurred in February, 1879. He won many friends during his short residence here by his qualities of mind and heart. He was devoted to his church, his friends and his family. "He loved his fellowman."

WILLIAM RIPLEY HARRISON, one of the last of the pioneer lawyers who practised in the circuit courts of Morgan and Owen counties, Ind., died at his home on North Jefferson street, in Martinsville, Ind., on Monday, Oct. 15, 1905, at eleven o'clock, in his eighty-third year, after a life of professional activity covering over sixty years. He was born in Knox county, Tenn., Dec. 6, 1822, but removed with his parents to Kentucky in early youth, being reared in Maysville, Mason county. In his seventeenth year he was thrown upon his own resources. His early education was obtained in the country schools of Kentucky. Thence he went to Ohio, where he attended an academy in Delaware county, taught school and kept books, meantime employing his leisure moments in reading law and assisting lawyers. After this experience he was first admitted to practice in the Mason county (Ky.) Circuit Court in 1846. A business trip to Indiana in May, 1848, led to his locating in Martinsville in June of that year. Compelled to live in the State one year before he could be admitted to the Bar, he spent the intervening period in teaching school, furthering his law studies and familiarizing himself with the Indiana code, and in 1849 he passed the required examination, and received his certificate entitling him to practice law from Judge David McDonald. From that time until the close of his long life, he was continuously engaged in the practice of law in Morgan and adjoining counties, being for a long period the senior member of the firm of Harrison & Shirley, later of Harrison & McCord, and for perhaps the last fifteen years of his life doing business in his own name.

Mr. Harrison was a marked man both as a citizen and as a lawyer. His angular and somewhat ungainly figure, his homely but strong and aggressive face, his ready wit and characteristic humor, his striking personality, made him an attractive figure at the Bar, and, joined with his learning in the law, his matchless nerve, his persistency, his power of clear statement, his homely logic and strong invective, his singular faculty of riveting the attention and convincing the judgment of the jury, gave him a reputation, standing and success enjoyed by few of his associates at the Bar, and made him a most formidable antagonist even when pitted against the ablest members of the Bar of the State. By his well known and accepted cognomen, "Rip" Harrison, he was known far and wide, not only among the members of the bar, but by others who did not enjoy his personal acquaintance. He was a most companionable and entertaining man. His fund of anecdote and humorous stories was inexhaustible, and with his quaint humor, his homely and irresistible mannerism, the twinkle of his eye and the droll expression of his mobile face, he was unequalled as an entertainer in whatever company he was thrown. He was so able and successful as a lawyer that for many years he was the acknowledged head of the Morgan County Bar, a Bar upon whose rolls were the names of many distinguished lawyers of Indiana. He met in important cases such distinguished legal lights as Benjamin Harrison, Joseph E. McDonald, Jonathan W. Gordon, Solomon Claypool, Delana E. Williamson, Pink Fishback, John T. Dye, Judge Byron K. Elliott (of Indianapolis), Gabriel Overstreet (of Franklin) and others of like fame, and they one and all recognized in him a foeman worthy of their steel. To the very last he was accorded their fellowship, friendship and respect as a lawyer. He had no specialty. He was an all around lawyer, one of the best and most successful the State has produced. He was a thorough trial lawyer in every sort of a case, civil, criminal, or equitable. He would give the same close attention, thorough preparation, vigorous prosecution and inimitable logic to the case of a poor widow or a wronged girl, where there was scanty hope of fees, as to that of the richest client or great corporation. It is within the memory of his associates at the Bar that perhaps his greatest speeches, bristling with logic, eloquence and invective, tinged with humor and incisive ridicule, seasoned with tenderness and pathos, spontaneous and natural, in which he swayed juries at his will, and compelled the wonder and admiration of all who heard, were made in such cases as these. He was the master of the art of accurate and strong pleading. He could state the most complicated cause of action in clear, logical and vigorous language. He wrote with care in a characteristic and beautiful hand. He was a master of good English, and his pleadings were ordinarily proof against demurrer, and rarely subject to criticism. If his opponent, in presenting a demurrer to his pleading, suggested any defect or absence of any probable material allegation, he did not wait for any ruling of the court but would promptly amend and express his thanks for the suggestion.

Mr. Harrison was aggressive but courteous, brusque in speech and manner, given sometimes to outbursts of apparent anger, impotence and irritability, but at heart he was as tender as a child and without capacity to hold malice. Toward the court he observed the deference and uniform courtesy of the old time lawyer, and, while a resolute fighter, he never failed in due consideration for opposing counsel. As a lawyer he was loyally and thoroughly true to his client, and whatever the cause of that client demanded, and the ethics of his profession warranted, he was ready to do; and he did with all his might irrespective of public opinion or criticism. In the fiercest legal contests he exhibited superb nerve and unflinching courage. He gave and received hard blows and did not flinch if overthrown. He always fought to a finish. His resources of attack and defense were unflinching, and in the conduct of a case he exhibited consummate tact and generalship.

Taking William R. Harrison altogether, he was a great lawyer, and his personality was unique and attractive, his mannerisms so characteristic, his power of eloquent and incisive statement so peculiarly his own, so "Harrisonian," that his name and fame as a lawyer and man are destined to live longer in the memory of those who knew him than that of probably any other man who since 1840 has practised in this judicial circuit. His brethren of the Bar in that circuit and elsewhere will miss him from the forum, which he so long graced and adorned.

The following words close the article written by his friend, George W. Grubbs, from which the foregoing was also taken: "We give this hour and service as a deserved tribute to him as an honored member of the Bar, and in our hearts and memories we will keep alive and treasure the many qualities he exhibited, the kindly life he lived, and the loyalty to duty and the right that marked him as a man, a friend and a lawyer. If Mr. Harrison was great as a lawyer, he was also great in the higher relation of citizen; for citizenship in a Republic is the highest and most responsible public relation. He was always alive to the best interests of the community in which he lived. He saw Martinsville grow from a struggling village to a flourishing city. He helped to attract its railroads, its industries, and, better than all, its substantial citizens. He was constantly alive to the moral welfare of the community, to its social life, to the purity of its home life, to the safety of its boys and girls. He was a courageous and wise leader in movements for social and political reforms, for law enforcement, and could always he depended upon when the forces of right and wrong were contending for mastery. His instincts and his convictions were for 'whatsoever things were true; whatsoever things were honest; whatsoever things were just, and whatsoever things were of good report,' and he thought upon these and stood by his convictions. He stood for noble living and a square deal. He was not a fanatic nor a hypocrite, but a clean, wholesome, attractive man of tact, resource and individuality, and fortunate was that movement for higher and better things that enlisted his heart, conscience and devotion. His presence and counsel will be missed in the gathering of the good people of Martinsville, when met to consult of the public good and to devise things that make for public weal and for purity. He lived to see many of the great ideals he cherished and loved realized in our home and public life, and then content he passed beyond, 'like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams.'

As intimated Mr. Harrison was very public spirited in the promotion of beneficial projects and progressive movements. He and "Jeff" Scott began the construction of the Fairland & Martinsville branch of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis railroad. Mr. Harrison was attorney for the Big Four railroad for twenty or twenty-five years. He served frequently as judge of Courts by appointment, and about 1853 was nominated on the Republican ticket for the State Legislature, but met with defeat. In 1871-72 he was secretary of the State Senate. Although nominally a Republican, Mr. Harrison was in fact a very independent type.

At the age of twenty-one years Mr. William R. Harrison was made a Mason in Kentucky, and about a year later was sent as delegate to the State Grand Lodge. He was initiated in Minerva Lodge, No. 116, F. & A. M., of the town of Minerva, Mason Co., Ky., in 1843, and after coming to Martinsville, Ind., helped to organize Martinsville Lodge, No. 74, of which he was the first worshipful master, although under the dispensation of James Perham, W. M.; Mr. Harrison was also a member of Osceola Chapter during its existence. He was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and served as trustee.

Mr. Harrison was three times married. On Oct. 15, 1850, he wedded Miss Elizabeth J. Park, but the duration of their felicity was brief, as Mrs. Harrison was called away Oct. 20, 1851, leaving a child, Walter J., of whom further mention will be made. On Nov. 20, 1852, Mr. Harrison married Miss Mary Wilson, who died June 2, 1863, the mother of two children, Effie J. and Mary Ellen. For his third wife Mr. Harrison chose Miss Mary J. Crawford, a daughter of James and Delilah (Gray) Crawford, and to this union were born three children, Delilah, Martha C. and Agnes Virginia. Walter J. Harrison is a farmer and dairyman living on West Morgan street; he is married to Miss Emma Bishop, and has a family of four children, Bettie Jane, Maude, William Ralph, and Blanche. Effie J. Harrison was married to Prof. John Hesler, and died the mother of two daughters, Mary Rachel and Lelah Ellen. Mary Ellen Harrison is unmarried and is a cottage matron at the Soldiers & Sailors' Home at Knightstown, Ind. Delilah Harrison is the wife of Henry Goss, lives in the Southern part of Morgan county and has four children, William Ripley, Bessie, Fay and Ephraim. Martha C. Harrison is the wife of Odin R. Smith, of Martinsville, clerk of Morgan county and has three children, Mary V., Sidney H. and William Bartholomew. Agnes Virginia Harrison is attending school in Indianapolis, but her home is in Martinsville, Indiana.

Mrs. Mary J. (Crawford) Harrison died July 2, 1901, in the faith of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which all the family are members.

Mr. Harrison's ancestors, paternal and maternal, were of New England. His parents, William and Martha (Hitchcock) Harrison, were natives, respectively, of Massachusetts and Connecticut, and through his mother he was a grandson of Benjamin Hitchcock, a native of Wales and a weaver by trade, who came to America from England and settled in Connecticut. He was a patriot in the Revolution. About 1784 he married Mary Johnson, who long survived him, dying in 1835. Mr. Hitchcock passed away Nov. 19, 1817, in Connecticut. They had a large family, all born at Bethlehem, Litchfield Co., Conn., of whom we have the following record: Samuel Johnson, born Feb. 4, 1786; Lowly, Aug. 6, 1787; Lucy, April 23, 1790; Delia, March 9, 1792; Mary (or Polly), Dec. 19, 1793; Martha, Dec. 3, 1795; Alma, Dec. 2, 1797; Abigail (or Nabby), Oct. 16, 1799; Sarah (or Sally), Feb. 23, 1802; Betsy, Aug. 10, 1804; Benjamin R., Aug. 5, 1806; Sophronia, Oct. 4, 1808. One of the daughters married a Platt and became the mother of Senator Orville C. Platt, of Connecticut, who was thus a full cousin of William Ripley Harrison. Both the Hitchcocks and the Platts were very prominent families of the East.

William Harrison, father of William R. Harrison, prepared for the ministry when young, but he never followed the sacred calling. He became a teacher and went to Ohio, where he met and married Mrs. Martha (Hitchcock) Clark, about 1820. Her first husband, Thompson Clark, whom she married about 1818, died about 1820. Mr. Harrison then went to Louisiana, and did some business at Baton Rouge and New Orleans, and was afterward in the mountains of Tennessee for a year or two. He next went to Kentucky, and followed his profession of teacher at various places, but his residence was in Pendleton county, Kentucky, where he died in 1840. His widow then returned to Ohio, and later came to Martinsville, Ind., passing the last four years of her life with her son, William R. She expired in 1880, in her eighty-fifth year. Mrs. Harrison was reared an Episcopalian, but later became a Methodist, and she died in that faith. William Harrison was a Presbyterian.

To William and Martha (Hitchcock) Harrison were born children as follows: William

Ripley; Frederick A., late of Martinsville; Virginius (or Jake) of Colorado; Oscar, also of Colorado; Mary R., who died in infancy; and Martha, who married Marks Smith, and died in 1866.

ODIN R. SMITH, who has been clerk of the Circuit court of Morgan county, Ind., since Jan. 1, 1907, was born Oct. 5, 1867, on his father's farm near Spencer, Owen Co., Ind. His grandfather, Marcus Smith, a native of Virginia, was a pioneer farmer of Owen county, where he died at about the age of eighty-two years. He and his wife, Malinda (Pierson), were members of the Christian Church. They had a family of seven children: Bartholomew, Samuel, Doctor Presley, Jesse H., Juretta (who married Robert Percy, and resides in Morgan county), Marietta (unmarried) and Francis (who married Charles Maderias and resides on a farm near Spencer). The mother of this family died when about seventy-eight years old.

Bartholomew Smith, father of Odin R. Smith, was born Feb. 5, 1837, in Owen county, Ind., but for many years he has been a prominent resident of Morgan county. He was sheriff of this county for four years, 1890 to 1894, and has successfully followed farming, still owning a farm in Clay township. He and his wife now reside near Brooklyn, Morgan county. In August, 1861, he married Mary J. Hancock, who was born near Frankfort, Ky., daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Gilpin) Hancock, both also natives of Kentucky, and of old Virginia ancestry. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith were born five children: Odin R.; Beatrice, wife of Leslie McNeff; Miss Bertha, who is deputy county clerk of Morgan county; Rosetta, who died unmarried at the age of eighteen; and Lora H., a farmer of Clay township, Morgan county. Bartholomew Smith is a Mason, belonging to Brooklyn Lodge, F. & A. M. During the Civil war he was a soldier in the 10th Indiana Battery, 4th Corps.

Odin R. Smith was educated in the common schools and the State Normal School at Terre Haute. Until he was twenty-one he followed his father's calling, farming, and then began to teach school. After two terms he became deputy sheriff under his father. Again he taught two terms, in a country school, and was then appointed deputy county clerk, under William A. Conner. He served two years, 1897 and 1898, and then after teaching two years in Martinsville he was elected principal of the ward schools there, continuing in that position three years. In 1902 he purchased a farm near Martinsville, in Jefferson township, consisting of 370 acres, 330 of which he still farms. In November, 1906, he was elected to the office he now holds, that of clerk of the Circuit Court of Morgan county. Mr. Smith is a Republican in political sentiment, and a Mason in fraternal connection, being a member of the Blue Lodge and of Osceola Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, of Martinsville. Mr. Smith's reputation as a citizen, an intelligent agriculturist, a teacher and a public official has been creditable to himself and to the excellent family to which he belongs. He is progressive, public-spirited and substantial, the kind of man that can be depended upon to serve his community well.

On Jan. 26, 1893, Mr. Smith was married to Miss Martha C. Harrison, daughter of William R. and Mary J. (Crawford) Harrison. They have had a family of three children, Mary Virginia, Sidney Harrison and William Bartholomew. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Martinsville.

BENJAMIN F. ASKREN. The death of Benjamin F. Askren removed from Warren township and Marion county a prominent farmer and an upright citizen who was well and favorably known over a large extent of the county. He was born June 17, 1840, in Warren township, a son of Thomas and Mary (Demoret) Askren, early settlers in Marion county.

Benjamin F. Askren was reared on his father's farm and attended the local schools. In 1863 he enlisted for service in the Civil war, in the 70th Ind. V. I., and was wounded in the battle of Resaca, and returned to his home in 1865.

On Jan. 15, 1874, Benjamin F. Askren was united in marriage with Martha J. Perry, born in 1844, a daughter of John and Margaret (Heizer) Perry, the former of whom was born in Illinois, later moved to Indiana and still later to Iowa, where the father died. The other members of the family came to Lawrence county, Ind., just prior to the Civil war, the father having died in 1860. Mrs. Askren's maternal grandfather was born in Pennsylvania and removed from there to Illinois and later to Indiana. Mrs. Askren's mother passed away in 1885. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Perry were: James married Mary Hensley, and is a farmer near Kokomo; Martha J. is the widow of Benjamin F. Askren; Mary is the wife of Asa Newhouse; Lizzie married Thomas Speeze, a farmer of Marion county; Edward married Kansas Shank and they live at Irvington; Howard, deceased, married E. Perry; William married Ida McVay; Drucilla, deceased, married Henry Newhouse.

The late Benjamin F. Askren was a very successful farmer and fruit grower, and owned an estate of 475 acres, almost all of which is under the plow. Few farms in this township can boast of more fruitful orchards, Mr. Askren taking a great deal of interest in his large peach and apple orchards, and devoting much time to their care. He was a man who loved his home, and he took pride in having comfort and attractiveness in his surroundings.

Mr. Askren is survived by his wife and six children, namely: John, who married Lizzie Ruark, is employed as a stenographer in the recorder's office; Samuel is a farmer and married Leona Baxter; Annie married James McConnell, who farms on the old McConnell place; Charles carries on farming for his mother; Benjamin H. is at home; and Laura, is the wife of Albert Cotton, a corn inspector. In politics Mr. Askren was a Republican, and he always took an active interest in party matters. He belonged to the local G. A. R. Post, and was valued by his comrades. He was a man who was highly esteemed by all who knew him and lived an honorable, useful life.

JOHN ARMSTRONG, late of Indianapolis, was one of the prominent pioneers of this part of Marion county, having purchased the farm where he lived so many years in May, 1847, and made his location there in September of that year. The place was then known as the "Sam Houston" farm, and was slightly improved when it came into the possession of Mr. Armstrong.

Mr. Armstrong came from Muskingum county, Ohio, a few miles east of Zanesville, where he was born April 10, 1811, son of James and Isabella (Foster) Armstrong, pioneers of Muskingum county. His father was of Scotch-Irish ancestry. After the birth of their son John, James Armstrong and his wife removed to a location about four miles north, where John was reared to manhood.

John Armstrong was married in 1837 to Frances Ann Rowe, a native of Pennsylvania, after which he was engaged as a merchant at Adamsville, Ohio, for some four years. During this time he passed through the noted panic of 1837, and he felt it wise to exchange his interest in the stock of goods for a farm on the Muskingum river, where he lived for some years, improving his land. This place he sold to Joel White, a native of Virginia, and the land is still held by the White family. The sale was made in 1846, and the following year Mr. Armstrong came to his place in Marion county, Ind., which contained originally 240 acres. A few years later he and Martin Williams bought a tract of ninety acres to the east of this farm, paying eighty-five dollars an acre, and this was one of the first real estate transfers that took place in the vicinity after the location of Mr. Armstrong. The price was supposed to be exorbitant, but he cleared forty dollars an acre when he sold it to Mr. Condy. Mr. Armstrong always led an active and vigorous life, and was a very successful farmer and stock raiser. In former years he was also an extensive stock dealer. He was one of the oldest residents of Indianapolis, as was also his widow, who died March 1, 1906, in her ninetieth year, having been born June 4, 1816.

Mr. Armstrong and his wife had three children, only one of whom, Edwin J., survives, James W. and Mary J. (Mrs. Batty) being deceased. James W. Armstrong, the eldest, born in Muskingum county, Ohio, died in June, 1901, aged sixty-two years. He served as a soldier in the Civil war, being captain of Company I, 17th Ind. V. I. He was in partnership with his brother in the ice business and like him was a Scottish Rite Mason, attaining the thirty-second degree in the fraternity. He married Ida Ocorr, daughter of Henry Ocorr, a manufacturer of Indianapolis; they had no children. Mary J. Armstrong married George W. Batty, a farmer of Muskingum county, Ohio, and they had one child, Jessie A., who is the wife of Karl A. Gunder, manager of the wholesale drug supply house of the Whitall, Tatum Company, Chicago.

In politics Mr. Armstrong was a Whig in early days, and in later life became a Republican. He was a worthy member of the Robert Parks Methodist Church, to which his widow belongs, their association with the

John Armstrong

Methodist Church covering sixty years. Jesse Rowe, Mrs. Armstrong's father, was a Methodist minister, and the Armstrongs have always been liberal contributors to the support of the Gospel. They have been numbered among the most esteemed citizens of Marion county. The changes that time has wrought since their coming to this county, over fifty years ago, have been marvelous. Indianapolis, then a straggling hamlet, is now one of the most beautiful of the many beautiful cities of the Union, with a population exceeding two hundred thousand. North Indianapolis, for many years a farming section, has now become one of the most pleasant parts of the city. As Mr. Armstrong remarked, many people remove to the city when they retire from the more active duties of life. But in his case the city came to him, the farm being surrounded by pleasant homes and business places. The land that composed the farm has been divided into city lots, and on many of these have been erected fine homes. He erected a beautiful brick residence at No. 1036 West Thirtieth street, where he and his wife enjoyed their declining years in the benefits of an industrious and well-spent life. He was a man of large intelligence and possessed a fine memory notwithstanding his advanced years, for he had just reached ninety-one at the time of his death, April 10, 1902.

EDWIN J. ARMSTRONG was born Aug. 6, 1845, on his father's farm in Muskingum county, Ohio, and was but two years old when he came with his parents to Marion county, Ind., and to the farm on a portion of which he still lives. He attended private and public schools and concluded his studies at Asbury University, now DePauw University, at Greencastle, Ind. For many years he was engaged in business with his father, with whom he carried on farming until 1880, when he engaged in the ice business, as a member of the Indianapolis Ice Company. In 1901 he sold out, and, owing to ill health, practically retired, but later took up the real estate business with his father, handling their own real estate. He is still occupied in this way. Mr. Armstrong's title is quite remarkable, as his land was purchased in 1847 and has had but few transfers since its purchase from the United States Government. Mr. Armstrong is a prominent Scottish Rite Mason, a member of Mystic Tie Lodge, No. 398, A. F. & A. M., and Raper Commandery, both of Indianapolis.

Mr. Armstrong was married in Indianapolis on April 12, 1882, to Miss Charlotte Sherbonda, a native of Philadelphia, who died Sept. 14, 1892. She was a member of the Methodist Church.

ELI JAY, A. B., A. M., now past four score years of age, and practically retired from the educational work that filled so many years of his bright, busy and useful life, has, by precept and by example, wielded a great and healthy influence over the lives of the young people with whom he has been brought in close contact. He was born in Miami county, Ohio, Feb. 19, 1826, son of Walter Denny and Mary (Macy) Jay.

William Jay, his great-grandfather, was probably born in Maryland about 1720, but little is known of him or of his ancestry. About 1743 he married in Frederick county, Va., Mary Vestal, who was born in Chester county, Pa., daughter of William and Elizabeth (Mercer) Vestal, who moved with their family from Pennsylvania to Frederick county, Va., about 1730, and who were members of the Society of Friends. William and Mary (Vestal) Jay were the parents of eight children, five sons and three daughters, all born in Virginia between 1744 and 1765. William Jay died in Virginia, and it seems that his widow and her children joined in the large migration from the Northern Colonies to the Southern Provinces a few years before the Revolution. From 1750 to 1780 these homeseekers, many of whom were members of the Society of Friends, made large settlements in the newer portions of the Carolinas and Georgia. The Jay family with others of the name of Brooks, Brown, Coate, Compton, Cook, Coppock, Elleman, Embre, Evans, Furnas, Hasket, Hollingsworth, Jenkins, Jones, Kelly, Neal, O'Neill, Patty, Pearson, Pemberton, Pugh, Thomas, Thompson and Wright, mostly from Virginia and Pennsylvania, formed a large settlement on Bush river, then in the District of Ninety-six, now Newberry county, S. C., about forty miles west of Columbia.

John Jay, son of William and Mary, was born in Virginia, Oct. 26, 1752. On March 4, 1773, he married Elizabeth Pugh, who was born Sept. 6, 1755, daughter of Thomas Pugh (born in 1731) and his wife, Ann Wright (born in 1725). The Pugh family moved from Pennsylvania to Frederick county, Va., about 1750. Ellis Pugh, the founder of the family in America, was born in Wales in 1656, and emigrated in 1687 with his family to Pennsylvania, where he died in 1718. He was an approved minister of the Society of Friends, preaching in the Welsh language both in his native land and in America. Thomas Pugh, son of Ellis, was born in Wales in 1686, and his son Jesse, born in Pennsylvania in 1711, became the father of Thomas, whose daughter Elizabeth married John Jay. After living for more than thirty years in South Carolina, where their eleven children, seven sons and four daughters, were born between 1773 and 1795, and where three of their children married, John and Elizabeth Jay moved, in 1803, with all their family (except one son who came three years later) from South Carolina to Ohio, settling in Warren county. The father engaged in a mercantile business at Waynesville, and also carried on farming operations with his boys. He made two trips to Baltimore, Md., for goods, taking with him the products of the new country, such as peltries, with his own five-horse team, and bringing his goods back in the same way. On both these trips he was accompanied by his son, Walter Denny Jay, as teamster and companion. In 1808 the family located on heavily timbered land in the southwest corner of Monroe township, Miami Co., Ohio, about forty miles north of Waynesville, where John Jay, the father, had entered a considerable tract of land. In a short time the families of nine of his eleven children were settled either on land adjoining or nearby, and in a few years the forest lands were changed into productive farms. It had been the father's intention that his son, Walter Denny, should be his associate and eventually successor in the store, but the indoor life was irksome to the young man, and he chose rather to take his axe and clear the newly purchased lands. John Jay died in 1829.

Walter Denny Jay was born in Newberry county, S. C., July 15, 1786, son of John and Elizabeth (Pugh). On Jan. 8, 1810, he married Mary Macy, and their married life lasted fifty-six and one-half years. Mary (Macy) Jay was born in Guilford county, N. C., Dec. 7, 1787, daughter of Thomas Macy (1765-1833) and Anna Sweet (1768-1840), both natives of the Island of Nantucket, Mass., whence they moved with their parents to North Carolina about 1773. Early in 1787, Thomas Macy and Anna Sweet were married in North Carolina, in which State they made their home until after the birth of five of their children. In 1797 they moved to East Tennessee, where five more children were born, the remaining two being born after the removal to Ohio in 1807. In the latter State they located in Miami county, on land adjoining that of John Jay. Their daughter Mary was their oldest child, and was of the seventh generation of the family in America. The ancestor of the Macy family in the New World was Thomas Macy, born in Wiltshire, England, in 1608, who came to Salisbury, Mass., between 1635 and 1640, residing there until 1659. Being one of a company that had purchased Nantucket for homes, he went there with his family in October, 1659, with two other white men, and spent the winter there in the midst of 3000 Indians, who received them kindly and assisted them in getting a living by fishing and such pursuits as were familiar to the aborigines. Thomas Macy died in 1682, and his wife Sarah Hopcott, born in 1612, died in 1706. From him, the line is through John Macy (1655-1691) and Deborah Gardner (1658-1712); Thomas Macy (1687-1759) and Deborah Coffin (1680-1760); and John Macy (1675-1751) and Judith Worth (1689-1767) (the line here doubling the grandson of Thomas (1687), Paul Macy, marrying Bethiah Macy, the granddaughter of John (1675); Joseph Macy (1709-1772, son of Thomas) and Hannah Hobbs; and John Macy (1721 son of John, died after 1795) and Eunice Coleman (1724-1768); Paul Macy (1740-1832, son of Joseph and Hannah) and Bethiah Macy (1744-1810, daughter of John and Eunice); to Thomas and Anna (Sweet) Macy, mentioned above.

Mrs. Anna (Sweet) Macy was of the sixth generation of the Gardner line in America, this family being also early settled in Nantucket. Richard Gardner (1626-1688) married Sarah Shattuck (1632-1724). Their son, Richard Gardner (2) (1653-1728), married Mary Austin. Their son, Solomon Gardner (1680-1760) married Anna Coffin (died in 1740). Their son, Stephen Gardner (1718-1792), married Jemima Worth (1710-1780), and they removed about 1770 from Nantucket to North Carolina. Their daughter, Mary Gardner (1751-1798), married John Sweet, a native of England. Their daughter, Anna Sweet (1768-1840), married Thomas Macy (1765-1833). Their daughter, Mary Macy (1787-1868), married 1810, Walter Denny Jay (1786-1865).

Eli Jay, son of Walter Denny and Mary (Macy) Jay, was born as above stated in Miami county, Ohio, and was brought up on a farm under the care of parents who early trained their children to habits of industry and usefulness. Amusements and sports were not considered the main objects of living, but came incidentally as occasion seemed to require, and were enjoyed more because unexpected than if planned and worked for. Rainy days and times of slack work were more apt to be passed with good books in the quiet home, than in the excitement and frolic where idlers meet to kill time. The remembrance of these strenuous years of work, where correct habits were formed, sweetened by the beneficial results accomplished, is still very pleasant.

While the schools, as far as they went, were a great blessing, they had little to offer to the bright pupil, who after he had completed the very few branches taught could find nothing fresh with which to feed his hungry mind. Mr. Jay's experience was typical of the studious pioneer boy. The five years following his fourteenth year, during which time he attended the three months' winter school monotonously reviewing what he had thoroughly learned before, were practically wasted so far as educational advancement was concerned. A keen taste for reading gratified by the few books that came his way redeemed somewhat the intellectual barrenness of that period. Mr. Jay's father then, influenced by his three younger sons (of whom Eli was second), hired a young man of advanced education who opened a good school in a comfortable settlement school house for four months two winters, where the pupils could push ahead as fast as they pleased. Ambitious young men and women gathered here, and much real work was done. Mr. Jay here mastered pretty thoroughly nearly all the mathematics of an ordinary college course, and acquired a knowledge of Physiology, Natural Philosophy, Zoology, Chemistry and Geology. As he himself has expressed it, the eight months in this school made a "refreshing oasis in his intellectual life." The next two winters, he himself taught a similar school in an adjoining neighborhood, and the summer between (1848) he attended for five months Farmer's College, near Cincinnati, Ohio, where among other worthy classmates were Benjamin Harrison and Murat Halstead, whose influence has been left on our country's history.

On Oct. 24, 1849, Mr. Jay was married to Mahalah Pearson, born Dec. 7, 1827, who had been his schoolmate in the eight months' school referred to. For the three previous years she had taught public schools in the summer and attended private schools in the winter. Her ancestors came from England to the Province of Pennsylvania under William Penn. Thomas Pearson was married in Cheshire, England, Feb. 18, 1683, to Margery Smith, and they came to Pennsylvania, arriving in August of that year. Their fourth son, Enoch Pearson, born 1690, married in 1719, Mary Smith, and three of their sons moved, about 1770, with their families, to Newberry county, S. C. Samuel Pearson, one of these three sons of Enoch, had lived, on his way South, several years in Frederick county, Va., where in 1762, he married Mary Rogers. Their eldest son, Benjamin Pearson, born in Virginia in 1763, married in South Carolina in 1790, Esther Furnas (1770-1835), whose parents were natives of the county of Cumberland, England. Their son, Moses Pearson, born in South Carolina in 1798, married in Ohio in 1823, Sarah Pearson (1805-1844), and their daughter, Mahalah, married Eli Jay. Sarah (Pearson) Pearson, mother of Mrs. Jay, was a great-granddaughter of Thomas Pearson (1728-1820), son of Enoch and brother of Samuel Pearson mentioned above. In 1751 at Philadelphia he married Ann Powell. Their second son, Enoch Pearson (1761-1839), married in South Carolina in 1784, Ann Evans (1763-1836). Their son, Robert Pearson (1785-1860), in South Carolina, in 1804, married Charity Galbreath (1788-1811). Their daughter, Sarah Pearson, born in South Carolina in 1805, married Moses Pearson as above stated. The Pearsons moved from South Carolina to Miami county, Ohio, in 1806.

To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Eli Jay has come one daughter, Mary A., born at Richmond, Ind., Jan. 4, 1871, who married, July 31, 1895, Edgar H. Ballard, who died Aug. 14, 1901, leaving his widow with two children, both born at Richmond: Juanita, Aug. 2, 1896, and Eleanor, Oct. 11, 1897. Mrs. Ballard is a graduate of the University of Michigan, A. B., 1891, and is a successful teacher, being now connected with Earlham College. She and her children reside with Mr. and Mrs. Jay.

Soon after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Jay began teaching in a school house he and his brother William had built the previous summer near the village of Fredericksburg, on their own land. There seemed to be a real need of such a school as had been conducted by Mr. Jay the two preceding winters, but the school houses were not well adapted to the purpose, hence the new building with its commodious school room and recitation room, suitable for the work of two teachers. This was patronized far beyond their expectations, and was very successful in every way. After conducting this school two years, both Mr. Jay and his wife felt the need of a better education for their work, and realized they would never be satisfied without it, so they determined to give up teaching—their financial condition then warranting this—and enter upon a complete college course. They spent two years at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, then the only co-educational school in the country, doing there work in Latin and Greek, and such other studies as were necessary to enter college. Their four years' course was pursued at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, a co-educational institution opened in the fall of 1853, under the presidency of the Hon. Horace Mann, a noted educator. They graduated in 1857 with the degree of A. B., and in 1860 received the degree of A. M., Thomas Hill, later president of Harvard, being the president then. During all their six years of study, they kept house, most of the time having with them some relative they were assisting in getting an education. They had so thorough a foundation for their work, that they found their studies did not occupy all their time, but that they could also do some teaching. Mrs. Jay taught a large class in Latin in the Preparatory Department of the College all through her senior year, and continued teaching Latin and other studies in that department for more than two years after graduation, while Mr. Jay taught in the public schools of Yellow Springs two years, and one year in an academy near Lafayette, Ind. Together they taught two years at Spiceland, Ind., and one year at Tippecanoe City, Ohio. After this they returned to their home at Yellow Springs, expecting to rest for a year, but the demand for teachers was so urgent, owing to their scarcity in that war time, that they taught for part of the year.

In the summer of 1864 both Prof. and Mrs. Jay accepted positions at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., and soon after sold their property at Yellow Springs, and since then Richmond has been their home. Their work at Earlham began in 1864 and closed in 1884. During most of these years Mrs. Jay taught Latin and other studies in the Preparatory Department and a good part of the time was Principal of that department, which included two-thirds of all the students in the school, and the last year she had charge of all the essay work in the College classes. Prof. Jay himself held several different positions, teaching for several years Mathematics, Natural Science and History in the Preparatory Department; was acting President in 1874-5 during the absence of the President on a visit in the Sandwich Islands, and the last five years was Professor of Mathematics, Physics and Astronomy in the College. They were away from the college about five years, resting, traveling, and one year working among the Indians at Fort Sill, now Lawton, Okla., and two years teaching a township high school in Henry county, Indiana.

Since 1884 neither Prof. nor Mrs. Jay has engaged in much regular teaching. One winter they spent in Florida and taught a small five months' school. From 1888 to 1891 they resided at Ann Arbor, Mich., while their daughter took a literary course in the University of Michigan, and at the same time they pursued several lines of study, attending many lectures and recitations, although not enrolled as regular students.

For the past twenty years Mrs. Jay has devoted a large part of her time to missionary work, having made three trips, of several months each, to Mexico, in the interest of the Friends Missionary work in that country. For thirteen years she has been secretary of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, which has been a Bureau of Information for all American Friends' mission work, and which has for about eight years been carrying on successful field work in northeastern Cuba. In the past twenty-four years both Prof. and Mrs. Jay have given private instruction in their home to many who have sought their aid. To close this brief outline of the vast work accomplished by these earnest teachers, no better resume of the whole could be found than in the Professor's own words: "In the years of our semi-retirement we have found sufficient employment and plenty of lines of research and study to prevent the rust of either physical or mental inactivity. We are now both past four score years, and we rejoice to be in a fair state of health and strength for people of our age. As we look back on our past years we are deeply thankful that they have been so full of joy and usefulness and peace as they have. Our lives and work have brought us in contact with many thousand young people in the formative time of their lives, and we trust, through divine grace, our connection with them has been for their good and that we have been of benefit in the communities where our lot has been cast. Such at least has been the motive which has inspired and sustained us during all these years."

HON. JAMES J. MAXWELL (deceased). For many years the late James J. Maxwell was one of the leading men of Morgan county, prominent in promoting movements for its benefit, a public-spirited citizen, a factor in political circles and one of the large and successful farmers. He was born Feb. 27, 1839, in Morgan county, Ind., where his parents were pioneers, son of John and Catharine (Graham) Maxwell.

John Maxwell came from Ireland and settled in Morgan county in its early days, following farming for many years in Washington township. His death occurred at Martinsville when he was aged sixty-five years. He married Catherine Graham, who came from Scotland, where her father, James Graham, lived and died. She was one of his two children. She lived to be eighty years of age. Both she and her husband belonged to the Catholic Church. They were the parents of seven children, three of whom are living: Robert; Susanna, wife of Josiah Burton, of Martinsville; and Catherine, wife of Paul Murphy, of Alabama.

The boyhood of James J. Maxwell was passed on the farm in Morgan county which was his home through life. His education was superior to that of the majority of his companions, and he attended the Martinsville high school, and later had advantages in Cincinnati. His vocation was farming, and he owned five hundred acres of land four miles south of Martinsville. During a long period Mr. Maxwell was a leader in the Democratic party, and was its chosen representative for the State Legislature for two terms. His services as a legislator reflected credit upon himself and his constituency. In the Masonic fraternity he was widely known. With his wife he belonged to the Christian Church and at one time was one of the deacons in that body.

On Feb. 15, 1866, Mr. Maxwell was united in marriage with Miss Cynthia Hodges, daughter of John and Lucy (Newland) Hodge, and the following children were born to them: Josephine, one of the successful teachers in the Martinsville public schools, now taking a course in Emerson College, Boston; Minnie Myrtle, who died aged two years; Otto, who died aged three years; Frank Robert, a physician in Martinsville; Howard H., formerly a science teacher in the Normal School at Chillicothe, Mo., now Superintendent of Schools at Valley City, N. Dak.; Mitte May, who married Jesse Randall, of Franklin, and died Aug. 19, 1905; and John, who operates the home farm for his mother. The death of the father of this family, the Hon. James J. Maxwell, took place Dec. 8, 1901.

John Hodges, father of Mrs. Maxwell, was one of the six children of Thomas and Elizabeth (Parr) Hodges, who came at a very early day to Indiana, and in Washington county, near Salem, entered land from the government, later coming to Baker township, Morgan county. Thomas Hodges was a son of a kid-glove manufacturer in England. He died near Salem, Washington county, when near eighty years of age; his wife died in Baker township, Morgan county, aged seventy years.

John Hodges accompanied his parents to Washington county, Ind., and later, on his own account, entered government land in Baker township, Morgan county, where he died in 1846, aged forty-six years. His wife, Lucy Newland, was a native of Kentucky, but was reared in Washington county, Ind., where she married, and she and husband soon after settled in Morgan county, where she died in July, 1882, at the age of seventy years. Mr. and Mrs. Hodges had a family of six sons and four daughters, the surviving members being: William, of Baker township; Louisa, wife of Presley Johnson, of Paragon, Ind.; Sarah, wife of John C. Duncan, of Indianapolis; and Cynthia, wife of Mr. Maxwell. Mrs. Lucy (Newland) Hodges was a daughter of William Newland, who came to Washington county, Ind., from Kentucky at an early date; he married Nancy Booth, reared a large family, and died at the age of ninety years. All these names represent old established families of the county who have been prominent in the development of this part of the State of Indiana, and are among its wealthiest and most respected citizens.

ELLIOTT A. NELSON, one of the leading florists of Indianapolis, has had a career that well illustrates the value of persistent enterprise and tireless energy in this age. Although he had to start at the very foundation of his business in 1893, he has now ten houses, covering 34,000 feet of ground, his being by far the largest establishment of its kind in the city today. The business which he transacts compares very favorably with that of any other florist in the West.

Mr. Nelson is a native of Indianapolis, born Feb. 21, 1868, at the home of his parents on Madison avenue. James Nelson, his father, was born in Denmark, where his parents, Niels Christopher Frederickson and Susie Pierson, were farming people. James Nelson followed the custom of his native land and added the "son" to his father's given name, hence Nielson, or Nelson as it is now written. He learned flour-milling, and coming to Indianapolis in August, 1865, with a friend who had settled in the city, he found work in a mill on the canal, south of the town, called the Underhill Mill, at the end of the canal and half a square west of South Meridian street. He is at present with his son in the florist business, and has been ever since it was started. James Nelson has been twice married. His first wife, Christina Jacobsen, died nine months after their marriage, and in 1867 he married Marie Hansen. To this union have been born seven children: Elliott A.; Sena, who is at home; Thorena, wife of Edward Schoen, cigar and tobacco dealer of Indianapolis; Clara, Hutter, Walter and Albert, all at home. Mr. Nelson is a member of the I. O. O. F. and Court of Honor.

Elliott A. Nelson began to learn his present business in 1888, with James Larson, whose reputation as a superior florist was well established, and with whom he served an apprenticeship of two years. He was engaged at the business for seven years before he started for himself. To a thorough knowledge of all branches of the florist's field Mr. Nelson adds an enthusiastic love for his work. His enterprise and energy have overcome all obstacles, and have brought him in a very brief period to the very front of his calling. It is a pleasure to visit his beautiful grounds and beautiful greenhouses, at Nos. 3503-07 North South avenue. It is hard to realize that so much can be accomplished in so short a time. Mr. Nelson has a very complete and general stock, making, however, at the present time, a specialty of roses and carnations.

Mr. Nelson married Miss Rose Green, daughter of Henry C. and Harkey (Lee)

Green, natives of Indiana. Mr. Green was a school teacher, was a soldier in the Civil war, and died in December, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson are members of the University Place Baptist Church. Mrs. Nelson is a woman of much worth and high character. She and her husband have many friends in the city, and their associates and patrons include some of the best people of Indianapolis.

WILLIAM N. JACKSON, who was "Uncle Billy" Jackson to the thousands of people in Indianapolis who called him friend, was probably one of the most widely known men who have ever lived in that city. He was one of the characters of his day, known best for his kindliness and unstinted generosity, though aside from his reputation as a philanthropist he had high standing as a business man and was popular wherever known. He aided thousands, in many ways. Gen. John Coburn said of him: "I have known William N. Jackson since I was a boy. He came to Indianapolis in an early day and engaged in the mercantile trade, was also secretary and treasurer of the Madison and Indianapolis Railway Company, and was later connected with the Bellefontaine railroad. He was an active Presbyterian, a generous, kind-hearted bachelor gentleman of the old school. He was a good friend and fond of society, a man upright and moral and an unpretending Christian, universally respected, beloved by everybody."

MYRON DICKSON, clothier and farmer, one of the leading business citizens of Martinsville, Ind., was born Oct. 16, 1845, in Fulton, Ill., son of James Clarke and Sibyl (Kendall) Dickson. The former was a native of Vermont and the latter of Massachusetts. Myron was one of seven children born to them, the other survivors being: Carlos, of Chicago, Ill.; Wallace E., of Martinsville; and Alice Josephine, wife of A. W. Hester, of Chicago, Illinois.

The Dicksons are descended from Richard or Dick of Keith or Keth, a son of the family of Keith or Keth, Earls of Marshall, one of the most powerful families of Scotland, at a time when with the sole exception of the royal family the rank of Earl was the highest in the kingdom. This family had such great possessions that it was formerly said that they could journey from the north to the south of Scotland and sleep every night in their own castle.

The mother of Richard of Keith or Keth was a daughter of Douglas. Richard was born in 1247. His sons were styled Dick after him. Thus the origin of the name, the word son being affixed in the Lowlands in the same manner as Mac was prefixed in the Highlands. Descendants of the family are settled mostly in the counties of Peebles and Berwick, also in Lanarkshire. The Dickson Clan was one of the most prominent of the Border Clans. Most of the clansmen were "Lairds," many occupying high positions in Parliament, the Scotch Government and local affairs. The Border Clans were Hume, Elliott, Johnston, Graham, Irving, Armstrong, Cranston, Cockburn, Maxwell, Gladstone, etc. Archdeacon Barbour writes at length of them in 1375. Blind Harry, the famous minstrel, sings of the exploits of Thomas Dickson in 1381. Robert Dickson married into the Douglas family and his coat-of-arms carries three stars of the Douglas coat. These stars are called mullets in heraldry. Its motto: "Fortune favors the brave." The two other coats of arms in the family are first: "A human heart in blood, red color, with silver wing on either side." Motto: "Heavenward." Second: "A deer couchant (lying down) with its head up in a wreath of laurel." Motto: "Though lying down I am on the watch." Thom Dickson of the 15th century, was a famous man, was lord of two baronies, and a governor of Douglas castle. The family includes several clergymen and professors of Edinburgh University. Robert Dickson, of Bouchtrig, County Berwick, was one of those who fell on the Field of Flodden in 1513. Robert Dickson, another descendant, the paternal grandfather of Myron Dickson, came to America in 1773 with a Scotch Colony from Glasgow, and purchased a tract of land at Ryegate, Vt., on the Connecticut River, where he settled with his family. He was a soldier of the War of 1812. He married Jean Lindsay (paternal grandmother of Myron Dickson), a descendant from the Niord King of Sweden (B. C. 40), deduced from the Danish and Swedish archives, has been fully compiled by Harrison, the historian of the West Riding of York. According to Harrison (see History of York chart) Niord is descended from Odin, King of Ascardia, who came out of Scythia with an army of Goths, conquered northern Europe, settled Sweden, reigned and died there. Odin was forty-first in the descent from Eric, King of the Goths in Scandinavia, living in the same time as Seruc, great-grandfather of "Abraham." The

Scotch name of Lindsay dates from 1116 in the reign of David I. Walter de Lindsay, son of Baron Baldric de Lindsay, was an Anglo-Norman, and one of the great Barons of William the Conqueror, related to and contemporary with him, was Baron Baldric de Lindsay, a Norman gentleman. The family is an offshoot of the noblest family of the Normans and of a common male stock with Rollo and the Dukes of Normandy, and is descended from the royal houses of Denmark, Gothland, and Sweden, tracing (by chart) to Niord, King of Sweden (40 B. C.), William de Lindsay of Ericldun First of Scotland, 1133, Walter Lindsay of Ericldun, 1150, William Lindsay of Ericldun and Crawford, 1236, married Marjory, daughter of Henry, Prince of Scotland, sister of "William the Lion," descendants of Malcolm Canmore and the Saxon princess Margaret of England, sister of Edgar, the last heir of the Saxon line. Jean Lindsay was a descendant of this line. Sibyl Kendall Dickson, the mother of Myron, was a descendant of the Wilder family. Nicholas Wilder, a military chieftain in the army of the Earl of Richmond, at the battle of Bosworth in 1485, came from France with the Earl and landed at Milford Haven, England, with him. On April 15, 1497, being the twelfth year of the reign of Henry VII, the King gave him as a token of his favor a landed estate and a coat of arms. John Wilder, his son, was in possession of the estate in 1525, and died in 1588. He married Alice Keats, daughter and heiress of Thomas Keats of Sulham House. Thomas Wilder, his son, heir to the Sulham estate, in Berkshire, England, married Martha, and sailed for America in 1638 in the ship "Confidence," from Southampton, for Massachusetts Bay. They landed at Hingham, Mass. Thomas Wilder, a son of the former, settled in Charlestown, Mass., in 1639, later removing with his family to Lancaster, Mass. He was one of the subscribers to the Courts grant for Lancaster as a settlement in 1659. In the Military Annals of Lancaster, Mass., his name appears as lieutenant on the roll of Colonial soldiers. Joshua Wilder, a descendant of this family, born in May, 1759, died March 14, 1849. He served in the war of the Revolution, and reared a family of thirteen children. His oldest daughter, Anna, born in 1782, married Luke Kendall, the maternal grandfather of Myron Dickson. Joshua Wilder's brother, Sampson, settled in Bolton, Mass. The following is from a clipping from a Boston paper, of Nov. 17, 1900, on the sale ci his old home: "McKinley's Summer Home. The Mansion that was to have been Napoleon's Refuge." "Agreements have been signed for the sale of the magnificent old estate in Bolton, Worcester county, known as the Sampson Wilder Mansion, situated at the crest of the Wottoquotie Hill, to J. Wyman Jones, of Englewood, New Jersey, brother-in-law of Mark A. Hanna. It is pretty certain that this will serve as the summer home for President McKinley. This property, aside from being one of the most picturesque and elegant in that part of the country, possesses many historic associations. It is a well established tradition that it was arranged that the Wilder Mansion should be an asylum for Napoleon after his defeat at Waterloo. Passage had been engaged for him on a vessel that was to bring him to America, but he waited too long and was unable to sail, and gave himself up as a prisoner of war."

Dr. James Clarke, Dickson, the father of Myron Dickson, married Sibyl Kendall, at Boston, Mass., and located in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1830. He moved from there to Indianapolis about 1840, and then removed to Fulton, Ill. There the family lived for a number of years, and there most of the children were born. He later returned to Indianapolis, remaining several years, then going to Paola, Kans., where they resided until after the close of the Civil war. Coming again to Indianapolis, and giving up the practice of medicine, he entered into a partnership with his son, Carlos, in the firm of C. Dickson & Co., engaging in selling agricultural implements and woolen mill findings. He made Indianapolis his home during the remainder of his life, his death, however, occurring in Martinsville, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife died in Indianapolis some years previously at the age of fifty-eight years.

Until the outbreak of the Civil war Myron Dickson remained with his parents, attending school in the various localities where the family was established. As a member of Company F, 14th Kansas Cavalry, he served three years in the war, taking an active part in many battles, and in the constant skirmishing, and acting as scout for eight months. His brother Wallace served three years and then re-enlisted as a veteran. His brother Alonzo served almost three years and was killed in battle. After the close of the war Myron Dickson returned to Indianapolis and entered business college, afterwards taking a position as bookkeeper with the firm of W. P. & E. P. Gallup, later embarking in the grain trade at Martinsville, Ind., and with C. Dickson & Co., Indianapolis. Prior to Mr. Mitchell's death Mr. Dickson held the position of paying and receiving teller in the Mitchell bank for seven years.

On Dec. 27, 1871, Mr. Dickson married Miss Catherine Mitchell, daughter of the banker, the late Samuel M. Mitchell, and Anne (Sandy) Mitchell, of Martinsville, Ind. Four children have been born to this union, namely: Samuel M. died aged six months. Anne May, a graduate of Lasell Seminary, Auburndale, Mass., near Boston, married James Spencer Adsit, general agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, at Kansas City, Mo., and they have one son, James Spencer, Jr. Dr. Giles Mitchell Dickson, a graduate of Highland Military Academy, Worcester, Mass., and of the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, married Miss Elizabeth McCracken, second daughter of Calvin A. and Mary (Mathews) McCracken, of Martinsville, Ind., and was associated with his uncle, Dr. Giles S. Mitchell, of Cincinnati, Ohio, in the practice of medicine until his death, when he returned to Martinsville, and became a partner in the clothing business with his father; he has had two children, Robert Spencer, who died at the age of eleven months; and Mary Catherine. Harold Benton Dickson is a student at Highland Military Academy, Worcester, Massachusetts.

While Mr. Dickson has never had any desire to serve the city or State in any official capacity he has been recognized as a force in the community in all that tended to built up and strengthen good citizenship. His ideals of civic righteousness are high but practical, and he is always ready to give his best efforts in any cause that appeals to him on the score of community interest. He is a man of deep and strong convictions with the characteristics of his Scotch race. Though a quiet man, he has deep sensibilities and when these are stirred he is at his best. He delights in a good fight when in the cause of right and justice.

Mr. Dickson and his family resided in the old Mitchell homestead for fifteen years and they have recently moved into their beautiful new home opposite the old homestead. Mr. Dickson like his father has always been identified with the Republican party, casting his first vote for Abraham Lincoln at the age of eighteen years, while a soldier in the Civil war. In religion the family are members of the Christian Church.

THOMAS REDMOND, who was a business man of Indianapolis for several years before his death, was born in Dublin, Ireland, and came of an aristocratic and prominent family, many of whose members are professional men and political leaders in the old country. He was an uncle of the Hon. John E. Redmond, of Dublin, a member of the House of Parliament and one of the leading politicians of his country.

Thomas Redmond was highly educated in his native land, and came to this country before his marriage. Locating at Evansville, Ind., he taught school for several years, and later embarked in the grocery business. There he married his first wife, by whom he had two children, and after her death he married Miss Ann Parks. When he enlisted for service in the Civil war he moved his family to Indianapolis, and this city has been their home ever since. Here he engaged in a wholesale and retail grocery business, which he continued up to the time of his death, Jan. 19, 1875. Mr. Redmond was reared a Catholic. During the Fenian troubles he was very loyal to the Irish cause, and led a company to join the raid on Canada. Some fighting had already been done, and much blood would have been shed if the American government had not strongly interfered. The silk out of which his Fenian banner was made was imported by him from Ireland. Had he lived, he would undoubtedly have made his mark in American politics. He was broad-minded, intelligent, and commanded the unreserved confidence of all with whom he came into contact. After his death his wife and family were robbed of their possessions by sharks and obliged to provide for themselves. The widow became a professional nurse, an occupation she has followed for many years, and she now owns a comfortable home. The city has honored her name by bestowing it on the street where her home is located.

To Thomas and Ann (Parks) Redmond were born the following children: Margaret A., William J., Thomas and Jane died young; Maggie A. is the wife of William Collett; William J. (2) lives in Chicago; Mary D. first married B. F. Bevan, by whom she had three children, Lucy (Mrs. A. B. Coetler), Joseph (now deceased) and Marguerite (also deceased), and is now the wife of Charles Grothe, of Indianapolis, by whom she has one daughter, Vera.

Mrs. Redmond has been recognized by the general government, receiving a widow's pension. She belongs to the W. R. C. and is associated with George Chapman Post, G. A. R., at Indianapolis. She was confirmed in the Episcopal Church, from which she has never departed. Her family history is interesting. She was born Feb. 16, 1836, in County Longford, Ireland, daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Griffith) Parks.

Joseph Parks was born and reared in Ireland, and was the eldest son of Joseph Parks, Sr., who was a farmer and a prosperous man of his day. He died in Ireland, and his widow came to this country, spending her last days among her children in Indiana, where she died in Vanderburg county. The children were as follows: Charles, James, Alexander, Jane and Joseph. Jane and her husband, Dr. H. Dobson, were the first of her family to come to the United States; they located in Vanderburg county, where he gave up his profession to become a prosperous farmer. All the family came to this country to become honored and successful citizens. In the old country they were ranked far above the average in intelligence and education, and their standing in their adopted land was equally high.

Joseph Parks was reared to a farm life, but pushed out into business pursuits and became a large contractor, employing many men in quarries, mills and peat beds. At one time he was reputed a wealthy man, enjoying large credit, which he allowed his friends to use, indorsing largely to help them. Losing heavily in 1843, he came to the New World to build anew his fortunes under better conditions. Joining some friends who had settled in Vanderburg county, Ind., he secured by entry and purchase a half section of land. It was heavily timbered, and needed sore labor to put it into tillable condition. In time he became a prosperous and successful farmer, and was widely known as an Irish gentleman of integrity and honor, always ready to give a neighbor a friendly turn. Though he was often solicited to become a candidate for office he would not accept anything in that line. He administered several large estates, and acted as guardian when called upon to do so, in every such case acquitting himself to the satisfaction of all concerned. In Ireland he belonged to the Presbyterian Church, but when he settled in Indiana he found no such church at all convenient, and was among the first to assist in the organization of the First Episcopal Church, of which he was a member during the rest of his life. In that church his children were all confirmed by Bishop Upfold, the first bishop of Indiana, who made the home of Mr. Parks his stopping-place when in that part of the country. Mr. Parks was a good neighbor and kind friend, living an enviable Christian life, and commanded the confidence and esteem of the community to a marked degree. In his own home the Sabbath was strictly observed, and the children learned to turn their thoughts in the direction of the religious life on that day. In politics he was a Republican. His death took place Aug. 12, 1888, his wife preceding him to the better land in November, 1877. Her maiden name was Margaret Griffith, and she was born and reared in Ireland, a daughter of John Griffith, also a native of that country. John Griffith was a man of wealth and influence in Ireland, where he died, leaving all his possessions to his daughter Margaret, but before leaving Ireland much of her inheritance had been taken from her by supposed friends, and she and her husband came to this country to repair their fortunes. This they did after a hard struggle. James Griffith, an uncle, was the only relative known to Mrs. Redmond in this country.

Joseph and Margaret Parks had children as follows: William, a physician, who is deceased; Joseph, deceased; Jane, the widow of J. Smith, residing at Evansville, Ind.; Charles, who owns and occupies the old homestead; Ann, Mrs. Thomas Redmond; Matthew, deceased; Margaret, unmarried; and John, deceased.

Mrs. Redmond came to this country with her parents when only seven years old, and grew to womanhood on her father's farm in Vanderburg county, Ind. In 1859 she was married to Thomas Redmond, then engaged in the grocery business in Evansville, in which city they settled and where they resided until 1861, when Mr. Redmond entered the government service in connection with the commissary department, continuing thus until the close of the Civil war.

JOSEPH M. HICKS, M. D., a pioneer physician of Indiana, residing in Indianapolis, was born in Vermilion county, this State, Oct. 27, 1826, son of Babel and Betsy (Davis) Hicks. The father was born in North Carolina, coming to Indiana about 1812, and was a soldier in the war of 1812, fighting previously under General Harrison at Tippecanoe. His death occurred in Vermilion county, on the "Narrows of the Wabash," when he was less than thirty-seven years of age. He was one of the earliest settlers of the State. Dr. Hicks's mother was a native of Bullitt county, Ky., born not far from Shepherdsville, and was married in Vermilion county, Ind. Her brother, Col. Joe Davis, was killed in the battle of Tippecanoe. Babel Hicks was the father of four children, the only one of whom now known to be living is Dr. Hicks, of Indianapolis. His sister, Mary Elizabeth, died in Illinois while a child; John was killed by a sheep while in childhood, his back being broken; Samuel entered the Union army during the Civil war, and has never been heard from since that time.

Dr. Hicks was a soldier in the Mexican war, and a surgeon in the Union army during the Civil war, and though not regularly enlisted did much for the cause he loved. He spent his boyhood and youth on the frontier farm in Vermilion county. At an early age he became interested in the subject of medicine and surgery, and though but eleven years of age when his father died, he gained without financial assistance a thorough professional education through his own efforts. He acquired the rudiments of an education in the old pioneer log school-house. After his father's death he went to live with a hotel-keeper in Newport, where he earned his subscription fees by blacking shoes and doing odd chores around the house. For two years he attended the Laporte Medical College on a perpetual scholarship owned by Dr. Willetts, who kindly rendered the ambitious lad this great kindness. While attending this school, out of which Rush Medical has grown, the young student lived on seventy-five cents a week for many weeks at a time. He became dissatisfied with the allopathic system of medicine, and removed to the Eclectic School at Cincinnati, where he attended two years, living on the same small scale as before. After the first two years he engaged in practice, and after graduating established himself in Vermilion county. While in college he also studied mechanical engineering and architecture, employing such time as he could spare in the making of novelties and necessary household articles. He has a bureau which he made fifty-two years ago, and he made washboards and other kitchen appliances which he sold to lighten his expenses through school.

J. Braxton Hicks, a distant relative of Joseph M., became deeply interested in him, and furnished funds for him to go to England, where he attended King's Homeopathic College, and practiced medicine for three years. Returning home in 1868 he opened an office at Battle Ground, Ind., and there followed his professional labors for eighteen years. In May, 1888, he came to Indianapolis, where he has actively practiced his profession to the present time, making a specialty of gynecology and cancer. He holds diplomas from the American Association of Physicians and Surgeons, and St. Luke's Hospital, at Niles, Mich. For many years he was a member of the Methodist Church, but he did not deposit his letter when he removed to this city.

Dr. Hicks has passed through many vicissitudes. After his mother's death, when he was scarcely seven years of age, his father re-married, and henceforth "home was not home." There are memories the most touching of all that still come over him, of his sainted mother and his early home associations. From that time he has been entirely self-supporting, and has carved out a career of honor and prominence.

In 1848 Dr. Hicks was married to Miss Eloisa Berry, who died in Perryville, Ind., leaving one son, who is now deceased. The Doctor's second marriage was to Mary A. Willard, who died in 1878, leaving one daughter, Clara A., now Mrs. Hamilton, of Selma, Cal. The present wife of Dr. Hicks was Clara A. States, of Wayne county, Iowa. She was a mother to the daughter in everything but blood kinship.

Dr. Hicks has always been interested in bee keeping, and for nearly the whole period of his active life has been identified with that industry, being a liberal contributor to the "Bee Keepers' Journal," and at one time had over four thousand stands in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky and Ohio. A volume on bee keeping has appeared from his pen.

SOLLIS RUNNELS, M. D., one of the prominent physicians of Indianapolis, was born near Delaware, Ohio, Dec. 1, 1854, son of Sollis, Sr., and Eliza (Nash) Runnels, natives of Vermont and New Hampshire, respectively, who were both of Scotch descent.

The derivation of the name Runnels or Reynolds has never been satisfactorily settled.

Of the many hypotheses advanced, two are worthy of consideration: One of the Reynolds' coat of arms has for a crest a fox passant, holding a rose, gules, in his mouth. The one for whom these arms were created was probably a courier, or bearer of dispatches, of such remarkable swiftness and shrewdness that he literally "ran ells" (perhaps two English ells) at a stride, hence "runner of ells," or Runnell, one of the earlier forms of the name. The other explanation of the name is that it comes from the Scotch word "runnel," a small stream, and the family living thereto became Runnells, Runeles, Runnels, Runnells, Renolls or Reynold, and so on through the forty-nine different spellings of the name.

Some branches of the family have King David I, of Scotland, as the progenitor, while others give that distinction to Rhodri-Mawr, King of Wales about 1625. Among the "Worthies of Devon" is mentioned Rev. John Rainolds, who was president of Corpus Christi College, a man of vast learning and a great Hebraist, and to whom is due the King James version of the Bible, he having urged upon the king the necessity of revising the Scriptures. Other names known to fame are: Sir Joshua Reynolds, the greatest portrait painter of all time; Sir Francis Ronalds, meteorologist and inventor of the electric telegraph; Elmer Reynolds, ethnologist and founder of the Anthropological Society of Washington, D. C.; and many others in civil and political life.

Mentioned above is the Reynolds coat of arms with the fox on crest. Another says "The Reynolds arms are azure, a chevron ermine, between three crosses crosslet fitchee argent. Crest, an eagle argent, ducally gorged and lined or."

The name Runnels appears frequently in the patriotic annals of America. Many a Runnels or Reynold has fallen on the battlefield. Six brothers fought side by side in the Revolution. Stephen Runnels, great-grandfather of Dr. Sollis Runnels, was a soldier in that war, and participated in the battle of Bunker Hill. He afterward became a corporal. It is related of him that his pay was regularly sent to the maiden to whom he was affianced, and that she was advised to invest the money in rye, as the currency was rapidly depreciating; she preferred, however, to keep it in her possession, and when she came to buy the furnishings for their new home was obliged to pay seven dollars for a small cream pitcher. Daniel Runnels, a great-great-uncle of Dr. Runnels, was captain of Company I, in Colonel Nichol's regiment, which went with Colonel Stark to Bennington, Vt., in 1776, and he became major and later colonel of the regiment. His ability as an officer and his perseverance and endurance gave him high rank among the New Hampshire soldiers of the Revolution.

Enos Runnels, a cousin of Corporal Stephen Runnels, was in the battle of Bunker Hill, serving in Capt. Moore's company of Col. Stark's regiment. He afterward enlisted for three years and served in the northern branch under General Schuyler. He was taken prisoner by the Indians and turned over to the British, but escaped from his captors at Ticonderoga, rejoined the army under General Gates, and was present at the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga. At the time of Benedict Arnold's treachery he was stationed at West Point, and he served as guard in the room with Major Andre on the last night of that unfortunate Englishman's life.

Stephen Runnels (2), son of Corporal Stephen, was born in Vermont, and in 1819 came West, settling in Ohio. His death occurred in Licking county, that State, in 1846, at the home of his son, Sollis Runnels, Sr.

Sollis Runnels, Sr., son of Stephen (2), was born in Vermont in 1818, and accompanied his parents to Ohio in 1819, settling in Licking county, at a place not far from Newark. The greater part of his married life was spent on a farm near Delaware, Ohio. He traveled a great deal through the West, and he died quite well-to-do for the times. His death occurred July 27, 1854, when he was aged thirty-six. He was one of the first men in his township to vote the Abolition ticket, and he made numerous stump speeches in support of his principles, besides giving shelter to runaway slaves. He married Eliza G. (Nash), who bore him five children, namely: Caroline, who died at the early age of five years; Albina, wife of George Pitts, a farmer of Diller, Neb.; Richard, a former railroad contractor and builder, but now a wealthy farmer at Wichita, Kans.; Marion, who lives on the old homestead near Ostrander, Ohio, and who is a successful stock dealer and farmer; and Sollis, of Indianapolis. After the death of the father the mother married Frederick Decker, of Delaware, Ohio, and when she died April 5, 1900, in her eighty-first year, her seven sons acted as pall-bearers.

Dr. Sollis Runnels remained at his native home in Ohio until he was sixteen, when he accompanied his brother Richard to Red Oak, Iowa, where he spent one year on a farm, one year as cowboy on the Plains, a third year as a student at McClain's Academy, at Iowa City, and the fourth year as a clerk in a large dry-goods store in Red Oak. Returning East by way of Indianapolis, he went to Oberlin, Ohio, where he entered school, spending three years in the preparatory department of the college and three more years in the college proper. As his health failed about this time, instead of graduating he went to the Pacific coast, and spent a year traveling through that region. At Oberlin he was a member of the Second Congregational Church.

On his return Dr. Runnels spent one year in Rush Medical College, Chicago; two years at the Chicago Homeopathic College, graduating from the latter in 1887, with the degree of M. D. Later the honorary degree of M. D. was bestowed upon him by Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago. His work in school was exceptionally good, and he ranked high with both teachers and pupils, and was president of his class during the Senior year. Immediately after his graduation he located in Indianapolis, and has since devoted his time to the practice of general medicine. He is a member of the Indiana State Homeopathic Society, of which he has twice been treasurer; of the Marion County Homeopathic Society, of which he has been president; and also belongs to the American Institute of Homeopathy. In the midst of his busy life Dr. Runnels has found time for the practice of philanthropy, and he founded the Indiana Industrial Home for Blind Men, of which he was made and still is president. This institution is of inestimable benefit to those afflicted, affording as it does a chance to learn a trade, whereby the blind may become self-supporting. Only those are admitted who have become blind after the school age limit. Dr. Runnels is widely known for his gentleness, and for his wonderful personal charm that makes him a welcome visitor in the sickroom, and a most agreeable companion socially. He is of quiet and undemonstrative demeanor and of extreme modesty. He is generous to all benevolent and charitable movements that appeal to him.

On May 7, 1890, at Wallaceburg, Ont., Dr. Runnels was married to Margaret Laird, daughter of Charles P. and Susan (Carter) Laird, the former of Florence, near Chatham, Ont., and the latter of Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Her paternal grandparents were natives of Paisley, Scotland, and her maternal grandparents, George Bruce Carter and Mahitabel Gwynn, were the first settlers at Canso Bay, at the northern end of Nova Scotia, and were of English descent. Mrs. Runnels was the twenty-sixth enrolled member of the Indianapolis Free Kindergarten Society, having joined in 1883, before it became one of the affiliated charities, and she is still an interested member.

Of Dr. Runnels, Edward L. McKee, under date of Jan. 16, 1907, writes: "Twenty-five years ago Sollis Runnels came to this city from a smaller community. His inclination at that time was to take up the study of medicine as a profession. That characteristic of careful thought and conscientious deliberation which has been so pronounced in his later life even at that time was prominent and forbade his taking up the profession of M. D. until he was satisfied in his own judgment that he was by nature mentally and physically worthy of so high a calling. Dr. Runnels's distinguished position in the practice of Homeopathy bears witness to the wisdom of his decision, and his many patients eagerly add their testimony—for few physicians are blessed with his God-given power to ease the suffering. Dr. Runnels's character as a man is high, his ideals are lofty, his striving for the best unceasing, and his accomplishments many. So high a manhood combined with the careful preparation he has received along educational lines fits him in an unusual manner for the ministrations of his sick rooms."

In his political belief Dr. Runnels is a staunch Republican, and a charter member of the Columbia Club, being one of the members of that organization who went to Minneapolis in 1892 to assist in nominating Benjamin Harrison for the Presidency.

HENRY SPONSEL, now living retired in Indianapolis, was for over thirty years active in business in the city in connection with various enterprises. His home has been there since 1863.

Mr. Sponsel was born March 17, 1840, in Bavaria, Germany, son of George and Magdalena (Lang) Sponsel, both of whom were from Bavaria. The family came to America in 1842, settling in Cincinnati, Ohio, and there Henry Sponsel was reared and educated. He learned the shoemaker's trade after leaving school, and remained in Cincinnati until the latter part of the year 1860, when he went to Southport, Marion Co., Ind., his brother, who was doing a prosperous shoemaking business there, having sent for him. There he continued to work at his trade until the breaking out of the Civil war. On July 6, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, 21st Indiana Volunteers, with which he saw active service until wounded, at the battle of Baton Rouge, Aug. 5, 1862. After the taking of the city of New Orleans he was one of the few detailed to work the Mexican guns that had been captured, and while thus engaged at the battle of Baton Rouge he received a bullet in his right thigh, close to the hip joint. Lieut. Brown, noticing the blood, called to him: "Henry, are you wounded?" He answered, "Yes, Lieutenant, I am," and the Lieutenant told him to fall to the rear "and do your best, for we are at very close quarters with the enemy." He got to the rear, which was at the top of a ridge, and walked down through a hail of bullets, stopping the flow of blood as best he could with his hand. At the bottom of the ridge he was practically safe from bullets, so he rested for a while, after which, finding himself too weak from loss of blood to walk, he crept on his left knee and his hands to the first house on the outskirts of the city, a distance of over two hundred yards. It was his only chance to save his life. At the door, which he was barely able to reach, he saw a lieutenant of the 6th Michigan Volunteers thanking the lady of the house for bandaging his arm. The lieutenant, on seeing Mr. Sponsel, said, "Hello, Comrade, are you wounded, too?" After examining the wound, he said "You are wounded badly; I will report in the city and have you sent for immediately." The lady of the house assisted him as much as possible, saying she had two sons in the war on the Confederate side, and if they fell near Union homes she hoped they would be as well treated as the Union soldiers whom she had aided. Then four soldiers, with their guns and blankets, and a board and pillow given by this benevolent lady, managed to carry Mr. Sponsel to the Deaf & Dumb Asylum in the city. The ball was removed and he recovered slowly, being discharged Oct. 16, 1862.

Returning to Southport after his army experience, Mr. Sponsel remained there only a short time, early in 1863 moving to Indianapolis, where he has ever since remained. From that year until 1897, when he retired, he was associated with various business enterprises, in which he met with such substantial success that he is now able to live at ease, enjoying the rest he so well deserves.

Mr. Sponsel has been twice married, first to Rosa Brobst, and after her death to Anna Smith. There were no children by the first union, and to the second were born five daughters, viz.: Barbara, Mrs. Dietz; Matilda, Mrs. Aichhorn; Clara, Mrs. Wenz; Bertha, and Eida. Mr. Sponsel is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and, by virtue of his war record, of Chapman Post, No. 209, G. A. R., and of the German American Veterans. He is a Protestant in religious faith.

JOSEPH F. BROWN, transcript clerk in the county clerk's office, was born May 7, 1820, and comes of a branch of the Brown family distinguished as being founded in America by men who fought in the war for independence, each generation since numbering men of prominence and distinction. The family is of pure Celtic stock, and originated in Wales. The American founders of the family were four brothers who came from Cardigan, Wales, in 1746, in the ship "Fidelity," which landed at Welsh Neck, near Philadelphia, not far from Valley Forge. One of these brothers settled in Wilmington, N. C.; another in Boston; and a third in Brownsville, Pa., the birthplace of James G. Blaine. They spelled the name Broune, which was the old way of spelling it in Wales.

Thomas Brown, grandfather of Joseph F., was one of the original four brothers who came to America, and at the time of coming was aged about fifteen years. He followed the occupation of farming. He married Mary Ball, sister of Joseph Ball, who was the wealthiest man then living in Pennsylvania. She was born in Philadelphia, and was first cousin to Mary Washington, mother of George Washington, who sent her a book and always recognized the relationship. After marriage, they settled in 1755 in Hardy county, Va., and lived there until 1786, when Mr. Brown removed with his family to Kentucky, and lived there until about 1800, when he moved to Clermont county, Ohio, where he died in 1818, aged ninety years. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war serving three years. He was over age when he enlisted, and served in the same command with his son, George, and with the maternal grandfather of our subject. He was at the defeat and surrender of Lord Cornwallis in 1781. One of his daughters married Major Soudouski of County Pulaski's Polish army in the Revolution.

George Brown, father of Joseph F., was born in Hardy county, Va. He enlisted at the age of seventeen years as a soldier in the Continental army, serving three years, and was present at the siege of Yorktown and surrender of Lord Cornwallis. He removed to Kentucky with his father in 1786, and they lived in a stockade fort to protect themselves from the Indians. He was in Gen. St. Clair's army, and was in the battle of Fort Recovery at St. Clair's defeat. In 1790 he was in Gen. Harmon's army, and in 1794 in Gen. Wayne's army, being at Fort Wayne when Gen. Wayne received the surrender of the Indians, under Little Turtle. He took part in the battle of Tippecanoe—Joe Davis's regiment—in which the captain of his company was killed, and he was with Col. Dick Johnson in the march to the river Thames in Canada. The regiment was surprised at the river Raisin by Tecumseh, and they did not reach the river Thames, where that noted Indian was killed. Tecumseh was an educated man and a Mason of high degree. He saved the life of George Brown in battle, who gave the Masonic signal of distress. George Brown married Hannah John, born in Westmoreland county, Pa., daughter of John and Mahala (Evans) John. John John and his wife were both of Welsh stock, and were both born in Cardigan, Wales. John John served throughout the war of the Revolution and was the largest man (seven feet tall and weighed 275 pounds) in General Washington's army, and was with him in all his battles. In 1808 George Brown settled in Clermont county, Ohio, and in April, 1821, he removed to Rush county, Ind., settling in Richland township. He died there and was buried in September, 1825. The United States Government has marked his grave as that of a Revolutionary soldier. His children were: William J., born in 1805, long Congressman from his District, who died in 1857; Dr. Ryland T., born in 1807, Professor at Butler University, who died in 1890; George W., born in 1810, former State Senator, died in 1857; Rebecca, born in February, 1814, who married, in 1830, Charles Lowry, and died in 1846, in Missouri; and Joseph F., born May 7, 1820.

Joseph F. Brown was born in Clermont county, Ohio, May 7, 1820, and was but an infant when he was brought by his parents to Rush county, Ind., in 1821. Brought up among the pioneers of the Hoosier State, he received his education in the common schools of Rush county, the Seminary at Connersville, the Indiana State University and Hanover College. Among his classmates were Governors Porter and Hendricks, William H. English and Jonathan Gordon. He came to Indianapolis, Feb. 21, 1837, when a young man of seventeen years of age to work as a clerk for his brother William J. Brown, then secretary of State, and he performed his services in that capacity in the old Governor's mansion on the Circle, now Monument Place. He read law under the late Judge Blackford, for thirty-five years Chief Justice of the Indiana Supreme Court, and was admitted to practice May 7, 1841—his twenty-first birthday. He practiced his profession at Lafayette in 1841-42, and was elected clerk of the Lower House of the Legislature. In 1843 he accompanied his brother, William J., then a member of Congress from his district, to Washington, and was appointed assistant clerk in the House of Representatives, serving several years. He afterward was chief clerk in the adjutant-general's office, and often served as acting chief clerk of the War Department. While in Washington he became personally acquainted with many old-time statesmen: Henry Clay, John C. Calhoun, Daniel Webster, and a host of lesser lights. Could his reminiscences be gathered and published, they would form an exceedingly interesting and valuable contribution to the history of that period.

In 1856 Mr. Brown resigned his position to become manager of the Washington Gas Light Company, which had been chartered by Congress in 1848, mainly at his solicitation, and that of his friend, William H. English, then employed in the Treasury Department, they owning the principal capital stock of the company. He remained in the management of the concern fifteen years. He was a member of the Board of Aldermen of Washington twelve years, and not infrequently acted in the capacity of president of the board, as mayor ex-officio of the city. In 1861 he was appointed by President Lincoln police commissioner of the District of Columbia, and was active in organizing the Metropolitan Police Force of the city. In 1875 he returned to Indianapolis and accepted the position of Transcript Clerk in the County Clerk's office, his nephew, the late Austin H. Brown, then being clerk. He has since continuously remained in this position.

Mr. Brown has for sixty years been a frequent contributor to many of the leading magazines and newspapers. His first poem of any length that attracted general attention was one descriptive of the battle of New Orleans. It was read before the State Convention Jan. 8, 1841, and was generally complimented by papers of both political parties. Mr. Brown is the only person now living who was present on the occasion when the first telegraph message was sent over the wires from Washington to Baltimore, June 14, 1844, by Prof. Morse, with whom he was well acquainted. The message was "What wonders God hath wrought." He was also one of the passengers on the first public train of cars that ever ran over a railroad west of the Alleghany Mountains, July 4, 1839, from Madison to Vernon. He occupied a seat with his old friend, William Jackson. Mr. Brown is the oldest living ex-official of the State of Indiana. He is also the oldest living former merchant of the city, having been a partner in the book and periodical business conducted by W. J. and J. F. Brown in a store where the Yohn block now stands, and is the oldest living lawyer in Indiana. He is called the "Nestor of the Bar of the State."

"Uncle Joe Brown," as he is familiarly called, is one of the most interesting characters to be found in any of the public offices of the State. His form is bowed, and his wrinkled face beams with kindly smiles under his thin snow-white hair. For over thirty years he has held his present position, undisturbed by the change of political administration. He is greatly respected by the citizens of Indianapolis, by his fellow officials and by all who know him.

ELBERT F. NORWOOD, of Indianapolis, represents one of the early pioneer families of Marion county. George Norwood, his father, was born in Baltimore, Md., in 1789, and William Norwood, his grandfather, was born in Ireland. Three brothers came to this country. Their mother died in Ireland. William, the eldest of these, located in Tennessee, and John, the second, settled in Georgia, where he had a son, Thomas, who became a prominent character, representing his district in Congress and later representing the State in the United States Senate. The third, Charles Norwood, made his home in Baltimore, where he reared a family and had a son Charles, who became a famous civil engineer of that city. So far as is known all the Norwoods in America are descended from this stock, whose coming to this country is noted above.

George Norwood, the father of Elbert F., was reared in Blount and Washington counties, Tenn., where he learned the wagon-making trade. In 1812 he married Mary Ann Rooker, a native of Tennessee, daughter of William Rooker, who came from England when nineteen years old, and who was a pioneer with his family in Marion county, Ind. He died in 1838, near Mooreville, and his widow did not long survive.

George Norwood came into Indiana from Tennessee in 1818, locating on land which has since become the site of Milton, Wayne county. In March, 1822, he arrived in Indianapolis, the year of the location of the capital of the State here. In the laying out of the town Mr. Norwood rendered active assistance to Alexander Ralston, especially in the setting of stakes and other labor connected with the undertaking. Mr. Norwood established the first wagon shop in the city, and it is a fact worthy of note that Lorenzo Dow, the famous evangelist of the early days, preached in his shop after its erection. Here Mr. Norwood followed wagonmaking for many years, and was in all respects a representative citizen and a typical pioneer. In his political relations he was a Whig, and on the organization of the party became a Republican. At one time he was a member of the city council, and he also served as city treasurer. He was a sincere and active member of the Methodist Church, and was a trustee of the first society of that denomination formed in the city. His death occurred March 8, 1880. His wife passed away Feb. 28, 1877, being in her eighty-fourth year at the time. They were the parents of ten children, six daughters and four sons. Four sons and two daughters lived to mature years, of whom Elbert F. is the only survivor. Those who died after reaching mature life were George Washington, Newton Nicholas, Elliot Lorenzo, Mrs. Louisa Jane Jones and Mrs. Ann Maria Bird (who died June 17, 1902).

Elbert F. Norwood was born in Indianapolis, June 18, 1830, and the greater part of his life has been spent at home. He learned the trade of a tinner, and has been very successful in his business dealings.

Mr. Norwood was married, Sept. 27, 1854, to Miss Eliza A. Cully, and their only child, Mrs. Ida C. Weaver, is a resident of Indianapolis. Mr. Norwood is one of the oldest living native citizens of Indianapolis. His first vote was cast for Gen. Scott in 1852, and he has been a Republican since the formation of the party. He and his family belong to the Presbyterian Church.

DANIEL WAIT HOWE was born in Patriot, Switzerland Co., Ind., Oct. 24, 1839, the only child of Daniel Haven Howe and Lucy (Hicks) Howe. His father came to Indiana from near Salamanca, N. Y., about 1835, and engaged in the lumber business at Patriot, where he died in 1842. His widow afterward married Samuel P. Oyler, and they settled in 1850 in Franklin, Johnson Co., Ind., where Colonel Oyler practiced law. Colonel Oyler served in the Civil war as major of the 7th Indiana Volunteers, and as lieutenant-colonel of the 79th Ind. V. I. After the war he was Circuit judge, and served four years in the Indiana State Senate. He was grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and grand master of the Odd Fellows in that State. He died in 1898, after which his widow made her home with her son in Indianapolis, where she died in 1904. She was a daughter of Solomon and Lucy (Butts) Hicks, and came to Indiana with her father and his family in 1826. Mr. Hicks served in the American Army in the war of 1812.

Judge Howe's paternal grandfather, Nathan Howe, was a captain in the American army in a New York regiment in the war of 1812; two of Judge Howe's ancestors, Capt. Eliakim Howe and his son, Otis, served in the New Hampshire militia in the Revolutionary war, and another ancestor, Col. Thomas Howe, of Marlborough, Mass., served in King Philip's war. The Judge's first American ancestor was John Howe, who was in Sudbury, Mass., about 1657.

Judge Howe was graduated from Franklin College, in Indiana, in 1857, after which he taught school in the winters of 1858 and 1859. In the winter of 1860 he attended a course of lectures on law in Indianapolis. In the spring of 1861 he enlisted in the army, becoming a private in the 7th Indiana Volunteers, and he served three months in West Virginia, participating in the battle of Carrick's Ford. He again entered the service as first lieutenant of Company I, 79th Ind. V. I., and was afterward promoted to captain. He participated in the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, the East Tennessee campaign and the Atlanta campaign. He was complimented in the official reports for meritorious conduct at the battle of Missionary Ridge. He was severely wounded at Kenesaw Mountain, Ga., June 23, 1864, and was honorably discharged Nov. 10, 1864.

After the close of the war he was graduated from the Albany (N. Y.) Law School, in 1867, and began the practice of law in partnership with his stepfather, Colonel Oyler, at Franklin, Ind., where he held the office of city attorney and State prosecuting attorney. While residing there he married Inez Hamilton, daughter of Robert A. and Susan (Saunders) Hamilton, who came to Indiana from Kentucky. Mr. Hamilton's ancestors were of Scotch-Irish descent, and his first American ancestor settled in Pennsylvania. To the marriage of Daniel Wait and Inez (Hamilton) Howe were born three children: Ruth, Lucy and Susan. Ruth died at the age of eighteen. Lucy is a graduate of Abbott Academy (Andover, Mass.), of the Indiana State University and Cornell (N. Y.) University; she married Archibald M. Hall, and resides in Franklin, Ind. Susan resides with her parents in Indianapolis.

In 1873 Judge Howe removed to Indianapolis, where he practiced law until 1876, in which year he was elected a judge of the Superior court, retaining that position until 1890, when he again resumed the practice of the law, in which he is still engaged. He is now and has been for several years president of the Indiana Historical Society; and he is also a member of the New England Historical-Genealogical Society. He has also been president of the Indianapolis Bar Association. He is the author of the "Puritan Republic" (published in 1899), "Civil War Times" (published in 1902), and of various other books and pamphlets, and is preparing a general Howe genealogy. In fraternal connection he is a Knight Templar and also a thirty-second degree Mason (Scottish Rite). Judge Howe resides at No. 1007 North New Jersey street, and his office is at No. 3 Union Trust building.

BAGOT & BAGOT. The law firm of Bagot & Bagot, which has an established reputation of over a decade in Anderson, is one of the leading firms of its kind in central Indiana, and is made up of two Indiana men, both able attorneys by training and experience.

The Bagot family was originally of French stock, the name being pronounced Bago, and one of this family was one Jean Bago, a French Jesuit writer, born in 1580. Members of the family early emigrated to England, probably with William the Conqueror, and prominent members of this branch of the family were: Lewis Bagot, an English prelate, born in 1740, was successively Bishop of Bristol, of Norwich and of St. Asaph; his brother, Richard, born in 1782, became Bishop of Oxford in 1829 and of Bath and Wells in 1845; Sir Charles Bagot, an English diplomat, born in Blithfield, Staffordshire, England, in 1781, was minister plenipotentiary at Washington in 1816-1819, ambassador to St. Petersburg from 1820 to 1824, to Holland from 1824 to 1834, and to Austria from 1834 to 1842; in the latter year he became Governor General of Canada, where he died May 18, 1843. The last two named were distant relatives of Walter Bagot, the grandfather of Thomas and Charles K. Bagot, and correspondence between the families of recent years has developed much family history. A tradition in this branch of the family is that six generations prior to that of our subjects, a member of the Bagot family in England married an Irish girl and settled in Ireland, and communication with the family was then cut off.

Walter Bagot, the grandfather of our subjects, was born in County Tipperary, Ireland. He married Ellen Burk, and to this union the following children were born: Mary A., who married John Mansfield of Philadelphia; Walter, now living in New Zealand; Johanna, who married Robert Tobin, of Philadelphia, who is now deceased; Frank, a soldier of the Civil war, who served in Company K, 37th Ind. V. I., and was killed at the battle of Stone River; Thomas, who settled at an early day at Vicksburg, was in the quartermaster general's department of the Confederate army, afterward became a contractor at Vicksburg, and is now deceased; Margaret, who married Charles Kopf and settled at Shawneetown, Ill.; James, who died in Cincinnati, Ohio; and William F. In Ireland the family were Catholic, but since coming to America have been liberal in religion.

William F. Bagot was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, about 1819. He received a good education in his youth, and came to America when about twenty-one years old. He landed in Philadelphia, but remained there but a short time, coming west to Ohio, and settling in Cincinnati. Here he married Catherine Phelan, daughter of Dennis Phelan. Mr. Bagot engaged in contracting in Cincinnati, and on the Mississippi river, built the "Burnet House" in Cincinnati, and was one of the contractors who built the Hamilton County Court House. Later in life he became a farmer in Ripley county, Ind., where he lived until 1892, when he retired from active life, and died in the month of November, 1906. His wife died aged about sixty years, leaving these children: Charles K.; William F.; Thomas; Ella B., who married Christopher Connolly; and Mary A., who married Charles Reedy.

THOMAS BAGOT, senior member of the law firm of Bagot & Bagot, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, May 27, 1851. When about six years old he came with his parents to Indiana, and was reared on the farm in Ripley county. He attended the district schools of his locality, and was reared to the life of a farmer. When he was nineteen years of age he commenced teaching in the public schools of Ripley county, and taught for several years. In 1874 he was surveyor in Ripley county, and served as such for several years. In the meantime he had studied law and fitted himself for the practice of that profession. In 1879 he was elected county superintendent of schools of Ripley county, and served in that capacity until 1883, and for a time engaged in the mercantile business with his brother, meantime practicing law at intervals. In 1886 or 1887 he removed to New Castle, Ind., where he was special agent for the Union Life Insurance Co., and as such he continued until 1893, when he formed a law partnership with his brother, Charles K. Bagot, which has become the present well known firm of Bagot & Bagot, Anderson.

Politically Thomas Bagot is a Democrat, and was a presidential elector from the sixth Indiana district in 1892. He is well-known in Central Indiana, as an able lawyer, and a practical man of business. On June 24, 1896, Mr. Bagot married Miss Georgia Byer, of New Castle, Ind., who died Feb. 19, 1907. She was a noble woman, a graduate of the State University at Bloomington, Ind., and a daughter of John S. Byer, of New Castle.

CHARLES K. BAGOT, the junior member of the firm of Bagot & Bagot, was born in Ripley county, Ind., Oct. 19, 1861, and received his education in the public schools of his home locality. When twenty years of age he became a teacher in Ripley county, meanwhile prosecuting law studies in the office of William D. Wilson, of Versailles, Ind., with whom he later formed a partnership. He continued with Mr. Wilson for several years, and then formed a partnership with Adam Stockinger, of the same city. In 1893 he returned to Anderson to form a partnership with his brother.

Charles K. Bagot has been twice married. His first wife was Grace B. Risinger, and she was the mother of: Mary L., and Walter R. Mrs. Bagot died in 1897, and Mr. Bagot married (second), in 1903, Mary Terrill, niece of Dr. Luther B. Terrill, of Anderson. To this union one child has been born: Frances T. Mr. Bagot is an active member of the Democratic party, and takes a great interest in its success in this section, and is well known as a campaign speaker. He stands high in the ranks of his profession and in the esteem of the community.

ORESTES C. LUKENBILL, M. D., a regular practising physician and surgeon at No. 2219 East Washington street, Indianapolis, with residence at No. 1902 East Washington street, was born near Gosport, Owen county, Ind., Aug. 14, 1867. His parents, Barnabas and Mary A. (Alverson) Lukenbill, were natives of Owen county, where the family was established by David Lukenbill, grandfather of Dr. Orestes C., who came to this country from Germany in his boyhood, locating for a time in North Carolina, but being numbered among the early pioneers of Owen county.

Barnabas Lukenbill has spent most of his life in farming and milling. He was a veteran of the Mexican war, and is still living at the age of eighty-one years. Mrs. Mary A. Lukenbill died at the age of sixty-two years. Her people came from Kentucky into Indiana, and were descended from remote Scotch ancestors. Mr. and Mrs. Barnabas Lukenbill had a family of six children, two of whom are deceased. Wesley Ellsworth, the fourth, having been accidentally killed while out hunting, when about thirty years old. David A., the sixth, died in infancy. William Thomas, who is now fifty-one years old, lives at Gosport, where he is engaged in farming; he is married, and has one son. Paris E. lives at Newberry, Ind., where he is engaged in business as a hotel-keeper; he is married, and has two children. Mrs. Dru Chrisman lives at Athens, Ohio. Orestes C. was the fifth child in the family.

Dr. Lukenbill was educated in the public schools and the University of Indiana. He graduated from the Gosport high school, and pursued his medical studies in the University of Louisville and the Medical College of Indiana, from which he was graduated in 1892. Immediately after graduating he located at his present office and has been in continuous and successful practice since that time. The Doctor is associated with the various medical bodies of the times, such as the Marion County and the State Medical Societies, and the American Medical Association. In the Masonic fraternity he is very prominent, having risen to the thirty-second degree, Scottish Rite, and is a member of the Mystic Shrine. He is associated with Center Lodge, of Indianapolis, and is also a member of Indianapolis Lodge, No. 56, K. P. He is a Republican in political matters.

On Oct. 23, 1893, Dr. Lukenbill was married to Miss Pearl Cline, who was born in Clayton, Hendricks Co., Ind., a daughter of David and Florence Cline. Mrs. Lukenbill was educated at the Central Normal College, Danville, Ind. She is a member of the East Washington Street Presbyterian Church.

CAPT. WILLIAM J. WALLACE, one of the highly respected and successful farmers of Perry township, Marion Co., Ind., and a veteran of the Civil war, was born April 28, 1837, in Marion county, son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Monroe) Wallace, natives of Bourbon county, Kentucky.

John Wallace, grandfather of Capt. William J., was a native of Virginia, and an early settler in Kentucky, where he died when still in middle life. By occupation he was a millwright and farmer, and at one time was a wealthy man, but met with reverses, and sacrificed 600 acres of land to pay his creditors. By descent he was a Scotchman, and inherited many of the excellent traits of character of that sturdy nation. His descendants are numerous, for he had a large family. On the maternal side the grandfather of Capt. William J. Wallace was Alexander Monroe, a native of Virginia, and a pioneer in Kentucky and later in Indiana, residing in the latter State at the home of his son-in-law, Joseph Wallace, in Marion county, until his death, which occurred over sixty years ago, when he was eighty-seven years of age. This venerable man had been a soldier in the war of the Revolution, and he was a great patriot. During his long life he made many friends and his funeral was the largest ever held in Perry township. He had seven or eight children, all of whom grew to be highly respected men and women. For many years Alexander Monroe was a Baptist preacher and converted hundreds to the church.

Joseph Wallace, the Captain's father, was a farmer and stock raiser all his life. Coming to Indiana in 1828, he located on the farm where his son William now resides, in Perry township, one mile east of Southport, Ind., buying 120 acres, which he improved and later sold, settling upon and improving another 120 acres adjoining, and here he died in 1874, aged seventy-four years. His wife passed away a year previously, when about seventy years old. Both were members of the Missionary Baptist Church, in which he was a deacon for many years. Ten children were born to these people, four sons and six daughters, Capt. William J. being now the only survivor.

William J. Wallace was reared in Perry township, and has resided in the country almost all his life. His early education was obtained in the old-fashioned subscription schools, and he resided at home until he had attained his majority, when he rented a farm until 1856, at which time he was called to Indianapolis to serve for six years as deputy county recorder. In July, 1861, fired with patriotism, he enlisted in Company D, 26th Ind. Vol. Inf., and served until October, 1864. His name was the first to be enrolled in his company, and while he entered as a private his bravery soon won him promotion to the rank of second lieutenant, then first lieutenant, and finally, during the last two years of his service, he was captain. On Dec. 7, 1862, at the battle of Prairie Grove, Ark., he was wounded in the right arm. While he was in the service Captain Wallace was in the following engagements: Prairie Grove; Yazoo City; almost all through the siege of Vicksburg; down to Port Hudson and Carrollton, and from there was sent out from Morganza Bend, near the Atchafalaya river, where he was captured by General Green's forces and marched direct to Tyler, Texas, being held for over ten months in the stockade without any shade, suffering untold misery and hardships. In 1864 he and his fellow prisoners were exchanged at the mouth of the Red river, then were taken to New Orleans. Here they were placed in excellent barracks and carefully treated until they had recovered from the effects of their cruel captivity. When in good condition again they were taken to Carrollton and remained there until honorably discharged. So strictly honest was Captain Wallace, and so carefully did he guard the interests of the government, that when the time of settlement came there was only $4.40 for which he could not account—a very remarkable record, considering the disturbed state of affairs.

After the war, Captain Wallace returned to Indianapolis and was on the police force for one year, when he moved to his father's farm, renting it in 1868, and continued to operate it until 1870. At this date he was elected clerk of Marion county, and so served until 1874, to the entire satisfaction of all parties concerned. In 1874 he returned to the farm, where he now resides, now owning 113 acres of finely cultivated land, upon which he has made many improvements. In political opinion he is a staunch Republican and takes an active part in all campaigns, his personal popularity and thorough grasp of existing conditions giving him great influence among his neighbors. Captain Wallace and his family are all members of the Baptist Church, in which they are highly esteemed.

On Oct. 25, 1855, Captain Wallace was married to Miss Mary A. Moore, daughter of Thomas E. and Margaret (Tucker) Moore, and three children have been born to them: (1) Luther T., a farmer in Perry township, married Miss Martha J. Meyers, and they have had five children, William E., Mary Ethel, Aria W., Leona, and Ruth, of whom William died at the age of fifteen years, and Ruth died in infancy. (2) Laura A., the second child of Captain Wallace, married Rev. N. C. Smith, and they live at Princeton, Ind. (3) Florence Elizabeth, the third, married George A. Ross, and they reside in Perry township, where both were born and reared. He is now a farmer and teacher. They have had six children, Wallace A., Arthur, William Jerald, Florence Marion, Eleanor and George Emmerson. Of these, Arthur died in infancy.

Captain Wallace and all his family are numbered among the substantial and reliable people of the several communities in which they reside. The genial head of the family can look with pride upon his children and grandchildren, as well as back upon a well-spent life, devoted to the good of his country and the welfare of his family.

BENJAMIN F. COOK, for the past several years a factor in the commercial life of Indianapolis, has fine quarters for his business as a lumberman and investment broker in Room 517, Stevenson building. He was born in Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 25, 1843, son of Burnet and Thirza (Hoyt) Cook, the father a native of Scotland and the mother of England. Ten children were born to them, of whom eight were sons. The only members of the family now living are Benjamin F., and Lucy A., who is the wife of J. A. Wakefield, of Seattle, Washington.

Burnet Cook was a butcher. He came to America with his parents when only eight years old, and they located on Long Island, where he grew to manhood. For a number of years he was engaged in business at Ithaca, N. Y., and then removed to Penn Yan, where he remained until 1852. That year he went to Davenport, Iowa, where he pulled the first locomotive across the river that ever crossed that stream at that point, dragging it across on the ice. He lived in Davenport from 1852 until 1886, being engaged in farming as well as butchering, in the latter year removing to Sioux City, Iowa, to make his home with his son, Benjamin F., where he died in 1891, at the age of eighty-nine years. His wife, who passed to her rest at the age of sixty-two years, died in 1871. They were both Presbyterians, and he had been a trustee of the church for many years. In his more active years he had served as township trustee, justice of the peace and school director.

Nathan Cook, the father of Burnet, was born in Scotland. For many years he carried on a tannery at Ithaca, N. Y., where he died aged 103. Coming to this country he served in the Revolutionary war and the war of 1812. His wife was a Miss Lewis, and she bore her husband a numerous family.

Levi Hoyt, the father of Thirza Hoyt, whose name appears in the opening paragraph of this article, was a native of England, and when he came to this country, made his home at first in Connecticut, but afterward removed to Spencer, N. Y., where he followed shoe-making. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. When he died at Spencer, N. Y., he was over seventy years of age. In his family there were four children.

When Benjamin F. Cook was nine years old his parents took him to Davenport, Iowa, where he grew to manhood. For the ensuing three years he attended the local schools, and was early set to learn his father's business, that of a butcher. When he became a man he took up the live stock trade, and followed it until 1888. That year he engaged in a wholesale grocery business, at Sioux City, Iowa, in which he remained until 1894, in which year his wife died. Since then he has been a lumberman, operating mostly in Mississippi and Louisiana.

Benjamin F. Cook was married Dec. 27, 1870, to Miss Mary J., a daughter of J. L. and Rachel Ann (Taylor) Andre, of Medina, Ohio. To this union were born two sons and two daughters: Benjamin Alfred was drowned when he was nineteen years old; Nathan Leroy married Edith Gotham, and they live in Sioux City, Iowa, where he is engaged in the restaurant business; Jettie Pearl, and Besie L. Mrs. Mary J. Cook died June 1, 1894, at the age of forty-seven years. She was a member of the Methodist Church. Her father was a farmer and stock raiser, and has had his home at Davenport, Iowa, since 1862, where he still lives on his farm. His wife died in 1899.

Mr. Cook was married (second), Feb. 27, 1901, to Mrs. Ollie Knight, widow of William C. Knight, and daughter of William and Elizabeth (Jones) Cunningham, both of whom were natives of Miami county, and life-long residents of Peru. Her father is a farmer, and has reared a family of seven children.

Mr. and Mrs. Cook are members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Cook belongs to the Knights of Pythias, Mounted Division of the Uniform Rank, the Princes of Iran, the A. O. U. W., and the Legion of Honor. In politics he is a Republican, but has had no aspirations for office-holding honors. In the various orders to which he belongs he has filled important chairs, and for eleven years was treasurer of the Mounted Division, K. P., at Sioux City. He has been Chancellor and Vice Chancellor Commander of the Knights of Pythias, and Master Workman and Recorder of the A. O. U. W., of which he is the oldest member in good standing in Iowa.

In 1900 he came to Indianapolis, and has established himself and family in very cozy and comfortable quarters at the corner of 17th and Ruckle streets.

Mr. Cook is president of the Dixon Lumber Company, doing business in Mississippi. He buys and sells large tracts of timber land in the South, and has colonized a number of localities in the South, principally from Iowa.

REV. SEBASTIAN C. BARTH, of Indianapolis, enjoys the distinction of not only being the oldest pastor of the German Reformed Church but also of being one of the oldest resident clergymen of that city. He was born near Frankfort, in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, Oct. 12, 1815, son of Sebastian Barth.

Sebastian Barth crossed the ocean in 1831 to seek a home in the New World, bringing with him his wife and five sons, born to a former marriage; their mother died in Germany. The first settlement of the Barth family was made at Chambersburg, Pa., but later on Mr. Barth removed to Bedford, in the same State, and in 1837 came to Indianapolis, among the early settlers of the city. He passed away soon after his arrival, and the widow and sons were left to make their way in what was practically a new country. The two older sons were Adam, who was born in 1810, and George, born in 1813. These young men were successfully engaged in business in Louisville, Ky., when their father died; whereupon they came to Indianapolis and took the widow and the other children back with them to Louisville. The family were what might be termed natural musicians, and for a number of years traveled through the South, giving concerts. Sebastian C., now the only living son, was the third of the brothers; Philip, the fourth, and John, the youngest. Two daughters were born to the second marriage of the father, Catherine and Elizabeth. All the members of this family became converted, and led worthy Christian lives. Adam enlisted in the Union army during the Civil war, and, receiving a sunstroke while in the service, died at his home in 1865. George raised a company at Louisville, was chosen captain, made a fine record at the front, and was promoted several times, attaining the rank of colonel; when he died at his home in Louisville years later he was buried with military honors; he was an ardent Republican. Philip who became a minister, passed away at Iowa City, Iowa, several years ago. John, also a prominent clergyman, died at his home in Indianapolis. The sisters are still living in Louisville. All the brothers except Sebastian C. were members of the Methodist Church, and died in that communion.

In 1840 Sebastian C. Barth was converted and united with the church. He gave up all worldly pursuits and devoted his life to the service of the Lord. His honorable and useful career, his unselfish spirit and devoted labors in the church attest the sincerity of his vows of consecration. He and his brother Philip traveled as colporteurs of the Methodist Church in 1842 and 1843. The latter year he entered the ministry of the Methodist Church, at the request of the authorities of that body, having exhibited marked ability while exhorting during his work as a colporteur. His first charge was the Versailles mission, from Lexington to the mouth of the Osage river, twenty miles below Jefferson City, in Missouri. He preached to the Germans under Presiding Elder Jennison, receiving a salary of fifty dollars a year. Fifteen congregations were organized by him in the different counties above mentioned, and the discharge of his duties involved a journey of three hundred miles on horseback every three weeks. During the first year he used up three horses, which were given him by a kind Christian farmer. He would ride nights to reach his preaching points, often making a journey of fifty miles between sunset and sunrise.

Mr. Barth was married in 1844 to the worthy and faithful helpmate who is still his companion in life, Elizabeth Fieser, a native of Hasslock, Rheinpfalz, Germany. Soon after his marriage Mr. Barth was appointed by the Conference as pastor at Burlington, Iowa, where he remained two years. He was successively in charge at Quincy, Ill.; St. Louis; Wheeling, W. Va.; Pittsburg; Cincinnati; Lafayette, Ind.; Ann Arbor, Mich.; Toledo, Ohio; and Fort Wayne, Ind. On account of throat trouble he removed to Nashville, Tenn., where he remained from 1858 to the breaking out of the Civil war, in 1861. As his support was cut off because of war troubles he came back to Indianapolis by the advice of his brother John. Here he found a prejudice against him because he had been connected with the Methodist Church South, and for six years—from 1861 to 1867—he was rejected, though he applied each year for an assignment as pastor. Accordingly, in 1867, by an urgent invitation he entered the Indiana Classis of the Reformed Church, where he has been engaged for forty years as an able and consecrated minister. He was in the Methodist ministry for twenty-four years, making in all sixty-four years during which he has preached the Gospel with singleness of mind and sincerity of purpose.

For three years Mr. Barth was pastor of the First German Reformed Church in Indianapolis. He had charges in New Albany, Fort Wayne and Middletown, Ind., and then, coming back to Indianapolis, took up mission work at Haughville and Springdale. In this work he was engaged until 1895, when he resigned, on his eightieth birthday. He and his wife, with their two youngest daughters, are now living at their pleasant home, No. 715 North West street, Indianapolis. Rev. and Mrs. Barth have had ten children, nine of whom are now living, five sons and four daughters. Seven are married and have families of their own. Mr. and Mrs. Barth have been married sixty-three years, and their wedded life has been a beautiful illustration of ideal marital happiness. They celebrated their golden wedding in 1894 and their diamond wedding in 1904—a privilege vouchsafed to few.

The fiftieth anniversary of the entrance of Mr. Barth into the ministry—1843 to 1893—was observed with loving zeal in 1893, the many friends of this aged and beloved servant of God making it a time of rejoicing and congratulation. It was first celebrated in the Brightwood congregation, all the Reformed churches in the city taking part, with their respective ministers, who addressed the large assembly of jubilaum. It was a great anniversary feast in honor of his fifty years' service in the ministry—a glorious time, to the honor of God through Christ the beloved Savior. The anniversary was as fittingly celebrated by the Hope Congregation at Springdale.

Mr. Barth prizes very highly a copy of "The Souvenir of the West German Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church," which was presented him by a committee of students and a professor of the Central Wesleyan College, in Warrenton, Mo. The Professor, as their president, wrote him a letter March 19, 1906, asking for information about the German Versailles mission, of which he was the first missionary, organizing congregations in 1843 and 1844. It was placed under the care of the West German Conference, but no member of the conference had any knowledge of the beginning of the mission except Mr. Barth, to whom, as first pastor, the Professor turned when appointed by a committee to write a church history, from the beginning, of every congregation under the care of said conference. Mr. Barth complied with his request for information concerning the mission, and was subsequently favored with a copy of the completed work.

ALFRED ELLIS, a farmer of Washington township, Marion Co., Ind., was born there, on the Allison Pike, Oct. 26, 1830, a son of James and Leah (Cruze) Ellis. The father was born in Virginia, and his father was also born in that State, where he died.

James Ellis was a farmer, and coming to Indiana before his marriage, in 1818, entered eighty acres on Fall creek, in Washington township, which he sold after improving to buy the adjoining quarter-section on the south. This he thoroughly improved, and there he reared his family. He died on that place in 1845, at the age of fifty-five years, his widow surviving until 1889, to the age of seventy-five years. Her death was the result of an accident, in which she was thrown out of a wagon. Mrs. Ellis's religious convictions brought her early into the Presbyterian Church, and she lived a good life. Mr. Ellis was not identified with any church, but was a believer in the Bible, and a religious man of solid convictions and genuine worth. In his more active years he was called to fill several town offices. He and his wife had two sons and two daughters, three of the children now living: Paulina, the wife of Millard J. Millard, of Knoxville, Iowa; Alfred; and Henry, of Denver, Colo. Mrs. Ellis also reared an orphan boy from infancy until grown.

Philip Cruze, the maternal grandfather of Alfred Ellis, came to Vincennes, Ind., from North Carolina, where his daughter Leah was born, and later settled about five miles north of Indianapolis for a stay of one summer, after which he lived to be a very old man in Illinois, where he died.

Alfred Ellis was reared on the farm where he now lives until he attained his majority, when he went to California, in the spring of 1852, to prospect for gold, and spent eight years in that State. He lived in Nevada for fifteen years, being in the service of the Government most of that time. Mr. Ellis enlisted in the 2d California Cavalry as a member of Company K, and served eighteen months. His command did not participate in any battle, and he came out as he went into the army, a private. He receives a pension. After the war Mr. Ellis was employed in a saw-mill, and in January, 1867, he returned home by way of Central America. For a time he lived with his mother on the home farm, and then, marrying, he began farming on his own account, in which work he has been engaged to the present time.

Mr. Ellis was married March 4, 1867, to Miss Sarah E., daughter of Jonah F. and Hilah Ross (Shaw) Lemon, of Ohio, and to this union have come five children, four sons and one daughter: James L., Dora M., Charles F., and two that died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis belong to the Methodist Church. He became a Mason in Indianapolis in 1852.

When Mr. Ellis began life for himself, he had thirty-eight acres of the old homestead to farm. On the death of his father-in-law his wife came into possession of a hundred acres in Lawrence township, making 138 acres, which they still own. He has lived in Marion county with the exception of the time occupied by his Western experiences, and has seen the face of the country transformed. After the family settled here his mother picked brush many days to get the ground ready for the plow, and she was as industrious and thrifty as the hard demands of that time necessitated. They kept sheep, and when the wool was clipped Mrs. Ellis spun and wove it into cloth for the family wear. She raised flax and made linen out of which the boys' breeches were fashioned, again by her hands, and Mr. Ellis has in his possession a skein of flax which she raised on the home farm and put up ready for the spinning-wheel with which to make thread. In 1821 she gathered enough nettle weed from the grounds of the Fair Association to make twenty yards of linen, which she spun and wove herself. This will give the children of the present day an idea of the tasks laid on the farmers' wives in pioneer days, in addition to their regular household duties. Sixty-five or seventy years ago all the sugar and syrup were made from the tree sap, an interesting but arduous addition to the tasks of the overworked pioneers. Alfred Ellis can remember when the meadows were mowed with the old-fashioned scythe, and the wheat was cut with the reaping hook, and later with the cradle. He has pitched hay with a wooden fork, has seen the ground broken with an old wooden mold-board plow, and has helped in the work of hauling and piling the logs removed in the making of some of the best farms of the present, this country having been two-thirds forest during his early years.

Jonah F. Lemon, father of Mrs. Ellis, was born in Newtown, Hamilton Co., Ohio, Aug. 10, 1811, and married Hilah Ross Shaw in 1835. She was born in November, 1817. They became the parents of five children, three of whom are now living: Sarah E., Mrs. Alfred Ellis; Mary E., the widow of Hezekiah Hutchins, of Indianapolis; and Daniel A., of the same city.

Mr. and Mrs. Jonah F. Lemon came to Indiana about 1839, locating on Fall creek, about nine miles northeast of Indianapolis, where Mrs. Lemon died at the age of twenty-nine years, July 14, 1847. Mr. Lemon was married in December, 1847, to Mary F. Wright, and two of the five children born to this union are now living: Luella, who is the wife of Charles S. Schofield; and Dora, the wife of William V. Rooker, of Indianapolis. Mr. Lemon died March 7, 1893, at the aged of eighty-two years. Mrs. Mary F. Lemon died in February, 1884, at the age of sixty-four years. Mr. Lemon and both his wives were members of the Methodist Church, and he was a Royal Arch Mason.

SMITH CRAFT, whose home is at No. 726 Indiana avenue, Indianapolis, was born in Richmond, Ind., June 27, 1829, a son of Thomas and Hannah (O'Hara) Craft. The father was born and reared in Ohio, and the mother in New Jersey. They were among the very early pioneers at Richmond, Ind., and there lived until they died. Of their family of nine children, Smith Craft is now the only survivor.

Mr. Craft came into Marion county about 1855. He learned the blacksmith's trade, which has been his life business, though at the present time, owing to his advanced years and the infirmities of age, he is not engaged in active labor. He has ever been an active and industrious citizen, and possesses uncommon mechanical ability and an inventive mind. One of his most important inventions is what is known as the stacker, which farmers employ in stacking hay.

Mr. Craft and Miss Mary Baylor were married June 1, 1854. She is a daughter of John and Nancy Baylor, and granddaughter of Peter Baylor, a native of Pennsylvania. The father of Peter Baylor was kidnapped when a boy on his way to school, and was brought from Germany. He was sold for his passage to a party on the Delaware river. Peter Baylor removed to Ohio, where he became a pioneer in Urbana county, and there his son John was born, the eldest of five children. The father died when John was but a lad of sixteen, and eleven years later, in 1827, he came to Indianapolis, being among the very first to make a home in the city. He lived on the National road, on what is now known as the Holmes place, and there he was married, June 1, 1830, to Miss Nancy Sargent, who was born in Piketon, Pike Co., Ohio, in 1811, and came to Indianapolis in 1828. Her father, John Sargent, was drowned two months before she was born. His wife, Delia Ancrum, who was of French descent, died in Ohio. John Baylor lived on the Holmes farm and operated a mill until 1832, being an adept at the milling business. Then he located at the east end of the old White river bridge, where he operated a mill until 1834, when he located where Mr. and Mrs. Craft now live. In March, 1835, Mr. Baylor removed to the Patterson Mills, which he carried on until his death, which occurred Jan. 8, 1837. Mr. Baylor was considered an expert miller in his day, and was a man of much character and standing among his own neighbors. His integrity and honesty were never questioned, and his early death was not only a loss to his family, but to the entire community. His widow became the wife of Lorenzo Dow Wilson, and died in 1854. She is remembered as a most worthy wife and mother. Mr. and Mrs. Baylor were the parents of three sons and two daughters, all now deceased. Mrs. Craft, who was the last survivor, dying June 24, 1906. She and a twin sister Nancy, were the oldest of the family, and were born Jan. 26, 1831. Nancy, who became Mrs. David King, died Aug. 27, 1883. John Baylor, Jr., the third of the family, survived the dangers incident to a soldier's life in the war of the Rebellion, but died soon after the closing of the war, of disease contracted in the service. James Baylor, the next son in the family, also donned the Union blue, fought gallantly and well in the Union army, and died about a year after the war closed. Peter Baylor, who bore his grandfather's name, was the youngest of the family; he died when only eight years old, Feb. 8, 1837, only a month after his father's departure to the better life.

Mrs. Craft was a woman of fine mind and most remarkable memory. In the earlier days she was associated with some of the most intellectual people of the State. Smith Craft and his wife had born to them nine children, but three of whom are now living: Laura B., who is the wife of Samuel L. Douglass; Mrs. Cora Lehman, and Moreland E. Craft. The other children died in infancy. Mr. Craft is a worthy member of the Methodist Church, as was also his wife. He has three grandchildren, Bessie, Arthur Buford, and Robert Bruce Douglass, and also had two great-grandchildren, Dolly and Robert Douglass Shultz, children of Robert R. and Bessie Shultz, now of Knoxville, Tennessee.

WILLIAM C. SMOCK, Esq., a prominent pioneer of Indianapolis, was born in Marion county, Ind., Dec. 30, 1838, son of Isaac and Ann T. (Smock) Smock, both of whom were natives of Kentucky.

John Smock, his paternal grandfather, was born in Pennsylvania, of Holland-Dutch descent, and about 1796 moved to Kentucky, where he made his home in Mercer county. He died there about 1820, when about fifty years of age. His occupation was farming, and he reared a large family.

Isaac Smock was also a farmer. He came to Indiana in 1829, in company with his widowed mother, when only twelve years old, and they settled on a farm five miles south of Indianapolis, where the youth grew to manhood. All his life he followed farming. His death occurred in Southport at the age of seventy-seven years, nine months, and his widow survived until Sept. 8, 1906, reaching her eighty-sixth year. Like her husband, she belonged to the Baptist Church. They had five sons and six daughters, and six of their children are still living: William C.; Richard M., who is commandant of the State Soldiers' Home at Lafayette, Ind.; Charles E., of Indianapolis; Frederick L., of Southport; John M., also of Southport; and Sarah C., the wife of Dr. Charles M. Gravis, of Martinsville, Indiana.

John Smock, the maternal grandfather of Squire William C. Smock, was born in Pennsylvania, where he was reared to farming. Early in life he removed to Shelby county, Ky., and about 1822 to Indiana, making a location two miles south of Indianapolis, where he died in 1827, when well advanced in years. He was the father of a numerous family. He was a man of superior education for his time, noted for his penmanship, and was quite a business man; he did collecting for a clock company. His father, Jacob Smock, a Revolutionary soldier, married Catharine Demarest, and they emigrated to Shelby county, Ky., where they died.

William C. Smock passed the first sixteen years of his life on a farm in Marion county, and spent the ensuing two years in the office of the county recorder. For two years following he was a student in Franklin College, and then became deputy clerk of the Marion county circuit court, a position he held until 1865, when he was elected clerk. For five years he did acceptable service in that capacity. For eight years he dealt in real estate, and for eight years following he was again in the clerk's office as a deputy. After this he was again in the real estate business for twelve years, and in 1898 was elected justice of the peace, a position he filled with credit to himself, and satisfaction to those who had business dealings with him, retiring therefrom Nov. 16, 1906. He is now engaged in the practice of the law. He is a man of character and standing in his community.

Squire Smock was married Dec. 6, 1860, to Miss Malissa A., daughter of Jacob and Frances V. (Colley) Smock, and they have had six children, of whom four were sons: Eva, Laura, Harry, Herbert, William, and one boy that died in infancy. Eva married Henry Schurmann, of Indianapolis; Laura died in infancy; Harry, a veterinary surgeon, has his home in Franklin, Ind.; Herbert died when eighteen years old, and William at the age of four months.

Squire Smock and his excellent wife are members of the First Baptist Church; he has been a chorister in the church for thirty-five years, for twenty-four years was a deacon in the First Baptist Church, and for seventeen years has served as Sunday-school superintendent.

When a child Squire Smock was crippled in his right hip, but he bears himself well, and is possessed of a very happy and inspiring disposition. In politics he is a Republican. His home is at No. 1907 North Delaware street, where he built a modern, up-to-date home in 1896.

JAMES E. GREER, now living at No. 26 Garfield avenue, Indianapolis, was at one time county commissioner, and is numbered among the leading citizens of Marion county.

Mr. Greer was born in Hancock county, Ind., Aug. 19, 1844, son of Stephen H. and Caroline M. (Smith) Greer. His father was born in Kentucky, and his mother in Virginia. They had a family of five sons and one daughter and five of their children are still living: Elizabeth, the wife of John Caskey, of Madison county, Iowa; James E.; Sanford L., who died at the age of three years; Alvin T., of Fortville, Ind.; Horace A., also of Fortville; and George G., of Warren township, Marion county. Stephen H. Greer was all his life a farmer, coming with his parents from Kentucky to Franklin township, Marion county, in 1826, and taking up land from the government. In 1869 he removed to Fortville, Hancock county, where he made his home until April, 1893, dying the 17th of that month, when over seventy-three years old. His wife was fifty-four years old at the time of her death, in 1872. Both were members of the Baptist Church, and were numbered among the best people of their community.

James P. Greer, the grandfather of James E., was born in Maryland and moved into Kentucky, coming in 1826 to Marion county, Ind., where he entered land from the government. He died Feb. 17, 1848, at the age of seventy years. His was a numerous offspring. During the war of 1812 he was a recruiting officer. He was a physician and for many years a justice of the peace. His father was Stephen H. Greer, a native of Ireland, of Scotch ancestry. After coming to this country he settled in Pennsylvania, but soon removed to Maryland and then to Ohio, where he died. His children were nine in number, six boys and three girls. During the Revolutionary war he served as a soldier. In 1802 James P. Greer was married to Elizabeth Mathershead, whose father was also a Revolutionary soldier.

The maternal grandfather of James E. Greer was Ebenezer Smith. Born in Virginia, he came of German descent, and his wife was a Hughes. They removed from Virginia to Kentucky, where for a time they owned slaves, but presently gave them their freedom, and about 1832 settled in Warren township, Marion Co., Ind., where they secured land from the government. He was a Baptist minister, and died in Warren township about 1853, in late middle life. His family consisted of four daughters and two sons. Of these Ebenezer S. was the last survivor, and he had a daughter, Mrs. Cora Sylvia, who has her home in Indianapolis.

James E. Greer has spent the greater part of his life in Marion county, in 1873 and 1874 living in Hancock county. Growing to manhood in Franklin township, he attended the public schools, and was reared to farming life. He has always been a farmer, and has combined with the cultivation of the soil, auctioneering and engineering at various periods of his life.

In 1861 Mr. Greer donned the Union blue, as a member of Company I, 36th Ind. V. I., served throughout the war and was discharged at Vicksburg, Miss., Jan. 11, 1866, after making in every way a most honorable record as a non-commissioned officer. In the battle of Sterling Plantations, near Morganza Bend, he was wounded in the right thigh. He participated in the battle of Prairie Grove, Ark., the Vicksburg campaign, the actions at Port Hudson, and many other fierce and bloody engagements, including the siege of Mobile. After the war he returned home to Franklin township, and engaged in farming. For the last six years he has had his home in Irvington. He owns a farm of eighty acres in Franklin township, and a little home in Tuxedo park.

Mr. Greer was married Oct. 2, 1867, to Miss Artie Eaton, a daughter of Thomas S. and Almira (Springer) Eaton, and to this union were born six daughters and four sons: Cassie B., who died at the age of twenty-four years, married John Kitley, and became the mother of four children, James Robert, Mary Elizabeth, John Alvin and Nellie Murle (who is deceased). Emmet died when only three weeks old. Charles D. died at the age of eighteen. Thomas H., a stationary fireman, married Daisy Harvey, and they live in Tuxedo. Carrie Gertrude married Rev. John W. Barnett, a Congregational minister, and they live in Columbus, Ohio, the parents of one daughter, Mavis Claire. Geneva G. married Clifford Day, of Indianapolis, and they have one daughter, Beatrice Romaine. Josie A. married Harrie G. Copeland, and they have their home in Tuxedo. Nellie C., Garfield G. and Lizzie Howe Logan are at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Greer are members of the Christian (Disciples) Church, in which he holds the position of elder, being connected with Buckland Chapel, Franklin township, in that capacity. He belongs to George H. Thomas Post, No. 17, G. A. R., and in politics is a Republican. For six years he was a commissioner of Marion county.

GEORGE W. STOUT, who died March 1, 1903, spent his last years in retirement in Indianapolis. Not until he had passed his three-score years and ten did he leave the farm which had been the scene of his successful life. He was born in Morgan county, Ill., March 14, 1828, son of Thomas F. Stout, one of the pioneers of Marion county, Ind. George W. was about eight years old when he was brought by his parents to Wayne township, Marion county. Here on a farm he was reared to manhood, acquiring in his youth the sterling virtues of industry and thrift which helped to crown his well-spent life. He remained throughout his active years a progressive and prominent farmer of Marion county. Beginning life for himself with little else than strong hands and a willing heart, he manfully strove to obtain a start in life, and though obstacles appeared in his pathway, and troubles at times darkened the skies above him, he rose superior to every discouragement, and his declining years were marked by that peace and contentment which he so richly deserved.

At the age of twenty-one years, on Sept. 24, 1849, Mr. Stout married Miss Sarah Holman, a native of Kentucky. She died Sept. 24, 1869, leaving four children: David, Furman, Joseph C. and Mrs. Anna M. Williams. For his second wife Mr. Stout married, Aug. 2, 1872, Fannie L. Brown, who died Feb. 4, 1883. The two children born to this marriage who grew to maturity, Herbert W. and Flora B., are now deceased. Mr. Stout's third marriage, on March 17, 1886, was to Amanda E. Grimes, who was born and reared near Lafayette, Ind. She survives Mr. Stout, and makes her home on West Michigan street, Indianapolis. In 1899 Mr. Stout retired from his farm in Wayne township, which he owned until his death, and moved to the present home of Mrs. Stout, in Indianapolis, and there he continued to reside until his death. The rectitude and strength of purpose in his life, and the quiet fortitude he showed against ills and misfortune, evoked the respect and admiration of his many friends, who esteemed him as one of the worthy successful and self-made citizens of Marion county.

CAPT. JECHONIAS RUTLEDGE, a commercial traveler, whose home is at No. 1529 Fletcher avenue, Indianapolis, was born in Louisville, Ky., May 14, 1840.

Carroll W. and Nancy (Estes) Rutledge, his parents, were natives of Tennessee, and George Rutledge, his grandfather, was born in South Carolina. He settled in Virginia before the separation of Tennessee, the cutting off of that territory making him a resident of Tennessee. His ancestry was Scotch-Irish, and Presbyterianism the religious faith of the family. Born and bred a farmer, he followed agricultural life in Tennessee, and lived to a great age, being 114 years old at the time of his death. He married three times, wedding his third wife when he was 105 years old. He was the father of five sons and three daughters.

Carroll W. Rutledge was reared on a farm in Tennessee, where he was married, and then with his wife moved to Louisville, Ky., walking from Cumberland Gap. At Louisville he secured work in connection with steamboating, and this was his occupation until his death, in 1866, at the age of fifty years. His widow survived until she was seventy-five years of age. She was a Methodist, and he a Baptist, though he was not identified with any church. They had seven sons and six daughters, Captain Rutledge being probably the only member of that interesting family now living.

John Estes, the maternal grandfather of Captain Rutledge, was a native of Tennessee, of French ancestry, his father following Lafayette to this country, and serving as a lieutenant in the war of the Revolution. John Estes was a soldier in the war of 1812. He was a farmer in his native State. He lived to be ninety-nine years of age, dying in Tennessee, where his life had been spent. He had a family of five sons and four daughters.

Capt. Jechonias Rutledge was reared in Louisville up to the age of fourteen years, when he entered the State University at Bloomington, Ind., from which he was graduated in 1858. For a time after this he traveled through the South for the benefit of his health, which had become somewhat impaired. When the Civil war broke out he was among the first to respond to his country's call for help, and in April, 1861, enlisted in Company K, 14th Ind. Vol. Inf. He continued with this command until July 18, 1863, when he was discharged on account of a rupture. A month later, however, he was again mustered in, as first lieutenant of Company E, 117th Ind. Vol. Inf., and in February, 1864, was made captain of Company K, 133d Ind. Vol. Inf., in which he served until the close of the war. Captain Rutledge was wounded in his right ankle at the battle of Winchester, in March, 1862. His military history is a creditable one. He was in the battles of Winchester, in the Seven Days Fight on the Peninsula, before Richmond, at South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, and other battles and skirmishes in which his command was engaged. At Antietam the regiment lost fifty-five and a half per cent. of its effective force.

When the war was over Captain Rutledge farmed in Morgan county, Ind., and for some years sold boots and shoes on the road. For twenty-five years he bought hardwood for Philadelphia and New York establishments. He was engaged in farming in Davidson county, Tenn., until 1894, when he sold out and went to Indianapolis, where he bought the good home which has been his residence to the present time.

Captain Rutledge was married Nov. 5, 1865, to Miss Florence J. Hyneman, a daughter of Robert and Nancy (Stout) Hyneman. Three children were born to bless this union: (1) Ernest R. is a conductor on the Chicago & Alton railroad, running out of Chicago. He is married and has four children. (2) Hugh H., who is in the furniture business at Martinsville, Ind., married Martha Fesler. During the Spanish-American war he went out as a lieutenant in an Indiana regiment. (3) Melvin died at the age of twenty years.

Mrs. Florence J. Rutledge died Aug. 13, 1878, at the age of thirty-three years. She was a member of the Baptist Church. Captain Rutledge was again married, Feb. 22, 1885, Mrs. Grace Byers, the widow of Leonard B. Byers, and daughter of James and Grace (Turner) Kerr, becoming his wife. To this second union has come one son, Edward M., now a salesman, employed in Frank Schoeler's grocery store. Mrs. Rutledge had four children by her first marriage.

Captain Rutledge and his wife belong to the Edmund Ray Methodist Church. He belongs to Pat. Clybourn Lodge, No. 10, F. &

A. M., at Nashville, Tenn., where he is also connected with Paul E. Slocom Post, No. 85, G. A. R.; he also belongs to Paragon Lodge, No. 406, I. O. O. F., in Morgan county, Ind. In politics he is a Republican.

Captain Rutledge has patriotic blood in his veins, and takes a justifiable pride in the fact that his great-grandfather, Edward Rutledge, of South Carolina, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He had a son John, who was the first United States judge at Philadelphia, and from him descends the Rutledge family in Maryland. There are also branches of the family in Virginia and Tennessee.

PERRY M. DeFORD, a wealthy and prosperous farmer located in Section 19, Washington township, Marion Co., Ind., was born one mile south of Allisonville, in Marion county, July 21, 1852, and is a son of George W. and Ella (Williams) DeFord. His grandfather was a native of France, and a pioneer settler at Metamora, Franklin Co., Ind., but he did not survive long after settling there. He had a family of six children.

George W. DeFord was a native of Indiana and a tanner by trade. He came into Marion county from Franklin county in 1832, making his home near Allisonville on a farm which he secured from the government, paying therefor a dollar and twenty-five cents an acre. Recently it was disposed of for $92.50 per acre. There he had his home for the rest of his life, reared his family, and died March 25, 1891, at the age of eighty-four years, four days. His wife died in 1883, at the age of seventy-four. Both were members of the Methodist Church. During the Mexican war George W. DeFord served as a drummer. For twenty years he filled the office of justice of the peace; he was one of the surveyors who laid out the Washington township roads, and in the early days he served as one of the three town trustees. For a time he had a tannery at Allisonville, but his main business was farming. He married Ella Williams, like himself a native of Indiana, and they became the parents of a family of seven sons and six daughters, ten of their children reaching mature years. Nine are now living, viz.: Sedric C.; John A., of Indianapolis; Mary, the wife of Robert R. Johnson, of Lawrence township; William H., of Allisonville; Malinda C., the widow of Leonidas Brunson, who is now living in Castleton; Margaret, the wife of George Siegmound, of Allisonville; Francis A., of St. Louis; Perry M.; and Charles W., of Allisonville.

Joseph Williams, the maternal grandfather of Perry M. DeFord, was born in Franklin county, Ind., where he was reared to farming. His family contained many children, and he died at an advanced age.

Perry M. DeFord was reared in Washington township, where he has passed his entire life with the exception of two years which he spent in Lawrence township. The common schools afforded him a very good education, and he remained at home until he attained manhood, when he rented land from his father which he farmed for two years. After returning from Lawrence township he bought his present farm of thirty-one and a half acres, now well improved. At the present time Mr. DeFord is farming some eighty acres of land. In 1898 he lost his house by fire, and another has been erected on the same site, of modern design.

Mr. DeFord was married March 21, 1875, to Miss Mary, daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth (Parish) Kinsley, and to this union were born two sons and three daughters: Mamie, who died July 5, 1880, at the age of two years; Lillie, born in 1881, who died in 1883; Freddie; Clara, who is in school; and a child who died in infancy. Mrs. DeFord died March 5, 1898, at the age of forty years, nine months.

Mr. DeFord is a member of Keystone Lodge, No. 251, F. & A. M., of Broad Ripple Lodge, No. 548, I. O. O. F., and has taken the Encampment degree; his wife was a member of the Rebekahs. In politics Mr. DeFord is a Republican. He is a genial and progressive man, and his name is well worthy of a prominent place in any book devoted to the active and earnest citizens of Marion county, who are willing to take hold of any work in sight for the general good and carry it forward with all their might.

WILLIAM H. THOMAS, M. D., late of Indianapolis, whose handsome and well-appointed residence at No. 618 Lexington avenue suggested literary, artistic and domestic tastes, blended in a high and refined home life, was born at Waterloo, Ind., Nov. 22, 1833. His parents, Hewit L. and Charlotte C. (Helm) Thomas, were born in New York and Kentucky, respectively, and they had three children, of whom William H. was the youngest.

Hewit L. Thomas was only about eight years old when he came with his parents to Fayette county, Ind., where he attained manhood. Some time between 1825 and 1830 he went to Cass county, where he engaged in farming. In 1855 he moved to Afton, Minn. While in that State he held the office of associate judge, and was also appointed by Abraham Lincoln as one of three on a committee to adjust some Indian claims. After the war he came back to Indiana, settling in Galveston, where he spent the remainder of his life, and died at the age of ninety-one years. His widow survived two years, dying at the age of ninety. They were members of the Baptist Church, of which he was a deacon.

Lyman Thomas, the grandfather of Dr. William H., was a pioneer in Fayette county, Ind., where he died at a good old age. Dr. William Helm, the Doctor's maternal grandfather, was a native of Virginia, and an old settler in Fayette county. He fought in the Indian war. When he died he had reached advanced age, and he left a numerous offspring.

William H. Thomas was but three years old when his parents moved to Cass county, where he grew to manhood, and where he attended old-fashioned subscription schools, taught by his father and others. When he was twenty-one years old he married and moved to Minnesota, where he enlisted in the Union army in 1862, in Company C, 7th Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, with which command he served three years and eight days, rising from the ranks to command the company which he had entered as a private. At the foot of the Black Hills he was in a battle with the Little Crow Indians, a branch of the great Sioux Nation. From the northwest his command was sent to Memphis, and had a hand in the battle of Tupelo. The following winter he spent at East Point, Miss., and from that point his regiment was moved to the investment of Mobile, where it fought in the heaviest battle at that point, also participating in many smaller battles and engagements, and was then in the great fight at Nashville. From Nashville the regiment went into garrison duty at Jackson, Miss., where it remained until the close of the war. The mustering out of this gallant body occurred at Fort Snelling. Col.

William Marshall was in command of the 7th, which formed a part of the right wing of the 16th Army Corps, under Gen. A. J. Smith.

After his army experience Captain Thomas went back to Galveston, Ind., and took up again the tin and stove trade, which he had learned before the war, making this his occupation for several years, when he sold out. Coming to Indianapolis he took up the study of medicine, and from the time of his graduation from the Indiana Medical College he did not lose five days from the active practice of his profession. About five years after he was graduated the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons was organized, and he was one of its founders. During the first four years of its history he was demonstrator of anatomy. After that he lectured on various subjects, his last course being on the diseases of the nervous system. He died Sept. 30, 1903, in his seventieth year.

Dr. William H. Thomas was married Oct. 16, 1854, to Miss Anna M. Copeland, and to them was born one child, Edwin C., who is now a rising young physician in Indianapolis. Dr. Edwin C. Thomas married Mary E. Dotey, and their three children are Hewit, Naomi and Claudia. Mrs. Anna M. Thomas died April 9, 1900, at the age of seventy-one years, and Dr. Thomas was again married, in May, 1901, to Mrs. Polly (Tucker) Wysong. Dr. Thomas was a Republican in political sentiment. He was a member of the Indiana Medical Society and the Marion County Medical Society, and enjoyed high professional standing.

COL. NICHOLAS RANDLE RUCKLE, whose home during his last years was at No. 2011 North Illinois street, Indianapolis, was born in Baltimore, Md., May 8, 1838, son of Nicholas Ruckle, a native of Maryland, where his father settled on his emigration from his native Ireland, there passing the rest of his life.

Nicholas Ruckle, the father, was a tailor, and came to Indianapolis in the early days, and here he conducted a merchant tailoring establishment for many years. For some years he lived retired at Brookfield, where he died aged about sixty-five years, his wife surviving him several years. Both were Methodists. They had two sons and two daughters: Col. Nicholas R.; John F., who was killed in the battle of Shiloh, where he was engaged in the service as a member of the 11th Regiment;

Eliza, the wife of Josiah Gwin, of New Albany, Ind.; and Miss Kate C., who lived in Indianapolis.

Col. Nicholas R. Ruckle was a small boy when his parents came from Maryland to Madison county, Ind., in 1847. In July, 1852, they came to Indianapolis, where he grew to manhood. His education was chiefly acquired in a private school taught by the late Rev. Charles S. Green, who also became a citizen of Indianapolis at a very early day. In May, 1853, when less than fifteen years of age, Col. Ruckle entered the composing room of the Indianapolis Journal, as an apprentice, remaining in the employ of that paper until the breaking out of the Civil war in 1861. At that time he was a member of the Volunteer fire department, and of one of the independent militia companies. He entered the service at the very first call, and his was the first permanent military organization to enter Camp Morton. He was assigned to the 11th Volunteers (Zouave) Infantry, under Col. Lew Wallace, and took part in the three months' campaign in West Virginia. Col. Ruckle entered the three years' service, and rose from the ranks by successive steps to become sergeant, orderly sergeant, lieutenant and captain, and for conspicuous gallantry on the field was made colonel of the 148th Ind. V. I. He took part in the operations at Forts Henry and Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth; the marches, expeditions and skirmishes of the Trans-Mississippi army of Gen. Curtis in Arkansas in 1862; the battles and siege of Vicksburg; Sherman's attack on Gen. Joseph Johnston at Jackson; Gen. Banks' campaign west of the Mississippi in 1863 and other operations in Louisiana; Sheridan's campaign in 1864, the battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek, and the action at Halltown; and in the Department of the Cumberland, as commander of the second sub-district of middle Tennessee. This record embraces a continuous and honorable service from April, 1861, to October, 1865. In civil life he served as sheriff of Marion county two terms from 1870 to 1874; was president of the Metropolitan Police Commissioners of Indianapolis in 1887 and 1888; was adjutant-general of Indiana two terms, from January, 1889; and in 1894-95 was on the board of Public Safety under Mayor Denny.

In the spring of 1874 Col. Ruckle secured the controlling interest in the stock of the Indianapolis Journal Company, which at that time had a printing and publishing house in connection with the newspaper; and in the theater building at the southeast corner of Market and Illinois streets, known as the Academy of Music, which was destroyed by fire. This and other losses that followed the hard times of 1873 seriously embarrassed him financially, and his property passed out of his hands. The newspaper was sold to E. B. Martindale, from whom it passed to John New. The book and job printing house was sold to H. L. Hasselman & Co., and of it Col. Ruckle became superintendent. Later he acted in a similar capacity for the Baker & Randolph Printing Company, in which he was a small stockholder. For a time he was with the Sentinel Printing Company. While sheriff he became a part owner of the Southern Park, which was sold to the city, and renamed Garfield Park.

The loss of fortune did not discourage Col. Ruckle, nor impair his activity. With a stout heart and strong hands he went on the way of life admired for his manly and earnest spirit. Every honor of Masonry was given him without his asking, but as a recognition of his love of the fraternity and the affection of the craft for him. In 1866 he was made a Master Mason in Center Lodge, No. 23, of Indianapolis, of which he was Worshipful Master in 1871, afterward being Master of Pentalpha Lodge, No. 564. In 1867 he was exalted in Keystone Chapter, which he served as High Priest in 1886. In 1867 he was Knighted in Raper Commandery, No. 1, K. T., which he served as Eminent Commander in 1872-73-74-75 and in 1880, afterward being Captain-General for several years. In the Scottish Rite he applied for the degrees in 1866, and received the thirty-second degree in March, 1867, the honorary thirty-third degree in 1873, and the active grade in 1883, and the appointment of Deputy of the Supreme Council for the District of Indiana in 1884. From 1873 until his death he served as Thrice Potent Grand Master of the Adoniram Grand Lodge of Perfection, with the exception of two years, and was also Commander in Chief of the Indiana Consistory for fifteen years. He served as State Grand Commander of the Knights Templars in 1875, and as Grand Master of the Masons in 1891.

The Light Infantry, which he organized in 1877, elected Col. Ruckle as its captain. This organization afterward became one of the very best known military organizations of the United States. Its first service was rendered during the railroad riot in July, 1877. For several years it was frequently called to serve in cases of sudden riot. In 1883 Col. Ruckle retired from its command to give place to Major James R. Ross. It has recently become Company D, of the 2d Regiment, Indiana National Guards. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American war it entered the service under Capt. F. F. McCrea, as Company D, 148th Ind. V. I., Col. Harry B. Smith, commanding.

Col. Ruckle was married, Feb. 24, 1876, to Mrs. Jennie C. (Moore) Reed, daughter of Addison and Susan (Dulhagen) Moore, of New York, and of Revolutionary stock. To this union was born one child, Corliss Randle Ruckle, who died at the age of twelve years. Mrs. Ruckle is a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The Colonel was not identified with any church, but attended divine worship with his wife. Her people were natives of New York, and to her parents were born three daughters and one son: Sallie E., deceased, was the wife of Dr. Corliss, of Indianapolis; Mary, widow of Jerome Beals, a soldier of the Civil war, resides in St. Louis; Jennie C. is the widow of Col. Ruckle; and Harvey lives in Indianapolis. Mr. Addison Moore was a lawyer and he died at Nashville, Tenn., at the age of thirty-eight, his widow surviving to the age of seventy-three years.

Col. Ruckle died May 4, 1900, and was buried in Crown Hill cemetery.

ERASTUS REED was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, son of Samuel and Jane (Miles) Reed, the former of Pennsylvania and the latter of Virginia. Samuel Reed, son of Ebenezer Reed, a soldier in the Revolution, was a Mason of high standing and Reed Commandery at Dayton, Ohio, was named in his honor. Erastus Reed was an engraver and jeweler. To him and his wife were born three daughters: Mary Emma died, aged seventeen; Jennie married Charles Curtice and died, leaving one son, Homer M. Curtice; and Nellie M. married Ward H. Dean, who died in 1900, and had two children, Randle C. and Harriet.

GEORGE A. TAFTE, former superintendent of the Indianapolis police, and a man whose personal character, integrity and masterful ability are widely known and recognized, was born in Brightwood, Center township, Marion Co., Ind., April 17, 1846, son of Hannibal and Phoebe Ann (Cale) Taffe. The father was born in Indiana and the mother in Virginia.

George Taffe, grandfather of George A., was an early settler in Marion county and owned land in Brightwood, where he made his home until his death, which occurred in middle life. A large family was born to him, and he was prominent in the community. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. The maternal grandfather of George A. Taffe was born in Virginia. During his early life he was held three years in Indian captivity, and then escaped. He died many years ago.

Hannibal Taffe was a farmer when a young man in Center township, and for a period of eighteen years, terminating in 1876, served on the police force of Indianapolis. For a time he was a member of the Merchant Police, and for nine years was train caller at the Union Passenger Station. He died in 1894, at the age of seventy-two years, his wife passing away many years before. In politics he was a Republican. His brother, John Taffe, also a Republican, was a member of Congress from Nebraska. Of the four children of Hannibal and Phoebe Ann (Cale) Taffe Emma is the wife of Dr. C. L. Armington, of Anderson, Ind.; George A. is mentioned below; Florence is the wife of Perkins Fisher, of New York; David Fremont was killed in the work of the fire department.

George A. Taffe lived in the neighborhood of Brightwood until he was fifteen years of age, since which time he has had his home in Indianapolis, with the exception of two years he spent at Bloomington, Ill. His education was secured in the city schools, and he followed various occupations as he grew to manhood. When a boy he branded horses for the government, and later was a street car conductor. Mr. Taffe lost his leg Dec. 20, 1865, while saving the life of a little boy, a train of flat cars having run into his car. For one term he was a teacher in Cumberland, and for two years bought grain for his uncle. Mr. Taffe came back to Indianapolis June 3, 1871, to take the position of turnkey at the old station house, which he held until May, 1875. At that time he resigned, becoming deputy city marshal under Eli Thompson. In 1878 he resumed his place as turnkey, again serving the city in that capacity until Nov. 15, 1901, when he was made superintendent of police by the Board of Public Safety. In all he held the position of turnkey almost thirty years, and he is thoroughly familiar with every detail of the police administration of Indianapolis.

Mr. Taffe was married June 22, 1880, to Miss Minnie, daughter of Henry and Eva (Miller) Hanf. To this union were born two children, Eva Florence and David Almont. Mr. Taffe is a member of the Red Men. In politics he is a Republican. His neat and tasteful home is at No. 419 East Market street.

WILLIAM S. HUBBARD (deceased) was a resident of Indianapolis from early manhood, and his connections with the actual material development and religious work of his adopted city were so important and long sustained that it would be difficult to decide in which respect he became best known. His business operations were principally in the line of real estate, with the diversifications necessary for the proper promotion of his main interests. His activity in church work, especially in the Presbyterian denomination, was shared by his entire family, and was the outcome of a sincere and earnest desire to encourage the best efforts of which mankind is capable, as well as to aid those of his fellow-men less fortunate than himself from a worldly standpoint.

Mr. Hubbard was born in Middlefield, Conn., May 11, 1816, son of Charles and Lucretia (Miller) Hubbard, the mother a native of Connecticut. The father, who was a sea captain on the American vessel "Diamond," died of fever Jan. 26, 1818, at the Maritime Hospital, at Saint Pierre, Island of Martinique. Nothing is known of the father of Charles Hubbard. Isaac Hubbard was a Congregationalist. Isaac Miller, her father, was a farmer, and reared a numerous family of children. William S. Hubbard spent the first sixteen years of his life on a farm near Middlefield, Conn., meantime attending school and the old academy at that place. At the age of sixteen, under an arrangement made by his mother, he entered a store in Morristown, N. J., where he was to learn the mercantile business. His employer was Mr. Mills, with whom he served an apprenticeship of four years.

One day while passing through the streets in New York City, just after his apprenticeship was completed, his uncle beckoned him and asked if he could be induced to go to Indianapolis to look after some property interests for him in that distant city. The uncle was Dr. Isaac Coe, a well-known early settler of Indianapolis, who had a house already furnished on Circle street, where the Columbia Club building now stands. The Doctor asked Mr. Hubbard to go there and make the place his home, and look after his property interests in the city. After a little reflection Mr. Hubbard agreed to the plan, and taking the four o'clock stage out of New York City came direct to Indianapolis. This was in 1836. Mr. Hubbard was only twenty years old, and he found in the growing city opportunities which afforded an outlet for his energetic and ambitious nature. His talents and executive ability soon became apparent to various men prominent in the early business life and public affairs of the city, and he soon became a clerk in the Indiana State Bank and the office of the board of the Sinking Fund commissioners of Indiana. James M. Ray, cashier and one of the leading men of the Bank, and also a member of the Fund commission, being a son-in-law of Dr. Coe. But though he began his career here with the friendship of influential and substantial citizens, it was always conceded that their good-will was only a recognition of his merits, and that his rise was due entirely to his own efforts. He had qualifications for almost any position, was at one time an employee of the Madison & Indianapolis Railway Company, and for a long time was secretary and treasurer of the Indianapolis & Bellefontaine Railway Company, an office never filled by a more careful, accurate or faithful incumbent. In this and other connections he became well and favorably known all over the city. As a real estate dealer he came into control of an extensive business, and he erected many of the most substantial buildings of the city, Hubbard's block, on the corner of Meridian and Washington streets, being one of his more important constructions. This block he afterward sold, buying what is now the Indiana Trust Company block, and later he purchased some of the wholesale houses on South Meridian street. He continued to be actively engaged in various important business pursuits up to 1901, when he concluded to retire. His reputation throughout this long period was that of one of the most honorable and public-spirited business men in the city. He encouraged plans for the welfare of the city even when they conflicted with his own interests, contributing to the upbuilding of Indianapolis in every possible manner, doing his full share toward the promotion of public enterprises and leading many movements looking to the progress of the city, as well as the increase of her prestige. In his real estate operations he took great pride in buying acre property and bringing it under improvement, building many substantial residences that materially improved the section of the city in which they were located. For over twenty-five years he had his office at No. 3 Hubbard block.

Yours truly
Wm. S. Hubbard

Four years after his arrival in Indianapolis Mr. Hubbard married, and the same year he built a home for himself and wife on the northwestern quarter of the circle, on part of the ground now occupied by the "Hotel English." There they lived until 1864, when they removed to a residence on North Meridian street, at the northwest corner of Second street, which is now known as Eleventh street. It was then beyond the city limits, and the home was long known as one of the very finest in Indianapolis. He and his wife occupied that residence up to the time of her death, after which Mr. Hubbard made his home with his son William H., at No. 1427 North Meridian street. There he died, of acute bronchitis and old age, at 5:45 o'clock Friday evening, Oct. 18, 1907, aged ninety-one years, five months, seven days. Mr. Hubbard traveled extensively, both in Europe and in America, and spent eight winters in California. As long as his wife survived he never went on any of these trips without her.

Mr. Hubbard's marriage, in 1840, was to Miss Mary Mills, daughter of Lewis and Sarah Mills, natives of Morristown, N. J., and to this union were born three sons and four daughters: (1) Sarah M. is the wife of Edward S. Field, of Los Angeles, Cal., and they have five children, Helen, Edith, Carrie, Edward and Florence. Helen Field married Murray Harris and has her home in Los Angeles. Edith Field married Howard L. Rivers and resides in Los Angeles, Cal. Florence Field married Harold Lincoln Wright, of San Francisco, Cal., where they reside. (2) Anna L. married Francis C. Monfort, of Cincinnati, and is the mother of three children, Mary, Joseph G. and Adelaide. Joseph G. is married to Miss Irene Patterson, of Franklin, Ky., and has his home in Cincinnati; Adelaide married Charles Iredell, and lives in Cincinnati. (3) William H. Hubbard, who now carries on the real estate business at No. 118 Circle street, was born July 24, 1849, on the site where he is now engaged in business, and received his education in his native city, graduating from the high school. He married Ella M. Kurtz, of Blairsville, Pa., and they are prominent members of the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Hubbard is serving as an elder. (4) Louis M. Hubbard is in the plumbing business in Kansas City. (5) Mary E. married Rev. Howard A. Johnston, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and they live in the city of New York, where he holds high standing as a clergyman. They have one child, Mary. (6) Charles W. Hubbard married Louise H. Stone, of Chicago, where he is connected with the Northern Trust Company. (7) Elizabeth L. married E. M. Thompson, of Paducah, Ky., an inventor, and they are living in Indianapolis. They have three children, Harold, Lyman and Ruth.

All this family are active members of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Hubbard, who passed away in 1888, at the age of sixty-seven years, was always an earnest worker in the church, and with her husband maintained an unwearied interest in religious and benevolent work. She had a modest and retiring disposition. Early in life William S. Hubbard united with the Congregational Church in Connecticut, but after coming to Indianapolis he identified himself with the Presbyterian Church, and he helped to found the Second Church, at one time Henry Ward Beecher's Church, of which he and his wife were members from its foundation, and in which he was an elder since 1854. He was long known as one of the most prominent and capable members of the Presbyterian Church in central Indiana. There is probably not a Presbyterian Church in Indianapolis which he did not aid in building and help in supporting. Mr. Hubbard was a strong believer, and took pleasure in proclaiming his faith. Besides his activity in the work of the denomination in this country he sent missionaries to China, Japan and Persia, whom he supported personally, and several of these workers are still in the field; they are medical missionaries principally. Mr. Hubbard's life was a useful one, of especial value to his home city, and a host of friends will attest this fact. Of him and his uncle, Dr. Coe, one of the most distinguished citizens of Indianapolis has written as follows:

"DR. ISAAC COE, one of the earliest physicians to come here, soon took rank as among the first citizens in influence and effective work. It is largely to him that Indianapolis owes the religious stamp that has always characterized it. He was a man of clear perceptions, well grounded convictions and an impulsive force that brooked no obstacles. On his monument in Crown Hill is carved: 'The father of Sunday Schools in Indianapolis,' an honor no one has ever disputed and one which should make his memory green and lasting in this community. It was through his influence that James Blake and James M. Ray, who were foremost in many years for all that could advance the town in every way, became Christians, and through them his influence has been carried on in many lives. The moral and religious character of Indianapolis was fixed in its beginning by the presence of Dr. Coe and some others who supported the work of which he was leader.

"Mr. William S. Hubbard was a connection of Dr. Coe's, who persuaded him to come to Indianapolis and provided a business opening for him. Mr. Hubbard's long and honorable career is fitly sketched elsewhere. He has in all this exhibited many characteristics, which have made him a marked man. His fidelity to principle has been the guiding rule of his life and this has made him positive under all circumstances for what he believed was right. His integrity has been shown in small things as well as great and his desire to deal justly with all men has been manifest. In benevolence he has been a large giver according to his means, and one feature of that has been his unwillingness to have his good deeds known. A former deacon of the Second Presbyterian Church some years ago told the following story: It is the duty of the board of deacons to look after the poor of the church and at one time there was a distressing case needing more than ordinary relief. It was agreed that some of the members should be asked for a special contribution and the narrator asked Mr. Hubbard for a certain sum. Much to his surprise he received a refusal and was inclined to think harshly of Mr. Hubbard. Later it transpired the latter had learned of the case and on his own account had investigated it and given the family assistance to the extent of several times as much as he was asked for. Yet he never intimated that to the solicitor. Few men would have done that and possibly he was wrong in hiding his light, but it was Mr. Hubbard's way and his sincerity and kindness could not be questioned. Mr. Hubbard's success has been due to his industry, exactness, painstaking economy and trustworthiness—that sheaf of Puritan virtues which have made the country what it is, and has been accompanied by the Psalmist's crown of an honorable old age.”

Mr. Hubbard was one of the organizers of Crown Hill cemetery, which was incorporated in 1863, and which will long stand as a monument to his good judgment and public spirit. It is worthy of note that the promoters and organizers of this beautiful home of the dead did their work without compensation. Mr. Hubbard was a member of the first fire company of the city, which had an apparatus drawn and worked by hand; the headquarters building of the department was in the Governor's Circle, where the soldiers' and sailors' monument now stands. In politics he was a Whig in early life, and on the formation of the Republican party attached himself to its fortunes.

JAMES R. SILVER, a highly respected citizen of Pendleton, Ind., where he is now living retired after a long and successful business career, is one of the pioneers of Madison county. He was born in Warren county, Ohio, on his grandfather Silver's farm, Feb. 12, 1827.

The Silvers are of Welsh stock, and a family tradition has it that three brothers came from Wales to New Jersey in Colonial times. Joseph Silver, the grandfather of James R. Silver, was born in New Jersey, and there married his first wife and removed about 1790 to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he remained a short time. He then removed to Warren county, Ohio, to the neighborhood two miles north of Springboro, where he entered land, to which he added until he had 400 acres. This land he improved from the woods, and became a substantial farmer. In his religious belief he was a Friend. The children by his first wife were John and Sarah. The mother of these died on the farm in Ohio, and Mr. Silver married (second) Mary Ferguson, by whom he had: Thomas, David, Martha and Mary (twins), James, Hannah, William and Samuel. Joseph Silver died on his farm at the age of about seventy years.

William Silver, the father of James R., was born June 12, 1803, in Warren county, Ohio, received a common-school education, and was reared on the farm. When about twenty-six or twenty-seven years old he came to Indiana and engaged in a mercantile business in Newcastle, where he continued, also engaging in farming, until 1838. On April 1st of that year he removed to Pendleton, where he located in mercantile business, continuing in that line until 1857, when he turned his business over to his son James. He died in June, 1889, when nearly eighty-six years old. William Silver was an excellent business man, and a substantial citizen, respected by all who knew him. He was the owner of a good farm of 190 acres, north of Pendleton, and some valuable town property. He was an old-line Whig in politics, and was one of the early members of the Masonic fraternity in Pendleton.

William Silver married in Warren county, Ohio, in 1826, Ann W. Robinson, who was born in that county in 1806, daughter of John and Mary (Robinson) Robinson. They had children as follows: James R., Arminta W., Louisa Ann, and three who died young, Mary J., John Q. and William, the last named dying in infancy.

The Robinson family was originally of Scotch stock, but it cannot be determined with accuracy in what year the immediate ancestors of the Robinsons came to this country. Few of the Scotch-Irish entered Pennsylvania earlier than 1714, in which year the tide of emigration had passed beyond the limits of Chester valley and had reached the region of the Susquehanna. The genealogy of the family, from the record by Thomas H. Robinson, is as follows: A branch of the family emigrated from Scotland to the North of Ireland during the reign of James I. They were Presbyterians, and were severely persecuted during the reign of Charles I, and among the earliest Scotch-Irish who settled in Pennsylvania—prior to 1730—was Thomas Robinson, with his family. He was already an old man, and died about 1740.

(I) Thomas Robinson, whose wife's name is not known, had these children: Philip, born in 1698, who died in 1770; Andrew, born in 1700, who married Agnes Boal, and died in 1797; William; Christiana, born in 1702, who married Thomas Muirhead, and died in 1765; Richard, who died in 1768; Samuel; and Thomas. The place of burial of Thomas Robinson is unknown. It is believed that he came from Derry, Ireland, and it is also thought, from the numerous Robinsons scattered over the country, that with Thomas came brothers and other relatives. The traits of person and character, and the persistence of family names, indicate nearness of origin. Thomas Robinson settled in Hanover, Dauphin Co., Pa. The region in which he settled can hardly be surpassed by any part of the country for its natural advantages and beauty of scenery. It possessed peculiar attractions for the hardy and adventurous settlers, and it was a favorite hunting ground of the Indians. Families generally united in forming settlements, placing their residences sufficiently near each other to form social neighborhoods, to meet for purposes of religious worship, to give each other help in farming, and to protect each other should danger arise from the savage who lurked in the forests of the region. The homes of the settlers were distributed here and there, scattered over a wide space. They were an adventurous people, and risked many perils in fixing the location of their homes.

(II) Philip Robinson, son of Thomas, married and had this family (his wife's name is unknown): Samuel, born in 1720, married Jean Snoddy, and died Nov. 15, 1807; Thomas, who married Jean Hay, was born in 1725, and died in 1780; George, born in 1727, married (first) Ann Wiley and (second) Mary Martin, and died in 1814; Agnes, born in 1730, married Robert Robinson, and died Dec. 22, 1792; Sarah, born in 1732, married Robert Thompson; Mary, born in 1734, married Samuel Elder; Joseph was born in 1736; and John. Philip Robinson, son of Thomas, was born in 1698, in the North of Ireland, and came to the Province of Pennsylvania before 1730. His name appears on the first tax list of the township of Hanover, Lancaster (now Dauphin) county. His father had first settled near Conewago creek, farther east. Mr. Robinson, with his family, and one or more of his brothers, settled on Manada creek, near the Gap of the same name in the Kittocthinny mountains. During the Indian wars, 1755-1763, there was a fort on his farm for defense against the savage, and for the protection of the settlers of the section in times of invasion. Philip Robinson's sons were already grown men, for in 1755 Governor Morris addressed a letter to Samuel Robinson, and sent with it one hundred pounds of powder, to be used by the inhabitants of Hanover "in defense of themselves and their country." Besides their farm the Robinsons had built a mill at the mouth of the Gap on the Manada, and furnished supplies to the Government during the Indian and Revolutionary wars. The Robinsons of Hanover were members of the Presbyterian congregation under the ministry of its first pastor, Rev. Richard Sankey.

(III) Samuel Robinson, son of Philip, married Jean Snoddy Sept. 23, 1761. She died in 1768, and he married (second), in 1769, Mrs. Letitia Montgomery, who died July 18, 1822. Samuel Robinson had children as follows: Polly, born Aug. 3, 1762, who married Alexander Woods, and died Aug. 15, 1828; Joseph, born May 6, 1764, who was drowned with his mother in 1768, while crossing the James river; John Snoddy, born Oct. 12, 1766, who married Mary Robinson; Matthew; Samuel, born in 1773; and Thomas. Samuel Robinson left a large number of descendants, who may be found chiefly in Ohio, Indiana and California.

(IV) John Snoddy Robinson married Mary Robinson, who was born Sept. 19, 1774, and died June 11, 1843. Her line was Jonathan (4), George (3), Philip (2) and Thomas (1), she being of the same stock as her husband. John Snoddy Robinson was a pioneer of Springboro, Ohio, where he cleared up a farm of 340 acres from the woods, and there died March 23, 1843. Children as follows were born to him and his wife: Jonathan, born Dec. 25, 1797, was a merchant, and died Dec. 14, 1848, at Pendleton, Ind.; Jean Snoddy, born Nov. 9, 1799, married M. Ward, and died in 1890; Samuel, born in 1802, died in June, 1812; James, born in 1803, died Aug. 21, 1822; Ann Wiley, born Jan. 12, 1806, married William Silver, and died May 13, 1850; Harvey, born in 1808, died Aug. 13, 1822; Thomas Black, born March 28, 1810, died March 29, 1852, married Sarah Hudson; Newton, born May 1, 1812, died March 15, 1876, married Hannah Silver; Maria Louisa, born in 1814, died the same year; and Maria Louisa (2), born July 12, 1816, married James V. Wayman, and died March 15, 1903.

Jonathan Robinson, father of Mary Robinson who married John Snoddy Robinson, was born in Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa., but in early life was taken to Perry county, where he grew to manhood. He married Jean Black, a sister of John Black, husband of Mr. Robinson's sister Mary, and the daughter of Hon. James Black, a farmer of Sherman Valley, Pa., who was for some years associate judge and a member of Congress. Removing to Kentucky in 1785 Mr. Robinson purchased land near Georgetown, and erected a house which was still standing in 1891, a fine relic of the olden times, with its massive chimneys, spacious fireplaces and hearths, and there Mr. Robinson resided until his death, in 1834. The home afterward became the residence of his son, James F. Robinson, governor of Kentucky. The family embraced twelve children, five of whom died unnamed.

During the Revolutionary war Jonathan Robinson was captain of the 4th Battalion of Cumberland county infantry, and was in service about six years, receiving his commission from the executive council of Pennsylvania. He entered the service of the United States, during the war of the Revolution, first as a captain of volunteers, in November, 1776. He marched through Cumberland county, Pa., through Carlisle, Lancaster and Philadelphia, to Princeton, N. J., and was employed in scouting expeditions, and as a guard against the invasions of the British army, which then lay at New Brunswick. At one time he was on an expedition with 100 men, under the command of Colonel Bohanan, to intercept the provisions of the British army, passing on the Raritan river to New Brunswick; they accordingly made the attack, and fired upon five small vessels of the enemy without effect; and during the skirmish one of his men was wounded and others injured. He was in the battle of Brandywine, Del., and in the ensuing winter was ordered to the camp of General Lacy, at Chemung Bridge, over the Chemung creek. In joining General Lacy's camp Captain Robinson passed the camp of General Washington, which was then at Valley Forge. He was also in the battle of Paoli, at which his lieutenant, James Arbuckle, and his ensign, Samuel Arbuckle, together with five men, were killed. Captain Robinson was in this service from May, 1776, until June, 1777, at which time he was commissioned captain of a company of foot in the 4th Battalion of militia of Cumberland county, Pa. Under this commission he served five tours of duty, two of six months and three of three months each, in the summer and fall of the years 1779, 1780, and 1782. In 1785 Captain Robinson went to Kentucky and purchased a farm of 600 acres in Scott county, upon which he erected cabins. In the spring of 1786 he returned to Pennsylvania and took his family back with him to Kentucky. There he continued to reside, one of the wealthiest and most influential citizens of the State, passing away at the ripe old age of eighty-six years, greatly respected and beloved. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and a very religious man. In one of his letters, written in 1814, still preserved, he gives a very interesting description of the great religious movements of that day, extending in various forms from 1800 onward for fifteen or twenty years.

Captain Jonathan Robinson was the son of George Robinson, whose birthplace is unknown. It was probably in the North of Ireland. His early boyhood and youth were spent at the home farm in Hanover township, at Manada Gap, a few miles from Harrisburg. In about 1755, some years after his marriage to Ann Wiley, he settled in Cumberland (now Perry) county, west of the mountains and the Susquehanna river, at the head of Sherman creek. With other pioneers of that region he was soon called upon to bear the brunt of the Indian wars, and was driven from his home in hurried flight across the mountains. He was a farmer, and upon his farm was built a fort for the protection of the settlers of the region, known in Colonial history as "Governor Robinson's Fort." The inhabitants of the valley frequently fled to it for safety. Mr. Robinson was commissioned a justice of the peace by the proprietary government under George III, and he also served in the army of the Revolution, although then a man advanced in years. The musket he carried has been preserved, and is in the possession of his great-grandson, Rev. N. H. Robinson. In 1797 George Robinson removed to Kentucky, whither eight of his children had preceded him. He settled a few miles from Lexington, and remained there until his death, March 6, 1814, in the eighty-seventh year of his age. In religion he was a Presbyterian, a ruling elder in the Centre Church in Pennsylvania, and after removing to Kentucky was an elder in the Bethel Presbyterian Church of Scott county. Judge Robinson was six feet in height, perfect in person, and remarkably active and strong. He was a good English scholar, was very fond of reading, especially of works on law, ethics and the philosophy of the mind, some of his favorites being "Blackstone's Commentaries," "Locke on Government," "Hume's History of England," "Stewart's Philosophy," and the Spectator.

At an early date the Robinsons intermarried in Lancaster county, Pa., with the Crawfords, Logans, McCords, Blacks, Martins, Muirheads and Blaines, and members of many of these families as well as the Robinsons served in the Revolutionary war. Col. Ephraim Blaine, the grandfather of James G. Blaine, of Maine, was a Revolutionary officer of distinction. Many from these families were with Benedict Arnold on his march to Quebec, and the majority were captured there, while a large number of them died from hardships and wounds. Capt. Thomas Robinson commanded a company under Colonel (afterward General) Wayne at Ticonderoga in 1776; he was wounded in the battle of Brandywine, while serving as a major. The first regiment to reach Boston after the battle of Bunker Hill from the south of the Hudson was the 1st Rifle Regiment from Pennsylvania, 900 strong; ten of these were from Lancaster county, Pa., and ten from Cumberland county, the muster-roll showing that most of them were Scotch-Irish. They marched four hundred miles to the relief of Boston. The first regiment of the United Colonies, commanded by Gen. George Washington, is described as composed of remarkably stout and hardy men, many of them exceeding six feet in height.

James Robinson Silver, the subject of this sketch, was an infant of about one and one-half years when brought by his parents to Newcastle, Ind., and was about ten years old when his father removed to Pendleton. He attended the public schools of Newcastle and Pendleton, gaining a common education, and began to work when fifteen years old. He married, May 20, 1851, when aged twenty-four years, in Springboro, Ohio, Amanda E. Gregg, who was born in Warren county, Ohio, on her father's farm, May 3, 1833, daughter of William and Susanna (Millard) Gregg, of Scotch-Irish stock.

James R. Silver engaged in a mercantile business in Pendleton, his father, as before stated, having turned over the business to him in about 1851. Mr. Silver was a successful merchant for years, standing high in his community. He is a property owner, having 240 acres of fine farm land, besides his pleasant residence, and other valuable property. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. James R. Silver the following have lived to maturity: William Gregg, born Sept. 17, 1853; Harry Lee, born Dec. 15, 1863; Della Alvora, born Jan. 7, 1866; and Arthur Millard, born Jan. 1, 1871. There were two who died young: Dora M., born Feb. 22, 1857, who died Sept. 5, 1863; and Minnie B., born Jan. 25, 1863, who died Aug. 22, 1863. Of this family William Gregg married Elizabeth Clark, and they reside in Pendleton; their children are as follows: Donna Blanche, born June 17, 1877, and Alvora, born Aug. 10, 1879. Harry Lee married Lettie Taylor, and they reside in Indianapolis; their children are Herbert, born Nov. 7, 1891, and Ralph, born Jan. 1, 1895. Della Alvora married Charles Cokefair, and they reside at Eaton, Ohio. Arthur Millard is a young man at home.

Mr. and Mrs. James R. Silver celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage on May 20, 1901, and on May 20, 1906, celebrated the fifty-fifth anniversary. They are ranked among the most worthy pioneers of Pendleton. Mrs. Silver has been a member of the Universalist Church for fifty years. Mr. Silver is very liberal on religious questions. They have been supporters of the Universalist Church at Pendleton, really the main supporters, having assisted to build both the old and the new Universalist churches there. Mr. Silver joined the Masonic fraternity of Pendleton in 1850-51 and has held nearly all the offices in the subordinate lodge. He is the oldest member of the blue lodge now living in Pendleton, having joined prior to 1855. He has served several times as master, and has been high priest and head of the council. He is a member of the Knights Templars at Knightstown, Ind., and was one of the charter members of the Anderson Commandery. In politics Mr. Silver is a Republican, and he voted for John C. Fremont, the first Republican Presidential candidate, and also for Abraham Lincoln, and has supported every Republican candidate for the Presidency since. He was first an old-line Whig and voted for Gen. Winfield Scott.

The Gregg family, of which Mrs. James R. Silver is a member, is of Scotch stock, and emigrated to Ireland and thence to America, where they were called Scotch-Irish. William Gregg, the father of Mrs. Silver, always said that there were seven Greggs who came from Ireland and that they were the founders of all the old Gregg families in America that he ever heard of. They settled in different States and later spread over the entire United States. The first of the name of whom we have any record is Samuel Gregg, the grandfather of Mrs. Silver, who was born in Loudoun county, Va., May 4, 1773. He married Nancy O'Brien, who was born June 28, 1775. He died July 30, 1844, and she died Oct. 10, 1844. Their children were: Rebecca, born June 15, 1797, who died Sept. 23, 1867; William, born Oct. 28, 1798; Alpheus, born Jan. 23, 1801; Aaron, born Jan. 23, 1803; Samuel, Jr., born Nov. 15, 1804, who died Oct. 2, 1844; Nancy, born Aug. 7, 1806; Robert, born April 4, 1808; Hiram, born Dec. 24, 1810; Israel, born Nov. 19, 1812; Amanda, born Nov. 23, 1814; Elizabeth, born March 10, 1817; and Cynthia, born Oct. 24, 1821. Of the foregoing John and Amanda died unmarried and the rest became heads of families. All are now (1906) deceased.

Samuel Gregg, the pioneer, was about twenty-three years old when he first came to Ohio, in 1796, at which time the State was almost an entire wilderness. When he brought his wife and two children, they slept in the wagon until he had cleared a place on which to build a log cabin. Cincinnati was forty miles away, and he took his corn there to mill, a sack at a time, on the back of a horse, during the days of his first settlement; he was obliged to blaze a trail part of the way so he could find his way back. There were then in Cincinnati but very few people. At one time while Samuel Gregg was on one of these trips to Cincinnati Mrs. Gregg went to the sugar camp, a short distance from the cabin. She heard a sound in the forest like the wailing of a child and hurried to the cabin with her children. She could hear some large animal following her and crying through the woods, and she slept but little that night, alone with her children in the cabin. The next morning a neighbor who had heard the wailing shot and killed a very large panther from a tree overlooking the humble home. Samuel Gregg was injured to hard labor and toil, and was thus able to cope successfully with the hard life which was the common lot of the frontier settlers. In his day game was very abundant and he was a mighty hunter, killing, at different times, according to tradition, thirty-six deer. He tanned their skins for clothing, etc., for at that early day the families of the settlers made all their own clothing, having their own looms to weave their cloth.

William Gregg, the father of Mrs. Silver, was the second child and first son of Samuel Gregg, who emigrated from western Pennsylvania to Columbia, above Cincinnati, near the mouth of the Little Miami river. They located in Deersfield, Warren county, where William Gregg was born Oct. 28, 1798. Samuel entered a tract of land in Clear Creek township, where he built a log cabin into which he moved. The structure was without floor, window or chimney, or chinks. A doorway was made in one side by cutting out the logs. Here William was reared and in this vicinity passed his life. A dense forest covered the country, and his father had to make the road from his cabin to the schoolhouse by blazing the trees in order that the children might not get lost in the woods. The schoolhouse was also built of logs, with greased paper windows and puncheon floor, with seats of the same material. On Dec. 12, 1822, William Gregg married Susanna Millard, daughter of Mordecai and Catherine Millard, the latter born in Berks county, Pa., April 7, 1803. Mr. and Mrs. Gregg had a large family of children, most of them, however, dying in infancy. He was reared and instructed in the doctrines and discipline of the Society of Friends, but about 1840 he became a Universalist. He was one of the first to form a society in Springboro for the building of a Universalist church. Children were born to William and Susanna (Millard) Gregg as follows: Rebecca, born Feb. 14, 1824, died Aug. 20, 1828; Ann J., born Aug. 8, 1831, died Feb. 20, 1836; Amanda E. was born May 3, 1833; Jonah was born Sept. 6, 1836; Catherine, born Jan. 10, 1839, died unmarried in 1860; William H., born Nov. 14, 1840, died Oct. 10, 1864; George W., born Dec. 10, 1843, died July 10, 1864; James A. was born Feb. 25, 1846; Emeline and Adaline, twins, were born March 9, 1848, and Emeline died Sept. 30, 1848. Of these the son William H. Gregg served in the war of the Rebellion, and was killed near Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 10, 1864, by the guerrillas, while carrying dispatches from Colonel Smith at Chattanooga river railroad bridge to Colonel Dustin of Atlanta. Another son, George W., also served in the Civil war, and died in the service at Fayetteville, W. Va., July 11, 1864.

William Gregg served as justice of the peace six years with such judgment and ability that but one case was appealed to the higher courts, and in that instance Gregg's decision was sustained. He died March 1, 1879, aged eighty years. He was a man of high character and much business ability, and by his frugality and thrift amassed a fortune of about $40,000.

The Millard family from which Mrs. Silver is descended on the maternal side is traced back to Mordecai Millard, her great-grandfather, who was born in Pennsylvania June 24, 1736. He married Frances Lincoln, who was born June 22, 1741, in the same State, and their children were: Samuel, born May 7, 1760; Joseph, March 31, 1763; Hannah, July 13, 1765; Jane, June 6, 1768; Elizabeth, Feb. 6, 1770; Benjamin, Feb. 28, 1772; Mordecai, March 31, 1774; Thomas, March 25, 1776; James, April 11, 1778; Jonathan, Aug. 28, 1781; and Samuel, Feb. 17, 1784.

Mordecai Millard, Jr., son of Mordecai, and the grandfather of Mrs. James R. Silver, was born in Pennsylvania March 31, 1774, and died March 9, 1851, in Indiana. He married Catherine Evans, a native of Pennsylvania, and they came to Ohio in August, 1817, settling near Springboro, Warren county. Here Mr. Millard built a saw and grist mill in about 1818, and conducted this business about thirty years. Mrs. Millard died in February, 1849, aged seventy-seven years. Their children were: Mary, born Aug. 23, 1796, married John Heirgood; Thomas, born Sept. 2, 1798, was married twice and lived in Iowa; Frances, born Oct. 18, 1800, married Elisha Cockefair; Susanna, born April 7, 1803, married William Gregg; Elizabeth, born June 20, 1805, married Aaron Gregg; Catherine, born Oct. 2, 1807, died unmarried; Rebecca, born Nov. 13, 1809, died unmarried; Hannah and Margaret (twins), born Feb. 23, 1812, both died young.

JACOB A. EMRICH, who has long been favorably identified with the growth and development of Indianapolis, was born Feb. 12, 1838, in Bavaria, Germany, where he was reared and educated. His parents were Christian and Angelina (Walz) Emrich. The father served six years in the Bavarian army. A wagonmaker by trade, his sons were bred to the same calling. In 1854 he came to the United States, joining a son and daughter who had crossed the ocean two years before. From New York he proceeded directly to Indianapolis, where he lived some six months, after which he bought land in Wayne township, west of the White river, and engaged in farming, though he lived mostly a retired life until his death, in 1866. He had taken an active interest in public affairs from the time of his arrival here in February, 1854. His widow passed to her rest in 1887. They were Protestants in religious faith. Their children were: Elizabeth, who is Mrs. Mauer; Magdalena, Mrs. Shearer; Mary, Mrs. Kittenring; Christian, who with Magdalena came in 1852; Frank; Jacob A.; Nicholas; and Catherine, Mrs. Durfield.

Jacob A. Emrich came to this country with his father and family in 1854. He was at that time sixteen years of age, and had already worked at the wagon-making trade with his father in the old country. When the father and sons set up in business in Indianapolis it was necessary that one of them should be a blacksmith, and Jacob A. learned the trade, so that when his father bought land, on which he established shops, the brothers were able to do all the work required in wagon-making, repairing and blacksmithing. They made a permanent settlement, and became quite prosperous.

In 1861, at the call of duty, Jacob A. Emrich enlisted, but was rejected on examination, whereupon he resumed his trade until 1864, when he again enlisted, this time being accepted as a member of the 148th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in the capacity of a bugler, under Col. N. R. Ruckle. The regiment was attached to the 20th Army Corps, in the Army of the Tennessee, was detailed for guard duty, and became widely scattered, Mr. Emrich being at Pulaski most of the time. He was mustered out and honorably discharged at Indianapolis in September, 1865. During his service at the front he was not so much as wounded, and had but little excitement.

On returning home Mr. Emrich resumed his trade, which he followed thirty-three years in all. In 1861 he was married, after which he bought a five-acre tract of land, where he erected a fine home and carried on garden farming in connection with his trade. The city has swept across his place, taking in his property. Now they want to attach it to the city park, a measure that will meet with all the opposition Mr. Emrich can make. He desires his land to be kept together, as it makes a beautiful home.

Mr. Emrich is a strong Democrat and widely known as a hard and unrelenting worker for his party's success. In 1880 he was elected justice of the peace and served until 1888, in which year he was elected county commissioner, an office he filled with dignity and honor, his service ending in 1891. In 1898 he was again elected justice of the peace, in which capacity he served until 1906, having succeeded himself at each election. He has also filled some minor township positions. As a magistrate his record is very clear, and he has made a reputation as a justice who considers only the law and the evidence, without prejudice.

In 1893 Mr. Emrich built a store, and he carries on a considerable grocery business at his home. The blacksmith business has passed to a son. Mr. Emrich rests on the records of a long and useful business career. Today he is rated among the solid men of Marion county.

Mr. Emrich married Phoebe J. Adams, who was born Oct. 18, 1843, and is a woman of intelligence and many charms of character and disposition. She has proved a good wife and mother. Her parents, John and Almira M. (Mallaney) Adams, natives of Kentucky and Ohio, respectively, were early settlers of Marion county. In 1859 Mr. Adams was superintendent of the county infirmary, a position which he held three years, after which he bought a farm on which he settled and passed his remaining days, dying in 1871. His widow died in 1898. They were members of the Baptist Church. In early life Mr. Adams was a Democrat, but later became a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Adams had the following family: Phoebe J., who became Mrs. Emrich; Robert, an undertaker in Indianapolis; and Frances, who became Mrs. Kunkle.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob A. Emrich have had the following children: John, who is a blacksmith; Edward G., a farmer; Laura, Mrs. Groff; Estella, Mrs. Turner; Clarence, who is assisting his father in the store; Ellsworth Emrich, residing in Seattle; and Ida, who is Mrs. Cox.

Mr. Emrich is connected with the I. O. O. F., the K. P. and the G. A. R., and is one of the most active workers in that noble organization.

JAMES A. BOONE, a descendant of the original old Boone family, was born on a farm in Jefferson county, Ind., Jan. 30, 1832, son of Willis and Sarah (Alexander) Boone. Both of his parents were natives of Kentucky, but were married in Indiana.

Willis Boone was a son of Isaiah Boone, and a grandson of Squire Boone, who was a brother of Daniel Boone, the noted frontiersman and Indian fighter. George Boone, the father of Squire and Daniel Boone, was born in Exeter, England, and came to this country before the Revolution. He purchased a large tract of land in what is now Berks county, Pa., to which he gave the name of Exeter, and which is now Exeter township. Mr. Boone also bought land in Maryland and Virginia. Squire and Daniel Boone were reared in Berks county, on what was then the frontier, and was inured to danger and hardship. The few settlers lived a lonely life dwelling in log cabins, surrounded by heavy timber, which abounded in game and was also infested with hostile Indians. Here the young Boones became familiar with every phase of woodcraft, Daniel especially delighting to roam the woods, and gradually becoming a hunter and Indian fighter of national reputation. Serving in all the border wars of the time, he was also a soldier and scout in the war of the Revolution. Early in life he penetrated the "dark and bloody hunting ground," as Kentucky had been called, and following the foremost wave of settlement presently found himself in Missouri, where he died. Boone county in that State was named in honor of him. One of his grandsons, Capt. Samuel Boone, born in 1782, in Madison county, Ky., died in Callaway county, Mo., at the age of eighty-eight. George Boone was a member of the Episcopal Church in England, but became a Quaker after his settlement in America. He had a large family of children: James, Samuel, Jonathan, Daniel, George, Squire, Isaiah, Edward, Sarah, Elizabeth, Mary, Hannah, William (who was killed by the Indians in 1773), and Israel (who was killed at the battle of Blue Licks, in 1782).

Squire Boone, great-grandfather of James A., was a noted frontiersman, though not so famous as his brother. The family set out for the West from North Carolina in 1774, and took with them cattle and hogs, as well as their household goods—all that could be carried on pack horses. That same year they settled in Powell's Valley, then an unexplored wilderness, and there they had many bitter experiences with the Indians. Squire Boone came to Kentucky a single man, but he was presently married.

Isaiah Boone came into the Territory of Indiana at a very early day, and locating on the Ohio river engaged in business at New Albany as a general tradesman and general country merchant. There he reared his family and there he died.

Willis Boone, the father of James A. Boone, was born in Kentucky. When a boy he came with his step-father, Joseph Hensley, to Clefty Falls, at Edwards Blockhouse, four miles from Madison, Jefferson Co., Ind. There he married Sarah Alexander, whose father, James Alexander, was born in Scotland, and followed the calling of a Baptist minister. He came from his native country as an English soldier in the war of the Revolution, but on his arrival in this country joined the Continental forces and fought throughout the war of Independence for the Colonies. When peace returned, he located in Cumberland county, Ky., but presently settled in Indiana, where he entered land in Jefferson county, and became prominent in church work. On his land he built a stone church, which is still standing and is called "Stony Lonesome," and, donating it to the Baptists, was made its pastor. Throughout life he conducted services and ministered to the poor and needy in that section with a warm heart and generous hand. When he died he was over eighty-five, and he is remembered as a devout Christian and a genial gentleman. His children were: James, Landafaro, Nancy, Sarah (Mrs. Boone), Agnes and Polly.

Willis Boone, like others of his family, had pronounced mechanical ability; he could make or mend anything in wood and iron; he could build stone, brick and frame houses; he was an accomplished musician and is remembered as a man of far more than average ability. After his marriage he settled on a farm in Jefferson county, where he reared his family. During the war of 1812 he enlisted, and was on his way to join the forces of Gen. Jackson at New Orleans, where the great battle was fought before his arrival. Returning home, the rest of his life was spent in peaceful pursuits, and he died at the homestead in 1844. Through all these years his was a useful career in a new country. He was always ready to help his neighbors, ready to put mills and machinery in order, and to keep the wheel of industry revolving. A man of perhaps medium size, he was strong and resolute in both mind and body, and for many years was exceedingly active, but he never sought official station. In politics he was a Democrat. To the last he retained the hearty and unstinted respect of all who knew him, as his integrity, industry and honor were in every way beyond question. His children were as follows: (1) Mary, born Dec. 15, 1815, married March 15, 1836, T. B. Orrill, and died June 18, 1905, at Madison, Ind. (2) Isaiah, born Jan. 28, 1818, was married May 17, 1840, and died in February, 1905, at Shelbyville, Ind. (3) Martha, born June 17, 1820, married E. T. Blankinship, and died July 27, 1860. (4) Joseph, born Sept. 14, 1822, died Sept. 23, 1822. (5) Levin C., born Oct. 5, 1824, died in January, 1854. (6) Nancy, born April 23, 1826, was married May 12, 1842, to John Ross, and died May 12, 1872. (7) Perlina, born March 31, 1828, was married in September, 1849, to George L. Jones, of Kentucky, and died Feb. 15, 1906, at Indianapolis. (8) William, born Aug. 4, 1830, died April 30, 1831. (9) James A., born Jan. 30, 1832, is mentioned below. (10) Willis, born April 7, 1834, was married Jan. 28, 1857, and died Dec. 4, 1901. During the Civil war he served as a private in the 22d Ind. V. I. (11) Elizabeth, born Oct. 25, 1836, was twice married, in 1863 to Joseph Calaway (who died in 1870, at North Madison, Ind.), and in 1875 to F. B. Johnson (who died Aug. 30, 1894, at Spencer, Ind.). Mrs. Johnson died Nov. 4, 1906, at Spencer. (12) Thomas, born April 5, 1840, also served during the Civil war in the 22d Ind. V. I. He died Feb. 8, 1883.

James A. Boone, better known as "Doc" Boone, left home when he was only twelve years of age to take care of himself, and for the ensuing four years was employed at a country tavern. The next year he worked on the farm and in a sawmill, after which he spent two years as a brakeman on the railroad between Madison and Indianapolis. Mr. Boone was then employed as a member of a surveying party between Cambridge City and Columbus, engaged in laying out a railroad between these two points. After the completion of this enterprise, he entered the car shops at Madison, Ind., where he was employed as a car repairer and inspector until 1882, in which year he was transferred to Indianapolis. Presently he was attached to the coach department of the Pan Handle shops, until he was retired on a pension. The first work of Mr. Boone was done under John Brough, the president of the road, who also held the position of master mechanic. F. H. Smith was the second master mechanic; Bon W. Smith, the third; D. O. Shaver, the fourth; William Swanson, the fifth; the present master mechanic is S. M. Miller. J. O. D. Lilly was the second president of the road. On his retirement from active service Mr. Boone was presented a fine chair by the men of the shop as a mark of the esteem and confidence in which he was held by his associates. For fifty-three years he was in active service with the Pennsylvania Company, and well remembers the circumstances attending the arrival of the first engine for the road from Philadelphia. It came by steamer and canal to Madison, where it arrived on a flat boat, and was pulled up the hill from the river and to the track by oxen and horses. In 1847 there came the "Marion," the "Muscattac" and the "Sugar Creek" and when they were being hauled to the temporary tracks the rope broke, and Mr. Boone who was standing on the flat boat at the rear end holding the boat straight, to save himself, was obliged to jump into the icy water of the river, and swim ashore. President Brough was there, and to solicit help in getting the engine ashore bought four gallons of cherry bounce and made the occasion a frolic, and presently the engine was on its own tracks. Mr. Boone remembers that the first engine running on the old Madison road was a rented engine, called the "Elkhorn." The second engine which the company built at North Madison, Ind., was called "Indianapolis No. 1," then followed the "Madison No. 2," and the "Gen. Tom Morris," which had one pair of drive wheels.

Mr. Boone was married Oct. 6, 1853, at Madison, to Miss Emily A. Roberts, daughter of Joseph and America (Moore) Roberts, of Kentucky, where she was born and reared, near Frankfort, Franklin county. The Roberts family is of Scotch-Irish descent. Mrs. Boone's father, who was a mechanical genius, was born in Franklin county, Ky., and afterward came to Jefferson county, Ind., settling near Madison. A strong Democrat, he served as justice of the peace many years, and was a devoted member of the Baptist Church. In his active days he was a prominent and useful citizen. His children were as follows: Emily A., who became Mrs. Boone; Fanny, who became Mrs. Moss, of Madison; Fielding, who died young; and John, who died when a young man.

Mr. and Mrs. Boone had one child, Adella, who is unmarried and at home. Mrs. Boone is a Baptist. Mr. Boone is united with the I. O. O. F., of which fraternity he has been for some years a past officer, in both the Lodge and the Encampment. During the war of the Rebellion he was a member of the 9th Legion Home Guards, and during the Morgan raid in Indiana and Ohio, served as bridge inspector, running in front of trains bearing soldiers, and having many exciting adventures.

J. K. ENGLISH, senior member of the reliable and first-class firm of painters in Indianapolis known as J. K. & H. K. English, has grown up with the city, and having served at different times in the early days as councilman, city treasurer and county commissioner he has assisted materially in building up its public institutions and in the foundation of the excellent system of city government which is still in existence there. Born on a farm near Middletown, in Frederick county, Md., Dec. 28, 1824, he is a son of King (Jr.) and Mary (Brown) English.

King English, Sr., grandfather of J. K., was born in Ireland and there received a liberal education, after which he embarked upon life as a schoolmaster. During his early manhood he came to Virginia, and there married a Miss Eads. Of this union there were five children: Joseph, who settled at Wheeling, W. Va.; King, Jr.; James (deceased) and Thomas, who settled and died in Montgomery county, Md.; and Rebecca, Mrs. Day. After marriage Mr. English settled in Georgetown, D. C., and there followed his profession with much success, giving his family a cultivated and refined home. He passed his last days in Georgetown and died there. A man of many accomplishments, of rare intellectual power, he always found a welcome in the best homes. Reared as a strict Presbyterian, he adhered firmly to the teachings of that church.

King English, Jr., father of J. K., found his life work in opening up Marion county, Ind., to settlers. Born in Georgetown, D. C., he there passed his early life. The death of his father when he was but twelve years old made it necessary for him to shoulder life's responsibilities early, and for some time he worked at anything life offered him. Later he went to Maryland and there engaged as a farm hand, acquiring a practical knowledge of agriculture of much value to him later. While in that State he married, in Frederick county, Mary Brown, who was born in that county, daughter of George P. Brown, a German by descent, a mechanic by trade, and a Lutheran in religion, who with his wife passed his last days in Indiana and died there. Their children were: John; George; Peter; and Elizabeth, who was married to a Mr. Surley; Susan, to a Mr. Ringer; Mary, to Mr. English (as has been said); and Sophia, to a Mr. Grossmickle. Mrs. English died in 1861. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. English, all in Maryland, two died in early life; Mary A. married a Mr. Ringer, and died in Indianapolis; William died at the age of four years; and J. K. is mentioned below.

A short time after marriage Mr. English purchased a small tract of land in Frederick county, Md., and there engaged in agriculture for himself. By dint of hard work and prudent management, he realized a moderate income from his place, and made a good start in life. Convinced, however, of the superior agricultural resources of the West, in 1830 he disposed of his place, and moved to Marion county, Ind., settling first upon a rented place, while looking about for a permanent location. Shortly afterward, however, he purchased for $400 an 80-acre tract, within a mile and a half of the little log-cabined village of Indianapolis, with its three general stores and two churches—Methodist and Presbyterian. His farm was heavily timbered, and all uncleared, except ten poorly improved acres, upon which stood a rude log hut. Today it is crossed by beautiful avenues, lined with elegant buildings, and is worth over a million dollars. Mr. English at once entered upon the vast undertaking of opening the land to cultivation. Exchanging work with neighbors—assisting in raising cabins and rolling logs in return for help in felling trees and grubbing—he gradually cleared up large tracts, upon which he raised abundant crops, including wheat and other grain, which he yearly marketed in Cincinnati, bringing home salt, and other supplies in exchange. With other settlers he each year sent his surplus hogs to Cincinnati, the nearest market, to be slaughtered. Among other improvements on the farm he erected a substantial house in place of the original log cabin, and this building is now in the city. After many years Mr. English in 1850 sold his farm for four thousand dollars and moved into the city, where he passed his last days in the enjoyment of the fruits of his well-directed efforts. He died in this place in 1864. Mr. English was a typical pioneer, energetic, practical, and possessed a large hearted fellowship for all. Imbued with great courage, he met life's obstacles fearlessly, and always came out victor. His home was one of the social meeting places for early pioneers, and traveling preachers especially made their abode at his house. He was a man of marked integrity of character; with the keenest sense of honor, and both he and his wife were consistent members of the Lutheran Church. Politically he at first affiliated with the Whigs, and later with the Republicans.

J. K. English, being only about six years old when his parents came to Marion county, has been an eye witness of the transformation of that section from wilderness to a beautifully cultivated agricultural center, with magnificent farms and a city of taste and wealth. Reared on the farm, he procured his education in his neighborhood and in the old university, and passed his spare moments in the work of clearing land, killing off deer and wild turkeys, and in doing the various tasks that fall to the lot of farmer boys. Gradually he assumed the heavier work of the farm, and remaining there until he was twenty-four years old, he gave much of his attention to the general management of the place. At the end of this period he settled in Indianapolis, and there, with G. D. Statts, learned the painter's trade, after which, in company with that gentleman, he followed the business steadily until 1860, discontinuing the work then in order to give his attention to public affairs. Some time after this he purchased a pleasant farm in Marion county, where he settled and engaged in agriculture very successfully for some time. After six years, in 1871, he sold his farm, and, returning to Indianapolis, purchased an interest in what is now the Over Foundry, and, under the firm name of Burner, English & Over, conducted a prosperous business for some time. After a while Mr. Burner retired, and in 1876 Mr. English also withdrew from the business selling his share to Mr. Over, who has since conducted the establishment. The building up of Indianapolis now afforded an excellent opening in the painter's business, and in 1878 Mr. English resumed this work. Artistic workmanship, and promptness in filling orders have won him a good patronage, and after some time he took in his son as partner, conducting his business under the firm name of J. K. & H. K. English. Large contracts came in and the firm has steadily prospered, and is now carrying on one of the largest enterprises in its line in the city.

In the early days Mr. English purchased land near Fall Creek, on College avenue, where he erected a handsome two-story residence, and here he now resides. With the building up of the city a large procession of houses have passed him on the avenue, so he is now in one of the beautiful residence sections. He owns a neat little cottage at Maxinkuckee, where he and his family spend the summers. The weight of more than eighty years does not prevent him from giving intelligent attention to his business.

In 1852 Mr. English married Alvira Cole-stock, who was born near Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 16, 1831. She and Mr. English have celebrated their golden wedding. Of this union there have been five children: H. K., who is in partnership with his father; Frank C., also engaged in the same line of work; Mary R., who married F. Reegen, a druggist; and Misses Julia T. and Josephine, at home.

Mr. English was for years exceedingly active in public affairs; and as a member of the city council in the early days assisted in dissolving the old volunteer fire department, and establishing it along the lines upon which it is now conducted; and in this matter his word especially carried weight, as he had previously served both as a member and president of the fire department, and had also officiated as president of the fire board. In 1863 he was elected city treasurer, a position which he filled for four years, evincing marked business sagacity, and devising the system, now in existence, for indexing taxable property, and instigating tax sales. Later he served for four years on the board of county commissioners, which attended to the erection of the city's fine courthouse—in the cornerstone of which his name with others is inscribed—to the building up of comfortable quarters at the poor farm and to the construction of bridges, and in paving the way for many other improvements in the city and county. He filled each public office with dignity and ability, and has ever been faithful to the Republican party, with which he affiliates. Socially he is well-known and much respected, and fraternally he belongs to the R. A. and the I. O. O. F., he and Gen. McGinnis now being the only two surviving charter members of the last-named lodge, which has been in existence fifty years. Reared as Lutherans, both he and his wife are worthy members of that church.

Henry Colestock, father of Mrs. English, was born in Pennsylvania, of good German stock. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed with much success throughout his active career. He married Rebecca Gill, of Baltimore, Maryland, who had two brothers, Charles and Edward. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Colestock: Louisa, who married Mr. Ridpath in Indianapolis and settled in Wisconsin; Benjamin, who died in Hancock county, leaving a large family; James, who died young; Julia, who married M. Pandre; John, who died in Indianapolis; and Mrs. English, mentioned above. After marriage Mr. Colestock settled in Pennsylvania, where he continued for the most part throughout his active life. An excellent mechanic, he prospered in the steady pursuit of his trade. He was a man of marked integrity of character and much ability, commanding the respect of all who knew him.

O. H. JACKSON. Few master mechanics have had a wider or more varied experience in their line than this one, now in charge of the works at the Indianapolis Union railroad shops. During his forty or more years' service he has at different times been connected with many of the greatest lines in the country, including the Buffalo & Lake Erie, now the Lake Shore; the Atlantic & Great Western; the Big Four; the Santa Fe, Prescott and Phoenix; and many others, his territory extending from the East to the far West. Mr. Jackson was born in Shelby, Richland Co., Ohio, Sept. 16, 1845, and is of Scotch-Irish descent.

His grandfather Jackson was born in the northern part of Ireland, and there received good rearing. At an early date he came to America, and settled in Pennsylvania, where he made a good home for himself and family, and where he died. By his marriage there were seven children, all of whom he reared in Pennsylvania: George, captain of a large schooner on Lake Erie, died of consumption at Sandusky, Ohio, leaving a wife and two sons; James M.; Sally, married a Mr. Pennington; Hannah married a Mr. Hitchcock; one daughter lived near Philadelphia; and Jane and Amanda settled in Ohio.

James M. Jackson, father of O. H., for many years a prominent railroad conductor, was in the service of the Mad River & Lake Erie Railroad Company for nearly thirty years. He was reared to manhood in the Pennsylvania home, and upon reaching manhood married Amelia B. Hughes, who was born in Pennsylvania, daughter of Owen Hughes. Owen Hughes, when a young man, came from Wales, and settled in Pennsylvania, and there became a prominent and enterprising farmer; he died in Sandusky, Ohio, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Jackson. By his marriage there were seven children: Abram, Isaac, Sophia, Rachel, Ann, Amelia B. and Mary, all of whom except Amelia B. and Mary remained in Pennsylvania. Mary came West with her sister, Mrs. Jackson, and married a Mr. Reese, and is now living at Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Hughes belonged to the Methodist Church, and in that faith reared his children. Mrs. Jackson died in 1866. Eight children were born to her and Mr. Jackson: Frances, who married Dr. H. Grothe; O. H., mentioned below; Mary, who married E. Taylor; McDowell, who served in the Civil war, and is now living at the Soldiers' Home, at Bath, N. Y.; Sally, who married H. Montgomery; Harry, who is now a machinist at Swayzee, Ind.; George, a machinist for the Garr, Scott & Co., at Richmond, Ind., having been in their employ for nearly forty years; and Millie, who married James Taylor, of Chicago.

Mr. Jackson owned and cultivated land, underlaid with anthracite coal, in Pennsylvania. The reports of excellent openings in the Middle West, however, decided him to change his location, and, selling his coal land for ten dollars an acre—now worth many times that sum—he drove across the country with his family and household effects, to Richland county, Ohio, where he purchased a tract of new land, and began making improvements. He erected a cabin home, and cleared up a good farm. He had learned the carpenter's trade, and had worked at it in Pennsylvania, and after his removal to Ohio, he again followed it to some extent while on his farm. In 1852 he sold the farm and moved to Sandusky, Ohio, where he was employed in the bridge building department of a railroad for a year, at the end of that time securing a position as conductor for the Mad River & Lake Erie Railroad, the first railroad in Ohio. Proving a highly competent man, he retained his place for twenty-nine years. He died in Sandusky, in 1886. Mr. Jackson was a man of irreproachable character, dignified, decisive, and energetic, eminently qualified for the position he so long and ably filled. He made firm friends and was widely known in his State. Personally he was a large framed, vigorous man and possessed of a great capacity for work. His wife was a leading member of the Methodist Church, and in that faith reared her children.

O. H. Jackson passed the earliest years of his life upon the Ohio farm, and was about seven years old when they moved to Sandusky. In the public schools of that city he received a liberal education, and in 1859, when about fourteen years old, he was apprenticed to learn the machinist's trade in the shops of the Mad River Railroad. After two years he was thoroughly competent to fill the position of machinist in almost any place. During the year 1861 he worked as such in the Wabash shops at Fort Wayne, and in February, 1862, he took a similar position in the Buffalo & Erie shops, now the Lake Shore, at Buffalo. A year later he entered the Erie shops at that place, and from 1863 to 1865 he acted as agent for Casson & Co., contractors of specialties in railroad boilers and locomotives, who furnished goods to the government to fit the different gauges of roads, etc. While in this company's employ he was stationed at Indianapolis, taking his place there in 1864, where he had charge of two hundred and fifty-three government locomotives, and about four thousand freight cars, in addition to attending to messengers and receiving goods at Jeffersonville, Ind. The position was a most responsible one, but possessed of a large capacity for directing affairs he filled it to the entire satisfaction of his employers, and remained in their service until the close of the war, in 1865, when he returned to his former position as machinist at the Erie shops at Buffalo, N. Y. After three years he was recommended by his master mechanic to the president of the Farmers' Railroad, who sent him to Oil City, where he had charge of that road for two years until it became a part of the Pennsylvania system. For the next few years he passed a varied career, acting as engineer on the Louisville & Nashville line for one year; as foreman of two divisions on the J. M. & I.—one from Columbus, Ind., to Cambridge City, and the other from Columbus to Madison—for the next year; then as a participant in the strike of 1873; and finally as an employe of the St. L. & S. E. R. R. Co., until 1875, when, finding it impossible to procure his pay, he resigned. Going to Meadville, Pa., he secured a place as engineer on the Atlantic & Great Western R. R., making his run from Salamanca, N. Y., to Kendallville, Ind., remaining nine years, and was then, in 1883, made foreman of the Gallion railroad shops owned by the same company. After one year's service the road changed hands, and in 1884 he again began working as engineer, filling a position on the Ohio & Mississippi line. After eleven months he took a position with the same company, as master mechanic, and as such he continued for about five years. Then, in 1890, he secured a similar position with the I. B. & W. R. R., being stationed at Urbana, Ill., and when a year later the road became part of the Big Four system, he was made division master at Brightwood, where he remained until 1895. Hoping to better his prospects in the West, he then resigned, and, going to Prescott, Ariz., he took a position as master mechanic of the Santa Fe, Prescott & Phoenix shops, at that place, and there remained for about four years. In 1899 he resigned to accept a similar position at Indianapolis, for the Indianapolis Union Railroad, which position he has since filled with his usual ability and fidelity. As an engineer he has met with but few accidents, the severest one having been in the wreck on the J. M. & I. line, when the engine was overturned, not, however, through his unweariness. He has always kept himself well posted upon engineering and everything pertaining to his line of work, and as a machinist is both progressive and practical. He has devoted his life almost exclusively to his special line of work, giving but little attention to other affairs. Some years ago he purchased a pleasant residence in Indianapolis, where he now lives in the enjoyment of his family.

At Indianapolis, in 1864, Mr. Jackson married Alaphine Hoagland, who was born in Paris, Ill., in 1848, and of this union there have been four children: James W., who is now engaged in the insurance business; Jessie, who married George Pettinger, a locomotive engineer, who died at his post, leaving two children—Charles and George; Reuben O., who is clerking for Arthur Jordan & Co.; and George, a stenographer and typewriter for the Car Association of Indianapolis. Mr. Jackson is a man of many attainments and broad culture, and commands the respect of all who know him. Fraternally he stands high, being a Royal Arch Mason, and a prominent member of the R. A. His wife and children are highly respected members of the Presbyterian Church.

Jacob Hoagland, father of Mrs. Jackson, a successful agriculturist and business man, passed many years of his life in Ohio, residing upon a farm in Hamilton county, near Cincinnati. Later he moved to Illinois, and after some years closed out his business there and in 1862 leased a farm in Marion county, Ind., where he engaged in farming for some years. During this period he also speculated profitably in real estate. His wife, Alaphine, whom he married in Ohio, died in Indiana. Of this union there were three children: Mary L., who married S. Lilly; Alaphine, who is mentioned above; and Herman, who died in 1900, leaving a wife, but no children.

LEWIS B. NELSON, buyer for three departments of the New York Store in Indianapolis, was born in New Lisbon, which is now Lisbon, Ohio, Feb. 14, 1846, son of George W. and Mary Ann (Davis) Nelson. Both the parents were natives of Virginia. The paternal grandfather was also born in that State, where he died. He reared a large family. His business was that of a tanner. Nathan Davis, the maternal grandfather, was also a native of Virginia, of Welsh origin. He died when an old man, in his native State.

George W. Nelson and his wife were the parents of three sons and three daughters, and three of their children are now living: Lewis B., Eva W. and Albion Clarence; the latter served as a soldier in the Philippine Islands. The father was a shoemaker by trade, and in his later manhood established himself as a merchant in New Lisbon, a town which largely owed its existence to his foresight and push. He died at that place in 1896, when eighty-seven years of age. His widow continued to make her home in Lisbon, Ohio. With her husband she belonged to the Methodist Church.

Lewis B. Nelson, whose name appears at the opening of this article, was reared in New Lisbon, where he attended the common schools. He also went to the Iron City College at Pittsburg. In 1863 he enlisted in Company K, 143d Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which command he served four months; he was then mustered in as a member of Company H, 195th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in which he continued until the closing of the war. He received his discharge at Alexandria, Va. He bore a gallant part at City Point and Weldon Railroad, and was under fire at Appomattox river and at the shelling of the pontoon bridge, which he helped to build. There were many skirmishes along the James river in which he had a hand. His last service was on detached duty to the quartermaster's department at brigade headquarters, from Charleston, Va., and Stevens Point, in the Shenandoah valley.

When discharged from the army Mr. Nelson returned to clerk for his father at New Lisbon, Ohio. In 1875 he left his father's store and came to Indianapolis, to take a place with the Buffalo Scale Works on East Washington street. Mr. Nelson entered the employ of the New York Store April 1, 1876, as clerk and buyer, a position he has held to the present time.

Mr. Nelson was married May 20, 1868, to Miss Saidie F., daughter of Benjamin and Frances Davidson. They have an adopted child, Verle Belle. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson are members of the Methodist Church, of which he is a trustee. He belongs to Major Robert Anderson Post, No. 369, G. A. R., and for several years was adjutant of his post. In political matters he is a Republican. His home is at No. 2022 East Tenth street.

JOHN F. WALLICK, the capable superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Company in Indianapolis, was born in Tuscarora Valley, Juniata Co., Pa., March 2, 1830, and is a son of Samuel and Mary (Glenn) Wallick. He is of German descent, his grandfather, John W. Wallick, having been a native of Germany, whence he came to this country in early life, making his home in Juniata county, Pa., where he died when between seventy and eighty years of age. By occupation he was a farmer, and he had a family of five children.

Samuel Wallick, the father of John F., was a native of Pennsylvania, and a farmer and merchant of Tuscarora Valley, where he died in 1841, at the age of fifty years. In the community of which he was a valued member he held the office of justice of the peace and filled from time to time various minor offices. He married Mary Glenn, who was also born in Pennsylvania, and she survived until 1891, passing away at the age of eighty-four years. Both were Presbyterians. Of their family of seven children, six are now living: Margaret, the widow of Stewart McCulloch, of Harrisburg, Pa.; John F.; Mary, the widow of James Stokes, of Seville, Ohio; Samuel, of McKavitt, Texas; Amanda, unmarried, who lives at Seville, Ohio; and Alfred R., of McKavitt, Texas.

William Glenn, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Wallick, was born in Pennsylvania, was a farmer and lived to an advanced age. In his family were twelve children.

John F. Wallick was reared in Pennsylvania, where he lived until he was nineteen years of age. He received a common school education and was a teacher for one winter. In 1849 he came to Ohio, where he was a clerk in a dry goods store for one year, and for a time he was employed in the post office at Wooster. In 1851 he entered the employ of the Wade Telegraph Company, at Wooster, Ohio, under General Eckert, who is now chairman of the board of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and a year later came to Indianapolis, where he began with the Wade Telegraph Company, which was afterward consolidated with the Ohio, Indiana & Illinois Telegraph Company, which in turn was merged into the Western Union in 1856. His first engagement was as manager, and in 1864 he became superintendent, in which position he has served to the present time.

Mr. Wallick was married June 10, 1862, at Rahway, N. J., to Miss Mary A. Martin, daughter of Dr. John and Mary (Brockfield) Martin, and to this union were born nine children: Martin Henry, Edward, Mary A., Adele, Katherine P., John G., Edith, Frederick W. and Edwin E. Martin Henry is employed in a stove manufactory in Indianapolis; Edward died in infancy; Mary A. married John A. Butler, of Indianapolis, and is the mother of two children, Noble C. and Mary; Katherine P. married Louis Lathrope, in October, 1906, and resides in Indianapolis; John G. is assistant superintendent of the American District Telegraph Company of Indiana. Frederick W. and Edwin E. are in business in New York. The other members of the family are at home. They have a neat and tasteful residence at No. 27 West St. Joe street, where they have lived for the past five years.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallick are members of the Second Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder. He is a Scottish Rite Mason, and also belongs to Capitol Lodge, No. 124, I. O. O. F.; in the Grand Lodge of Indiana and in the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows he is an active and efficient member. In politics he is a Republican.

REV. DANIEL R. LUCAS, D. D., whose home is at No. 521 North New Jersey street, Indianapolis, has achieved an enviable reputation as one of the foremost clergymen of the Christian Church. Dr. Lucas was born at Belvidere, Boone Co., Ill., Jan. 14, 1840, son of Albert and Catherine (Robertson) Lucas, the father a native of New York, and the mother of Indiana.

Albert Lucas was a merchant during the greater part of his active career. In 1820 he came with his parents to Shelby county, where he grew to manhood, and where he learned the cooper's trade, which he followed for a time. He moved to LaPorte county, where he taught school, and where he married. Shortly after his marriage he moved to Boone county, Ill., in the thirties, living there until 1858. That year he returned to Westville, Laporte county, where he made his home until his death, in 1872, at the age of sixty-one. His widow survived until 1880, also reaching the age of sixty-one. Both died as the result of accidents received years before. Originally she was a Methodist, later becoming a member of the Christian or New Light Church; when they returned to Laporte county both joined the Christian or Disciples' Church. Mr. Lucas was justice of the peace for many years. He was an original Abolitionist, later identifying himself with the Republican party. Mr. and Mrs. Lucas had six sons and five daughters, six members of this family now living: Rev. Daniel R.; Charles T., of Valparaiso, Ind.; Rev. John P., of Colorado City, Colo.; Charlotte, wife of Hon. E. D. Crumpacker, Congressman from the Tenth Indiana District, whose home is at Valparaiso; Samantha J., of Colorado City, Colo.; and William A.

This Lucas family is descended from that Sir Charles Lucas who commanded the right wing of the army of Charles I. When that monarch lost his head the entire Lucas family was banished to America. Sir Charles Lucas' grandson, William, settled in Middletown, Conn., where he married Hester Blunt in 1666. Thomas, the third son of this marriage, born in 1676, married Sarah Leek in 1705. Moses Lucas, the fifth son of Thomas Lucas, born in 1719, married Asenath Cook in 1746. Moses Lucas, the second son of Moses, born in 1753, married Abiah Barnes in 1781. Eber Lucas, the grandfather of Rev. Daniel R. Lucas, was the first son born to this union.

Eber Lucas was born in Connecticut, and at quite an early day went to New York where he was married in 1809 to Eunice Woolworth. In 1820 he settled on government land in Shelby county, Ind., where he died a few years later at the age of forty-four. To him and his wife was born a numerous family. He bore arms for his country in the war of 1812 and in the Indian wars.

Daniel Robertson, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Lucas, was a native of Kentucky, and came of English ancestry. He was born in 1799, and when about seventeen years old, about 1816, settled in Clark county, Ind. In 1818 he was married to Margaret Teeple.

Mrs. Catherine Lucas, the mother of Dr. Lucas, was their oldest child, and she was born in 1819. In 1834 Mr. Robertson went to LaPorte county, Ind., where he engaged in farming until his death, which occurred when he was seventy-eight years of age.

Dr. Daniel R. Lucas was reared in Boone county, Ill., graduating from the local academy in 1858. Coming to Indiana with his parents he became a student in the Indiana Normal Institute at Burnettsville, in White county. While there he began preaching in the Christian Church, his first charge being at Burnettsville. In the spring of 1861 he located at Oxford, Ind., where he preached and taught. That fall he was married. In the summer of 1862 he joined Company C, 99th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, of which he was second lieutenant. On Oct. 24, 1862, he was appointed chaplain of the regiment, and served in that capacity for eighteen months, when he was transferred to the office of the provost marshal, where he served until the close of the war. He was in the Vicksburg campaign and in the second battle of Jackson; participated in the Chattanooga campaign; the battle of Missionary Ridge; the relief of Knoxville, and in many skirmishes.

When the war had ended Mr. Lucas came back to Oxford to take charge of the church, and he also started the Benton Tribune. At Oxford he was made postmaster, and also had a real estate business. After a time he disposed of his various interests and went into the field as an evangelist, for two years living at Concord and three years at Clayton, both in Illinois. During these five years he held some seventy-five meetings, in ten different States, and baptized 1,912 people. In the spring of 1876 he settled at Des Moines, Iowa, taking charge of the Central Christian Church, at that time the only church of his denomination in that city. For five years he was pastor there, during the latter part of that period preparing plans for what is now Drake University. His attention to this work made it necessary for him to give up his pastorate. He devoted two years to raising the money and erecting the buildings. In 1883 Dr. Lucas was called to Omaha, where he had a pastorate of a year, in 1884 returning to Des Moines, to found the Christian Oracle, which he edited for four years. Dr. Lucas disposed of this paper in 1888 to F. M. Kirkham, and coming to Indianapolis was inducted into the pulpit of the Central Christian Church, a position he filled for seven years. During that time, the present church building was erected. At the conclusion of this pastorate Dr. Lucas spent a year in the field as an evangelist, when he took charge of the Sixth Christian Church of Indianapolis, where he labored very successfully for three years. Then he went to Rockford, Ill., to take up pastoral work, which he carried on for a year. In 1900 Dr. Lucas again came to Indianapolis, and is now pastoral supply of the church at Edinburg, Indiana.

Dr. Lucas was married, May 24, 1861, to Miss Mary E., a daughter of Rev. John Longley, one of the pioneer Disciple preachers of Indiana. Her mother was Emily Huntington. To this union were born six sons and three daughters, four of the sons dying young. The others are as follows: (1) Hugh is chief clerk to the general manager of the Pullman Car Works at Pullman, Ill. He married Ethelyn Hotchkiss, by whom he had three children, John, Daniel R., Jr., and Frank C. Mrs. Ethelyn Lucas died in August, 1900. (2) Katharine married James W. Turner and has one child, Agnes; they live in Chicago, where he is a railway mail clerk. (3) Maude is the wife of Edward C. Rumpler, of Indianapolis, chief clerk to the general manager of the Peoria & Eastern railroad; they have one child, Mary Louise. (4) Maurice J. graduated in dentistry and is at present living at Elgin, Ill., where he has a responsible position in the Insane Asylum. (5) Mary K. received a good education, doing post-graduate work in the high school.

Dr. Lucas is a Republican. He belongs to George H. Thomas Post, No. 17, G. A. R., and has been a prominent member of the Grand Army for many years. At Des Moines he was chaplain of Crocker Post, and served as chaplain at the Department Encampment in Iowa; has been chaplain and commander of George H. Thomas Post, of Indianapolis, chaplain of department encampment in Indiana, and chaplain-in-chief of the national encampment of the Grand Army.

In his younger days Dr. Lucas held a number of very interesting debates, chiefly with several noted atheists, three of his discussions being with the celebrated B. F. Underwood; three with Moses Hull, the eminent spiritualist; one with W. F. Jamison, spiritualist; one with D. B. Ray, the editor of the "Baptist Battle Flag;" one with Rev. D. R. Miller, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; one with Rev. Frank Evans, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and several with Seventh Day Adventist preachers.

FRANCIS J. MATTLER, a prominent member of the Indianapolis Bar, with offices at Rooms 91 and 92, Baldwin block, has made a high reputation as attorney in this city. He was born in Dirlinsdorff, Alsace, France, June 6, 1833, son of John and Mary (Mattler) Mattler, both of whom were born and reared in France. Of their five children, three are now living: Francis J.; Stephen, of Indianapolis; and Mary, the wife of Joseph Weigelein, of Covington, Kentucky.

The father was a merchant in Canton Neuchatel, La Chaux-de-Fonds, Locle, Switzerland, but always maintained his residence in his native town until 1836, when he came to this country. After spending a short time in New York he passed a brief period in Philadelphia, and then coming west to Cincinnati made his home in that city until 1852. That year he came to Indianapolis, where he died in 1855, at the age of sixty-five years. His widow survived many years and died in 1885, at the age of ninety-four. Both were Catholics. He was a soldier in the Florida campaign.

John Mattler, the paternal grandfather of Francis J., was a native of France, a peasant, and lived and died in that country, passing away while still a young man. He had only one son. He served in the army of his native country under King Louis XVI. John Joseph Mattler, the maternal grandfather of Francis J., also a French peasant, lived and died in his native country, reaching the age of sixty-five years. There were four children in his family. He also bore arms under King Louis XVI.

Francis J. Mattler was but three years old when his parents came to this country, but he remained in France with his mother's brother, John Mattler, until 1848, when he came to the United States, to make his home in Cincinnati. There he studied under Rev. Father Winninger, a celebrated Jesuit missionary and a profound scholar. In the old world he had studied at Neuchatel. From Cincinnati he went to New Orleans, and for a time was employed on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. At Dayton, Ohio, he studied law under the instruction of C. L. Vallandigham, and in 1855 was admitted to the Bar at Lafayette, Ind., where for about eighteen years he practised his profession, winning a large clientele. Seeking a larger and more productive field, and desiring to be at the center of the legal activities of the State, Mr. Mattler moved to Indianapolis and has since been engaged in professional labors very successfully in this city. For a number of years he has been afflicted with rheumatism, which at times has seriously handicapped his professional work. His reputation as a general lawyer is very good, but his specialty is criminal practice.

Mr. Mattler was married Feb. 14, 1874, to Miss Maggie Memminger, of Vincennes, Ind., daughter of Casper and Mary Memminger, and by this union there are living children as follows: Francis J. and Bertrand, who are traveling salesmen; Casper J.; Mamie, married to John Mullally, a jeweler in Indianapolis; Lenore and Imogene Julia Flora.

Mr. and Mrs. Mattler and their children are all members of the Catholic Church, and he is a Democrat in politics. The family home is at No. 1505 Woodlawn avenue.

CHARLES DAWSON (deceased), whose years, character and industrious life alike commanded respect, was a lifelong resident of Washington township, Marion Co., Ind., having been born some 250 yards from his late residence. He was a son of Elijah and Mary (Hardin) Dawson, and grandson of Charles Dawson, who was born and reared in Virginia and was among the early pioneers of Dearborn county, Ind., where he died when past middle life. He had quite a large family.

Elijah Dawson was born in Virginia, whence he moved into Kentucky. From that State he moved into Dearborn county, Ind., and in 1823 located on a farm in Washington township, Marion county, which he bought, and on which he reared his family. There he died in July, 1858, at the age of seventy-seven years. His wife, Mary (Hardin), also a native of Virginia, survived him for several years, living to be eighty-four. Mr. Dawson was never identified with any church, but he believed in the golden rule, and was a good neighbor and kind friend. To him and his wife were born fourteen children, seven sons and seven daughters, all now deceased. Several of the children died in early life, those who lived to maturity besides Charles being: (1) Squire, born near Lawrenceburg, Dearborn county, was but a child when he came to Washington township, Marion county. He removed to central Illinois, and later, in the seventies, to Cowley county, Kans., where he died. He had four sons and one daughter, one of his sons, Grandison, residing at Pacific Grove, Cal. (2) Uriah, born in Dearborn county, came when a child to Washington township, later removed to Iowa, and settled near Muscatine, where he died. He had a family, but none of his children are now living. (3) Mathias, born in Dearborn county, lived and died in Washington township, Marion county. Three of his children are living, William, Ernest and Iona. (4) Ambrose, born in Dearborn county, came to Marion county when two years old and lived and died in Washington township. Three children survive him: Volney, of Broad Ripple; Sarepta, wife of Elijah Foley, a farmer of Broad Ripple; and Clarissa, wife of George Kerr, residing on their farm in Washington township. (5) Andrew, born in Washington township, Marion county, moved to Illinois and thence to Kansas, making his home at Rock, Cowley county. He died at Winfield, Kans., where he left children as follows: Susan (Mrs. Walker), Frank, Lawrence and Ferris. (6) Jackson, the youngest son, born in Washington township, lived and died there. Three of his children are living, Marcellus H., Elmer and Ulysses G., all residents of Washington township. Of the daughters born to Elijah and Mary (Hardin) Dawson, (1) Isabel married Robert Culbertson, and of this union there is one child living, Lucellus, of Knightstown, Ind. (2) Amanda married Joseph Scofield, who died in Knoxville, Tenn., and they had one child, Hannah M., who is unmarried.

Henry Hardin, the maternal grandfather of Charles Dawson, was born in Virginia, and came to Marion county, Ind., at an early day. There he settled, spent his life, and died well advanced in years. He was a farmer all his life. His family was a numerous one. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

Charles Dawson was born June 7, 1824. Reared a farmer boy, he always preferred to keep close to the cultivation of the soil. In his youthful days he attended the old-fashioned log cabin school with slab seats and greased paper windows, but his educational opportunities on the whole were exceedingly limited. Until he was about twenty-three years old he remained at home, and in 1852 made an overland journey to California, being eighty-five days on the way from Independence, Mo., to the California mines, where he spent some two years. On his return to Indiana he resumed farming on his father's place, his father deeding him 125 acres, part of which he cleared before his marriage. In 1869 he built a beautiful house on his farm, which comprised 167 acres in Section 36, Washington township. He had additional real estate holdings elsewhere, amounting altogether to 627 acres, one of his farms lying in Hamilton county. Mr. Dawson was a Unitarian in religious belief, but not identified with any church, but he believed in dealing fairly with his fellowmen, and was a universally respected citizen. In politics he was a Republican, and he served one term as supervisor.

On Jan. 14, 1857, Mr. Dawson was married to Susan R., daughter of Solomon and Nancy (Phillips) Easterday. She was born in Washington township, Aug. 2, 1838, and died Sept. 21, 1874. Mrs. Dawson was a member of the Lutheran Church. Three sons and four daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Dawson, as follows: (1) Dayton L. is married to Louisa Vickery and has a farm of 170 acres in Washington township. (2) Medora V. married Edward H. Collins, of Carmel, Ind., and is the mother of three children, Clarence, Hazel and Anna Mary. (3) Morton B. is unmarried and lives at home. (4) Stella I. married Levi George and has her home in Noblesville, Ind.; she has two children, Helen and Lea. (5) Stanton G. married Adelia Compton, who died leaving three children, Florence E., Charles McKinley and Gladys I. He married for his second wife Miss Nellie Spark. (6) Daisy A. married George Armentrout and has a family of three children, Ruth, Lois and Roland. They have a farm of 100 acres in Washington township. (7) Blanch R. died in childhood.

COLLIE E. KINNEY, a progressive member of the Indianapolis Bar, was born in Rushville, Ind., in January, 1870. He was the only child born to Daniel M. and Olive (Corey) Kinney, and grandson of Frank Kinney. The latter was born in Virginia, and very early settled in Franklin county, Ind., later moving into Rush county. He was a soldier in the Mexican war, a farmer by occupation, and lived to old age.

Gideon Corey, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Kinney, was a direct descendant of Giles Corey, one of the principal characters in Mary E. Wilkins' story of "Giles Corey, Yeoman." Gideon Corey was born in New York, and was an early settler in Rush county, Ind. He moved to Michigan City about 1832, and a number of years later returned to Rush county, where he engaged in farming, took an active interest in politics, and held a number of minor offices. He was a descendant of an English branch of a Scotch family and one of his ancestors married a daughter of Sir Francis Drake. Mr. Corey died in Rush county at an advanced age. He had a number of children.

Daniel M. Kinney was born in Indiana, on a farm, and was reared to farming. He was only fifteen years old when he enlisted in a regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and he participated in the battles of Shiloh, Lookout Mountain, Antietam, and many other fierce and desperate struggles. He had the misfortune to lose his arm in front of Atlanta, during the siege of that city. After the war he became county recorder of Rush county for several terms and filled the offices of deputy recorder and deputy sheriff for several years. For some years he has lived retired at Rushville. His first wife, Olive Corey, died in 1870, at the early age of twenty-three years, a member of the Christian (Disciples) Church. Mr. Kinney married for his second wife Miss Matilda Allen, of Ottumwa, Iowa, and to this union were born three children: Lutie, the wife of Thomas Hughes, of Rushville; Kate, and Eli Allen. Mr. and Mrs. Kinney are members of the Christian Church, and he is a Republican, an Odd Fellow, and a member of the G. A. R.

Collie E. Kinney was reared in the home of his grandfather Corey, in Rush county, and was brought up a farmer. His education began in the common schools, and later he pursued the higher branches under private instruction. He taught school one winter and went on the road for a year or two as a commercial traveler, but his mind was early set on the legal profession. This was his ambition, and he steadily worked toward it. In 1893 he went into the law office of Senator Stephen E. Urmston, and was admitted to the Bar Sept. 11, 1894. His office is at 68-69 Ingalls block, Indianapolis.

Mr. Kinney was married Jan. 11, 1891, to Alma E. Stephens, a daughter of James M. and Charlotte (Willey) Stephens, and to this union have come two children, Urmston Stephens and Harold Daniel Corey. The family home is at No. 319 North State avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Kinney are members of the Christian Church. In politics he is a Republican.

COL. WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON SHEETS has his pleasant and commodious home at Nos. 40 and 42 Kentucky avenue, Indianapolis. He was born in Morgan county, Ind., Dec. 1, 1844, son of John and Cynthia Ann (Harrison) Sheets.

George Sheets, the grandfather of Col. Sheets, was born in Baden, Germany, and served fifteen years as a soldier, fighting under Napoleon in many of his great battles. Coming to this country he settled in Virginia, and was among the pioneer settlers and extensive farmers of Morgan county, Ind., where he died highly respected at the age of ninety-eight years. He was the father of a numerous offspring.

John Sheets, son of George, was born in Virginia. He married Cynthia Ann Harrison, a native of Indiana. To them were born five sons and three daughters: Col. William Henry Harrison; Mary Margaret, wife of Charles P. Lee, of Englewood, Ill.; Ermina Elizabeth, who married Nathan Carter, and lives on a part of the old Morgan county homestead; John Dayton, of Indianapolis; Charles, of Indianapolis; Frank, living in Mooresville; Lillian B., wife of William Evans, of Indianapolis; and Edgar, of Mooresville. John Sheets was a very extensive farmer in Morgan county. Coming from Virginia in 1832, he settled in Monroe township, Morgan county, where he died in 1895, at the age of seventy-two years. His widow passed to her reward a few years later, at the age of sixty-nine. Both were Methodists, and for forty years he held the position of justice of the peace, with the very unusual, if not extraordinary, record of not having a single case reversed in the courts. He owned at one time fifteen hundred acres of land.

Samuel Harrison, father of Cynthia Ann (Harrison) Sheets, was a native of Pennsylvania, and was an early pioneer in Indiana, and he had the first contract to carry mail from Indianapolis to Lafayette. His business was that of general contracting, and much of the Lake Erie and Ohio River Canal was constructed by him, as was the old State House and Masonic Hall. As a soldier under Gen. Harrison he did service in the Indian wars, and he fought at the battle of Tippecanoe. In the early days he served as Land Commissioner for Indiana, and was Appellate Judge for about fifteen years. As a pronounced Abolitionist he was a constant worker on the "Underground" railway, and personally assisted many escaping slaves on their way to freedom.

Col. William Henry Harrison Sheets was reared on a farm in Morgan county, and there his education was begun in the old log cabin school house. When not quite seventeen years of age he enlisted in Company K, 21st Ind. V. I., as a corporal, and after serving with that regiment a year and a half, transferred to the artillery of the regular service at New Orleans, under Gen. Order No. 154, from the War Department. For five years he was in that branch of the service, and rose to the rank of colonel, receiving that rank for conspicuous and distinguished gallantry on the battlefield of Indian Bend, La., being on the staff of Gen. Canby. In 1867 he was mustered out after six and a half years of gallant and able service in the field. At Baton Rouge, Aug. 5, 1862, he was slightly wounded in the right shoulder, but was not incapacitated for service. Altogether he fought in fifty-two battles, among them being the capture of Forts Jackson and St. Phillips, while he was on board the flagship of Commodore Farragut, at Baton Rouge, Aug. 5, 1862; for thirty days in the first siege of Vicksburg; and was again on board the flagship "The Hartford," of Commodore Farragut, when he went into the harbor of Mobile. From Mobile he was transferred to the Army of the Potomac.

When his distinguished military career had ended, Col. Sheets came back to Indiana, staying for a short time at Monroeville, and then coming to Indianapolis, to take a place with the Eagan Machine Works, and was with that company twenty-two years. For ten years he was manager with Garr, Scott & Co. From that time up to 1900 he was with Reeves & Company, and in that year became manager for Frick & Company, of Waynesboro, Pa., manufacturers of threshers, engines, etc. He now has a drug store at No. 5550 Washington street, Irvington.

Col. Sheets was married April 29, 1868, to Miss Priscilla B., daughter of Akin Dakin and Mary (Harvey) Dakin, the latter a sister of the father of Judge Harvey. To this union were born four children: Cora, who married Edgar Lambert, of Indianapolis, and is the mother of one son, Harry; Harvey, who married Daisy Brooks (now deceased) and has one son, Edgar; Mary, who married

Harry M. Schubert, a druggist of Indianapolis; and Miss Jessie, at home. Col. Sheets and his wife belong to the Society of Friends. He is a Mason, a Sir Knight, and has received the Scottish Rite 32d degree. He is a member of Morgan Lodge, No. 211, I. O. O. F., of Monroeville, and has passed all the chairs both in the subordinate lodge and in the Grand Encampment; is a member of Olive Branch Castle, No. 2, K. of P., holding a place in the Grand Lodge of that order, where he is on the Uniform Rank Standing Committee, and where he is colonel, commanding the First regiment, Uniform Rank, of Indiana; a member of the Red Cloud Tribe, No. 18, Red Men, of Indianapolis; and also a member of the ladies' auxiliaries of these orders. Col. Sheets is an honored member of Chapman Post, No. 209, G. A. R., and has served in the office of commander. He is also a member of the Veteran League, Camp No. 80. In politics he is a Republican, but he has never held a political office, although often solicited by his friends to become a candidate. He was at one time chairman of the Marion County Canvassing Board.

Col. Sheets has an elegant and tasteful residence at No. 814 Northwest street, that was erected by him in 1895. Several other very desirable residences belong to him on the same street. He is a man with an admirable history. He rose with opportunities which presented themselves while he was in the army, and is on record as a gallant soldier, taking to military life as one born to follow it.

His grandfather, Harrison, was a man of prominence, and his father was also very prominent. This is a clear case of good stock, and Col. Sheets has lived up to the best ambitions and traditions of his family. While he is positive and earnest, of a resolute will, he is at the same time gentle and kind-hearted, and has a host of friends, among whom may be counted the best people of Indianapolis.

REV. HARRY CHAMBERLAIN MESERVE, who for several years was pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church in Indianapolis, was born at Quincy, Ill., July 12, 1868, son of Harry and N. Lucenia (Chamberlain) Meserve. The father was born in New Hampshire, and the mother in Massachusetts. They had two sons, Ernest (deceased) and Rev. Harry C.

Harry Meserve was connected with the express business from the time he was a young man, being in the employ of the Adams Express Company at Lowell, Mass., and also with the New York and Boston Express Company for years. When he died, Jan. 28, 1900, he was sixty-five years old. His wife survived, living with her son, our subject. Harry Meserve was a soldier in the Civil war as a member of Company A, 33d Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and for one year of his service was a lieutenant. He acted as provost marshal at Alexandria, Va., was in the battle of Chancellorsville, and in all the battles of that campaign took a gallant part. Resigning he returned to his home in Lowell.

The paternal grandfather of Rev. Harry C. Meserve was a native of New Hampshire, and a farmer. He came of French-Huguenot extraction, his ancestors fleeing from their native land to the Island of Jersey for safety. From there three brothers went to Portsmouth, N. H., one locating at Portland, Maine, another in the White Mountains, and the third remaining in Portsmouth. From him descends the family under consideration. Our subject's grandfather fought in the war of 1812. He died at Madbury, N. H., when well advanced in years. His family was small. In his community he became prominent, serving as selectman. His father fought in the war of the Revolution.

The maternal grandfather of Rev. Harry C. Meserve was born in Massachusetts, of English descent, and was all his life a farmer. He died while still in middle life, leaving a family of one son and four daughters. In his time he was a very prominent man.

Rev. Harry C. Meserve was but an infant when taken by his parents to Massachusetts, where he received his education in the Lowell public schools. He was graduated from the Divinity School at Yale in 1894. Spending a year as a graduate student in that school, in 1895 he was well equipped for the arduous labors of the Christian ministry, and entered heart and soul into the work of his pastorate at Springfield, Mass., where he had served since 1893. While there he built a new church, in 1899, and the following year accepted a call to the pastorate of the Plymouth Congregational Church, in Indianapolis. The building occupied at the time of his coming has been sold to the general government, and the new temple of worship is said to be the largest Congregational Church in Indiana. Its pastorate is an honorable and responsible position. After serving this church for a few years he returned East, taking charge of the First Congregational Church in Danbury, Connecticut.

Mr. Meserve was married May 23, 1894, in the Elliott Congregational Church, Lowell, Mass., to Miss Bertha F. Frances Murkland, only child of Woodard E. and Mary E. (Horne) Murkland. They have three children, Faith Lucenia, Jean Chamberlain and Constantine Lambert; one daughter, Lois Murkland, died in infancy.

Rev. Mr. Meserve is a Mason, holding membership in Springfield Lodge, F. & A. M., and the Chapter, R. A. M., and is a companion of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States. Mr. Meserve is a member of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis, and held membership in the University, Indianapolis Literary and College Corner Clubs.

Mrs. Meserve's parents live in Springfield, Mass., where her father is engaged in business as a contractor. For three generations the family has resided in Lowell. They originally came from Paisley, Scotland. Mrs. Meserve's uncle, Capt. John Murkland, was in the war of the Rebellion, and lost his life at Gettysburg. Another uncle, Rev. Charles S. Murkland, is president of the New Hampshire Agricultural College at Durham, New Hampshire.

DR. BASIL JUSTUS STEMBEL, of No. 209 East New York street, Indianapolis, was born at Oxford, Benton Co., Ind., Jan. 29, 1873, a son of Dr. Theophilus and Martha (Justus) Stembel. The family is traced back to German and Welsh antecedents, and has been long established in this country.

Dr. Theophilus Stembel was born in Maryland, and his wife in Indiana. He was educated in the Cincinnati Medical College, and in 1842, early in his medical career, located at Oxford, Ind., where for many years he followed his profession. Both he and his wife attained very advanced years. Of their seven children Basil J. is sixth in the order of birth.

Basil J. Stembel was educated in the Oxford city schools, and began the study of dentistry when he was twenty-five years old, in the Indiana Dental College, a branch of the University of Indianapolis. From this popular institution he was graduated in May, 1901, and at once began practice in his present location, where he has already won a patronage beyond his most sanguine hopes. His patrons come from among the best families of the city. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Encampment, and the D. R., of the same fraternity. He has passed all the principal chairs in both the Subordinate Lodge and the Encampment, and in the latter he has also served as H. P. Following in the steps of his father he is a Democrat.

ALEXANDER WOOD (deceased), who resided at No. 1938 Broadway, Indianapolis, was one of the oldest residents of the city. He was born in a house about half way between Edinburgh and Glasgow, Scotland, Nov. 10, 1824, and made his first appearance in Indianapolis in the spring of 1838.

James Wood, his father, was born Nov. 15, 1793, and married Jean Nisbet, who was born March 16, 1798. James Wood was a civil engineer, and he brought his family to the United States in 1837, settling for a short time in Terre Haute, Ind., where he was employed by the general government in laying out and constructing the National Road. For several years this was his main occupation. In 1838 he removed his family to Indianapolis, and when work was discontinued on the National road he became city engineer in that city, holding this position four years. He continued to make Indianapolis his home until he died in 1862, his wife passing to her reward Jan. 17, 1849. Mr. Wood was a much respected citizen, and was widely known as an able and accomplished gentleman. In politics he was a Republican, and both he and his wife were reared in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, in which communion they were both devoted and earnest workers. They were the parents of eight children, four of whom died in Scotland. Of the others Alexander was born in Scotland; James died in 1865; Miss Elizabeth Lee lives in Indianapolis; William Douglas Wood was born in Indianapolis and died in September, 1905.

Alexander Wood was but a small boy when his parents moved to Indianapolis, though he well remembered the appearance of the place sixty years ago. His memories of the old home in Scotland were also vivid and he had in his possession a stone which was taken from the walls of the house where he was born. His education, which began in Scotland, was completed in Indianapolis. Here he studied civil engineering with his father, and for forty years was employed in the office of the city engineer.

Mr. Wood was married June 8, 1853, to Miss Sabina Cord, who died Dec. 13, 1897. To this union were born two children: James Douglas, who died in June, 1897, in his thirty-seventh year; and Lizzie Lee, who is at home. Mr. Wood became identified with the Presbyterian Church in 1850, and for more than half a century was prominently associated with that church. He always took an active part in its affairs and was always regarded as one of its most useful members. Alexander Wood was one of the oldest citizens of Indianapolis, where he was universally recognized as a gentleman of the highest personal character, and was held in the greatest esteem and honor by all who knew him as an honest and enlightened citizen and a Christian man. He died Nov. 18, 1906.

MARION EATON, late of Indianapolis, was born in Hendricks county, Ind., Nov. 27, 1850, son of Greenup and Jane (Smith) Eaton, natives, respectively, of Kentucky and Indiana. His paternal grandfather was a Kentuckian, and died in his native State. He was the father of a large family.

Greenup Eaton was a brickmaker and mason when a young man, and later a farmer in Hendricks county, north of Brownsburg, having come to Indiana with his mother when a small boy. He lived there the remainder of his life, dying July 25, 1867. His wife died about 1853. Both were Missionary Baptists in religious faith. They had six children, four sons and two daughters, of whom two are still living: Millard F., a brickmason of Indianapolis; and Perry Hardin, of near Trader's Point, Marion county, Ind. The father of Mrs. Jane (Smith) Eaton was a native of Indiana, a farmer, and died in middle life.

Marion Eaton was reared in Hendricks county on a farm, and was educated in the district schools. He learned the plasterer's trade when young, following it through later life in connection with farming. He began for himself by renting a farm, and when able bought forty acres in Boone county, all covered with forest. He cleared the land and made brick from the clay soil for two seasons, and then bought another forty and improved it, living there about eight years. Then he sold out and bought eighty acres of the home farm in Hendricks county, living there from 1878 to 1887, when he was elected treasurer of the county, and served as such two years. He lived in Danville, the county seat, until 1891, when he moved to Indianapolis, conducting a barn, livery, boarding and sales stable at No. 27 West Sixteenth street, until October, 1898, when he sold out. He then bought and sold horses until Nov. 6, 1900, when he was elected county assessor. In that office he gave his constituents eminent satisfaction.

On Jan. 6, 1870, Mr. Eaton married Miss Josephine Hulsizer, who was born near Trenton, N. J., daughter of Andrew and Nancy (Worts) Hulsizer, the former of whom died May 8, 1876; the latter made her home with Mrs. Eaton. To this union were born one son and two daughters, namely: Artie E., Reona May and Ollie. Artie E. Eaton was deputy assessor under his father; he owns several teams which he hires to any and all who want teaming done. He married Nettie Cottingham, and lives at No. 921 Udell street, North Indianapolis; they have one child, Dorothy. Reona May is married to W. L. Dodd, and lives in Indianapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Eaton were members of the Missionary Baptist Church, in University place, of which he was trustee and also a deacon. Fraternally he was a member of Lincoln Lodge, No. 690, I. O. O. F.; Damascus Lodge, No. 384, Knights of Pythias; and with his wife belonged to the Daughters of Rebekah. In politics Mr. Eaton was a Republican.

The Eaton family are noted for their refinement and generous hospitality, and Mr. Eaton was probably one of the most popular men in the city. His progress through life was made entirely through his own efforts, and the high esteem in which he was everywhere held was the result of his personal merits.

ELDER JOHN CONARROE BARNHILL, a clergyman of the Christian Church and a retired farmer, now living at Irvington, in the outskirts of Indianapolis, was born Feb. 7, 1830, in Wayne township, Marion Co., Ind. The Barnhills first settled in that section in 1821, and Elder Barnhill is of the third generation to make his home in Marion county. He is of the fourth generation in America, the family having been founded in this country by his great-grandparents, John Barnhill and wife, natives of Ireland. Regarding the early history of the family and of this notable couple we can do no better than to quote

Judge J. H. Barnhill of New Philadelphia, Ohio, who on the subject of the Barnhills in America, writes:

"The Barnhill ancestry is ancient, all Irish or Scotch-Irish. The first knowledge of it that has reached me by legend or otherwise is away back about the time of the Union of Crowns of England and Ireland. There was then in Dublin a young man whose name I think was John, yet my recollection of this is not clear, although my source of information is reliable, because it was written by his wife, as she certifies in the paper which I once saw in Pittsburg, Pa., which she had written at the remarkable age of 107 years, at Baltimore, to her grandson who was in the General Land Office in Washington, D. C. It was a wonderful paper to emanate from one of that age. The paper stated that he was a man of rare beauty and manly worth, remotely of Scotch ancestry, a carpenter and joiner and ingenious inventor; that she was a lady of high station—as they called it, she being highly educated, as the letter clearly showed, when I first read it, because it was a literary wonder in style and execution. They were rebel patriots, abused Castlereaghs, and denounced as such, by the Union party. Her husband went to London, bought type and printing office material, went back to Ireland, built a press of Irish Oak, wrote and published 'Rebel articles.' The Union government charged sedition and treason, and confiscated their property. They hid the printing press and her husband became a fugitive, and in the hold of a ship reached Baltimore, Md. John Barnhill soon sent money for his wife and four sons, and the printing press, and they came to America to join him. This is the story of their oppression and sufferings which he wrote and published in Baltimore, sending the papers to Dublin for circulation. A copy of this paper pasted on silk, like her letter at 107 years, she sent to her grandson, John Barnhill, at Washington, D. C. In 1832 he went on a bachelor vacation; and died of cholera in Pittsburg, at the house of William Barnhill, boiler and chain molder, the then largest manufacturer in Pittsburg. He had all these papers when I saw them, a very interesting and complete family history, to 1863. They were afterward destroyed by his second wife, who burned them to spite his sons, her step-children. So perished the Barnhill record from 1691 to 1863 in these grand old writings of our grand-grandmother."

In the foregoing it is stated that John Barnhill sent for his wife and four sons. Of the latter, John went to North Carolina, his children moving to Kentucky; Samuel married and had three sons; Robert was the grandfather of John Conarroe Barnhill.

Robert Barnhill was born Feb. 28, 1769. On Feb. 8, 1791, he was married to Sarah Marvis, of Georgetown, Ky., who was born July 22, 1776; about 1805 they moved with their family to Butler county, Ohio, thence in 1821 coming to Indiana. They first located in Indianapolis, where they were among the earliest settlers, living for a time near what is now Military Park, but shortly afterward moved into what is now Wayne township. The family home was on Big Eagle creek, near the Crawfordsville State road, about a mile east of what is now the village of Clermont. Robert Barnhill took up an immense amount of government land—fourteen eighty-acre tracts, which he gave to his sons and sons-in-law. He died shortly after his arrival here, on Sept. 9, 1821, at the age of fifty-two years. Mr. Barnhill was a man who stood well among his neighbors wherever he lived, and as a friend was second to none. He was particularly zealous in religious matters, and so strict in his observance of the Sabbath that it is said he closed his front door on Sunday. His church connection was with the "New Lights," among whom he was a well-known leader, and though he had been in his new home but a short time before his death he had already been active in the building of the first church in Marion county, the Union Church, two miles southeast of the present village of Clermont. His children all followed in his footsteps in upholding religion and leading upright lives, and it is said that no one of his sons or grandsons was ever known to be under the influence of intoxicants.

A large family was born to Robert and Sarah (Marvis) Barnhill, as follows: (1) Samuel, born Dec. 6, 1792, died Aug. 13, 1827. He married Mary Railsback, May 29, 1823, and they had two children, Robert and Sarah. (2) William, born Nov. 14, 1794, died Aug. 17, 1821, unmarried. (3) John, born Nov. 15, 1796, is fully mentioned farther on. (4) Jane, born Dec. 24, 1798, died at an advanced age. On Nov. 18, 1819, she married Jeremiah J. Corbaley, of Maryland, a school teacher. (5) Daniel, born Dec. 26, 1800, died in Iowa at an advanced age. He married a Miss Speers. (6) Robert, born Dec. 6, 1803, was first a farmer of Wayne township, but moved to Hamilton county, Ind., and built a mill five or six miles northeast of Augusta Station, on Williams creek; there he died. On Jan. 30, 1823, he married Miss Jane Stoops. (7) Catherine, born May 8, 1805, was married Feb. 17, 1820, to Joel Conarro. (8) Mary, born May 3, 1807, married William Speers, and died in old age in Hendricks county, Ind. (9) Hugh, born March 29, 1809, died when about seventy-five years old in Marshall county, Ind. He was twice married, first to Miss Huron, and later to Sarah Knapp. (10) Nancy, born May 29, 1811, died near Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind., at an advanced age. On Jan. 17, 1829, she became the wife of Caleb Railsback. (11) Sarah, born March 9, 1813, died when about sixty years old, near Clermont, Marion county. She married Mathew Railsback, twin brother of her sister's husband, Caleb Railsback. (12) James, born Aug. 2, 1815, died at the age of about forty. He married Miss Cynthia Senior. (13) Margaret, born Dec. 8, 1818, was married March 13, 1834, to John Cruse, and was killed seven years later by falling out of a wagon.

John Barnhill, father of Elder Barnhill, was born Nov. 15, 1796, in Kentucky, and was a boy when the family moved to Butler county, Ohio. He came with them to Indiana in 1821, living in what is now the southwestern part of Indianapolis for a short time, and thence moving into what is now Wayne township. He cut the first wagon road in that township, near the village of Clermont, cleared and cultivated his farm in that neighborhood, and there reared his family. He married Maria Conarro, a native of New Jersey, who came to Butler county, Ohio, with her parents in childhood, and five children were born to this union: (1) Beulah A. married Thomas Raiback, and after his death became the wife of John Bailey. Her home is in Kansas City, Mo. (2) Eliza, widow of Jesse Tomlinson, has her home in Center Junction, Iowa. (3) Sarah married Mordecai Hadley, and after his death became the wife of Dr. Joseph Kerr, and then became the wife of William Shirley, who is also deceased. She is now a resident of Pittsboro, Ind. (4) Rev. John C. is mentioned below. (5) Mary C. W. married John W. Hornaday, and died in Coffeyville, Kans. The father of this family, John Barnhill, died on his farm in Wayne township, June 17, 1869, when almost seventy-three years of age. The mother died in 1859, her death resulting from a heavy cold. Both were members of the Christian Church, though at one time Mr. Barnhill was a New Light.

John Conarro, the maternal grandfather of Elder Barnhill, was born in New Jersey, where his ancestors were among the very early settlers of the State. He and his wife, Beulah (Bryant), moved from a locality in New Jersey thirty miles from Philadelphia on the Delaware, to Butler county, Ohio. There he bought land and engaged in farming, dying there at the age of eighty-three years. In early life he had been a mackerel fisherman and learned the trade of shoemaker. Mr. Conarro visited Indianapolis, but never lived there. He built one of the first brick houses in Butler county, and a large timber barn. For eighty years he had been associated with the Quakers, but under the preaching of Love Jameson and Thomas Lackhart united with the Christian (Disciples) Church.

Rev. John C. Barnhill, whose name begins this sketch, was reared in Wayne township, Marion county, where he began his education in the old fashioned subscription schools. Reared a farmer boy, he remained at home until his marriage, in August, 1849, to Miss Martha A. Carter, daughter of David and Ruth (Hadley) Carter. To this marriage have come the following children: (1) David C. is an undertaker in Crawfordsville, Ind. He married Emily Ross, of Hendricks county, by whom he has one daughter, Lenore. (2) John C. is a general merchant in Crawfordsville, being the senior member of the firm of Barnhill, Hornaday & Pickett. His first wife, Catharine Hadley, bore him three children, Ethel, Mabel and Frank. Upon her death Mr. Barnhill married Ora Knowland, and they have three children, John, Fred and Martha. (3) Sarah Florence married Dr. B. C. Morgan, and settled with him in Brazil, Ind., where he practiced medicine for twelve years, until his removal to Mexico. He returned to this country to make his home in Caldwell, Kans., going from there to Texas for a time, and then coming to Irvington, Ind., where he died. He left a widow, and one son and one daughter, Paul E. and Mabel. (4) Maria C. married A. W. Regan, of Hendricks county, who is now foreman of the wholesale grocery house of J. C. Perry & Co., of Indianapolis. They had a daughter, Inez, who lived to be twelve years old. (5) Ruth A. married Charles D. Wilhite, and they live in Indianapolis, where he owns a grocery store at the corner of Thirtieth street and Central avenue. They have two daughters, Yuba and Frank. (6) Orin H. is an undertaker at Winchester, Ind., where he is also connected with the telephone business. He married Carrie Davison, and they have one child, Ruth, as well as an adopted daughter, Anna. (7) Retta V., who lives at home, is a graduate of Butler College, and is now librarian of that institution.

For over fifty years Mr. and Mrs. Barnhill have been members of the Christian Church, and though he has been engaged principally in farming, he has for the last thirty years been a preacher of the Christian Church. For sixteen years he was engaged in farming in Hendricks county, and while there was elected an elder of the Christian Church, and ordained in its ministry. Then he moved back to Wayne township, and bought his father's farm, then comprising 154½ acres, to which he added eighty acres on the west, and also another tract of 154 acres. There he was elder to the local church, and when he removed to Crawfordsville he also became elder of the church. There he lived for five years, in 1892 removing to Irvington, to place his youngest daughter in college. He owns a fine residence at No. 5647 East Washington street, and there his home is still maintained.

Formerly Mr. Barnhill was a Republican, but of late years he has affiliated with the Prohibition party. For three terms he has been treasurer of Irvington, and was also chairman of the town board for one term. At different times he has been called to settle many estates.

ELI HEINY, one of the prosperous and highly respected residents of Perry township, Marion Co., Ind., was born in Lancaster county, Pa., July 8, 1822, son of Jacob and Catharine (Gall) Heiny, both natives of Pennsylvania.

Isaac Heiny, grandfather of Eli, was a native of Pennsylvania, of German descent, a farmer by occupation, and lived to be about seventy years of age. He had a medium-sized family. The maternal grandfather, John Gall, was also a native of Pennsylvania and of German descent. He died in that State when well advanced in years. He had several sons and daughters.

Jacob Heiny spent the greater portion of his life upon a farm. For some years he was the proprietor of a hotel in Lancaster, Pa., after which he removed to Carroll county, Ohio, where he settled on a farm and lived some years. In 1840 he removed to Indiana and settled in Hamilton county, purchasing a 120-acre farm, where he remained until his death, which occurred in 1848, when he was fifty years of age. His wife died at the advanced age of eighty-one years, in Hamilton county. In religious belief the father was a Dunkard and the mother a Lutheran. Eight children were born to them, six sons and two daughters, five of whom are now living: Elizabeth, wife of Martin Farrer, of Clarks-ville, Hamilton Co., Ind.; Eli; Christian, of Clarks-ville, Ind.; George W., of Indianola, Iowa; and Maria, wife of Isaac M. Caylor, of Clarks-ville.

Eli Heiny received his education in Ohio and Indiana, locating in the latter State in 1840, when eighteen years of age, and he remained at home until twenty-five years old. When he attained his majority his father gave him permission to leave the home farm and work for himself, and for six months he worked for seven dollars per month. Later his remuneration was increased, and he continued to work out by the month until he was married, when he settled on his present farm on Section 35, Perry township, which at that time belonged to his father-in-law. He rented the place at first, but later it was deeded to him and his wife. The property is a very fine one, containing 103½ acres of some of the best improved land in the township, and upon it Mr. and Mrs. Heiny have resided for over half a century.

On March 10, 1848, Mr. Heiny was united in marriage with Miss Catharine Brenneman, daughter of Henry and Fanny (Weiant) Brenneman, with whom she came to Indiana when fourteen years of age. Her father lived to be eighty-three and her mother died at the age of fifty-four. Mr. and Mrs. Brenneman were pioneers of Indiana and were among those early settlers who braved the terrors of the wilderness in order to build up the great commonwealth as it now stands. Two children were born to them, Catharine (Mrs. Heiny) and Isaac, the latter dying over twenty years ago. Seven children were born to Mr.

and Mrs. Heiny, all sons: Two who died in infancy; Benjamin Franklin, of Perry township, who is a farmer; Isaac Marion, who is living on the same farm as his brother Benjamin Franklin, and who married Mary Anderson (they have two children, Mabel and Charles W.); Henry H.; Levi, a farmer of Perry township, who married Jessie Marcus and has two children, Edna May and Nina Lee; and Charles W.

In political affiliation Mr. Heiny is a Democrat. Twice he was the candidate of his party for county treasurer, but was defeated for that office. In 1889 he was elected to the Indiana Legislature, receiving 1,700 more votes in his district than General Harrison, who was that year running for President. He served in the Legislature for one term, doing good service for his party and his section of country. In 1901 he was a member of the county council. Mr. Heiny was superintendent and president of the gravel road for sixteen or seventeen years, and in every capacity, either as a public official or private citizen, he has faithfully discharged every duty intrusted to him.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Heiny can distinctly remember when their entire neighborhood was woodland and filled with game, and the deer and wild turkeys would come up to the very door. Mr. Heiny has cleared half of his farm from the forest. He owns in all 270 acres of excellent farming land, and two good dwelling-houses in Indianapolis.

CHRISTOPHER TYLER ARMS, who resides at No. 1943 Central avenue, Indianapolis, enjoys the distinction of being the oldest civil engineer in Indianapolis, if not in Indiana. Mr. Arms is descended from an old Colonial ancestry, and the family genealogy shows that William Arms, the first American ancestor, settled at Hatfield, Mass., April 6, 1676. He was born on the Island of Jersey, and fought at the battle of Turner's Falls under command of Capt. Turner in King Philip's War. In 1698 he purchased what was afterwards known as Arms Corner, located at the south end of Deerfield street, in the town of Deerfield, Franklin Co., Mass. History states that on a quiet Sunday in 1704 a French and Indian force, 1,500 strong, captured the place, while the people were assembled in the church. The entire congregation was taken captive, many were massacred, and the remainder taken to Canada. An interesting fact in connection with this raid, is that the enemy carried away the bell of the church, and it was placed in the church of St. Regis, in Canada, 300 miles away. Deerfield was a frontier town, and was the theater of many thrilling events during the Indian Wars.

In the Arms Corner Fort, which was erected by William Arms, in 1698, was born Christopher Tyler Arms, whose name introduces this article, March 29, 1813. There also were born his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and all his ancestors, counting back to that first William Arms, the founder of the family in America.

Christopher Tyler Arms, the father of the Christopher Tyler Arms of Indianapolis, bore a name that was given his father and grandfather, so that counting a son of Christopher Tyler, in Indianapolis, there have been five generations of this name.

The Arms family has given to the country some of its most noted civil engineers, and a taste for this fascinating employment seems to run in the blood. When Mr. Arms, of Indianapolis, was but a lad of eleven years of age, he in company with another lad, Arthur Wellington Hoyt, carried the flag when their fathers laid out a route for a proposed canal from Boston to Albany, when it was proposed to make connection in this way with the Erie canal. A conference was finally held in Albany, at which were present Gov. DeWitt Clinton, Gen. Epworth Hoyt, Chief Engineer, Laomi Baldwin, and Christopher Tyler Arms. This conference decided that there were insurmountable obstacles to the construction of the canal as proposed, and the enterprise was finally abandoned.

The next engineering experience of the younger Mr. Arms was in the construction of the Boston and Worcester road in 1833-34. This was the first railroad out of Boston, and was under the management of Col. John Fessenden. In 1834 Mr. Arms was employed on an extension of the Worcester road (now part of the Boston and Albany line) under Major Brown and Major Whistler. In 1835 Mr. Arms went to Bangor, Maine, and helped survey the first railroad built in that State. There he worked under Arthur Wellington Hoyt as resident engineer. This was in 1835 and 1836, the last year finding him chief engineer of the work.

Mr. Hoyt went to Illinois in 1837 to engage in railroad construction in the West, and recommended to Gen. Alexander Mr. Arms as a most competent civil engineer with large experiences. Mr. Arms was accordingly engaged in July, 1837, to survey five lines of road running out of Indiana to meet five lines coming east from Illinois. This enterprise was under the management of Gen. Alexander and Gov. Noble, of Indiana, and they gave Mr. Arms full charge of the surveying corps. The first survey made by him was from Lafayette, Ind., to Danville, Ill.; a second from Covington, Ind., to the same point; the third from Perrysville to the same Illinois town. These surveys were all made in 1837. During the ensuing ten years Mr. Arms surveyed more than 1,600 miles of railroad in the West, and in 1848 was called back to New England to survey a line from Eagle Bridge to Burlington, Vt. In 1852 he went to Ohio with a corps of engineers, and engaged in the survey of a line between Marietta and Cincinnati, one-half of the 250 miles of this road being surveyed by Mr. Arms himself. For five years he remained with this company, and then for twenty years was employed as a manager for a publishing firm, which was engaged in putting out county histories in Ohio and Pennsylvania. For ten years he was engaged in railroading, and then retired from active labors at the age of eighty years.

Mr. Arms was married July 4, 1840, to Lucinda Hayden, a native of Deerfield, Mass., who died in 1872. To their union were born six children: Mrs. Isabella Moore, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Christopher Tyler, who was educated to be a civil engineer, and died in 1878; Anna Prague, who married Col. John Wilson, and is now a widow in Philadelphia; Richard C., a florist in Champaign, Ill.; Henrietta, who married John Kiler; and Walter French, who has already achieved distinction as a civil engineer, and resides at Punxsutawney, Jefferson Co., Pennsylvania.

Christopher Tyler Arms is a remarkable man, and well worthy of mention in a book devoted to men who have done things. The first railroads were surveyed by him in Indiana and Illinois, and his entire business life displayed engineering qualities of the very highest character, which not only brought him fame, but competence as well, and gave him means to live the useful and inspiring career which is so briefly noted above. He is still hale and hearty, and possesses a remarkable memory and a fund of information that is both interesting and valuable.

MILLER ELLIOTT, deceased, who for several years was Superintendent of the Indianapolis Street Railway Company, with offices in the Claypool Building, in that city, was born in Pittsburg, Pa., May 25, 1850, son of Joseph and Jane (Walters) Elliott, both natives of Pennsylvania.

Joseph Elliott was born and bred a Pennsylvania farmer. He moved into the western country in 1872, and located near Tecumseh, Neb., where he died in 1893, at the age of eighty-two years. His wife, Jane Walters, was fifty-six years old when she died in 1865. They were both members of the Methodist Church. They had a family of four sons and one daughter, and but one of their children is now living: Robert, of New Pittsburg, where he is engaged on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The paternal grandfather of Miller Elliott died in Pennsylvania when he had reached an advanced age. His wife lived to be ninety years of age. They had a small family of children. Jacob Walters, the father of Mrs. Jane (Walters) Elliott, was a farmer, in Westmoreland county, Pa., where he died at a ripe old age.

Miller Elliott was reared to manhood in Butler county, Pa., where he passed his earlier years on a farm, and attended the district school. When he was twenty-three years of age, he sought a position with the Citizens' Street Railway Company, at Pittsburg, and was received into their employ as a driver. For some nine years he was with them in various capacities, when he was made superintendent of the Transverse Passenger Railway, which he held for about three years, when the consolidation of the two roads brought him back to the Citizens' line as assistant superintendent. This place he held until 1890, when he was named superintendent of the Pittsburg & Birmingham Traction Company, a position he retained some five years. In the spring of 1896 he came to Indianapolis as superintendent of the local lines of the street railway. His administration of the duties of his responsible position was in every way satisfactory to the public, and his business abilities were recognized as of a very high order.

Miller Elliott was married Oct. 21, 1869, to Miss Julia A., daughter of Simon P. and Catherine (Cooper) Walter. To this union were born five daughters: Laura J., deceased; Matilda; Alice M.; Grace and Amelia. The survivors live in their Pittsburg home, as does also the widowed mother. Mrs. Elliott and her family belong to the Evangelical Lutheran Church. In politics Mr. Elliott was a Republican. He was a man of parts, and his career affords a striking illustration of the possibilities of American industrial life. With little help from schools or learning, or the aid of favoring friends, he made his way solely by his own industrious habits, manly character and sterling worth.

CHARLES SUMNER BOYNTON, M. D., an old and prominent physician of Indianapolis, was born in Walworth, Wayne Co., N. Y., July 28, 1833, son of George and Annie (Twichell) Boynton, and was but three years of age when his mother died. The Boynton family came originally from England, and has long been established in New England. Dr. Boynton, of Indianapolis, is in the seventh generation of the name in this country, and well sustains the reputation his forefathers acquired for honesty and integrity in the long ago.

George Boynton was born in New England, and located in Western New York, when the country was still wild. His brother, Jonathan, was elected Judge of the District, and served many years, dying while still filling that honorable position. Mr. Boynton, who was admitted to the Bar early in life and thoroughly posted in all legal matters, was elected Justice of the Peace, and long served his community in that capacity. He married (first) Annie Twichell, who was born in Ohio. Their marriage took place in New York State, where they lived on a farm until her death. To this marriage were born the following children: Lorenzo, Alonzo G., Elizabeth, Benjamin, Delia, Helen and Charles Sumner, all of whom attained mature years, Elizabeth dying at the age of eighty-three; Lorenzo was killed Aug. 16, 1890, on the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg Railroad when long past seventy, two others of the family being killed at the same time. George Boynton married (second) Sallie Hibner, of Penfield, N. Y., and to this union were born five children, of whom Lydia is the wife of Daniel Stanford, of Ontario, N. Y.; Berissa, who married Eddie Sherman, and was the matron of Dr. Eastman's Sanitarium in Indianapolis, died here about 1893; Irene is the wife of Dr. K. D. Hawley, of Columbus, Ind., and Eugene, her twin, died in infancy, as did also Stanley.

Charles Sumner Boynton was reared in

New York, where his elementary education was acquired. In 1852 he came to Indiana and began the study of medicine with his brother, Alonzo G., at Elizabethtown, Ind. He then attended lectures at Buffalo University, in Buffalo, N. Y., and was graduated from that institution in 1857, being a student under the renowned Dr. Austin Flint, who has since become world famous, not only as a practitioner, but as the author of medical treatises of great value. Previous to taking his lectures Dr. Boynton for a time practiced with his brother. In 1901 Dr. Boynton went back to his Alma Mater, and took a post-graduate course. His diploma, granted in 1857, had so faded that the signatures were largely illegible. These he had retraced and such names appear as Millard Fillmore, then President of the University; Austin Flint, Secretary; Frank H. Hamilton; Sanford B. Hunt, later Medical Director of the Union army during the Civil War; Austin Flint, Jr., and others. These have all become noted physicians and authors.

Dr. Boynton resumed his practice at Elizabethtown after graduating, but after two years removed to Medora, Jackson county, where he remained two years; he was at Hope, Bartholomew county, three years, where he formed a partnership with Dr. Simeon Stapp, which continued until the fall of 1861, when he was appointed assistant surgeon in the United States Navy under Captain A. H. Foote, who afterward became the eminent Commodore Foote. Dr. Boynton was sent to Chicago to examine applicants for government position. After he had done this work he returned to Hope, resigned his position in the Navy, and took part in treating a serious outbreak of small pox. While acting for the Government at Chicago Dr. Boynton had not been mustered into the service, and felt at entire liberty to devote himself to the safety of his own community. In March, 1864, he was appointed Surgeon of the 67th Ind. V. I., and on his way to the front was put in temporary medical charge of the First Ind. Heavy Artillery, and accompanied that command to its barracks, at Selma, Ala. He joined his own command at Grand Ecore, La., on its return from the Red River Expedition. His services with the Sixty-seventh continued until late in the Fall of that year, when the regiment was consolidated with the veterans and recruits of the 24th Ind. V. I., he continuing to hold his position as surgeon.

Dr. Boynton was finally mustered out of the service at Galveston, Texas, July 24, 1865.

Returning home, Dr. Boynton resumed his medical practice at Hope, Ind., where he also entered into business as a druggist. In the spring of 1871 he sold out his drug business, and removed to Indianapolis to form a partnership with the late Dr. B. H. Oliver. This association was broken up after three years by the removal of Dr. Oliver to Minneapolis. During the administration of President Arthur Dr. Boynton was appointed one of the eighteen assistant medical referees of the Pension Department authorized by act of Congress, and went to Washington where he faithfully performed the duties of that position for about six months, when the failure of his vision resulting from too close study of faulty manuscript compelled him to resign. For about four years he lived in Hope, where he devoted himself to the recovery of his health, and to his medical practice for about four years. In 1886 he came back to Indianapolis, and here he has lived to the present time engaged in a very successful general practice. For three years he was county physician of Marion county, and as such was present at the execution of Achey, Gereitig and Merrick. During two years of this time he had charge of the county asylum, the county poor and the county prisoners, and for one year was in charge of the county asylum.

Dr. Boynton was married Aug. 25, 1858, to Ella Moore Bateman, a native of Cheviot, Hamilton Co., Ohio, where she was born in 1842. To this union were born three children, the eldest being (1) Lillie G., born July 5, 1859, the wife of Col. Harry B. Smith, for some years Auditor of Marion County. During the Spanish-American War he was Colonel of the 158th Ind. Volunteers, and is now very prominent in the Indiana National Guard. (2) Jessie E., born Sept. 28, 1868, died Sept. 8, 1869. (3) Edna, lost her hearing resulting from scarlet fever, and was educated at the Asylum for Mutes. She died of consumption after heroic efforts had been put forth to prolong her life. She was taken to Colorado, but the insidious disease had too firm a hold and the frail spark of life went out Dec. 30, 1893, her vitality being sapped by the disease which had rendered her mute. She was a Christian, pure, guileless, conscientious and wholly sincere, yet entirely unpretentious. Her amiability made one realize that

"Gentleness is a little thing
Dropped into the Heart's Deep Well;
The good, the joy, that it may bring Eternity alone can tell."

Dr. Boynton has been long a member of the various medical societies of the county and State, as well of the American Medical Association. He has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since 1858, belonging to the R. A. M. In 1872 he united with the K. of P., and has been a very active member of the G. A. R. He is a zealous worker in the G. A. R., and seldom fails to attend the annual encampment of that body. He is Past Post Commander of George H. Thomas Post, No. 17, of Indianapolis, and is Past Medical Director of the Department of Indiana. Other prominent official positions in the Order have been held by him. For three years he has served as W. M., of his Masonic Lodge, and has been Past Chancellor of the K. of P. Lodge. He and his wife are members of the Roberts Park Methodist Church, where they are highly esteemed for their many good works. Dr. Boynton cast his first vote for Fremont, and has acted with the Republicans since that time. He is vice-president of the Crescent Oil Company, manufacturing lubricating oils and greases, and Col. Smith, his son-in-law, is president of the same concern. The plant is located on Wyoming street, and the sales of this concern amount to about $30,000 annually. They purchase the crude stock from the oil companies, and prepare the various kinds of lubricating oil and wheel greases for the market. Dr. Boynton's summers are usually spent in the East at the seaside, with relatives.

JOHN F. GECKLER, who has for some years taken an active part in the administration of city affairs in Indianapolis, was born in Mansfield, Ohio, Sept. 7, 1868, son of George and Elizabeth (Niemyer) Geckler.

George Geckler was born in Germany, and his wife in Maryland. They had a family of three sons and four daughters, three of their children now living: George and John F., of Indianapolis; William, of Evansville. Of their daughters, Amelia, married Samuel Griggsby. George Geckler was a minister of the Gospel in the German Lutheran Church. In 1849 he removed to this country, but returned to his native land, where he spent several years before his second coming to this country. He lived at different places and spent several years at Shumway, Ill. In 1880 he came to Indianapolis, where he died twelve years later, at the age of seventy-one years. His wife died ten months prior to the death of her husband. The father of George Geckler was a grape-grower in Germany, where he died well-advanced in years; he reared a family of some seven or eight children. The father of Mrs. Elizabeth (Niemeyer) Geckler came to this country and settled in Clay county, Ind., where he engaged in farming; he had a family of three daughters, and died when about fifty years of age.

John F. Geckler has made his home in Indianapolis for nearly three decades. He attended the public schools, and later became a pressman in Beck & Randolph's printing office. For several years he had charge of the press rooms of the United States Playing Card Company. In 1899 he was elected city clerk, an office he proved himself most capable of filling, and his efficiency and reliability have won him the approval of all.

Mr. Geckler was married Dec. 21, 1890, to Miss Addie L., daughter of Benjamin E. and Eliza (Newkirk) Thomas. To this union have come three children, Maurice, Edna and Hazel. Mr. Geckler is a member of Capital City Lodge of Masons, and Lodge No. 13, B. P. O. E. He is also connected with the Knights and Ladies of Honor, and the Pressmen's Union. He is a member of the Order of Colonials, and of the German Society known as the German Dreiziger Aid Society. In politics he is a Democrat. His comfortable home is at No. 1331 South Olive street. He holds stock in the German Tribune, and in the El Rio Tropical Planters' Association.

SMILEY NEWTON CHAMBERS, until his death a distinguished lawyer and prominent citizen of Indianapolis, where, besides the high rank he attained in his profession, he was well known as an earnest and fearless advocate of good government, as a loyal friend and genial companion, was a native of Indiana, born at Edwardsport, March 18, 1845. He was a son of Alexander and Rachel (Keith) Chambers, and great-grandson of Alexander Chambers, who served in the expedition of George Rogers Clark, during the Revolution, and who after the close of the war removed from Pennsylvania to Vincennes, Ind., and there entered land. A number of his children settled in Knox and adjoining counties and became useful and influential citizens of that section. One of his sons, Joseph Chambers, filled many public offices of trust. He was a man of strong, upright character, notably enterprising, and intelligent, and left an impress upon his community which is still felt.

The Keith family, to which Mr. Chambers's mother belonged, was noted for physical and mental strength, and they took a leading part in the early development of Knox county. They were not, however, as early settlers there as the Chambers family, the Keiths coming to this State in about 1820, from Kentucky. Alexander and Rachel (Keith) Chambers were married in 1838, and soon afterward settled at Edwardsport, where Mr. Chambers engaged in the milling business. This venture, however, proved disastrous, and before long they moved onto a farm in Widner township, which they developed and improved, and on which they passed the remainder of their lives, dying in 1866. They left children as follows: Nancy A., Elliott, Lottie C. Johnson and Smiley N. All of this family received the best schooling afforded in the neighborhood when they were young.

Mr. Chambers was reared on the farm, and he acquired his elementary education by attending the common schools during the winter months. His summers were spent at farm work on the homestead, assisting his father in clearing up new lands. In August, 1863, when barely eighteen years of age, he enlisted in the Union army, becoming a member of the 115th Ind. V. I., for six months, but his service covered the remainder of the war, toward the close of which he was sergeant in the 25th Indiana Battery, in which he had enlisted for 100 days. He took part in the battle of Nashville, Dec. 15 to 18, 1864. He was discharged at Indianapolis in July, 1865. His parents died in 1866, the year following his discharge, and Mr. Chambers soon after began his real work in gaining an education, which closed with his graduation from Shurtleff College, Upper Alton, Ill., in 1870. The following year he read law in St. Louis, Mo., with Peter E. Bland. In 1872 he was admitted to the Knox county Bar, and afterward to the Supreme courts of Indiana and of the United States. He entered upon general practice at Vincennes, meeting with success from the beginning. In 1872 he was candidate for the State Legislature on the Republican ticket, and although defeated had the satisfaction of having received the full support of his party. In 1873 he formed a partnership with William H. DeWolf, which continued until his appointment, March 13, 1889, as United States District Attorney for the District of Indiana, by President Benjamin Harrison, a position he held four years. This appointment was made without application or petition. During his incumbency Mr. Chambers conducted many prosecutions for political offences, especially of election laws. When he assumed the duties of District Attorney he moved to Indianapolis, where shortly afterward he formed a partnership with Samuel O. Pickens and Charles W. Moores, a firm which from the very beginning enjoyed a large and lucrative practice, largely corporation practice, the firm having the confidence and patronage of men engaged in large affairs. This association was broken by the death of Mr. Chambers, Feb. 8, 1907.

Although a Republican in politics, Mr. Chambers often disagreed with the policies of his party, sometimes in open opposition from the public platform. Always outspoken in his utterances, his position on public questions was never in doubt. In 1906 he was appointed a colonel on the staff of Governor Hanly, which position he resigned in a very short time. Mr. Chambers never sought public office, but his advice was frequently sought by those in office, and in every campaign he was found advocating such principles and policies as met with his approval. His capacity for work was very great, and he seldom took a vacation. In his view men were not overworked, and he claimed he seldom felt the need of a vacation. He was prompt in the performance of all duties devolving upon him, and his courts were not delayed by his laches.

Physically Mr. Chambers was a man of fine appearance, five feet eleven inches tall, and weighing one hundred and eighty pounds, with light hair and deep-set blue eyes. In early life he joined the Baptist Church, but about 1880 he withdrew and became a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was an elder for many years, and he was deeply devoted to the service. In his young manhood he joined the I. O. O. F., but afterward withdrew from that order, and became a Mason, in a short time attaining the thirty-second degree, Scottish Rite. He was an exceptional after-dinner speaker, often heard and popularly received. He was a member and secretary of the board of trustees of Vincennes University.

On May 31, 1876, Mr. Chambers was married to Isadora McCord, who was born in Vincennes, Ind., daughter of William Roseborough and Eliza Jane (Gibson) McCord, the former of whom was clerk of Knox county for many years. Mr. McCord was a son of David McCord, who moved from Pennsylvania to North Carolina and thence to Kentucky. He married Dorcas Roseborough. Mrs. McCord was born in Christiansburg, Va., daughter of Hugh and Elizabeth (Rutledge) Gibson, the latter a daughter of John Rutledge, a Revolutionary soldier, wounded at Yorktown, and a niece of Edward Rutledge, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Mrs. Chambers is a niece of Sir Charles Gibson, of St. Louis, who received his title from the German and Austrian governments in acknowledgment of his services as counselor at law in international affairs—a very unusual honor.

To Mr. and Mrs. Chambers came children as follows: Eliza, who is the wife of Charles R. Peddle, purchasing agent of the Vandalia railroad, and resides in St. Louis, Mo.; Alexander, named for his grandfather; Miss Sue, who resides with her mother; Miss Mary and Smiley N., also at home; and McCord, deceased. Mrs. Chambers is an intelligent, accomplished woman. She and her husband had an unusually happy and prosperous wedded life.

One who knew Mr. Chambers well has written: "I have known Smiley N. Chambers as lawyer and citizen here. He came from Vincennes to this place after he was appointed United States Attorney. He is a descendant of Alexander Chambers, who was a soldier in the expedition of George Rogers Clark, who came to Indiana in the early days and captured Vincennes during the Revolutionary war.

"Mr. Chambers came to Indianapolis after he had practiced law several years in Knox and the neighboring counties. He has a fine reputation as a lawyer in Central Indiana, being among the foremost of the members of the Bar of Marion county. His appointment as United States Attorney for the District of Indiana brought him to Indianapolis permanently. He deservedly stands among the foremost members of the Bar in central Indiana for industry, energy and general ability combined with honesty of purpose and manly independence.

"He was a soldier in the Army of the Union, in the war of the Rebellion, then being a young man. He made in this service a good reputation as a man of courage, activity and energy. As a citizen he stands among the foremost in Indianapolis."

ALEXANDER CHAMBERS, eldest son of Smiley N. Chambers, was born Jan. 23, 1879, at Vincennes, Ind., in the home in which his mother was born. He passed his early years in his native place, attending the Vincennes University until he was twelve years old, when the family moved the Indianapolis. There he was a pupil in the grammar and high schools, later entering Purdue University, at Lafayette, where he graduated in 1901. He is engaged in the insurance and real estate business in Indianapolis, being a member of the firm of A. B. Carter & Co., at No. 149 East Market street. He is a member of the Sigma Chi Fraternity and the B. P. O. Elks. In political sentiment he is a Republican.

FURMAN STOUT dates his residence in Indianapolis from the autumn of 1836, at which time he was about sixteen years of age. He is a son of Thomas F. Stout, a well known pioneer of Marion county.

Thomas F. Stout belonged to a prominent Colonial family, his first American ancestor, John Stout, emigrating from England and settling in the New Jersey colony in the early part of the seventeenth century. He was a large land owner. The family history has it that John Stout married a Holland lady, before coming to this country, who was named Princess Priscilla. It is also stated that at his death he left a widow and three sons. In one of the Indian wars, so prevalent in those years, they had a narrow escape from the savages, the mother secreting herself and three sons in a hollow log. The Indians passed over the log but did not discover the fugitives, and they were thus saved from a cruel captivity and death.

Jesse Stout, the father of Thomas F. Stout, migrated from New Jersey to Hamilton county, Ohio, where he was one of the earliest pioneers. In his family were several sons and daughters. Late in life he and his wife moved to Illinois, where they passed their last days.

Thomas F. Stout was born in New Jersey in 1790. His first location in Ohio was twelve miles from Cincinnati, where he kept a public house on the Colerain road. He went from there to Morgan county, Ill., where he owned a large farm between Jacksonville and Springfield, and where he remained eight years, in 1836 selling out and removing to Marion county, Ind. Soon after his arrival he purchased a tract of 240 acres in Wayne township, and this became the homestead of the family, the parents living there until they died. The old homestead is still in the possession of the family. It has been so held for seventy-two years. Thomas F. Stout was a typical pioneer, honest and upright in his intercourse with his fellowmen, and kind and friendly to the last degree. As was customary in those days, he labored long and industriously and cleared up a fine farm. His name is inscribed on the rolls of the substantial and useful citizens of Marion county, who helped to convert the forest and wilderness into a peopled and prosperous community. In the war of 1812 and in the Blackhawk war he did military service, distinguishing himself as a gallant and reliable soldier. In religion he and his wife were both Baptists and they did much to promote and build the church in their neighborhood. A leading spirit in the organization of the Eagle Creek Church, he contributed liberally of both time and money for the support of the Gospel. The minister found his home an abode of peace.

Mr. Stout married, in Ohio, Elizabeth Staten, a native of Virginia, and to them were born ten children, of whom two sons and three daughters are still living, Furman Stout being the eldest of the survivors. The second oldest is Mrs. Nancy Harding, of Washington township, Marion county. Mrs. Elizabeth Hart, the fourth member of the family, owns and occupies the old home of the parents in Wayne township. David M. resides in Rushville, Ind. Mrs. I. Thompson owns and occupies a part of the land of the old homestead. George W. Stout, Sr., of Haughville, Ind., died in March, 1903. Thomas Jefferson, Joseph, Mrs. Martha Ann (Stout) Martin and Mrs. Mary Jane (Stout) Miller all lived to maturity and were married.

Furman Stout was born in Hamilton county, Ohio, Dec. 3, 1820, and came with his parents into Marion county. His memory goes back to his boyhood days in Illinois, when he ran the bullets for his father's use in the Blackhawk war. For seventy-one years he has continuously resided in Marion county, which is the better part of his eighty-seven years of life. He was long engaged in the wholesale grocery trade in Indianapolis, starting in 1863, but is now retired, and with his wife and daughter, Mrs. Hoberg, lives in his pleasant and commodious home at No. 409 North Pennsylvania street.

The first wife of Furman Stout was Mary Coble, who died in 1862, leaving three sons: George W., Henry H. and Thomas O. Mr. Stout was married the second time, Feb. 24, 1864, to Miss Mary Campbell, who was born near Brookville, Franklin Co., Ind., May 5, 1830, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Davis) Campbell, of Franklin county, the former born near the Natural Bridge, Rockbridge Co., Va. In 1834 they moved into Marion county and bought a home in Pike township, where Mr. Campbell died in 1863. His widow passed to her rest the following year. Mrs. Stout belonged to a large family of children, four of whom are still living: Mrs. Nancy Wilson, Mrs. Stout, Mrs. Julia Osborn, and Mrs. Sarah Miller, the latter two of whom were twins. The deceased were John Campbell, who died in the service of the Union during the Civil war; Jonathan; William; and Thomas, who served four years in the army during the war of the Rebellion. To the union of Furman and Mary (Campbell) Stout was born one child, Rosa, now Mrs. Hoberg, whose husband, Alfred Hoberg, is a resident of Indianapolis.

BENJAMIN F. JOHNSON, chief of the Indiana Bureau of Statistics, was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, Oct. 4, 1847, son of Rev. Abel and Sarah (Smith) Johnson, both natives of Ohio.

The paternal grandfather of Benjamin F. Johnson was a native of Virginia, of English Quaker stock. He was a farmer and moved to Ohio at an early day, where he died when but thirty-five years old, the father of three children. Thomas Smith, the maternal grandfather of Benjamin F. Johnson, was born in Ohio, of French descent, and lived to the age of ninety-five; he had seventeen children by his first wife, and one child by his second.

Abel Johnson was a minister in the Baptist Church, having been ordained when he was but seventeen years old. The most of his life he spent in preaching in Indiana and Ohio, and at different times he had charge of churches at Muncie, Bluffton, and at Liberty Center, which he founded. He was a staunch Abolitionist. He died at Liberty Center in 1891, at the age of seventy-seven years. His wife, Sarah (Smith), died in 1897, at the age of eighty-five. They had a family of nine sons and two daughters, namely: Thomas B., of Pasadena, Cal.; Washington P., of Los Angeles, Cal.; Isaac W., who was killed in the Civil war; Abel S., who was wounded on the same battlefield, and died at the Good Samaritan Hospital in St. Louis; Adoniram J., of Liberty Center, Ind.; Vernon M., deceased; Benjamin F.; Mary R., wife of J. A. Cotton, of New Castle, Ind.; Francis W., who died in infancy; Martha E., who died when about twenty years old; and David S., of Liberty Center, Indiana.

Benjamin F. Johnson was reared on the farm in Wells county, Ind., from the age of three years. His education was secured in the district school, the Bluffton high school, the Marion Academy, and Ridgeville College. For eight years he taught in the district schools of Indiana and Illinois, and for the same period in town and city schools. He was principal of the schools at Ossian, Montpelier, Oxford and Boswell. For ten years he was superintendent of schools in Benton county, Ind., and for five years served as town trustee. In the fall of 1900 Mr. Johnson was elected chief of the Indiana Bureau of Statistics, and entered upon the duties of that office the first day of the following January.

Mr. Johnson was married, Nov. 8, 1873, to Miss Mary C., a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Ciphers) Fox. To this union were born three children: Louise M., who graduated from Purdue University, class of '98, taught three years and is now employed in her father's office; Leland F., who graduated with his sister Louise from Purdue University in 1898, and is now a mechanical engineer with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, with headquarters at Fort Wayne; and Edward M., a teacher, and a student of Franklin College. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have also reared another boy, Jesse A., the son of his brother Vernon, having taken him into their hearts and home from the time he was five years old. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are members of the Baptist Church, as are their children. He was made a Mason at Montpelier, Ind. In politics he is a Republican. Mr. Johnson owns a fine farm of 160 acres in Benton county, and an elegant and attractive home at No. 1228 Ashland street. He also owns an interest in the Indiana Educator-Journal, which at one time was known as the Indiana School Journal, and which is now published in Indianapolis.

JEDIAH R. McCORMICK (deceased) was a representative of one of the prominent families of Indianapolis, where he made a good name as an honorable and upright citizen.

James McCormick, his father, came to Indianapolis March 6, 1820, and his uncle, John McCormick, came in the last week in February, 1820, and they were the first white settlers of Indianapolis. John McCormick brought his family with him, and the two brothers erected a cabin, after which James returned for his family. The two brothers lived for many years in this log house, which was located at the east end of the old White river bridge. The engineer who laid out the city boarded with John McCormick while engaged in his work during the latter part of 1820.

John and James McCormick were natives of Hamilton, Butler Co., Ohio, John being the elder. James was born in 1797. Their father, John McCormick, Sr., was born in Virginia, of Scotch ancestry, was a pioneer in Butler county, Ohio, and later removed to Connersville, Ind., where he died in 1845. John McCormick, Jr., was one of the first three county commissioners of Marion county. His death took place in 1824, and he left a widow and eight children, of whom Mrs. Tabitha Marsh, of Arcadia, Ind., is now the only survivor. She and her twin sister, married twin brothers.

James McCormick, the father of Jediah R., married Miss Martha (Patsy) Perkins, and they brought with them to Indianapolis one child, Hezekiah, who died long ago. In 1832, Mr. McCormick bought eighty acres of land upon which he and his family settled. Crown Hill cemetery is now situated on a part of this property. Six boys and five daughters were born to Mr. McCormick and his wife after their arrival in Indianapolis. The following are the living members of this interesting family: John L.; Amos D.; Ira N., of Jamestown, Ind.; James W., of Bainbridge, Ind.; and Mrs. Catherine Eagle, of Frankfort, Ind. The oldest brother, H. S., died at the age of sixty-six years, and J. P. died at the age of sixty-nine.

Mr. McCormick was a Baptist in his religious views. In politics he was a Whig in the old days, and always a strong and pronounced anti-slavery man. He died in 1858, and he is remembered not only for the fact that he was one of the very first settlers of Indianapolis but also for his manly qualities and high character. His widow passed away in October, 1880.

Jediah R. McCormick was born Jan. 29, 1827, in Shelby county, Ind., where the family for a time resided, and was a twin brother of Amos D., of Lebanon, Ind. His education was secured in the "pay" schools, as there were no public schools established in his neighborhood during those early years. When he reached mature age he learned carpentry, which was his life work.

Mr. McCormick married Elizabeth Coonfield, a native of Pennsylvania, and they had one son and four daughters, as follows: Mrs. Laura Ellen Barlow, Mrs. Jennie Brockway, Mrs. Alice Parker, Mrs. Cora Eppert and Harry G. They all reside in Indianapolis. Mr. McCormick, to whom we are indebted for much of the information contained in this article, remembered well when Indianapolis was but a hamlet, and gave little promise of the beautiful city it has become. At the time of his death he was residing at No. 1217 North West street.

BEVERLY W. SULLIVAN, D. D. S. The career of this eminent citizen of Indianapolis divides itself naturally into two parts, the first brief, stirring and epoch making, the second protracted, peaceful and uneventful in the sense of presenting striking incidents, but on that account none the less successful, none the less masterful, none the less typical of high professional attainments. The record of Dr. Sullivan as a soldier during the Civil war was brilliant, patriotic and efficient. It included four years of active service, commencing when he was a boy of seventeen, and ending when he had scarcely attained his majority. Yet in those formative years he fashioned the basis of his character as it developed broadly with the highest type of American citizenship, when white-winged peace brought prosperity and splendid victories to a reunited land. To the discerning, incidents of comparatively slight importance tell a prophetic story. Inherited traits of ancestry in the Sullivan family are clearly revealed in the one fact that four of six brothers bore arms in honorable military service during the Civil war. Here were portrayed loyalty, fidelity, love of country, bravery, worship of the institutions of a free republic. In nationality the Sullivan family is of that sturdy Scotch-Irish type which breeds sinews of war, and gives character and impulse to human achievements. The family had settled in Virginia, whence the Doctor's paternal grandfather migrated to Kentucky.

The father of Dr. Sullivan, Rev. John W. Sullivan, was a man of deep convictions and strong mentality, and he wielded a wide influence upon humanity. Born in Lexington, Ky., in 1810, he removed when a lad to Ohio, and in his youth he acquired the trade of "Wind-sor" chairmaking, serving in that vocation from the age of fifteen to twenty-one years. But a higher life beckoned and he responded. He became a circuit rider of the Methodist Church in the early pioneer days, a life that was filled with privations and scant material rewards. In 1833 he rode horseback from Cincinnati to Indianapolis to join the Indianapolis conference. For nearly half a century, or until his death, at his home in Jeffersonville, Ind., he continued an active and well-known Methodist preacher. He had married Mary Ann Messick, a native of Kentucky and of French ancestry, whose father served in the Mexican war. She died in 1861. To Rev. John W. and Mary Ann Sullivan were born eight children, six sons and two daughters, all of whom grew to maturity. Of this family Beverly W. is the only survivor. Of the four who served in the Civil war, Charles W. enlisted in an Iowa regiment; Wilbur F. was a member of the 6th Ohio V. I., and at the close of the war joined the regular army, dying while in the service and is buried at Nashville, Tenn.; Leonidas E. was a member of the staff of Gen. Rosseau; Beverly W. enlisted in Indiana.

Beverly W. Sullivan was born in Madison, Ind., March 7, 1844. Owing to the calling of his father, he moved frequently with the family from place to place. They were living at Jeffersonville, Ind., in the early autumn of 1861, where the wife and mother died. About a week later, or Sept. 10, 1861, Beverly W. enlisted in Company B, 49th Ind. V. I. He re-enlisted at Indianola, Tex., Feb. 4, 1864, and was finally mustered out, Sept. 13, 1865, at Louisville, Ky. During these four years Mr. Sullivan saw active service. The 49th Indiana, with a few other regiments, formed, at Cumberland Ford, the nucleus of the Army of the Cumberland, operating throughout Kentucky and Tennessee. The 49th was one of the regiments which held Cumberland Gap, and which was later there surrounded by a large superior force of Confederates under Gen. Kirby Smith, suffering many privations from lack of food and other supplies. Their condition finally became desperate, and when the little army was greatly reduced and starvation threatened they destroyed all munitions of war that were not portable, and by a heroic dash broke through the investing lines and escaped, to the deep chagrin of the enemy, who had no doubt of their ultimate capture or destruction. In that marvelous and successful break from the trap, two Indiana regiments, the 49th under Col. James Keigwin, and the 33d under Col. John Coburn, late of Indianapolis, led the way. The regiment later campaigned in West Virginia, and thence reported to Gen. Sherman at Memphis, participating in his attack upon Vicksburg. At Chickasaw Bayou, on the Yazoo, the command was defeated and retreated. The 49th then joined in an expedition under Gen. McClernand up the Arkansas river to Arkansas Post, engaging the enemy in a sharp fight and capturing the fort and 5,000 Confederate soldiers. Proceeding to Young's Point, La., the regiment began preparation for the grand siege of Vicksburg, under Gen. Grant. It participated in all the severe engagements during that famous siege, including Thompson's Hill, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, and was in the grand assault upon Vicksburg May 22, 1863. After the surrender of Vicksburg, the command to which Dr. Sullivan belonged was ordered to the Department of the Gulf, and was later ordered to Matagorda Bay, Tex., remaining there until the spring of 1864. There Dr. Sullivan re-enlisted. The command went up the Red river to Alexandria to cover the retreat of Gen. Banks. Later the 49th regiment was ordered to New Orleans, and there the veteran portion of the regiment received their thirty days' veteran furlough, which Dr. Sullivan spent at home. Reporting for duty he was ordered to Lexington, Ky., to do provost duty, and on Feb. 22, 1865, Dr. Sullivan was commissioned by Gov. Morton adjutant of the 49th. Later he was detailed as post adjutant, under Col. S. W. Price; serving there for a time he was ordered to report to Gen. John M. Palmer at Louisville, Ky., and by Gen. Palmer he was appointed assistant adjutant general on his staff. In that capacity he served until at his own request he was relieved to be mustered out of service. He received the thanks of the commanding general (Palmer) on this occasion "for the promptness and efficiency with which he had discharged his duties."

Coming to Indianapolis at the end of the war he began the study of medicine and dentistry with the intention of practising the latter. He graduated in medicine from the Ohio Medical College, and in dentistry from the Ohio Dental College at Cincinnati in 1869. Returning to Indianapolis, he began the practice of dentistry, which he has ever since successfully continued.

Dr. Sullivan married, in 1870, Miss Emma M. Alford, daughter of T. G. Alford, and a native of Indianapolis. To Dr. and Mrs. Sullivan have been born three children: Harry E.; Fred A., an actor; and Thomas M., a musician. Dr. Sullivan is one of the prominent members of the Union Veteran League, being a past colonel of Encampment No. 80, and having served as chief mustering officer, and for two years as inspector general of the same. He is also prominent in the G. A. R., having been connected with the order ever since its organization in Indianapolis. In 1902 he was commander of Robert Anderson Post, No. 369, Indianapolis. In politics he is a Republican. In their religious connections Dr. and Mrs. Sullivan are members of the Methodist Church.

MADISON G. WATKINS, a respected citizen of Anderson, Ind., is a descendant of an old Colonial family of Virginia, of Welsh ancestry. Mr. Watkins was born in Madison county, Ind., six miles north of Anderson, on his father's farm, Sept. 27, 1840, son of Lewis and Elizabeth (Carroll) Watkins.

Lewis Watkins, father of Madison G., was born in July, 1808, in Virginia, and in young manhood went to Warren county, Ohio, where he married Elizabeth Carroll, who was born in June, 1808, in Warren county. In 1839 he moved with his wife and four children to Madison county, Ind., and entered eighty acres of land in Richland township. This land was then all covered with heavy timber, and he built a log cabin and subsequently cleared and developed a good farm. By thrift and industry he acquired more land and at the time of his death, in 1859, he owned 120 acres.

The first four children of Lewis Watkins and wife were born in Ohio and the remainder in Indiana. They were: Frances, born in 1830; James; Nancy, who married Daniel Goodykoontz, a farmer in Madison county; Aquilla, born in 1837; Madison G., born Sept. 27, 1840; William P., born March 8, 1843; Elizabeth Ann, who married John W. Garrison, and settled in Wabash county, Ind.; Perry; and Sarah Jane, who married James Glasgow, and located permanently in southwest Missouri. Lewis Watkins was a strong Jacksonian Democrat, and a man of sterling character. Both he and his wife were consistent and active members of the M. E. Church, and their house was the home of the circuit-rider, and before any church was built was the place where meetings were held. Mr. Watkins was a class leader and he assisted materially in the building of the first church edifice in this locality. He reared his children to be loyal to their country and when the Civil war gave occasion to display patriotism, four of his sons offered themselves in defense of their flag: Madison G. was one. James was a private in Major Doxey's company, 16th Ind. V. I., was in the battle at Richmond, Ky., where he was taken prisoner, paroled and sent home; there he died from the effects of an attack of measles and undue exposure. William P., of the 130th Ind. V. I., was mustered out a second lieutenant, taking part in the Atlanta campaign and the march to the sea. Perry was in the same company as his brother, William, and yielded up his young life at Nashville, Tennessee.

Madison G. Watkins attended school in the first school house in his district. This was built of logs and had neither comforts nor conveniences. Only the simplest rudiments were taught, but they were very thoroughly impressed and a studious and ambitious student could not fail to acquire a sound foundation for future building. To spell correctly, to read the few books which might come in their way, to write a plain hand and to figure in arithmetic, enough to carry on ordinary business, was considered then all that any reasonable pupil could need. Times have changed but there still lingers a suspicion, in the minds of many, that those simple principles produced men who have ruled the destinies of the country, more or less, ever since, and hence could not have been so very deficient in essentials.

The Watkins family was a large one, consisting of the father, mother and nine stalwart sons and daughters. The pioneer mother spun and wove both flax and wool and made the clothing for the children, while the father, with ready ingenuity and rough skill, fashioned the shoes from the hides of his farm animals, which were tanned in a neighboring tannery. In the summers the children went barefoot, but when it came time to go to school in the fall, shoes must be donned and it sometimes happened that half the winter term was over before the last restless pair of feet was shod. Madison G. had his chance at school, for the three winter months, as did the other members of the family, and during the summers he worked on the farm.

The outbreak of the Civil war called many a young man just entering manhood from the peaceful pursuits of the farm, and Mr. Watkins was one of these. On Aug. 6, 1862, at Anderson, Ind., he enlisted in Company A, Fifth Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, known as the Ninth regiment of Indiana troops, to serve three years or during the war. While at Indianapolis, a sham battle was fought in which the Fifth cavalry took part, in which Mr. Watkins received serious injury to his feet, which completely disabled him for a time and from which he has never fully recovered. He did not enter a hospital, however, but was treated in his quarters; he determined to remain with his regiment, and did for eight months, but at the end of that time was honorably discharged. In 1864 he re-enlisted for 100 days, at Indianapolis, in the 132d regiment Ind. V. I., and served out his time in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama, guarding railroads, and was a second time honorably discharged.

Mr. Watkins had not lost his deep interest in military affairs. After his return home he assisted in the recruiting service at Anderson, recruiting Company F, 147th Ind. V. I., in which he enlisted in December, 1864, to serve one year, and again gave faithful service until he obtained his third honorable discharge on account of the closing of the war. His last service was mainly in the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia. He was promoted to duty sergeant of Company F, but acted as orderly sergeant, to which position he was later promoted, and as such was discharged. His record is one to which he and family refer with justifiable pride. He was held in the highest esteem by his officers and comrades, some of whom are warm friends to the present day.

After the closing of the war, Mr. Watkins returned to the home farm and cared for his widowed mother, working there for two years, and then came to Anderson. Here he worked as a clerk for five years, and then embarked in a grocery business for himself. This business he continued for eight years, when he sold out and became agent for the American Express Company, at Anderson, and remained with that company nine years. Later Mr. Watkins again engaged in a grocery business and was located on Eighth street, Anderson, for some two years. Since then he has lived retired from business activity.

Mr. Watkins was married at Centerville, Wayne Co., Ind., Nov. 22, 1871, to Lucy J. Stevens, who was born in 1834, at Williamsburg, Clermont Co., Ohio, and is now deceased. She was a daughter of John and Eliza (Brittain) Stevens. One child was born to this union, who died in infancy.

In political opinions Mr. Watkins is a zealous Republican and contributes his influence to support the party candidates and measures. He is a valued member of Major May Post, G. A. R., of Anderson. He belongs also to the I. O. R. M. and is a charter member of of that organization at Anderson. He is one of the representative, reliable and substantial citizens there, owning considerable valuable real estate, commanding the respect and esteem of a very large circle of friends. He has lived to see the country he helped to preserve grow into one of the greatest nations of the earth, its strong grip becoming a fact when the "boys in blue" offered their lives to preserve its integrity.

BEN F. McKEY. In the career of Ben F. McKey, proprietor and editor of the Lebanon Pioneer, is exemplified what ability, foresight and persevering industry can do for one who starts even at the very bottom of the ladder, for Mr. McKey's success is due solely to his own efforts and wise use of his opportunities, not to outside influence or unusual advantages. He is a native of Indiana, born in Montgomery County, Dec. 5, 1857.

Jefferson McKey, father of Ben F. McKey, is a native of eastern Tennessee, born near Knoxville, and comes from a family of Scotch-Irish extraction. He came to Indiana in early manhood and settled in Montgomery county, where he was engaged both in farming and in his regular vocation as a carpenter and builder. In 1856 he married Miss Sarah A. Sering, of Montgomery county, the daughter of George A. and Nancy Sering. Mr. Sering was one of a family of prominent farmers in Union county; the last years of his life were spent in Boone county. Jefferson C. McKey is now a resident of that same county, and has his home in Lebanon.

Ben F. McKey came to Boone county with his father in 1865, and was brought up on a farm. He attended schools of the county, working on the farm in summers, until March, 1870, when the family moved to Lebanon. There the boy attended the public schools for three years, but in 1873, at the age of sixteen, he left school, and entered upon his experience in newspaper work. The beginning was humble enough, for he worked as an apprentice under Benjamin A. Smith for the munificent sum of one dollar per week. Later he accompanied Mr. Smith to Covington, Ind., and worked for two years on the People's Friend. Attentive and industrious, he had by that time become thoroughly acquainted with his trade, and returning to Lebanon in 1876 he was employed for some time on the Democrat. This paper sank into an untimely grave and young McKey found work next at Laurel, Franklin county, where he worked on the Review for a year. By this time he had begun to feel the urgent need of further education, so he went back to Lebanon and there again entered school under Prof. John W. Kise. With this better preparation for his chosen occupation, Mr. McKey went to work again and until Jan. 1, 1879, was employed by John A. Abbott on the Patriot, when he began his connection with the paper now so completely identified with him. The Pioneer at that time was owned by Dr. T. H. Harrison, and Mr. McKey commenced as a foreman. He soon worked into the general management of the paper, became a local writer on it, and before long held the entire responsibility of the establishment, so great was the confidence in his ability. In 1889 he leased the office from Dr. Harrison for a year and at the end of that time purchased the plant. Since then, as sole proprietor and editor, he has directed the policy of the paper to suit himself, and has added largely to its advertising patronage and increased its circulation until now the Pioneer is a most flourishing journal. It is emphatically a Democratic organ, and is the only one of that persuasion in the county.

DANIEL SHEARER, a venerable citizen of Indianapolis, living at No. 921 East St. Clair street, was born Sept. 29, 1821, in Hamilton county, Ohio. He is a member of one of the oldest pioneer families of Marion county, and belongs to the fourth generation of Shearers in America, being a great-grandson of Augustus Shearer, who came to this country after he had attained mature years. He was the father of ten sons and two daughters, and all of this branch of the Shearer family in the United States have descended from them.

Andrew Shearer, son of Augustus, was born in Maryland, near the Pennsylvania line, was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, moved to Cumberland county, Pa., with his family, and came West to spend his last years in Hamilton county, Ohio. He married Margaret Waters, and their children were: Valentine, Ludwig, Michael, Andrew, George, John and Elizabeth M. In the spring of 1806 Andrew Shearer, Sr., moved with his family to Ohio, nearly all of them settling in Hamilton county. There Mr. Shearer passed his remaining days, dying at the age of seventy-five years. Several of his sons brought their families into Indiana in 1828.

John Shearer, the youngest of the sons of Andrew, was born in Philadelphia, and lived with the family in Cumberland county. He was married in Pennsylvania to Susan Korns, a native of Somerset county, that State, and a daughter of Michael Korns, who was for seven years a drummer in the Revolutionary war, after which he studied medicine, becoming a prominent physician in Cumberland county, Pa. He had the first buggy in that country. His life was passed in his native State, and his descendants are numerous. John Shearer brought his family into Marion county, Ind., in 1829. The previous year he had bought land in Warren township, six miles east of Indianapolis, and built a home in readiness for their coming. By entry and purchase he obtained a section of the best land which Marion county afforded, and there lived until his death, in 1861, when he was over eighty years of age. His wife died the previous year. John Shearer was a strong and sturdy pioneer, one of the class that help to build a community in every way. He was a devout member of the church known as the United Brethren in Christ, of which he was a class-leader while in Ohio. When he and his wife came to Marion county there was no church of their order there, and as the Methodists were the most numerous on the frontier he helped to organize a Methodist society, formed a class, and became a leader in that church. As time passed the United Brethren in Christ gradually settled around him and formed a society, to which he soon became warmly attached. Both he and his wife were devoted to their faith, and the family has always taken a deep interest in everything that related to religion and its practical dissemination in the community. In politics Mr. Shearer was a Jefferson Democrat, and proud to vote for that distinguished statesman. He was in the war of 1812, and fought with Harrison at Tippecanoe and also at the battle of the Mau-mee. In 1840 he voted for General Harrison. In his youth he learned the trade of a tanner, but he did little in that line after coming to Indiana.

To John and Susan (Korns) Shearer were born twelve children, eight sons and four daughters: Jacob, the eldest son, remained in Hamilton county, Ohio, all his life, dying in March, 1902, when within twenty-one days of finishing his ninety-fifth year; he was a ship carpenter of Cincinnati, Ohio, and helped on the construction of the first steamboat built there. John was killed in Ohio by the kick of a horse, when in his sixteenth year. The ten members of the family who came to Indiana were: Catherine, who never married, and who died years ago; George W.; Henry, who lived to be eighty-two years of age; Elizabeth, who married Abraham Haines; Andrew, a minister of the United Brethren in Christ, who died of cholera when thirty-five years of age; Michael Korns, who was a soldier in the Mexican war, in which he rose from the ranks to be a captain, and later went to California, where he died; Daniel; Susan, Mrs. Smith; William; and Lavina, Mrs. Davidson. Only two members of this once numerous family are now living, Daniel and his sister Susan, who lives in Indianapolis.

Daniel Shearer was a little past eight years of age when he came to Marion county in 1829. He assisted his father in clearing up three large farms. His father had the only gun in the immediate neighborhood, and Daniel became an expert marksman, killing many hundreds of squirrels every year, both for food and to protect the corn. He killed several deer and many wild turkeys, and was known as a very successful hunter. For many years after his marriage he remained at home. In 1863 he enlisted in Company K, 51st Ind. V. I., and was discharged June 17, 1865. He was in the Atlanta campaign, fought under General Thomas at Franklin and Nashville, and passed through many dangers, but escaped wounds, though he lost the use of his left ear at Nashville, contracting a deafness from which he never recovered. On his return from the war he resumed farming operations, in 1868 removing to Indianapolis, where he has since lived. Mr. Shearer learned the trades of wagon-maker and carpenter, but for many years after coming to Indianapolis he was engaged in bridge-making. He laid the first sewer pipe in the city. For many years he was foreman of carpenter work in the city, and for eleven years was a special policeman.

On July 14, 1844, Mr. Shearer married Martha Ann Robertson, daughter of William and Frances (Talla) Robertson, of Virginia, who came to Marion county in 1841, settling in Perry township; Mr. Robertson was a school teacher and farmer. Mrs. Martha Ann Shearer died in 1870. She was the mother of seven children, four of whom are still living: (1) William R., who like his father wore the Union blue during the Civil war, now has his home in Warren township, not far from the scene of his nativity. (2) Samuel Henry is a civil engineer and architect, and was city engineer of Indianapolis for twelve years, being very prominent in the business circles of that city. (3) Mary Frances is the wife of Edward Belcher, of Iowa Center, Iowa. (4) Mrs. Lizzie B. Jones is a resident of Indianapolis.

Mr. Shearer married for his second wife, Sept. 14, 1871, Amelia Romerill, who died in October, 1883, leaving one child, Edward Harvey, who died in infancy. On Aug. 28, 1892, Mr. Shearer married Mrs. Elizabeth Darrow, daughter of John Rose, of Hamilton county, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Shearer were children together. By her first husband she had three sons and four daughters. One son, Col. G. W. Darrow, of Seattle, Wash., is a wealthy mine owner. Another son, Milton, who was a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, died at Fort Wayne, Ind.; he was known as the fastest typesetter in the United States. In addition to his own family, Mr. Shearer reared sixteen orphan children, all of whom turned out well.

In 1840 Mr. Shearer cast his first Presidential vote for General Harrison, and was active in the formation of the Republican party in Indiana, always being interested in its affairs. He and Dr. William H. Wishard were charter members of the Tippecanoe Club, of which Dr. Wishard was the oldest member and Mr. Shearer the youngest member. His religious teachings came from his mother, who was a stanch and devoted Methodist and a worthy Christian woman. He belongs to the Central Avenue Methodist Church, and his wife is a member of the U. B. Church. Mr. Shearer is connected with George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R., of which he has been a member for over twenty years, during which period he has missed but four meetings—when he was out of the city and once when he was sick.

One of Mr. Shearer's earlier recollections was the sight of the first steamboat that came up the Ohio river, the "Mozell." General (later President) Jackson was aboard and a carpet was laid from the boat to the hotel for him, as it was muddy, but he would not avail himself of any such prerogative; he rolled up his trousers and walked alongside the carpet. The incident occurred at Cincinnati, and Mr. Shearer was five years old at the time.

PROF. WILLIAM H. FREEMAN, who holds the honorable and responsible position of secretary of the Indiana State Board of Forestry, with his office at Room 93, State House, Indianapolis, was born in Wabash, Ind., Sept. 11, 1863. He is a son of Alexander and Matilda M. (Purdy) Freeman, and grandson of George Freeman, who was of German descent, and was born in Pennsylvania. Born and reared a farmer, when he came to Wabash county, in 1847, he bought land from the government, and lived there until his death, at the age of ninety-five years. In his family were many children.

Alexander Freeman was born in Pennsylvania and his wife in Ohio. They had a family of four sons: George W., of Wabash, Ind.; Prof. William H.; Franklin P., of Wabash, Ind.; and Edward L., of Wabash. Alexander Freeman was a farmer, and was brought by his parents from Pennsylvania to Indiana in 1847, the family locating in Wabash county, Ind., near the city of Wabash, and engaging in farming. There Alexander Freeman followed farming until his death, in 1892, at the age of fifty-four years. His widow still survives. They were both members of the Christian (New Light) church, and the father, who was a public-spirited man, and a prominent member of the community, held from time to time various township offices. In politics he was a Republican.

Alfred Purdy, the maternal grandfather of Professor Freeman, was born in Maryland, where he was a prominent slave owner and dealer in slaves. In the early days he moved to Cincinnati, and was a slave trader up and down the river, from Ohio moving to Indiana about 1847 and settling in Wabash county, where he engaged in farming. He had a large family, was a man of public spirit, and died at the age of eighty-six years.

Prof. William H. Freeman was reared on his father's farm near Wabash, where he attended the district school. His education was continued at the Northern Indiana State Normal School, at Valparaiso, and completed at the Indiana State Normal School at Terre Haute. When he left this last school he began teaching, and was engaged in that line until in June, 1901, rising to the principalship of the ward school at Anderson. He was regarded as a capable and progressive instructor. In May, 1901, he was appointed by Governor Durbin secretary of the Indiana State Board of Forestry, in which office he is now acting.

Professor Freeman belongs to St. Anastasia Mesnil Lodge, No. 43, I. O. O. F., of Wabash, Ind.; the Independent Order of Foresters of America; the Knights of the Maccabees, and the B. P. O. E. He is a Republican in politics.

JOHN FRYBERGER. No line of industry requires greater natural talent or more careful study and preparation than that represented in the architectural art and its practical developments, and Indianapolis had an able exponent of this line of enterprise in the subject of this sketch, who was well known as an architect and contracting builder of prestige and success in his chosen vocation. The city contains many evidences of his technical and practical skill.

Mr. Fryberger was a native of the old Buckeye State, having been born on a farm in Darke county, March 11, 1837. His early educational advantages were somewhat limited, but he had the will to dare and to do, and by his personal exertions amply supplemented the slight scholastic training of his youth, becoming a man of broad information. He was essentially the architect of his own fortunes. Mr. Fryberger was a son of John J. and Sarah (Knipe) Fryberger, the former of whom was born in Switzerland and the latter in Pennsylvania. Their marriage was solemnized in Lancaster, Pa. But little is known of the paternal genealogy, as the father of John J. died on the ocean, while en route to America, leaving a widow and four young sons. The little family, thus bereaved, landed in New York, strangers in a strange land, and the mother, finding herself helpless to provide for her children, had recourse to the only means offered for their care, three of the sons being bound out to Pennsylvania farmers—John J., John and George. The fourth remained in New York, as did also the mother, who there passed the remainder of her life. George remained at his adopted home in Pennsylvania until he had attained his majority, when he made his way to Ohio. There he was engaged in farming for a number of years before moving to Connersville, Ind., from which place he enlisted for service in the Civil war. He was a valiant soldier throughout the great struggle, rising to the office of colonel, and served with distinction and honor. After the war he returned to Connersville, where he became a prominent and influential business man, gaining a competency. Later he lost heavily in certain business ventures, and finally he entered the soldiers' home at Dayton, Ohio, where he yet remains; his wife is a resident of Indianapolis.

John J. Fryberger, father of our subject, remained on the farm where his mother placed him until he reached his legal majority, and soon afterward he left Pennsylvania, in 1831, coming westward to Darke county, Ohio. He entered 160 acres of heavily timbered land, being one of the early settlers in that section, where he reclaimed a good farm and was duly successful, commanding uniform confidence and esteem, as an industrious, honorable and energetic farmer. He there made his home until his death, in 1877, and his wife also died there, in 1875. He was a self-made man in every sense, and his aim in life was ever to provide a good home for his family and to rear his children to lives of usefulness and honor. His name was a synonym of honor and integrity in every respect. He gave staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and in religion he and his wife were devoted and consistent members of the German Methodist Church. Their children were as follows: Henry, a farmer, died in Pennsylvania; Emanuel, a blacksmith, died in Sterling, Ill.; Isaac died at the age of twelve, and Jacob at the age of six; John is mentioned below; Levi, who became a successful farmer in Kansas, later held the office of city marshal in Eureka, that State, and is now deceased; Anna is the wife of P. Creger; Lavina is the wife of R. L. Robinson; Eliza also married; Olivia J. is the wife of J. Waldeman. There were five other children, all of whom died in childhood.

John Fryberger remained on the old homestead and assisted in its cultivation until he reached the age of eighteen years, when he entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, under the direction of a most skillful instructor, who took a deep interest in the young man and assisted him in his general studies as well as in the acquirement of technical knowledge, so that he made rapid advancement and gained excellent ideas in regard to architecture in general. After completing his apprenticeship Mr. Fryberger attended a school of architecture for a time, and his natural mechanical ability and peculiar receptiveness enabled him to become proficient in architectural work while still a youth, while he continued to devote himself carefully to the study of the art. His later success and precedence were due entirely to his energy and devoted application in early years. Well equipped as an architect and practical builder, he located in Greenville, Ohio, where he continued in business until the outbreak of the Rebellion. He belonged to an organization of militia and was corporal of his company, who tendered their services in 1862, being mustered into Company C, 152d Ohio Volunteer Infantry, under Colonel Putnam. The regiment was assigned to the Army of the Potomac and proceeded to the front, participating in the battles of White Sulphur Springs and Greenbrier river, in Virginia. At the expiration of his ninety days' term of enlistment Mr. Fryberger received his honorable discharge and returned to his home, but he subsequently re-enlisted, becoming a member of the 187th O. V. I., which was assigned to the 14th Corps of the Army of the Tennessee, said corps being under command of General Steedman. At this time he enlisted for a year, or until the close of the war, and with the great army of which he was a member he participated in many spirited engagements and skirmishes and had his full share of arduous service. He took part in the battles of Resaca and Dalton, Ga., the famous battle of Atlanta and the engagement at Ringgold, whence his regiment was sent to Macon, Ga., where it was assigned to post duty, guarding cotton and contraband goods. Remaining there until January, 1866, it was mustered out, thence proceeding to Columbus, Ohio, where Mr.

Fryberger received his second honorable discharge. He was ever found at the post of duty and made a record which redounded to his honor. During his first term of enlistment he was corporal of his company, while throughout his second term he was orderly. He was never captured and received only slight wounds, and though ill on several occasions he refused to go to the hospital, insisting on remaining with his comrades. In the battle of White Sulphur Springs Mr. Fryberger led his company through the fight, and he always showed a deep interest in the comfort and welfare of his comrades, which they fully appreciated. When some of them were attacked with smallpox he courageously visited them each day to see that they received proper care and attention. As corporal he kept the record of his company and reported same to the war department each month, while he had the foresight to retain duplicates of his record and was thus able to assist a number of comrades in securing pensions, since he was able to authenticate all dates from his record. At one time the pension department sent a special officer to investigate his records, which were found fully satisfactory.

After the close of his army service Mr. Fryberger returned to Greenville, Ohio, where he was engaged in contracting and building until 1886, when he removed to Anniston, Ala., and assumed charge of the building operations of the Corning Land Company in the capacity of architect and superintendent. He remained there four years and for the ensuing two years was engaged in business as an architect in Selma, that State. In 1892 he came to Indianapolis, where he built up a large and gratifying business as an architect and contractor and builder, while his integrity and fidelity ever gained him the public confidence which is the basis of all true business success. While residing in Greenville he met with severe financial losses, through having assumed security obligations, but by close application and progressive methods he was able to retrieve his losses and was in independent circumstances, while no shadow rests upon any portion of his life history. He accumulated some desirable realty in Indianapolis. In politics he was an uncompromising Republican and fraternally he was an honored member of George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R., of Indianapolis, while both he and his wife belonged to the Methodist Church.

In 1858, at Greenville, Ohio, Mr. Fryberger was united in marriage to Miss Sarah M. Cox, who was born in that State, a daughter of John and Frances (Miller) Cox, the Cox family belonging to Ohio and the Miller family to Virginia. Mr. Cox was a wagon-maker by vocation and one of the honored citizens of Greenville, where he was also prominent in the work of the Methodist Church. He and his wife became the parents of five children, namely: Sarah M. (Mrs. Fryberger), Catherine (Mrs. J. W. Bur), Thomas, George and Charles. To Mr. and Mrs. Fryberger were born four children, namely: John A., who married and died leaving one child; Lilla B., who married S. Taylor and who died leaving no children; Levi W., who has been foreman of a tin shop at Rockville, Ind., for a number of years; and Charles W., a successful carpenter and contractor of Selma, Ala., where he superintended the erection of a building for the local street car company.

REV. OLIVER WENDELL McGAUGHEY, pastor of the Sixth Christian Church of Indianapolis, was born in Putnam county, Ind., Dec. 20, 1871, a son of Jacob and Mary (Leonard) McGaughey, both of whom were natives of Indiana. His paternal grandfather, Michael McGaughey, was born in Virginia, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was a farmer, and a pioneer in Putnam county, Ind., where he died at the age of seventy-five years. He left a large family.

Jacob McGaughey is a farmer near Russellville, Putnam Co., Ind., and his life has been mainly spent in that county. For three years he followed the starry banner in the war for the preservation of the Union, and did a soldier's part valiantly and well in that great struggle. He went out as a member of the 45th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was subsequently attached to the 115th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, holding the rank of first lieutenant. Mr. McGaughey is a Republican, but in no sense a politician. He is connected with Hazlett Post, G. A. R., of Russellville. His first wife died in 1875, at the age of twenty-eight years, a member of the Christian Church, as is also Mr. McGaughey. For his second wife he married Mrs. Sarah (Robert) Hartman. To his first union were born three sons and one daughter: Rev. George Stanley McGaughey, of Bloomingdale, Ind.; Rev. Oliver Wendell; Charles, a teacher at Roachdale, Ind.; and Minnie, now of Fincastle, Indiana.

George Leonard, the maternal grandfather of Mr. McGaughey, was born in North Carolina, of German descent. In early life he was a farmer, and while still a young man he came to Putnam county, Ind., where he reared a numerous family, and died when quite advanced in years.

Oliver Wendell McGaughey was reared in Putnam county, and was trained to farming. His education was gained in the public schools and at Shurtleff College, at Alton, Ill., where he graduated with honors, taking the rhetorical gold medal. For four years he was a student in Wabash College, at Crawfordsville, Ind., from which he received the degree of A. B., and was called upon to represent his class on commencement day. After taking a post-graduate course in Butler College, he began preaching as pastor of the Sixth Christian Church, on the first Sunday in July, 1899. Prior to this he had preached since his Junior year in college at several places, and came to the important work of his first pastorate with a trained and disciplined mind.

Mr. McGaughey was married Nov. 1, 1899, to Miss A. K. Booe, daughter of A. M. and Elvessa (Glasscock) Booe, and to this union has come one child, Gilbert Arthur. They reside at No. 914 Woodlawn avenue. The parents of Mrs. McGaughey were pioneer settlers in Fountain county, Ind., and were among the prominent and much respected people of their day.

Mr. McGaughey belongs to the Order of Ben Hur, and while in college became connected with the Pi Delta Theta. In political sentiment he was originally a Republican, but now prefers to vote independently of partisan considerations, seeking only the best men and measures with his ballot.

HENRY GEORGE SPONSEL was born Nov. 21, 1858, in Southport, Ind., and comes of the substantial German-American stock which has had such an important bearing on the history and progress of this State, being a son of Conrad and Barbara (Ruemlar) Sponsel, natives of Germany. Conrad Sponsel was brought to America from Bavaria, Germany, by his father, the family locating in Cincinnati, Ohio, and there he learned shoemaking under his father. He subsequently moved to Southport, Ind., where he resided for some time, thence removing to Indianapolis.

Henry G. Sponsel was quite young when he came to Indianapolis with his father, and here he was reared and educated. His schooling over, he learned the upholsterer's trade, at which he continued until the panic of 1872, after which he embarked in the tea and grocery business. As a merchant Mr. Sponsel was decidedly successful, his straightforward methods and earnest desire to please his patrons winning him an excellent custom, which he has kept all these years. In 1903 he added a bakery to his already well-established business, and his reputation for the use of pure ingredients and care in the production of his goods has brought him remarkable success. He has prospered by old-fashioned business integrity and sterling honesty in all his transactions, combined with the most up-to-date methods in the dispatch of business, and he has won a position of unquestioned honor among all his associates.

On Nov. 23, 1882, Mr. Sponsel was married to Anna Lehmer, and to them were born four children, three daughters and one son, viz.: Rosa, Fredia, Katie and Lewis. The son gives evidence of inheriting his father's business ability and will probably become associated with him in due time. On June 15, 1901, Mr. Sponsel married for his second wife Emma Rebendisch. No children have been born to this union.

Mr. Sponsel has many friends in Indianapolis, both among his business associates and in a purely social way, and is well known not only among the German-Americans but in all classes. He is a member of the Second Reformed Church, and fraternally unites with the Improved Order of Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen. He carries insurance in three well-known companies, the New York Life, the Hartford (Conn.) Life and the Travelers' Life.

ROBERT ALLEN BROWN, formerly clerk of the Supreme and Appellate courts, is a resident of Indianapolis and well known in that city. He was born near Franklin, Johnson Co., Ind., Nov. 27, 1858, son of Isaac S. and Mary (Carnine) Brown, he a native of Virginia and she of Kentucky. The paternal grandfather was Aaron Brown, a native of Virginia, of English descent. He was a farmer, and lived in Johnson county, Ind., two years, dying in 1836, when a young man.

His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Smith, died the next day, and they were buried side by side. Her people were also Virginians. Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Brown had three children.

Isaac S. and Mary Brown had six children, five sons and one daughter, four now living: Robert A.; Charles A., of Johnson county; Isaac Newton, who lives on the home farm; and Mary Lilly, wife of George F. Freeman, of Franklin, Ind. The father was born on a farm, and came to Indiana with his parents in 1836, when ten years old, growing to manhood in Johnson county. He died on the home farm in 1887, and his wife died in 1895, aged sixty-two years. Both were Presbyterians and he was an elder in the church for many years.

Andrew Carnine, the maternal grandfather of Robert A. Brown, was a native of Kentucky, and one of the early settlers of Johnson county, Ind. He was a wagon-maker, owned a farm and cultivated it, but followed his trade. He died in Johnson county in 1872, aged about seventy-eight years. His wife was Nancy Banta. They were charter members of Hopewell Presbyterian Church, one of the strongest country churches in Indiana, and had a large family.

Robert A. Brown was reared on his father's farm, attended the district schools, and later graduated (in 1884) from Franklin College. He taught one year as assistant principal of the Franklin high school, when his health broke down, and he then read law one year in the office of Overstreet & Hunter, after which he went into the newspaper business, first on the Franklin Republican, as assistant editor, and later as reporter for the Indianapolis Journal. Then he was offered the city editorship of the Logansport Journal, and was with that paper one year; bought the Franklin Republican and conducted it six years, making, wherever he went, a distinctive mark and fine reputation as a journalist. During that time he was city civil engineer and also township trustee. During his management of the Franklin Republican he was also chief clerk of the Lower House of the Indiana Legislature, in the session of 1895; then deputy Secretary of State for two years; elected clerk of the Supreme court in 1898, for four years, and again in 1902 for a second term, which expired Jan. 1, 1907. Since 1856 he is the only man who has been honored by being chosen for a second term.

On June 19, 1892, Mr. Brown married Miss Anna Smith, daughter of Nicholas and Catharine (Armor) Smith, and to this union has been born one daughter, Katharine Armor Brown. The family reside at No. 1407 Park avenue. Mr. Brown is a member of the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church, his wife of Christ Episcopal Church. In politics he is a Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias (being recorder of the Supreme Tribunal) and a Scottish Rite Mason; he is likewise a member of the Century Literary Club and the Marion and Columbia Clubs. He is regarded as one of the coming men of Indianapolis and the State, the responsible positions to which he has been chosen being indicative of the great popularity he enjoys.

WILLIAM F. LANDES, who for six years was superintendent of schools of Marion county, is a citizen of Indianapolis; residing at No. 922 West Thirty-first street. Mr. Landes was born in Charleston, Ill., April 15, 1860, but his parents, Joseph and Elizabeth (Keyes) Landes, were natives of Ohio. His paternal grandfather, Joseph Landes, a native of Germany, came to America and first located in Pennsylvania, but later moved to Licking county, Ohio, where he died well advanced in years, leaving a large family. Abel R. Keyes, the maternal grandfather, was a native of Virginia, of English descent, and was a blacksmith by occupation. He died in Ohio aged eighty-seven years, the father of six children. In this line Mr. Landes is a relative of Francis S. Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner."

Joseph Landes was a plasterer by trade, and later a merchant in Marion county, Ind., where he settled in 1862, at Lawrence. His home was formerly at New Philadelphia, Ohio. He died in Marion county, Ind., in 1874, aged forty-nine years, and his wife, surviving until 1896, reached the age of sixty-five. Both were sincere Methodists. They had two children, William F. and Henry K., both of Indianapolis.

William F. Landes has lived in Marion county, Ind., since 1862. In Lawrence, where he first attended school, he had his home until the fall of 1886. He learned the carpenter's trade when young, and followed it a short time, and then attended the Danville Normal School, and afterward the Zanesville (Ohio) Normal. He began teaching in 1878, and has been in school work until recently. In 1897 he was elected by the Marion county board of education to the office of county superintendent of schools, which office he held for six years, filling it satisfactorily and with efficiency. He is now bookkeeper for the Crown Hill Cemetery Association.

On June 22, 1886, William F. Landes married Elizabeth W. Pfafflin, daughter of Paul and Elizabeth (Walsh) Pfafflin, and three children have been born of this union: Mabel, who died aged two and one-half years; Ethel; and Floyd, who died aged five years. The beautiful home of the family was built by Mr. Landes in 1905. Mr. and Mrs. Landes are members of the Methodist Church and Mr. Landes belongs to the Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen, and F. and A. M., in the latter connection holding membership in North Park Lodge, No. 646. In political matters he is a Republican. He was justice of the peace five years.

F. M. BACHMAN, who has been engaged in business in Indianapolis for over a quarter of a century, is a native of Germany, born Jan. 20, 1850, son of Michael Bachman (3). The latter was of the third generation to bear the name Michael, and was born in the same province as was our subject, in 1803. The family was an old and honored one in the beautiful region where they were settled, having been there established for many generations. The father of our subject was a farmer and miller in Germany and was in comfortable circumstances, while his name was a synonym of honor and integrity in all the relations of life. His wife died in 1852, and he came to America in 1865, accompanied by two of his children, and here joining others who had previously emigrated to the United States. Michael Bachman passed the remainder of his life in Louisville, Ky., where he died in 1882. Having been well advanced in years when he left the Fatherland he was tenderly cared for by his children in his declining days. Of his family we offer the following brief record: Philip remained in Germany, where he reared his children, and there his death occurred in 1891; Michael (4) came to America in 1852, locating in Louisville, Ky., where he engaged in gardening, and where he died in 1900; Wilhelm, who also came to America, met with an accidental death; Barbara died in Louisville, unmarried; Jacob died in Germany, unmarried; Mary is the wife of C. Hinkle, of Allegheny City, Pa.; Valentine is the owner and operator of a flouring mill in Indianapolis; F. M. is the immediate subject of this review.

F. M. Bachman accompanied his father and sister Mary to America in 1865, being at the time fifteen years of age. In the Fatherland he had received about seven years' discipline in the excellent schools of his native land, and after coming to the United States he supplemented this by attending business college about three months. They joined the brother Michael in Louisville, and with him our subject was associated in the gardening enterprise until 1867. He had entered business college, as noted, for the purpose of gaining a better idea of American methods, and though his college course left him with an indebtedness of $100, the knowledge which he gained so fortified him for practical business that he has ever considered the investment a wise one. In 1867 he came to Noblesville, Ind., where he was employed in a restaurant for two and one-half years, gaining valuable experience and familiarizing himself more fully with the English language. For the ensuing fourteen months he was employed as clerk in a dry-goods establishment in the same town, and within this time succeeded in paying his indebtedness and also saving a small balance, with which he purchased a bankrupt stock of dry goods, assuming an incidental obligation of $1,000. He assorted his stock systematically and later added a grocery stock, and by careful management and assiduous application he was successful in his venture, securing a good start on the road to independence and prosperity, paying his indebtedness and gradually expanding the scope of the business, which he continued for a period of five years, when he closed the same out, realizing ten thousand dollars surplus. In 1879 he came to Indianapolis and purchased a grocery business at the corner of Illinois and Market streets, a central and popular location, and there he became well known to the people of the city during the four years of his association with the enterprise, conducting the business individually for two years and for the following two years in association with Mr. Kuhn. In 1883 he disposed of his grocery business and purchased an interest in a run-down sawmill plant, located at the corner of Madison avenue and Lincoln street, with more than four acres of ground. Mr. Bachman sawed rough wagon material and afterward, acquiring the interest of his partner, engaged in the manufacture of building materials of all kinds, while to the equipment of his plant he added a veneer and planing mill. He carries at all times a large stock of hard and soft building material, fine hardwood veneering, and all similar products demanded by builders, while careful attention is given to special contract work and original designing. Mr. Bachman is sole proprietor of the business and the success which has attended his efforts redounds to his credit and also shows what is possible of accomplishment on the part of a self-reliant man who has the will to dare and to do. He is entirely free from ostentation, enjoying the respect and confidence of not only those with whom he has business dealings but also of those in his employ, who appreciate his kindness and fairness and work for his interests. He employs a corps of forty men and his enterprise is constantly increasing in scope. He is also a stockholder and director in the City Garbage Bins. Mr. Bachman is recognized as one of the solid business men of Indianapolis and as one who has achieved pronounced success by worthy means. In his beautiful home, on North Meridian street, he enjoys rest from the cares and exactions of business hours and extends hospitality to his friends. In politics he gives allegiance to no particular party, reserving the privilege of supporting such men and measures as meet the approval of his judgment. He was reared in the Protestant Church and his religious views are in harmony therewith.

In 1877 Mr. Bachman was united in marriage to Miss Louisa C. Rentsch, who was born in the Province of Westphalia, Prussia, a member of a sterling old family of that locality. She was a daughter of Augustus Heinrich and Charlotte L. Rentsch, both natives of that Province, where the father was engaged in business for many years, having conducted a hotel in the village of Werther, where he died in 1892. His wife survived him. They had eight children, namely: Christian Ferdinand, who came to America but later returned to the old world; Frederick W.; Henry Augustus; Christian H.; Franz H. R., of Indianapolis; Louisa C., Mrs. Bachman; Johanna C. M., and Caroline E. The family has long been identified with the Lutheran Church. Augustus H. Rentsch first married a widow, Mrs. Eikhoff, who had children by her first marriage, one of whom, Henry Eikhoff, came to America and settled on a farm east of Indianapolis. Mr. Rentsch thus reared three families of children, three children having been born of his first marriage, namely: Christian W. E., Franz Herman and Amelia C. (wife of Henry Severin). Louisa C. Rentsch came to America in company with her half-sister, Mrs. Severin, for the purpose of visiting relatives, and here she met Mr. Bachman, who prevailed upon her to remain and link her life destinies with his. They became the parents of two children, Frederick, and Alma, the son now assisting his father in his business. Mrs. Bachman was summoned into eternal rest Feb. 27, 1892. In 1897 Mr. Bachman married Miss Catherine D. Reger, who was born in Indianapolis March 23, 1869, a daughter of W. C. Reger, a native of Germany and an early settler in Indianapolis, where he followed his trade of cabinetmaker, and was prominently concerned in the organization of the Cabinetmakers' Union, in which he maintained a lively interest until his death. He was survived by his wife and their seven children, and by good management the widowed mother kept the family together and also increased the property left by her honored husband. The children were as follows: Emil, purchasing agent for a Chicago dry-goods house; Henry, a cigar manufacturer and dealer in Indianapolis; William, a cabinetmaker of Indianapolis; John, a traveling salesman for Griffith Brothers, of this city; Bertha, wife of C. Otte; Catherine D., Mrs. Bachman; and Teresa. Mr. and Mrs. Bachman had one child, who died in infancy.

JOEL FOSTER RICHARDSON, projector of the first belt railway in the world.—Usefulness to the world is the standard by which the world judges. Memorable in so far as they benefit mankind are the acts of a human being. The public service of Joel Foster Richardson, for over forty years, was repairing, building, operating, inspecting and originating railroads.

Mr. Richardson was born in Keene, Cheshire Co., N. H., April 22, 1823. He was of the eighth generation from his Pilgrim ancestor, and traced his line back through Barzillai, Amos, Erie, Amos, Stephen and Stephen to Samuel, second of the three Richardson brothers, from Kent, England (1630-36), who were three of the seven men commissioned by the Church of Charlestown, Nov. 5, 1640, to erect a new town and church called Woburn, wherein they later settled.

J. F. Richardson

The Richardsons were of English and Norman descent. Samuel, selectman, surveyor, is recorded as "a man of much respectability and worth, in 1645, paying the highest tax in Woburn, Mass."

"Barzillai and Lydia (Foster) Richardson were the parents of ten children, born between 1815 and 1833. The six sons and husbands of the four daughters became railroad men early in life, and served an average of thirty years each, or an aggregate of three hundred and ten years for the family. Joel F., the second son, bought his minority of his father at nineteen, was twelve years on the Boston & Albany, went to Indiana, originated and built the very successful Belt railroad around the city of Indianapolis, *

* * * [Hist. of Keene, N. H., p. 642.] His mother was the daughter of Joel and Martha (Whitcomb) Foster, of Swanzey; granddaughter of Maj.-Gen. Philemon Whitcomb, who traces through Capt. Joseph, grandson of John, of Dorchester, Mass. (1632), and through his wife, Martha (Sawyer), from "Alfred the Great" of England, she in the sixty-fifth generation from Handeric, King of the Saxons, A. D. 1. Histories of Swanzey, N. H., Billerica, Lancaster, Woburn and Charlestown, Mass., contain accounts of his ancestors, in the White, Foster, Durant, Butler, Hill, Wyman, Wilson, Frost, French, Houghton, Sawyer, Prescott, Priest, Read and allied families.

In Chatham, Columbia Co., N. Y., Dec. 2, 1846, J. F. Richardson married Mary, daughter of George and Lydia (Stowell) Avery, of Grafton, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., granddaughter of Asa and Sarah (Waite) Avery and of Samuel and Susanna (Ford) Stowell. Their children were: Ida Frances, George Barzillai (who died in infancy), Barzillai Foster, Thomas Morris and Mary Jane (called Jennie).

Mrs. Richardson was a descendant of the Cromwell, Williams, Dighton, Littlefield, Mott, Keith, Howard, Adams, Graves and allied families. Plymouth Rock was on the land of her ancestor James Cole. Through his wife she is descended from Matthew de Lobel, "Botanist to King James," in whose honor the plant "Lobelia" was named. He was a son of Jean, a distinguished lawyer of Lisle, Flanders; was an author, and the first to classify plants into genera and species. Mrs. Richardson bore his daughter's name and was a great lover and cultivator of flowers.

Sparse opportunity for an education came to the elder sons of Barzillai and Lydia Richardson, but of the labor which develops manhood, sharpens the perceptions, and gives rise to the adjustment of conditions and conquest over stubborn obstacles, they had a life course. The six Richardson brothers were big, brawny, deep-chested men, of erect carriage, clear vision and fearless courage—excellent types of Americans. Born and raised on a farm in the granite ribbed hills of New Hampshire, where nature stubbornly yields her fruits only after the most patient toil, they became endowed with all the admirable traits of those who went out from New England and took a leading part in the development of this great country. Shrewdness, thrift, energy, indomitable persistence and integrity of character were qualities of their make-up that assured them success in the world's work. Their inestimable gift of a powerful physical frame fitted them for the pioneer work in which they took part, as did their ancestors of New England for seven generations before them.

On April 13, 1842, J. F. Richardson began railroad work at Springfield, Mass., on the Western (now Boston & Albany) railroad. In 1844 he was appointed superintendent of Section 1, Division 3, and located at Chatham, N. Y. Realizing the greater opportunities in the "West," he resigned his position, and with his superior officer's recommendation as "a man of thorough acquaintance with railroad work, of high moral principle, good habits, faithful and industrious" he came to Indianapolis in 1852, "a stranger in a strange land." On the Indiana Central he commenced to lay and ballast track. With twenty-six men he laid out 3,600 feet of track per day, a record not theretofore equaled. His was the only part of the work accepted. Given full charge, he satisfactorily completed the line. After visiting his family he returned to lay and ballast track for the Ohio & Mississippi railway. The work not being ready, he connected the railroad between Indianapolis and Lawrenceburg, and then went to St. Louis, and finished the work there. On Oct. 1, 1854, he received the appointment of roadmaster and fuel agent on the Indianapolis & Cincinnati railroad. Sending for his family, they came out in charge of Mr. Edward G. Avery, Mrs. Richardson's oldest brother (he was younger than she) starting April 5, 1855, from Chatham, N. Y., and reaching Indianapolis at noon April 7th. They located in Greensburg, and two years later in Lawrenceburg, Ind. On Dec. 26, 1862, he severed his connection to build for this company, in partnership with J. W. Mills, the assistant superintendent, that part of the "Branch" from Lawrenceburg to Cincinnati extending from the former place to the State line. (From the State line to Cincinnati the Cincinnati & Indiana Railroad Company was the building company—two companies building this branch, and it was leased by the former from the latter afterward.) Finishing this, he again accepted his former position, but with the line soon extending from Cincinnati to Lafayette. To this was later added the Martinsville branch and the White Water Valley railroads.

On April 19, 1863, Mr. Richardson removed his family to Delhi, Hamilton Co., Ohio, where he soon built himself a typical New England homestead on improved property; it was sold in 1893. To the office of roadmaster and assistant superintendent he was appointed Sept. 1, 1865. His promotion to superintendent and roadmaster occurred July 1, 1866. After September, 1867, repeated orders were received to generally reduce expenses, to stop construction work, weaken the working force; business connections with other roads were interfered with, resulting in great business loss to the company, and, as he could see only deliberate aim to destroy its sources of income he had labored to effect, and the running down of the road was sure to reflect on his reputation for efficiency, he requested that a man be sent to take his place. His resignation was not accepted. On Aug. 3, 1868, as Indiana laws gave no right for the company to so do, and its president sanctioned his operating the Vincennes road, under construction, renting him rolling stock, he personally contracted to, and the Indianapolis, Cincinnati & Lafayette Company derived a large profit therefrom to January, 1870, when it was finished.

Desiring a business which would permit him to be more at home, under contract of June 1, 1870, Mr. Richardson purchased thirty acres and built a coal elevator at North Bend, Ohio. On Jan. 23, 1871, he commenced to hoist coal for the railroad company. He received the official appointment of the receivers, but voluntarily resigned as general superintendent and roadmaster of the I. C. & L. railroad and branches Nov. 30, 1870, to conduct the coal business. In his twenty-nine years of railroad service he lost but thirty-four days' time, ten when he went to New Hampshire to see his mother, and the remainder when ill with pneumonia. Through his efforts the rolling mill industry was started in the "West" at New Lawrenceburg. Records of real estate along this road show the extent that he invested means to build up towns to give business to the company. It built depots at Prescott, New Point, Sunmans, Morris and Batesville on tracts of land owned by him. He donated sites for churches and school-houses, selling lots, so he cleared little above his investment and taxes.

The hope to have a profitable business where he could be at home proved abortive. The receivers violated the elevator contract; the promissory note for his salary given by the company, due after the appointment of the receivers, given to defray cost of an engine for his elevator, was protested at the bank, his annual rate of salary denied, his Vincennes road and elevator earnings claimed for the company, and to save himself and the employees who had placed their savings with the company he, his brother Eri, and others, with the city of Lawrenceburg, filed petitions Nos. 1271 and 1229, April 5, and 12, 1871, in District court of the United States for the District of Indiana (Book VIII, p. 332), with the result that the I. C. & L. railroad was adjudicated a bankrupt, Nov. 8, 1871. The pleadings and evidence were printed in book form by the Indianapolis Journal Company, in 1871. The Saturday before July 19, 1871 (p. 2, Indianapolis Journal), the fourth day's proceedings in "Bankruptcy suit" are reported; in issues following the testimony shows how Mr. Richardson had been wronged, and came out like gold refined by fire. The "Replication of H. C. Lord," in answer to the petition for the removal of T. A. Morris and Melville E. Ingalls, assignees, subscribed and sworn to before H. F. Bra-shear, United States commissioner, July 31, 1872 (forty pages, printed by Clarke & Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, August, 1872), sets forth the "designs, frauds, delays, losses, methods of obtaining signatures," to which the creditors and stockholders of the I. C. & L. were subjected. On Oct. 27, 1872, New York City papers on "I. C. & L. Foreclosure" printed: "Counsel on behalf of the stockholders of the I. C. & L. railroad has begun proceedings in the Supreme court against the directors" (naming them) "charging them with conspiracy in fraudulently depressing the assets of the road, and forcing a foreclosure sale, so they could obtain control of the road at little cost by buying the stock," etc. The following copy of original covers ground relating to the final settlement with J. F. Richardson:

"Whereas there have been certain differences between Joel F. Richardson and the Indianapolis, Cincinnati & Lafayette Railroad Company, growing out of what is known as the 'elevator contract,' also the Indianapolis & Vincennes Railroad, as to which suits are now pending, and whereas said parties have settled all their disputes as to the above matters, as well as all other between them, now therefore, in consideration of the foregoing and one dollar paid by said Richardson, the said Indianapolis, Cincinnati & Lafayette Railroad Company hereby release said Richardson from all claims and demands, on account of said Indianapolis and Vincennes Railroad, the 'elevator contract,' or any other account whatever, the suits specified to be at once dismissed and Richardson saved from costs therein.

"Said Richardson has also received compensation for occupation of his land at New Point and Batesville up to this date.

"January 27, 1873.

"Indianapolis, Cincinnati & Lafayette R. R. Co.,

"by M. E. Ingalls, Pres."

The creditors were saved the chance to settle with the railroad company for their just claims. Mr. Richardson sold the elevator April 8, 1872. In partnership with two men he contracted to build the Toledo & Louisville railroad. His partners failing to furnish their part of the required funds, on Jan. 19, 1874, he was authorized to settle with the T. & L. Company for their claims, he bearing his partners' expenses besides his own share, they never paying him.

The very great and serious delays, risks and losses attending the transfer of freights in and through the city of Indianapolis, upon the tracks and lines of the several railroads, in consequence of the increasing number of lines, and the rapid growth of their business, which had greatly outgrown their means and facilities for transfer through the city, was a fact that necessitated relief. Grasping the problem, he determined to solve it.

Great undertakings are helped mightily by the capacity to foresee by that logic of the heart which finds out what will be by what ought to be. Affection and its thought clothed from nature, and through it brought forth, is the order of progression. Something spiritual leads, which is joined to the natural, and existence begins. Life clothed by nature thus puts itself forth, and appears in form; results are knowledge and affection made apparent. So came into being his project, which he named the "Indianapolis Circle Railway." Even after a problem is solved and appears in outline, to give it existence, permanence, requires untiring energy. Foundation work is hard, but upon its solidity depends the value of the structure to usefulness. He thoroughly explained his project "took from his pocket his drawing of the Circle railroad, explained its necessity and his idea about it" to the Rev. John H. Lozier, who was one of the trustees for the Fletcher property on the "South Side" of the city—blocked by traffic on railroads, and requested him to write it up and place it before the public eye. On Jan. 10, 1873, he laid it before Mr. J. H. Farquhar, then president of the Meridian National Bank at Indianapolis, formerly agent and attorney for the I. C. & L. Railroad Co., who thought favorably of it. On Feb. 7th, following, he had a talk with Mr. Dillard Rickets, who thought so favorably of it that he told Mr. Richardson to go and work the matter up, and he would furnish money for the enterprise. He was ex-president of the J. M. & I. railroad, had sold out his controlling interest in the "Jeff. Railroad," and was then superintendent of the Union Yards. On Feb. 26th he went to see Mr. Rickets, to whom Mr. Lord, who accompanied him, intended to sell his rolling-mill stock to procure money to pay Mr. Richardson interest due on a large loan. They learned that Mr. Rickets had become very ill and could not do business. Hearing of this, Mr. Richardson then showed Mr. Lord his plan for the Indianapolis Circle railroad, explaining it in detail. Mr. Lord was favorably impressed with Mr. Richardson's project, thought they could form a company, and when Mr. Rickets became well he could be one of its members. Mr. Richardson, on March 4, 1873, called on Mr. Farquhar and Mr. Mc-

Keen in regard to his project. Both talked very favorably. The latter suggested their seeing Messrs. Thomas Scott, B. E. Smith and others. They thought the land speculation a good arrangement, as well as the road. The idea was to buy a half mile of land all around, to be sold in lots on five payments. Mr. Richardson at once commenced inspecting his ideal route for the location of the line, Mr. Farquhar going with him March 12th, Mr. Bright—Mr. Ricketts' friend—March 17th. Mr. Richardson thought it unnecessary that the road should extend entirely around the city. The next day Mr. Richardson got the city maps and marked out the "Circle Road," and in the evening met Mr. Lord and Mr. Bright at the "Mason House," and agreed to employ Mr. Elliott to get names of all the landholders along the line. On March 21st, after examining the route, he saw Mr. Bright, who had the property all in shape to find the owners, and together they looked it over. On March 26th he began to feel uneasy, as he intuitively felt that "there was something wrong about the matter but hoped all was right." On April 1st Mr. Richardson and Mr. Bright talked over the prospects of the Circle railroad, which was not wholly satisfactory to Mr. Richardson, who thought they should get as many options for land as possible before they organized, and all for the company, so that the profit would build the road. On April 3d, Judge Martindale and Colonel Farquhar called at Mr. Lord's room. The former thought well of the Circle railroad project, and called twice more during the day. On Wednesday, April 9, 1873, the Articles of Association [See Indianapolis Journal, Thursday, April 9, page 5, under heading, "The One Thing Needful."] were filed with the Secretary of State (Box 405, Paper 9, renumbered now, Box 1131, Paper 6). H. C. Lord was elected president, J. H. Farquhar, treasurer and secretary. The first nine directors were: A. L. Roache, Thomas D. Kingan, John H. Farquhar, E. B. Martindale, Joel F. Richardson, M. M. Landis, Henry C. Lord, John Thomas and William Coughlin. The capital stock was one million dollars (increased to $1,250,000, May 8, 1874, Box 525, Paper 9). Thus the "Indianapolis Belt Railway Company," as it was named, came into being as a corporation. Its length was to be twelve miles, with double track, or more, with such switches and branches as it afterward found it necessary to build. There were twenty-six subscribers for stock, and H. C. Lord was trustee for the number of shares then not subscribed for, thus: A. L. Roache, David Gibson, John Thomas, Thomas D. Kingan, E. B. Martindale, J. J. Bingham, W. S. Hubbard, John C. Wright, Luther R. Martin, M. M. Landis, H. R. Allen, John Spann, all for $1,000 or twenty shares each; Byron K. Elliott for ten shares; H. C. Lord, John H. Farquhar, J. F. Richardson, 2,500 shares or $125,000 each; William Coughlin, R. J. Bright, H. G. Carey, Mears & Lilly, twenty shares; Thomas E. Chandler, ten shares; William Braden, Deloss Root, five shares each; Smith & Hanneman, ten shares; C. Van Deusen, George W. Parker, twenty shares each; H. C. Lord, trustee, 12,005 shares—$600,250.

Mr. Richardson wrote in his diary, April 9, 1873, "This is what I have been trying to accomplish for the last eight months. My subscription to the Belt Railway is $125,000." H. C. Lord, ex-president of the I. C. & L. Railroad Company, and Mr. Farquhar subscribed an equal amount, no other man for over $1,000. On April 24th there was a full meeting of the board. One man was requested to resign to give place to Mr. Benjamin E. Smith. On April 25, 1873, the board met and passed resolutions to adopt by-laws. Horace Scott, president of the J. M. & I. Railroad Company, and W. R. McKeen, president of the T. H. & I. Railroad Company, were elected directors. On April 30th Mr. Richardson and Mr. Reed, nephew of Mr. Lord, who was appointed engineer, started around the Belt. Mr. William Wiley Smith, formerly vice-president of the I. C. & L. Railroad Company, was one of the party, and was later elected vice-president. "Found the line as good as expected, a long walk but very satisfactory."

On July 22, 1873, Mr. Richardson commenced to work for the Belt Company. The board authorized "Ben Smith to purchase steel, let contract to Horace Scott to furnish cross-ties, and ordered J. F. Richardson to go to work to complete the railroad in four months' time." The contract for building bridges and trestle work was let to J. V. Chamberlain and Co. On Aug. 13, 1873, he received notification that he was appointed superintendent of construction of the Indianapolis Belt railroad. His diaries give an epitome of its history from Jan. 10, 1873, to

Aug. 27, 1877, when, having seven hundred desperate men to make earn their money, his diary pages were left blank. They fill, copied on letter size, thirty-three pages for 1873; eighteen and one-half pages for 1874; two and one-half pages for 1875; two items, 1876; three pages for 1877; dictated synopsis, two and one-half pages.

On April 11, 1873, Mr. Richardson met Mr. Roache, who said that he was afraid that other parties would get up another company and get railroad parties who had more power to carry the road away from them. On Aug. 28, 1873, in his diary, Mr. Richardson wrote: "Sometimes men make mistakes, and sometimes they think they do, and time proves they did not; I think I did in this Belt road, but I hope it will prove otherwise. I certainly have the 'blues'—everything seems to hang—in fact, it seems to me that there is some speculation going on of which I am kept ignorant. Well, I propose to put in my time for the Belt road the best I can—not speculate—so as to kill the enterprise." To the time that construction work began, Mr. Richardson worked to procure right of way, took interested parties over the proposed routes, and through snow, mud, rain and heat; strained every energy to make progress. The financial condition was critical. The company had arranged with Jay Cook & Co. for the money; Mr. Lord, with its bonds for the same, was in New York for it when this bank failed (it had the deposit of the United States). He differed in view from those who wished foreign capital to build and own the road, he thinking it should be so done by local capitalists. On Sept. 23, 1873, Jay Cook & Co. failed and financial disaster spread over the country. On Sept. 23, 1873, when there was no money to pay the men, he went to see Mr. Kingan, and they signed the company's note for $6,000. On Sept. 25, 1873, banks all over the country were closed, but the company gave orders to grocery men, boarding masters and feed stores, and most of the men kept at work; two hundred men quit. On Oct. 3, 1873, Colonel Farquhar was buried. On Oct. 8, 1873, Mr. Richardson went to the river and sunk the pier foundation, which settled firmly and in accordance with the plan. Messrs. Lord, Scott, Smith and Richardson met at Mr. Scott's office and talked over the Belt road and prospects. Mr. Richardson told them that $2,500 or $3,000 would finish the work from Vincennes road to trestle work and $1,500 to $2,000 would finish to the Terre Haute & Vandalia railroad, and bridge foundation was half done. On Oct. 10th they commenced putting in timber at the West abutment. They spiked and weighed it down with stone and sand. On Nov. 10, 1873, the board passed resolutions to pay the men off at ninety days. On "Feb. 26, 1874, Mr. Lord not being present, Mr. Richardson was elected temporary chairman. The board of directors passed resolutions to give the company's notes for the amount of her liability. The note for $25,000 was executed; Messrs. Lord, Thomas, Scott, B. E. Smith, being absent, were to sign if they would." On May 26, 1874, the board of directors passed the following resolution: "Resolved, that in order to facilitate negotiations, provide the funds deemed necessary for the purchase of the necessary right of way and real estate for the road, and for constructing and equipping the same and securing its proposed traffic, the capital stock of the Indianapolis Belt Railway Company be increased to twelve hundred and fifty thousand dollars to be issued from time to time and to such parties and for such purposes as are above stated as shall be ordered by the Finance committee."

Owing to the financial depression work was stopped Nov. 11, 1874. On March 26, 1875, Mr. Richardson signed for one hundred shares of stock in the new organization. There being no prospect for work continuing until better times, the directors carried the debt to '76 of $90,000. It was decided to combine with it the Stock Yard, and on Aug. 29, 1876, a new organization named Union Railroad and Stock Yard Company filed articles of association, many of the old company sold out to it or remained with the new. This was planned to be financed by the exchange of its bonds for the same amount of Indianapolis bonds, and, in order to make the project possible efforts were made to secure Mayor Caven's election. Until its building was necessitated to furnish a hungry multitude with employment, little progress was made. On a petition of a majority of the citizens of Indianapolis an ordinance contract was passed by the council of Indianapolis (Sec. 1315 to 1324, both inclusive, City ordinances in 1895) to loan its credit to the company in the way of issuing the city bonds to the amount of $500,000 (Oct. 6, 1876), payable in twenty years, to be dated Jan. 1, 1877, the Belt Road bonds to be given to the city to secure it against the payment of the bonds so issued by the city, dated Dec. 1, 1876. The exchange of these bonds was to be made in accordance with said agreement. On Aug. 9, 1875, Mr. Richardson accepted the offered position of maintenance of way on the I. B. & W. railroad, then very much run down, and in the receiver's hands. He put the road in good order. With General Pease, he successfully handled the railroad strike, they personally starting out the trains at Bloomington, Ill. He made a wonderful record in clearing obstructions of trains ditched by heavy snow drifts while with this company. In 1875 Mayor Caven was elected Mayor of Indianapolis, and in September he walked around the Belt railroad embankment, and sitting on the abutment constructed for its bridge over White river—sunk Oct. 8, 1873, under Mr. Richardson's supervision—"considered whether the great work of a road around the city could be put in motion" (Indianapolis Sentinel, May 18, 1881, also p. 210, History of Marion County and Indianapolis). His logical mind grasped the outlook so long diligently presented to interested parties by Mr. Richardson. He there decided that "this was the only project that could accomplish the results he desired." On July 17, 1876, he read to the council the Belt road message. On election day, May 1, 1877, the employed men on the Belt road work thoroughly understood that the Belt road work depended on Mayor Caven's re-election. "Election day, all men went and voted," is Mr. Richardson's diary record. On April 27, 1877, Mr. John Thomas had got permission from Gen. George B. Wright, receiver for the I. B. & W. Railroad Company, for Mr. Richardson to come over and organize the men on the Belt. The Union Railroad Transfer and Stock Yard Company had filed articles of association Aug. 29, 1876 (Box 546, paper 9, Secretary of State office), to complete the Belt. Every one had reason to rejoice at Mayor Caven's re-election. He did grand work for the Belt road project and Indianapolis; the Belt road project re-elected him. After the passage of the ordinance, attorneys gave their opinion that bonds issued under the same would be invalid unless validated by the Legislature, which act was passed by it, approved March 2, 1877. To Mr. Justus C. Adams, perhaps, more credit is due than any one person in the Legislature that year for having secured the passage of the act. Despite the opposition the measure passed both houses of the Legislature. The greatest difficulties seemed to have been surmounted, and the work of construction was begun. This company continued the work until June 1st, when it was interrupted at a most inopportune time, in the midst of serious labor troubles and when work was almost impossible to be found, and when men were depressed and desperate. Persons were not satisfied with the amount of money awarded to them for the right of way. Mayor Caven surmounted every obstacle. The crisis passed. He said "as to results that arose from this undertaking there is only one word that seems fit for the purpose—stupendous. Nothing has paid so well, or been of so great value as a single enterprise. Starting with a stock of thirty cents on a dollar, each year saw it rise in the percentages. In 1879 and 1880 cash dividends were ten per cent on the face of the stock and in 1881 sold for $1.50. The burden on the city's finances was at once materially decreased. * * * The fact is apparent that the benefits of the Belt Road are in their infancy."

Mr. Richardson voluntarily resigned on the I. B. & W. railroad May 5, 1877, to superintend the construction of the Belt, which he that year finished—Nov. 12, 1877. He was a successful manager of railroad strikes. He was master of the situation when Mayor Caven sent to him that desperate crowd "to be kept out of the city." Having discharged one leader, and outwitted others bent on mischief, as the tool supply became ample rapid strides in the work, long mapped out in his mind, brought the Belt to completion. Again was his hope to have a business where he could be more at home with his family disappointed. Accurate knowledge came to the directors too late, and he lost the opportunity to operate the road by one vote, because some thought the president of the I. C. & L. Company antagonistic to him on account of the bankruptcy suit, and the co-operation of all railroads was desired.

The Belt railroad project "furnished labor to the unemployed, raised the burden on the city's finances, brought a large cattle market, and placed a great amount of taxable property," there being now (1906) sixty-six private industries along its line, and "it has become a great clearing house of an enormous trade. It has made Indianapolis the fifth city in importance in this country in receipts for packing and shipping." The stockyards from Nov. 12, 1877, to Nov. 4, 1904, received and handled there 39,113,370 head of live stock, valued at $642,098,655. For the year 1904 the total number of cars handled by the Belt was 1,066,836. In 1906 the number was 1,193,201. From all parts of Europe and America the officials of the company have received requests for information concerning the manner in which it is conducted. It was the first, and is considered the model, Belt railroad of the world. Its construction saved Indianapolis from a bread riot, and solved the problem how to make an inland city great. These items give a slight idea of results from the carrying to completion of Mr. Richardson's original project. The large amount due him for borrowed money was a total loss, and to meet his obligations, and debts he carried for others, he sold all of his Belt stock much below par. Never having had cause to blush for a dishonorable act, when disappointment came, he was always cheerful and accepted his lot. He said "he had learned as much from his reverses as he did from his successes, and he had always been able to provide well for the actual needs of life."

The following letters from men long and intimately associated with Mr. Richardson indicate the esteem and good will he enjoyed among those who knew him best:

I cordially recommend him to any railroad officials or parties needing that kind of service.

Office of the Indianapolis Rolling Mill Company.

Indianapolis, 6, Aug., 1878.

J. C. Stanton, Esq., Chattanooga, Tenn.

Dear Sir:

It is with great pleasure that I introduce the bearer, Mr. J. F. Richardson, of Delhi, Ohio. I have been intimately acquainted with Mr. Richardson for nearly twenty-five years and know him to be a man of sterling integrity, sound judgment, and a thorough, practical railroad man. As a track man, superintendent or railroad constructor I know of no one his superior in anything he may undertake. If you can arrange any business with or for him you will not be disappointed.

Yours truly,

W. O. ROCKWOOD.

Mr. Richardson got many calls in the United States to inspect localities for railroad routes, to report resources, and make estimates of putting railroads in business condition. He was considered the best posted man in this line of work. By an extra he was conveyed and returned over the other railroads when sent afar on such a mission, unless it was secret. Difficulty being found to find a competent man to lay out the complex switches at Grand Crossing, South Chicago, he was telegraphed for and did the work. He came near losing his life in the Chicago riot when laying track for the road's entrance. Felled by a cross tie, and struck in the head by several bricks hurled by the mob, he was removed, supposed to be dead. In twenty minutes signs of life came. During his remaining life he felt its effects, but he saved the company's franchise. Fortunately the gift of a fine gold watch and chain by the "employees of track department of I. C. & L. R. R., presented to him July 5, 1865," was that morning forgotten, and thus saved. His assistant had his stolen. The mayor gave Mr. Richardson orders to go ahead with the work, but he did not afford police protection. (See Chicago papers). On Jan. 12, 1881, having finished the work and settled up, he returned home. He was again called from his retirement to build the I. B. & W. extension. He permanently retired Aug. 30, 1882.

In Chatham, N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. Richardson joined the Christian Church. Patriotism was an energetic principle beating in the hearts and active in the lives of both. Righteousness they considered the great constructive idea of a true government or political party. Mr. Richardson belonged to Company E, 18th Regiment Ohio Militia, but was exempt from military duty by reason of having furnished a three years' substitute from the 27th of July, 1864, that he might be of greater service by keeping the railroad guarded from accidents to passing troops. His timely discovery and removal of obstructions through special detectives earned him the enmity of the "Knights of the Golden Circle." His employe, Milton Bryan, a sound operator, sitting outside the telegraph office at Camp Morton, overheard the "Knights" arranging by telegraph to free the prisoners, arm, and unite with them to destroy the railroads. As soon as this was reported Governor Morton was informed and the plot frustrated. A happy day to Mr. Richardson was when he had had Lincoln safely transported over the I. C. & L. railroad on his way to be inaugurated. He was a charter and first life member of Monitor Lodge, No. 445, F. & A. M., of Delhi, Ohio, in which connection the following paragraphs are self-explanatory:

Delhi, O., Feb. 10, 1894.

Dear Brother Joel F. Richardson:

At the stated meeting of Monitor Lodge, No. 445, F. & A. M., held at their lodge rooms Feb. 5, 1894, your last letter to us was read by Bro. Thomas Kite, and by a vote of the lodge was ordered spread on the minutes. The following resolutions were then offered by Bro. Kite:

WHEREAS, Brother Joel F. Richardson, one of the charter members of Monitor Lodge, No. 445, now a resident of Indianapolis, Ind., has signified to this lodge, that although outside its jurisdiction, probably never to return, he is desirous of retaining his membership with us until summoned by the Grand Master of the universe to the Celestial Lodge above, and

WHEREAS, This lodge remembers with affection the services he has rendered to it in its early days, among which was making it possible for it to have a home, therefore be it

RESOLVED, That Monitor Lodge extends to Bro. Richardson its appreciation of his determination, and the assurance of the deep fraternal regard which is here felt for him, also that as a token of that regard we have elected him as our first life member with the exemption from further dues during his life. This action to take effect with the beginning of the present fiscal year, and that notice of the same be tendered him through a committee consisting of Brothers G. L. Barringer and G. W. Bugbee, the only other remaining charter members of this lodge now holding their membership with us. These resolutions were adopted by a rising vote, every member present voting in its favor.

G. W. BUGBEE, Secy.

We can only add to the above our sincere wishes for your long life, health, happiness and prosperity, and when the Grand Master in His infinite wisdom calls us from the labors of the lodge below, to the refreshment of the Grand Lodge above, may we there all meet again, beyond the power of change, to live forever.

G. L. BARRINGER,
G. W. BUGBEE,
Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

Again is Monitor Lodge called to mourn the loss of a brother very dear to all its members. In the death of Brother Joel F. Richardson another charter member of this lodge has been transferred to the Celestial Lodge above, and while we cannot but feel a great weight of sorrow at his death, yet we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well and does not willingly afflict His children.

Brother Richardson was one of the founders of this lodge and we owe our early success probably as much to his self-sacrificing devotion to its welfare, as to any other one of its charter members. Since the death of his wife, which occurred about two years ago, he has often expressed a wish to go and join her and be at rest. His wish is accomplished, and we his brethren who have known him for many years, and were well acquainted with his beautiful and loving home life, can not but believe that he is happy beyond all earthly happiness in that world which knows no parting and in which the weary are at rest.

To the children of our esteemed departed Brother we tender our heartfelt sympathy in their great affliction, and commend them to the keeping of our Heavenly Father. We will cherish the memory of our deceased brother in our hearts, cause this memorial to be spread upon a page set apart in the minutes of our Lodge, and send a copy of the same to the family.

Past Master G. W. BUGBEE, Past Master THOS. W. KITE, Past Master F. DANNER.

Another memorial of interest is that of the Marion County Agricultural and Horticultural Society, which we herewith present:

In memory of Joel F. Richardson, who departed this life Feb. 4, 1895. He was born in Keene, N. H., April 22, 1823, being over seventy-one years of age at his death. He grew up on a farm until nineteen years of age. Leaving the farm he spent over forty years of his active life in railroad service. For years he held the position of railroad superintendent on the I. C. & L. R. R. and branches. He was the projector and builder of the Belt railroad, an enterprise which has proven to be of incalculable benefit to the commercial interests of our city and country.

Upon retiring from railroad services he spent the remainder of his years upon a farm southeast of this city. He loved the quiet of farm life and gave it his best thoughts so far as his failing health would allow. He was much interested in bee culture and had at his death quite a large apiary in excellent condition. He was much interested in the work of this society; his ill health did not permit him to attend except occasionally. He was broad-minded in all his undertakings, a man of strict integrity in all his business engagements. His habits of life were exceptionally good, he used neither tobacco nor intoxicant.

In his death this country has lost an exemplary, enterprising, broad-minded citizen, his family a loving father, and this society a most useful member, therefore

RESOLVED, that we tender to the surviving members of his family our heartfelt sympathy, and that this report be spread upon the records of this society.

Respectfully-submitted,

I. N. COTTON,
J. W. APPLE,
J. J. W. BILLINGSLEY.
Committee.

Unanimously carried.

Mr. Richardson never used tobacco or intoxicants, and was always a strong advocate of temperance. He was a Prohibitionist from Fremont's time, and among his papers his family found a letter notifying him that he had been chosen candidate for representative by the Prohibition party. But he voted for Benjamin Harrison for President. Mr. Richardson could not be bribed. In intercourse he was affable, unostentatious in manner, of generous benevolence. Honesty, carefulness, punctuality, reliability and charity were prominent traits of his character. When not inspecting the railroad, he was first to his office in the morning, and last to leave at night. When he was called upon to repair a "break," replace a bridge by tornado torn from its foundations, or to transport ten thousand passengers in one day, he knew exactly where to begin and how to do it. In giving orders to his employes mildness of tone prevailed. In every emergency call he went with them. He could see effect from cause and where blame rested. Faithful, careful, efficient service placed all under his charge in the line of promotion; he inspired them with noble ideals of manhood, inducing thrift and respectability. At one time eighteen months passed that not a car wheel was off the track. He insisted that accidents were caused by carelessness. No breach of trust was overlooked, his eternal vigilance was ever ready to detect any indifference, and if timely warning failed to correct, a more careful man soon filled the position. Praise from him meant genuine worth and happy security. No one knew when he would inspect work; a freight making a trip, might take him aboard five times. He would go by on a passenger train to where he next wished to stop, so no matter where he was last seen, no surprise came from seeing him where he next appeared.

Mechanical laws he understood and knew how to apply. With one man, stakes, hand level and tape line, he could accurately lay off complicated switches. Several men made fortunes on his inventions. His deep blue eyes were penetrating, but had a humorous twinkle. A very close observer was he, and a man of rare acumen. Intuition and keen foresight made his services reliable, valuable and acceptable. Ever trying to perfect construction work; to build up paying business for his employers; to relieve from causes of needless expense to them and to the general public; to secure confidence and general satisfaction to railroad patrons, courtesy, comfort and safety to the traveling public; to promote efficient service from employes; to prevent their being defrauded or imposed upon; to secure the welfare of the general public; to these ends Joel Foster Richardson devoted his affection, thought, influence, energy and vitality. Prevailing powers applied in his life work were "Love to God and the neighbor." He loved the cardinal virtues and lived them. The family motto, "Trust in God," his life exemplified.

Giving directions for the end, he died Feb. 4, 1895. Mrs. Richardson was called to rest Dec. 8, 1892. In Section 36, Lot 198, Crown Hill cemetery, Indianapolis, were placed their remains. Fittingly the Indianapolis Belt railroad symbolized his career of usefulness.

Man's life is not a chance medley of only passing moment, but a wondrous apprenticeship, in which souls learn eternal principles to do immortal work, and death is but the entrance to a state of advanced life. The result is energy in evil or good. The true man, feeding on the life-giving principles of love and wisdom from God, embodying them in his active life work, sees not death but transition.

WILLIAM RATHERT, who has been engaged as a grocer in Indianapolis for nearly thirty years and has also various other business interests in that city, is a native of Westphalia, Germany, born May 14, 1852, in Wietersheim. His parents, Christian and Eleonore (Prange) Rathert, were also born in Germany. William Rathert was educated in his native land, and was a boy of fifteen when he came to this country, arriving in Indianapolis Sept. 20, 1867. Learning carpentering and building, he followed that business for a number of years, in 1872 entering into partnership with his mother's brother, Fred Prange. They did contracting and building, putting up many substantial residences, stores and other structures in their time.

In 1878 Mr. Rathert changed his business, engaging in the line to which he has since given the principal share of his attention. He went into partnership in the grocery business with Charles H. Schwomeyer, and they continued together until 1896, enjoining a most lucrative patronage. In that year Mr. Rathert bought out Mr. Schwomeyer's interest, and he has since conducted the establishment on his own account. Mr. Rathert is noted for clear business insight, and he has never allowed a good opportunity to slip by, though he is not by any means inclined to undue sharpness or shrewdness. He is just, business-like and systematic, and his hold on the favor of his patrons is due to ever courteous treatment of and honest dealing with them all. In the course of an active career he has become interested in various concerns, and is at present a director of the Grocers Baking Company, of which he was one of the principal organizers and is a leading stockholder. He also has an interest in the Indiana German Fire Insurance Company, and the German Security and Investment Company, and owns considerable property, in different part of the city. Early in life, before he was twenty-one in fact, he gave evidence of his sagacity by purchasing a piece of land which he judged so well that to-day it is worth more than ten times the amount of his original investment.

Mr. Rathert is an energetic man, and alive to the practical needs of himself and his fellowmen, whether of a social or a business nature. He is prominent among his countrymen, and active in the support of the German Protestant Orphans Home; a member of the Independent Turners; a member of Zion's German Evangelical Church, and of the Sick Benefit Society. The last named organization has twenty-seven members, and they celebrated their thirty-third anniversary the first Thursday in May, 1906.

On Sept. 24, 1879, Mr. Rathert married Miss Louisa Schwomeyer, whose parents, Charles H. and Louisa (Kleine) Schwomeyer, are two of the oldest residents of Indianapolis. Mrs. Rathert was educated at the German English School in Indianapolis, where most of the prominent German citizens of to-day attended. Mr. and Mrs. Rathert have had four children, two of whom survive: William Franklin and Paul Edwin.

JOHN RAUCH, the leading cigar manufacturer of Indianapolis, was born in Franklin county, Ind., Aug. 4, 1850, son of George and Mary Eva (Boll) Rauch.

His father was born in the town of Hackenback, Germany, and the mother was born in Bavaria. They came to this country about 1845, and were married in Oldenburg, Ind., Oct. 18, 1849, by the Rev. Father Rudolph. Both father and mother were born on the same day, Feb. 4, 1825. Frank Rauch, the grandfather of John, was an officer in the French army under Napoleon, and was killed in battle. His wife, Kate, was born in Germany, and died in Cape Girardeau, Mo. The maternal grandfather of John Rauch was Paulus Boll, who was born Aug. 15, 1797, and died in Southgate, Franklin Co., Ind., May 21, 1860. Katherine Boll, his wife, was born Nov. 12, 1796, and died Nov. 17, 1876, in Southgate, Franklin Co., Indiana.

George and Mary Eva Rauch had a family of five children, all of whom are living: John is mentioned below; Albert, born June 8, 1852, is an employe of the Indianapolis Gas Company; Rosa, born Aug. 1, 1854, married William Rosbrock, and they live in this city, where he is employed in mercantile life; George, born Feb. 13, 1857, is a great traveler and when last heard from was in Denver, Colo.; Louise, born June 21, 1861, is a resident of Indianapolis. All the members of this family were born in Southgate, Franklin Co., Indiana.

John Rauch secured his education in the public schools of his native county, and when he was eleven years old began an apprenticeship at the trade of cigar making in a Cincinnati shop. For some two years he followed the life of a journeyman cigarmaker, and then formed a business connection with his father. When the father entered the Union army, in 1864, young John continued the manufacturing enterprise in which the two were engaged, which was presently moved to Brookville, where young Mr. Rauch sold out, and sought employment at Connersville, being engaged at cigar making at that point for two years. After this he formed a partnership with Alex Mayer, with whom he continued in business for some three years.

John Rauch came to Indianapolis in 1871, and associated with his brother Albert under the firm name of John Rauch & Bro., they started a cigar making business. About 1879 Mr. Rauch bought out the interest of his brother, and has since carried on the business alone. This business was begun in a small way, the leader being a cigar known as the "Two Brothers." The box contained pictures of the two brothers, hence its name. This was the beginning of a very successful business career, and the John Rauch Cigar factory is now one of the leading industries in its line in the city. Steady employment is given by Mr. Rauch to from seventy-five to eighty workmen, and he turns out the following well known and popular brands of cigars: "The Capitol City," which has been on the market since 1878; the "Melrose," the "Hoosier Poet" and the "Tampiola." These four brands have won for the house an enviable reputation and are popular with the public.

Mr. Rauch was married May 21, 1875, in the Catholic Church at Lick Run, Cincinnati, to Miss Mary Catherine Schoen, born in Cincinnati, Aug. 19, 1855. She was reared and educated in her native city, and has become the mother of three children: Emma, born June 7, 1876, is now the wife of Gustave Kevers, of the firm of Fertig & Kevers, extensive painting contractors of Indianapolis; Edward, born Dec. 21, 1879, is bookkeeper in his father's business; and John, born July 16, 1890, is attending Harvard College, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Mr. Rauch has been very successful in his life work, and when he began business in Indianapolis he had but fifteen dollars. This he gave to his mother, and secured work for himself, out of which has grown his present fine business. His payroll now exceeds $800 per week, including the men in the factory as well as those on the road. The business house of Mr. Rauch, which is located at Nos. 122-124 West New York street, is the embodiment of neatness and cleanliness. The office, separate from the workrooms, is tastefully and conveniently arranged for the transaction of a large and growing business.

Mr. Rauch is one of the prominent secret society men in Indianapolis and he holds membership in nineteen different societies. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, a Mystic Shriner, and holds other Masonic connections. In all the German societies in the city he is actively interested, and is a charter member of the Manufacturers' Club, which is the leading association of manufacturers in Indiana, counting among its members as it does not only the principal representatives of the manufacturing interests of Indianapolis, but as well those of the State. He is also one of the oldest members of the Commercial Club in the city, and is rated as one of the active and public spirited citizens of Indianapolis. In politics he is a Democrat, though not an active or aggressive partisan. John Rauch has never sought public honors in the field of politics, and has declined, though often solicited, to allow his name to go before the public. Personally he is warm hearted and generous, though quiet and unassuming. Assuredly there is no better citizen in Indianapolis than the gentleman whose name introduces these paragraphs.

Edward Rauch, son of John, has already developed into a clear-headed and keen business man, and much of the detail work in the office as well as the sales and collections devolve upon him. He is a scholarly and gentlemanly young man.

JOHN O. CASON, a pharmacist in Lebanon, Boone county, Ind., is a native of this State, born in Lebanon, Feb. 14, 1862, and belongs to a family which traces its descent back in unbroken line to three brothers, French Huguenots and refugees in Holland, who came to America and settled in North Carolina. His parents were John O., Sr., and Sarah (Bowers) Cason.

The paternal grandfather was James Cason, a native of South Carolina and an early settler in Boone county, Ind., where he owned a large farm near Thorntown and also worked as a carpenter. He died in Thorntown at an advanced age. His wife was Margaret (Rutherford) Cason, of Scotch ancestry, and lived to be eighty-six years old. She died in Lebanon, the mother of four sons and three daughters. The maternal grandparents were William and Lydia (Butts) Bowers. The former was a native of Pennsylvania, of German descent, who came to Union county, Ind., in a very early day and engaged there in farming. He died there in middle age and his wife lived to be seventy-six. They had four children.

John O. Cason, Sr., a native of Boone county, married Sarah Bowers, of Union county. Their four children are: Eva, wife of Dillon Ferrell, of Toledo, Washington; Ella, wife of A. J. Ward, of Mt. Vernon, Ill.; Aletha, widow of Harry Gray, of Toledo, Wash.; and John O. The father was a blacksmith and wagon maker in Lebanon and always resided in Boone county. For a couple of terms he was a member of the Lebanon board of aldermen. He was cut off at the untimely age of thirty-one, in December, 1861. He and his wife were both members of the Christian Church. She was married (second) to Henderson Graves, but is now again a widow, living in Toledo, Washington.

John O. Cason, the younger, lived in Boone county till he was eight years old and then was taken to Sullivan county, his mother's home at that time. He attended the Union Christian College in Sullivan county and after his school days were over, began clerking in a drug store, a line of business which he has followed ever since.

On June 14, 1881, Mr. Cason married Miss Viola Thompson, daughter of Lewis and Lydia (Ewing) Thompson, and immediately settling in Lebanon, they have made their home there ever since. Their family consists of but one daughter, Beulah, who is the wife of Rosco Knight of Coatesville, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Cason are members of the Christian Church and both belong to the order of Rathbone Sisters. Mr. Cason is also a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Macca-bees. In politics he is a Republican. The family residence is at No. 810 West Chicago street, where Mr. Cason built a most comfortable and inviting home.

From a former history of Boone county, compiled by Harden & Spahr and published in 1887, we take the following:

"The name of Cason in the Northern States is uncommon, but in the Southern States it is a very common one. The family on coming to this country settled at an early day in Virginia. Through works of genealogy the name is traced to the south of France, from which place members of the family became refugees in Holland, and joined William of Orange in his invasion of Ireland. At the time of emigrating to this country they had become mixed with Irish, English and Scotch blood.

"Thomas Cason, the father of the family that settled in Boone county at an early date, was born in Virginia on Dec. 8, 1759, and from there emigrated to South Carolina. He was a school teacher most of his life. He married Miss Margaret Neill, Dec. 30, 1794. Miss Neill was born March 24, 1762. She was a woman of excellent mental ability and great force of character. Her experience, during the Revolutionary war, if written, would read like a tale of romance. She was an ardent Whig, while a majority of her neighbors were Tories. She had two brothers, only one being old enough to enlist in the war. Several times her house was robbed and everything in it destroyed except a bed on which an invalid mother lay. One of these times her brother had come home from the army on Sunday morning and was relating the news to the family and some young ladies who had come in to see him, when they were surprised by the click of gun-locks from a squad of Hessians at the door of the house. The girls ran in the face of the Hessians and the brother out at the other side of the house. One of the Hessians, seeing her brother would escape, ran around the house, while Miss Neill, seeing his intention, ran through the house, and, meeting him, struck up his gun just as he fired, undoubtedly by this act saving the life of her brother. On returning to the house her young brother became alarmed, and ran out, and climbing a high fence, was soon out of sight. The Hessians did not seem disposed to shoot, but followed after him, going to the bars instead of the fence, laying down the middle one, but when one of them would attempt to go through the girls would jerk him back. One of the Hessians became so exasperated at Miss Neill that he struck her across the head with his gun, severely wounding her, the scar of which she carried to her grave. The Hessians then went to the house and destroyed everything of value, not leaving Miss Neill a change of clothing. The house had been robbed in the same manner before. Her older brother was, before the war closed, murdered.

"Thomas Cason, owing to his crippled condition (from white swelling), was never molested by the Tories, although his brothers were in the service in the colonies. After his marriage he settled on a farm, but owing to having a large amount of security debts to pay, he had to sell the farm (a valuable one), negroes, and all his other property, except a small amount of household goods, and then go to Ohio and teach school so as to secure money to move his family to that State. Their children, four boys and one girl, were all born in South Carolina, the daughter dying before they left that State. William, the oldest, was born Sept. 19, 1797; John, May 30, 1799; James, Feb. 13, 1802, and Samuel, March 5, 1804. Thomas arrived in Ohio April 5, 1804, and the family moved in August and September following. From there they came to Indiana Territory in 1814 or 1815, settling in Union county, on a farm and remaining there until October, 1831, when John, James and Samuel emigrated to Boone county, all settling in the woods and opening up farms near Thorntown. William, who never married, remained with the old folks, staying on the farm until his death, May 16, 1850, aged fifty-two years, seven months and twenty-seven days. His father died Oct. 12, 1835, and his mother, July 25, 1846. William Cason was a man of excellent character and habits, and exerted an influence for good over the people of his county equal if not greater than any one who ever lived in it. He was probate judge over twenty years, and was regarded one of the best probate lawyers in eastern Indiana.

"John Cason married Fannie Burkhalter. There were eight children born to them, five girls and three boys, named Margaret, Elizabeth, Mary, Phebe J., Marion N., Ershula, Oliver and Samuel. John Cason always resided on a farm and devoted his entire attention to operating and cultivating it. He was a man of unusually kind disposition, and had a kind word for all whom he met. He departed this life in 1868. His wife survived him many years and died at an old age.

"James Cason married Margaret Ritherford Dec. 13, 1827. Her family were of the old English stock of Ritherfords, the name originating from Rither's Ford, a stream near the line between England and Scotland, on which there was a ford on the land of a man named Rither. Her mother's folk were named Harper, her grandfather being the owner of and giving the name to Harper's Ferry, Virginia, which old John Brown immortalized. James Cason resided on the land he first settled on in coming to Boone county, until the fall of 1865, when he moved to Thorntown, where he lived until his death. He was a carpenter as well as farmer, and was a master of his trade. There are many houses, barns, bridges and other structures yet standing in this county which well attest the care and industry with which he did his work. He was outspoken and frank almost to a fault, and was extremely active and energetic. He departed this life Jan. 31, 1875, leaving his wife surviving him, who lived to past eighty years of age. She was kind and genial to all who met her. Her mental faculties were far above an ordinary person's, and her devotion to her children was untiring. There were nine children born to them, six boys and three girls—one of whom, William, died at the age of four weeks. The others lived to be grown. They were Thomas J., Samuel L., Sarah Ann, John O., Joseph N., Margaret E., Mary E. and James H.

"Samuel Cason first married Mary Burkhalter and they had nine children, six girls and three boys, Jane, Mary, Cynthia, Elizabeth, Margaret, Fannie, William N., Joseph M., and John. She departed this life about 1844. Samuel Cason, soon after coming to this county was made one of the associate judges of the Circuit Court. Judge Cason was considered one of the ablest lawyers and best judges of the State. At the time of his death, and for some years prior thereto, he was president of the First National Bank of Thorntown. Under his management the stock, at the time of his death, sold at twenty-six per cent premium. There was never a dollar lost while he was at its head. He had for several years been one of the directors of the Lafayette & Indianapolis Railroad and resigned the position when he became convinced it was managed in the interest of a few directors instead of the stockholders. Both James Cason and himself had devoted much time, expense and labor in procuring the organization of the company and establishing the road through this county. Judge Cason was married the second time to Alpheia Norris, and by this marriage there were three children, two girls and one boy—Lysia and Idia, and James. Judge Cason departed this life Aug. 6, 1871, at the age of seventy-seven years, five months and one day, his wife surviving him.

"It required thirteen days for the three brothers to move their families from Union county to this county, the distance being only about one hundred miles. It rained every day or night while they were on the road. Swamping and breaking down was an every day occurrence; and to cap the climax of all their troubles the wagon in which the family of James Cason was riding, when within five miles of their destination upset in a creek, plunging them and everything belonging to them under water; and although it was cold and raining they had to camp out of doors in their wet clothes and bed covers.

"The winter of 1831-32, after the three brothers settled in this county, was a severe one. It set in early, a heavy snow falling the last of November or the first of December, and lay on the ground until about the middle of March. They had all landed in the woods 'without a stick amiss,' except Samuel, who had a small log cabin on his land when he came to it. It was spring before some of the chimneys were higher than the mantle-piece. Neither were there any doors in their houses until spring. Old quilts and sheets had to be substituted, and when some of the doors were made they were split boards from trees. No mortar could be made to stop the open space between the logs of the house, so split pieces of timber and old clothes were the only substitute, and the howl of the wolf and other wild animals was heard nightly."

WILLIAM LOGAN LINGENFELTER, who resides at No. 516 East Tenth street, Indianapolis, is a well known and representative citizen of Marion county. He was born in what is now Carroll county, Ky., June 1, 1828, the youngest of ten children, and the only one of the family now living. His parents were John and Elizabeth (Wyatt) Lingenfelter. The family is of German lineage. Michael Lingenfelter, the father of John, and the grandfather of William L., was probably the first of the family in this country, and spelled his name Lingenfelder. He settled in Maryland and after some years removed to Kentucky. When well advanced in years he came to Indianapolis, where he died at the home of his youngest son, William Lingenfelter.

John Lingenfelter was born in Maryland, and when a young man removed to Kentucky, where he married Elizabeth Wyatt, a native of that State. They came to Indiana in 1830, and settled in Rush county. His trade was that of shoemaking, and he followed that vocation for many years. He removed still later to St. Omer, Decatur county, where he worked at his trade and kept a hotel. Traveling in those days was done mostly by wagon, and his hotel became a popular stopping place for travelers on what was the popular highway in those early times. In 1840 he removed to a nearby farm, where he died in July, 1843. His youngest daughter, died about a month prior to his death. She was a bright and attractive young woman about eighteen years of age. Mr. Lingenfelter was a typical pioneer, and was a good citizen. In politics he was a Whig. Quite late in life he became a member of the Methodist Church, of which his wife had long been a member. She was a worthy companion to her husband, and passed a most exemplary and Christian life. For many years she survived her husband, passing away in 1866, when seventy-eight years old, in the home of her son, William L. She and her husband were both born the same year, and they were the parents of five sons and five daughters.

The first of the Lingenfelter family to come to Indianapolis were uncles of William L., William, or "Uncle Billy," as he was familiarly called, and Archibald Lingenfelter. They became prominent in the early annals of Indianapolis. Mrs. Mary Ann Flack, and Margaret, who became the wife of John Blake, sisters of William L., were the first of his immediate family to come to the city. They were followed in 1840 by William L., himself, who was induced to come by the representations of his uncles and sisters. Here he attended school the first two winters after his arrival. The school which he attended more than sixty years ago was on Pennsylvania street, between Ohio and Market streets. The spring following his arrival he returned to the homestead, but returned for school the second winter. He made his home with his uncle Billy, and after the death of his father and sister, his mother moved with the remaining children of the family to a rented farm in Rush county. In 1845 Mr. Lingenfelter came to Indianapolis a third time to become an apprentice at the carpenter's trade, at which time he was over seventeen years old. He was to remain with his brother-in-law, Moses Flack, until he attained his majority. The health of Mr. Flack declined, and before the ending of his apprenticeship he assumed the interest of his brother-in-law in the business, and when Mr. Flack died the young man was left in charge of all the affairs of the enterprise.

Mr. Lingenfelter was married Aug. 29, 1849, to Margaret C., daughter of Henry and Hannah (Dunn) Brady, pioneers of Marion county. Mr. Brady and his wife were born in Pennsylvania, and came to Johnson county, Ind., in 1821, and the following year moved to Warren township, Marion county. Their farm is still known as the Brady farm. There they lived and died and there their ashes still repose, the wife and mother dying in 1864, and the father in 1885. He was married a second time but all of his nine children were born to his first marriage. We have record of the following children: Margaret C., born on the old homestead farm in Marion county, July 19, 1831, who married Mr. Lingenfelter; Emily, who married George Swift; Lititia, who died when seventeen years old; and Mary, who married Dr. Samuel Brown.

Mr. and Mrs. Lingenfelter had four sons and three daughters, and four of their children are still living: Charles, a resident of Houston, Texas; Arthur B., of Indianapolis; Frank C., a civil engineer; and Lola M., who takes care of the home. A daughter, Hannah, died at the age of twenty years; she was the wife of Levi Coffman, who died soon after the loss of his wife. Alfred H. died at the age of fourteen years in Minneapolis, Minn., where the family was then living. Artemisia died at the age of two years. Mrs. Margaret C. Lingenfelter died May 29, 1904. In her younger days she was a member of the Baptist Church, but after her marriage she joined the Methodist Church and continued in that faith until her death.

William Logan Lingenfelter was variously engaged as a business man for many years. For a time after his marriage he was a farmer, but came to the city to take up the business of a grocer in company with John Reynolds, with whom he did a good business for several years. Mr. Reynolds bought him out, and Mr. Lingenfelter then entered the grocery business with Mr. Henry Coburn.

At the outbreak of the Rebellion Mr. Lingenfelter, in compliance with his convictions and sense of duty, disposed of his business to his partner, and enlisted, in November, 1861, in Company F, 16th Ind. V. I., and after his term of enlistment of six months was completed he returned to Indianapolis. He commenced a lumber business and for a time had a sawmill, and manufactured sash, blinds, etc. He ran into debt $10,000 for his mill property, but this he presently sold to advantage, and in 1867 he took up a planing-mill business in Minneapolis, removing his family to that Minnesota city. The death of a son and the failing health of his wife impelled the family to return to Indianapolis, Mr. Lingenfelter leasing his property. His wife regaining her health, Mr. Lingenfelter resumed his business in Minneapolis. In 1871 he finally sold it, and returned to this city with his family. Here he built a planing-mill, with Coburn & Jones as his associates, who bought this property in 1875. He sold his home property for $19,000. This is now included in the Spring Garden addition to the city of Indianapolis, and is regarded as very valuable.

Mr. Lingenfelter was engaged in the real estate business and other occupations until 1885, when he went to Clark county, Kans., where he took up a pre-emption claim, and with his family remained long enough to prove up, and then came back to Indianapolis. On the death of Mr. Brady, Mrs. Lingenfelter fell heir to 120 acres of land, eighty acres of which is woodland. This tract was cleared and improved by Mr. Lingenfelter, who built a house on it, and there the family lived until 1901. That year the farm was sold and the family moved to the present location. As has been seen, Mr. Lingenfelter has had an active and earnest business life, and his labors have not been in vain. A commendable interest has ever been taken by him in the promotion of the public welfare of his town and county. For many years after the formation of the Republican party he was an earnest worker in it, but for some years he has been identified with the independent elements of party activities. He and his family are members of the Methodist Church.

REV. JAMES P. WALTON, who passed away June 14, 1902, was a well-known and successful Christian worker of Indianapolis, pastor of the Reformed Methodist Church on Vessa street. He was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, near New Philadelphia, Jan. 19, 1834, son of Rev. Hiram and Elizabeth (Eakin) Walton, the former of whom labored in Ohio for many years as a Methodist Episcopal minister. Rev. Hiram Walton was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 20, 1807, son of Jesse Samuel Walton, also a native of Pennsylvania, of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry. Hiram Walton became a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church and had his home for many years in New Philadelphia, Ohio. He died in 1879. His wife, Elizabeth (Eakin), was a native of Ireland, daughter of James Eakin, and was brought to America at the age of three years by her parents. She was a devoted wife, an affectionate mother, and a noble exemplar of the Christian faith, and it was probably due less to the influence of his father's vocation than to the devout character and the Christian influence of his revered mother that James P. Walton entered upon religious work.

James P. Walton was reared in his native town and as a young man worked at the trade of cooping and at farming. He enlisted in February, 1865, in Company E, 194th Ohio V. I., served in the Shenandoah Valley, and at the conclusion of the war participated in the grand review at Washington. He was mustered out in October, 1865, as first duty sergeant. Rev. Mr. Walton was converted to the Christian faith in February, 1860. In 1867 he began his religious work as a local preacher, was ordained in 1877, and ever afterward engaged actively in Christian work.

On May 10, 1857, Mr. Walton was married to Miss Matilda Shull, a devout Christian woman, who died happy in the faith Sept. 22, 1892. Ten children were born to this marriage, five sons and five daughters, two of whom preceded her to the better land: Sarah M., who died in infancy, and Mrs. Amanda J. Riley. The survivors are: Leah H., wife of John Oberverlin, of Birdseye, Ind.; John F., of Oakland City, Ind.; W. P. S., of Oakland City, Ind.; Washington P., of Milltown, Ind.; Wesley G., a railroad engineer; Mrs. Mary C. Wilson; Page M., who enlisted in the 4th Heavy Artillery, United States Army, and is now stationed at Hancock, N. J.; and Martha E., wife of Olney White, of Linton, Ind. All these children are members of the church.

For his second wife Rev. Mr. Walton married, May 10, 1893, Mrs. Mary Ann Byers, daughter of Jesse Corbin. By her first marriage Mrs. Walton had seven children, six of whom are living. Mr. Byers was a soldier in the Civil war and died in April, 1880. Mrs. Walton is a member of the First Baptist Church of Indianapolis and an active religious worker.

Rev. Mr. Walton was a member of Major Robert Anderson Post, G. A. R., Indianapolis, and was chaplain of the post from 1896. He was earnestly devoted to his Christian work, giving his entire time to it, and his labors were attended with a large degree of success commensurate with his zeal and fidelity.

HON. JAMES TOWNSEND LAYMAN, former member of the State Senate, president of Layman-Carey Company, of Indianapolis, a citizen of the highest standing in official and commercial circles, is a descendant of two distinguished families of Revolutionary days, and allied by marriage with an honored old Southern family. The patriotic spirit which is so specially a characteristic of the Laymans was fostered and developed in generations of Old World ancestors who struggled against persecution and stood for religious and political freedom when men risked everything in supporting such a cause. Far back his forefathers are found among the bold Scandinavian Vikings and Saxons who went down into Normandy, whence in the religious persecutions of later times they were driven into Holland and Switzerland. Thence in the course of the centuries they finally came to America, realizing their hopes for a permanent place of refuge in the new cradle of liberty. True to their birth and training, they allied themselves with the friends of freedom in the New World.

Anthony Lehman (as the name was then spelled) is the first of the family in this country of whom we have any considerable information. He was born in the German settlement in Pennsylvania, not far from York, and was of German descent. He was a private soldier in Capt. Peter Dickie's Company, of Col. Robert Magaw's Battalion, which was known as the 5th Pennsylvania Battalion. Capt. Peter Dickie was of York county, and Col. Robert Magaw was of Carlisle, Pa. This command made a distinguished record in the Revolutionary war. Anthony Lehman served under General Washington, and bore a part in many of the heavy engagements under his command. He died in 1818, at the age of sixty-five years. He was the great-grandfather of Senator Layman, of Indiana.

Philip Lehman, grandfather of Senator Layman, was a native of Pennsylvania. For some years he was a miller in the Shenandoah valley, in Virginia, and in the latter part of the thirties came to Putnam county, Ind., where he died at the age of eighty-three years. He had a family of two sons and two daughters.

James Townsend, the maternal grandfather of Senator Layman, was a native of Snow Hill, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, and in about 1808 left Maryland to make a home in Kentucky, taking with him some of his slaves. His plantation was near Henderson, in Union county, and it was he who laid off the county seat of Union county, which has since become the flourishing town of Morganfield. He is remembered as an industrious man to a marked degree. He represented Union and Henderson counties in the State Legislature, serving in both branches of that body. A man of thought and character, he became convinced that slavery was wrong, and about 1829 notified his slaves that he was going into a free State, and proposed to make them free. With a number of them he came into Indiana, and locating in 1830 at what is now Putnamville laid out that town, burned brick, put up buildings, and provided log cabins for the former slaves. In 1837-38 he represented Putnam county in the State Legislature. At a later period of his life he removed to Clay county, Ind., where he died Nov. 3, 1851, when about sixty-five years old. James Townsend married Katherine Davis, who belonged to a very prominent Maryland family, being an own cousin of Henry Winter Davis. Her father, John Davis, was a Revolutionary soldier in the State of New Jersey. Of the sons of James and Katherine (Davis) Townsend, Selby Townsend was a lawyer and became a circuit judge in Iowa; another, Alfred Townsend, who also followed the legal profession, lived in Nebraska, California and Oregon, becoming known as an able and prominent attorney in those States; a third son, William Townsend, was clerk of Putnam county, Ind., many years; another, McGrady Townsend, who died at Los Angeles, Cal., was a noted musician and composer.

The foregoing will serve to illustrate to what manner of people Senator Layman in the present generation, and his honored father, Dr. Daniel W. Layman, in the last generation, owe their salient traits of character. Both have upheld the best traditions of the stock from which they sprang, and in so doing have established their right to be called typical representatives of that stock.

Daniel W. Layman was born in Virginia

Sept. 24, 1808, lived to manhood in his native State, and became a physician, following the medical profession for sixty years. In 1831 he moved from Augusta county (near Port Republic), Va., to Indiana, and made his home for the rest of his life at Putnamville, Putnam county, dying there in 1887, at the age of seventy-nine years. His practice during this long period took him over a wide range of territory, for much was expected of the pioneer physician, and the hardships of life in a sparsely settled and unimproved region were stern realities for him. He was well fitted by both physique and disposition to cope with such difficulties. He lived an upright life which commanded respect wherever he was known. But it was his just nature, his willingness to help his fellow-man, his unvarying recognition of the rights of others, and, above all, the superior intelligence and kindness of disposition which enabled him to see and do the right so clearly, that made him truly a king among men wherever he went. He had many opportunities for the exercise of charity and benevolence in the pursuit of his profession, and it may be safely said that he missed none of them. Nor did he slight his social duties, which, indeed, were a source of pleasure to him and a welcome break in the routine of heavy professional labors.

Dr. Layman was also prominent in politics for many years, and had high standing because of his ability and devotion to the public welfare, but his many friendships among men in high places were based solely on his personal and social merits. In his earlier years he was a Democrat, but in 1837, when made a delegate to the National convention of the party, he declined to serve on the ground that he had become a Whig. Later, when the Republican party was organized, he allied himself with its fortunes at once, and throughout the period of the Civil war he was not only a strong Union sympathizer, but did much for the suffering and needy with his means and his influence. At one time he was tendered the nomination for Congressional honors, but declined. He was a good friend of Governor Morton, Gen. John Coburn, Henry S. Lane and Col. Dick Thompson, assisting the last-named gentleman in making his first Congressional race. General Coburn said of him: "Dr. D. W. Layman was one of the noblest characters I ever knew, distinguished not alone for his professional skill but for his unstinted and faithful treatment to all, his benevolence in treating the poor, without prospect or hope of compensation. He not only took high rank among his professional brethren, but as a citizen he was a high-minded, patriotic gentleman." The General added further that he was a man of extensive reading, and had no superior in the State for intelligence, refinement and nobility of character. In a word, he was a model gentleman.

Dr. Layman married Mary H. D. Townsend, a native of Kentucky, daughter of James Townsend. She died in 1879, at the age of sixty-eight years. Both Dr. and Mrs. Layman were members of the Presbyterian Church. They were the parents of six children, as follows: John died in infancy; Catherine married Robert S. Dorsey and is deceased; Mary E., who became the wife of James G. Kingsbury, is also deceased; Theodore D. (deceased) married Miss Louisa Nance; James Townsend survives; Columbia I. is the wife of William J. Kercheval, of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

James Townsend Layman, whose name introduces this article, was born Sept. 4, 1844, in Putnam county, Ind., and there spent his early boyhood days. He was reared on the farm, his father owning at the time two large farms, and his education was begun in a subscription school, which was held in an old log schoolhouse. Afterward he entered Asbury University, where he studied one year.

Mr. Layman entered the Union army in July, 1862, entering the service as captain of Company K, 55th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, which he mostly recruited. He served three months in Kentucky, after which he helped to raise Company C, 115th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in June, 1863, serving as its first lieutenant until the following March. He was in Burnside's army in east Tennessee and southwest Virginia in the fall and winter of 1863-64, and was in the Knoxville campaign, a most difficult campaign on account of lack of both rations and clothing, and, according to General Coburn, a most desperate one, proving the high character of the common soldier under the most trying circumstances. On the noted cold day and night of Jan. 1, 1864, Captain Layman was on picket duty.

After his term of enlistment expired Captain Layman spent some time in recovering from the effects of hardships in the service, and on Feb. 13, 1865, in company with Robert S. Dorsey, he engaged in the wholesale and retail hardware business at No. 64 East Washington street, Indianapolis. After a time Mr. Dorsey retired from the business, and in 1870 the Layman & Carey Co.—now known as Layman-Carey Company—was organized. They do an exclusively wholesale business as jobbers of hardware, fire arms, ammunition, cutlery, etc., at Nos. 111-115 South Meridian street, having one of the old established houses of the city. Mr. Layman has been actively engaged in business in Indianapolis for forty-three years, and has proved himself level-headed and clear-sighted in trade, public-spirited as a citizen, and a high-minded, up-right man.

Hon. James T. Layman was married, Jan. 23, 1867, to Miss Cora Belle Parks, daughter of Thompson S. and Elizabeth Parks, who resided at Mont Umbra (the old Parks homestead), on the Licking river, near Carlisle, Ky., the wedding occurring at that point. This beautiful old place was one of the famous plantations in that part of Kentucky and it was the stopping-place of Henry Clay between Lexington and Maysville when he was on his way to Washington. Gov. Tom Metcalf built the chimney for the old home when he was engaged as a stonemason. Thompson S. Parks was born there in 1805, eventually came into possession of the place, and died there in his ninety-third year. He was beloved by all who knew him, and they were many, for he maintained the best traditions of the family as a host and a scholar. He was a great reader, and particularly well educated in English and Latin, and he taught school for a number of years. In his time he was one of the best known men in eastern Kentucky, which he represented in both branches of the State Legislature. A brief reference to the earlier generations of the family in this country will testify to the spirit and patriotism which has ever characterized its members.

John Parks, born in 1733, came to Pennsylvania from the North of Ireland in the year 1740, married a lady of Scottish birth, named Galbreath, and in 1788 became a resident of Kentucky, settling at the mouth of Steeles run, near Millersburg. He served as a soldier throughout the Revolutionary war. He took the oath of allegiance as lieutenant of the 13th Pennsylvania Regiment, with Gen. George Washington, LaFayette and other officers at Valley Forge in the memorable winter of 1778.

James Parks, son of John, was born in Pennsylvania in 1763. When he was a young lad his mother sent him to take some clothing to his father, who was then with Washington's army in front of Yorktown. Having found him and delivered the clothing, he begged his father to allow him to enlist, but the father objected on account of his youth and also because he was to take care of his mother in the absence of the head of the family. But the boy was insistent, and went in person to see General Washington, who accepted him for service. He served thirty days or more, until the British surrendered at Yorktown. In 1787 he married Jane En-triken, of Huntingdon county, Pa., and they soon moved to Kentucky, where he became a prominent man. He was extensively engaged in flour-milling, pork packing and distilling on the Licking river, near Parks Ferry, and during the war of 1812 sent many flat-boats down the river and on to New Orleans with supplies for General Jackson's army. James Parks was also prominent in public life, serving thirty years as a member of the State Legislature, in both branches, representing what is now Fleming, Nicholas, Robertson, Bourbon, Bracken and Harrison counties. He was also one of the jurors at the famous trial of Aaron Burr, at Frankfort, Ky., afterward transferred to Richmond, Va. He was the father of Thompson S. Parks. Mr. and Mrs. Layman have had four sons and four daughters born to them, and seven of these children are living: Elizabeth Dorsey, James Thompson, Daniel W., Theodore D., Mary Marguerite, John Townsend (who died in infancy), Cora Belle and Katherine Kitchen. (1) Elizabeth married Prof. H. S. Schell, and resides in Indianapolis, Ind. They have one son, James Layman Barrett Schell. (2) James Thompson is connected with Layman-Carey Company, as vice-president of that concern. He married Carra Binkley, of Indianapolis, and they have one daughter, Marion Parks. (3) Daniel W., now a physician in Indianapolis, was graduated from Butler College, and the Columbia College of Physicians and Surgeons, in New York. He married Maude Carroll, of Lynchburg, Va. (4) Theodore D. is connected with Layman-Carey Company as secretary and treasurer. (5) Mary Marguerite married Dr. John W. Carroll, Jr., of Lynchburg, Va., a descendant of the signer of the Declaration of Independence. (7) Cora B. and (8) Katherine K. reside with their parents in Irvington.

Mr. and Mrs. Layman are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis, where their substantial worth and Christian character are highly prized. They have an attractive home at No. 5703 East Washington street, into which they moved in October, 1887. Mr. Layman has made his home in Indianapolis since 1865. He has commanded the unflinching respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens, who have elected him to both the city council and the board of aldermen, in which bodies he served from 1877 to 1884, and was president of the board of aldermen from 1881 to 1884. He was honored by being made a member of the State Senate, in which he served from 1900 to 1904. While a senator of Indiana he introduced many bills, and he is the author of the Indiana Game Law of 1901 and the Amendment of 1903.

Socially Mr. Layman is a member of Oriental Lodge, No. 500, F. & A. M., and many years ago had passed through its chairs; he is a thirty-second-degree Scottish Rite Mason; is a member of George H. Thomas Post, No. 17, G. A. R., and of the Loyal Legion. In the Board of Trade and Commercial Club, also the Columbia Club, Mr. Layman is a devoted worker, and displays all the qualities of an enlightened and wide-awake citizen, anxious to promote the general welfare, and quick to respond to any appeal for a forward movement. No senator from his district has made a more proud record, or has had more valuable services to point to as his contribution to wise legislation in this State. The high standards and admirable methods he has always followed in his business career proved as effective in dealing with public questions as in the handling of private business, and gained him unassailable prestige among his fellow legislators.

JOHN L. AVERY, who came to Indianapolis Oct. 17, 1848, and who has resided in this city to the present time, was born in Cincinnati Sept. 25, 1815, son of Simeon H. Avery.

Simeon H. Avery was born in New Jersey in 1787, son of Charles Avery. One of his brothers, Charles, served in the war of 1812, and was present at Hull's surrender of Detroit. About the time Simeon Avery had attained his majority he went to Cincinnati, where he learned the potter's trade under a brother-in-law. There he was married in 1811 to Rebecca Passmore, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1795, a daughter of Henry and Martha Passmore. Henry Passmore was a descendant of the Sharpless family, whose first American ancestor came from England to America early in the seventeenth century. Simeon Avery died in Hamilton county, Ohio, in 1835. His widow removed to Hancock county, Ill., with three sons and one daughter, and there she died in 1879, after spending her declining years in the homes of her children. To Simeon Avery and wife were born four sons and three daughters. Two of the daughters died in infancy. Of the other children, Emeline married a Mr. Wimp and died several years ago; John L. is mentioned below; and Henry, Simeon and Oliver S. are deceased.

John L. Avery left Hamilton county, Ohio, in 1834, at the age of nineteen years, and spent two years in Connorsville, Ind., when he decided to return to Cincinnati. There he remained until 1837, when he went to Hancock county, Ind., and ten years later located in Indianapolis, where he engaged in contracting and building, though in earlier years he had followed mercantile pursuits.

Mr. Avery was married Nov. 5, 1840, to Sarah T., a daughter of Samuel and Margaret Campbell. This was the second day following the casting of his first Presidential vote, for William Henry Harrison. Mr. Avery is a veteran member of the Christian Church, which he joined in 1837. He helped to organize the First Christian Church of Indianapolis, which is now known as the Central Christian, and is the only survivor of those who were there at the beginning. At first he was a trustee, then a deacon for thirty-five years, and he has been an elder ever since.

DR. JOHN P. AVERY was born April 2, 1842, at Philadelphia, Hancock Co., Ind. The lad was in his seventh year when he came to Indianapolis, and here he attended the public schools for a time. In 1854 he entered the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, which is now known as Butler College, from which he was graduated in 1860. In the meantime he had learned the trade of a carpenter, though he had given some attention to that trade from a boy, and he still preserves a clothes bar, which he made for his mother when he was only eight years old.

Mr. Avery enlisted July 23, 1861, in Company I, 11th Indiana Zouaves, serving three years and taking part in the battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Jackson, Port Gibson, and Champion Hills. At this last battle his regiment lost 132 men, who were killed and wounded in thirty minutes. Here Mr. Avery received a gunshot wound in the left side of the face, the bullet lodging beneath the parotid gland, where it remained until March 18, 1871, when it was removed, Dr. Waterman, of Indianapolis, performing a very skilful extraction. Notwithstanding this severe wound, Mr. Avery remained with his regiment until it was discharged at the end of three years, Aug. 30, 1864. After he was wounded, he took part in the siege of Vicksburg, went to New Orleans, and was then sent to the Shenandoah valley under General Banks. Under General Sheridan he took part in the battle of Halltown, and it was there that he received his discharge.

After leaving the army Mr. Avery went at once to Ann Arbor, Mich., where he pursued a course of medical lectures, and was commissioned assistant surgeon of his former regiment, serving as such until it was mustered out, July 26, 1865. Mr. Avery then attended a course of lectures at Bellevue Hospital, New York, from which he graduated the following spring. Coming to Indianapolis he opened an office at No. 1 Massachusetts avenue, where he was associated with Dr. John A. Comigor, who was the surgeon of his regiment in the war. Dr. Avery continued in practice until 1872, when his wound, which had given him but little trouble for many years, became very painful and he was compelled to give up his professional work. Until 1887 he suffered much with it, and since that time he has been but little affected. For some years he has been so much occupied with the management of his extensive property interests that he has never thought it wise to resume the practice of his profession.

Dr. Avery was married, Sept. 4, 1867, to Miss Julia V., born Sept. 4, 1845, in Madison, Jefferson Co., Ind., daughter of the Hon. Joseph M. and Mary A. (Maxwell) Tilford. Their only living child, John L., was born April 22, 1888. Another son, George L., died at the age of fourteen years; and a daughter, Sadie T., at the age of eighteen years. Dr. Avery is a member of the Union Veteran League, and while in active practice he occupied at one time the office of County Physician, and for two years was a member of the Indianapolis Board of Health.

REV. JOHN VINSON was born in Madison county, Ind., July 9, 1851, son of William and Mary J. (Robertson) Vinson, the former a native of the State of Delaware, and the latter of Henry county, Ind. They were married in Madison county, Indiana.

William Vinson was a son of Joshua Vinson, of the State of Delaware, and came of English descent. Some of the family served in the war of the Revolution. Joshua Vinson moved West at an early day, and was one of the pioneers of Fayette county, Ind., where he settled in 1827, coming as a laboring man with little or no means. Yet by industry and thrift he accumulated money to buy land in Madison county, which he greatly improved and added to from time to time until he became very wealthy, and at the time of his death was reckoned one of the most prosperous and influential farmers of the county. Like most persons of his time he received little or no education, and had no aspirations for public notoriety. He was a member of the Christian Church, his life was lived in the spirit of his faith, and when he died at the age of eighty-four years, his character was sweet and true. His children were as follows: Cannon, who died soon after his marriage; Elizabeth, who married John Dobson, and both are deceased; William, father of Rev. John Vinson, now deceased; Levan and John M., both deceased; George, of Madison county; Bayard, deceased; and Henry, of Madison county. At one time all the above owned farms in Madison county, their houses being so placed that they were within sound of a bugle blown at the old homestead.

William Vinson, born in the State of Delaware, Oct. 4, 1820, came with his parents from his native community to Indiana when only seven years old, and here his life was spent. His earlier years were passed upon the frontier, and he was strong and ready in the labors and trials of a new country. Hard work and honesty were his early teachers, and industry and integrity marked his entire career. He died Sept. 19, 1883. When his father came to Indiana he was a poor man, and labored hard for the support of his family. He hired his little son William out to a farmer of Fayette county, Ind., for two dollars a month and his board and clothes, and with the money thus earned was bought the first milch cow of the family. William continued to assist his parents until he reached manhood, a hard worker and a prudent man.

Saving his money he bought a piece of land before his marriage. On Oct. 4, 1850, he married, in Indiana, Mary J. Robertson, daughter of Zachariah and Nancy A. (Hammer) Robertson. With the help of his wife, who also picked and burned brush, they secured a fine farm from heavily timbered land. There he reared his family, and there he died a most honored and respected man. His sterling integrity, genuine worth and kind heart commanded for him the confidence and esteem of the community to a marked degree. His widow was an exemplary Christian lady, devoting much of her life to the advancement and improvement of the community in religious and moral affairs. Zachariah Robertson, her father, was born in Henry county, Ind., and belonged to a family of long residence in Indiana. His father, Moses Robertson, was high sheriff of Henry county for several years. Zachariah Robertson was reared and married in Henry county, and in early manhood moved to Madison county, where he improved a good farm, and where he died. In that early day game was abundant, and he was a good rifle shot, killing in his time many deer and turkeys. For a number of years he held the position of justice of the peace, and always held the confidence of the community. His decisions were just and in harmony with the law of Indiana, in which he was well versed. He was a member of the Christian (New Light) Church, and for several years the services of that movement were held in his dwelling house. His children were as follows: John; Mary J., the mother of Rev. John Vinson; Moses; Angelina, who married J. W. Broiles, and later Mr. Sexton; Malinda, the wife of E. W. Frame; Benjamin H.; Marcus; James M.; and Eliza, who died young. All with, perhaps, the exception of John, are now deceased.

The Vinson children were as follows: Rev. John, whose name appears at the opening of this article; Mary M., who married (first) John H. Jones, now deceased, had two children, Joel M. and William E., and she married (second) George T. Carter, also now deceased; Amanda A., who married William T. Jones, and they both died, leaving one daughter, Nora B.; Florence B., who died at the age of twelve years; Sarah J., who married Samuel P. Brown. Mary Jane (Robertson) Vinson, the mother of the above children, became a member of the Christian Church, while a young woman, and thirty-two years afterward she was born of God (1 John 3-9), and lived a consistent and devoted Christian all of her remaining years, not only in name but in all her works. To her constant care and watchful guidance, the Rev. John Vinson feels that he is indebted for the sound moral foundation on which his life has risen, and for this he feels that he owes her a debt of love and gratitude. In 1890 she moved to Indianapolis, where she bought a plat of ground on which she erected a commodious residence, intending it for a home during her natural life, and for a parsonage after her death. On the same plat she also erected a church, Bethel, all paid for by her own money, which she dedicated to the Church of God congregation, of which she was a member in Indianapolis. She also gave an endowment of $1,250 to be paid out of her estate after her death, to Findlay College, of Findlay, Ohio, owned and controlled by the religious people known by the name Churches of God, with which religious people she was in sympathy at the time she gave them her notes. Since her death these bequests, in notes, have all been paid. She entered into Heaven's rest March 9, 1900. Her birth occurred March 17, 1832.

The Rev. John Vinson was reared to a life of toil, and was a farmer until he reached the age of twenty-five years, in the meantime receiving a good common-school education. His board, clothing and a limited amount of spending money was all he received during his long stay at home. But he received a farm of 120 acres from his parents on leaving home. When he left home he secured employment at the Dorsey twine-binding machine works, where he spent three years, becoming an expert machinist. After traveling for some time as an expert for the Company he returned home to care for his mother, where he remained until 1889, when he and his mother moved to Muncie, Ind., and engaged in religious work there. Then in 1890 they came to Indianapolis. Mr. John Vinson united himself with the Christian Church in 1880, having been under conviction since he was twelve years old, but he was not born of God until the summer of 1885. Becoming a Bible student, he searched for the truth, and from that time on took an active interest in church work, and the following year began to preach in his home neighborhood in Madison county, Ind. Later he received a license to preach from the church people known as the Churches of God, with whom he had previously become united. But afterward he withdrew from them in fellowship. He has had charge of churches in many different places—at Tipton, Muncie and Greensburg, Ind., and three churches in Daviess county, and the church in Indianapolis, which was the outgrowth of cottage prayer meetings and the generous devotion of his mother's bountiful giving of her means. Regular services are held every Sabbath morning and evening in this church, Bethel, and a morning Sabbath-school. Though the congregation is very changeable, much good has manifestly come from this movement, as many conversions are here made that affect distant communities. By his prayers the Lord has healed the sickness and diseases of many Christian people. (Jas. 5-14, 15).

Mr. Vinson holds to his Madison county farm, and has a good residence in this city, and since coming to the city has done some carpenter and millwright work, always being a busy man. Enterprising and public spirited, he takes a deep interest in anything relating to the public welfare, and largely by his own efforts has caused the erection of a fine new ten-room school building in his neighborhood, the Abraham Lincoln school. He makes himself heard at council meetings and the gathering of the board of works in reference to interurban city franchises and other matters that interest the people. Nothing is demanded by him from the party workers, but everything is for the welfare of the city.

Rev. John Vinson was married Aug. 16, 1893, to Miss Etta L. Hill, who was born at Hamilton, Ohio, Jan. 15, 1868, daughter of Collins F. and Fanny M. (Murray) Hill. Her father came from Williamsburg, Mass., where he was born July 28, 1829; and her mother was born in the vicinity of Hamilton, Ohio, March 3, 1833. Her parents were married at Hamilton, Ohio, in 1863, and seven years later came to Indiana, where they spent one year at Edinburg, then removing to Indianapolis, where they yet remain. He is a machinist, and this is still his occupation. Himself, his wife and daughter, Etta L., were among the principal founders of the Barth Place M. E. Church. He has been a church member since he was a young man. Mr. Hill is of Scotch descent, and he was a member of a family of eight children, all of whom are dead, with the exception of himself. His wife is a daughter of William Murray, of Scotch-Irish descent. William Murray was an early pioneer of Ohio, and owned large tracts of land near the city of Hamilton, where he died. His children were as follows: Charles, of Elkhart, Ind., who served through the Civil war as captain of his company, saw much hard service, and received several wounds; and Fanny M., the mother of Mrs. Vinson.

The Hill children were as follows: Minnie E., the wife of Charles R. Hasely; Bessie B., a public school teacher, a position she has held for fifteen years; Murray, a machinist by trade, who married a daughter of Dr. J. W. Hervey; Etta L., who is Mrs. John Vinson; Charles D., an undertaker and furniture dealer at Sheridan, Illinois.

To Mr. and Mrs. John Vinson were born the following children: Mabel J., born June 14, 1894, died Jan. 7, 1895; and Roy H., born Feb. 6, 1898.

CYRUS M. HOBBS, who is a native son of Indiana and a member of an honored pioneer family of the State, is one of the progressive and representative business men of Marion county, being engaged in the nursery business at Bridgeport, as a member of the firm of Albertson & Hobbs. He was born in Paoli, Orange Co., Ind., July 20, 1847, son of William Parker and Mary (Elrod) Hobbs, both natives of Indiana.

The Hobbs family is of English lineage, going back, probably, to Sir Thomas Hobbes, an English philosopher of the sixteenth century. As far back as its history can be traced in America, its members have been identified with the Society of Friends. The family was planted on American soil in the early Colonial days, and the name has ever stood exponent of exalted integrity and honor in all the relations of life. Many have been preachers and teachers.

William Hobbs, great-grandfather of Cyrus M., was born in North Carolina. He married Priscilla Coffin, and from North Carolina, as members of a small company of Quakers, or Friends, they migrated to Indiana in 1812, locating near what is now the town of Salem, Washington county—a town which had no existence at that time—and there began the battle of life in the wilderness, a part of the advance guard of civilization. William Hobbs was a preacher of the Friends' Society and was one of the leaders of the little colony which had been led to leave the South by reason of implacable antipathy to human slavery and to establish homes in the forest wilds of a new territory, where they found the Indians still numerous. Their friendly policy gained them the good will of the aborigines, however, and though they erected their primitive log cabins close together, for protection, they had little difficulty with their dusky neighbors. These gentle and noble pioneers selected land and all improved good farms, and in that locality William Hobbs remained the greater portion of his life. In 1839 he married for his second wife Anna Unthank, of Newport, now Fountain City. Later he moved to Spiceland, where in 1854 his useful life came to a close. He was one of the promoters of the Friends Blue River Academy, one of the first institutions for higher learning in the State, aiding in its establishment and maintenance in the early days, while it became one of the leading educational institutions of the Society of Friends in the West. The Blue river colony eventually became one of the most beautiful and prosperous sections of the State, as it is to-day, and there William Hobbs reared his children under most grateful influences and left them to carry forward the work he had inaugurated.

His children were: Samuel, father of William P.; Elisha; Barnabas C.; Jane; Mary; and Peninah. Of these Barnabas C. became a distinguished minister in the Friends Church, and was widely known as an educator, being one of the pioneers in putting the common school system of Indiana on its present solid foundation. He was for many years a teacher in Friends' academies, was president of Earlham College, and superintendent of public instruction; while in the latter office he established the State Normal School at Terre Haute, and was elected president of the board of trustees, which position he held during life.

Samuel Hobbs was born and reared near Salem, Ind., and there married, and, in turn, reared his children. He was a prominent and successful farmer and a man of influence in the community. He died during the cholera epidemic of 1832. He was twice married and the children of the first union were as follows: William Parker; Wilson, a physician, who served as surgeon during the Rebellion, being later president of the Indiana State Medical Society; Ruth, who became the wife of Lorenzo D. Miller; Amanda, wife of Milton Hill. Two children were born of the second marriage: Samuel, a resident of Salem, Ind.; and Martha, who was twice married, her first husband being a Birdsong, and her second Ezra Davis.

William Parker Hobbs grew up in the Blue River community and was educated at Blue River Academy. When a young man he removed to the beautiful old colony of Paoli, Orange county, and there married and remained for a time, later removing to Orangeville, Orange county. He reared his children with the same circumspection and fidelity as had his father and grandsire. He was a physician of marked ability, and served two years as surgeon of the 85th Indiana Volunteer Infantry during the Civil war. He not only was an earnest student of his noble profession, but also served as a preacher in the Methodist Church for many years, having joined that church after leaving Blue River, his life being one of signal honor and usefulness. He died in Daviess county, in 1897. His wife, Mary (Elrod), was born and reared near Orleans, Orange county, where her marriage occurred. She passed away in Daviess county, in 1901, both she and her husband answering the final summons with implicit trust in the simple and beautiful faith which had guided and dominated their lives. Their children were as follows: Mildred J., wife of Thomas Casey; Cyrus M.; Melville P., a farmer of Washington county; Edgar, an engineer, residing in Oklahoma; Wilbur, who died at the age of twenty; Etta, wife of Marshall Clark; and William L., a resident of Indianapolis.

Cyrus M. Hobbs was reared on a farm. He attended the public schools, after which he completed a course of study in the Friends' Blue River Academy, near Salem, Ind. He remained at the parental home until he had attained years of maturity, and, after completing his academic course, he entered upon his independent career. His first employment was at farm work, and, later, he became a salesman for nursery stock, which had no little to do with his eventually engaging in that line of enterprise on his own responsibility. For one year he was employed as a clerk and travelling salesman in a book store at Mitchell, Ind., and then became identified with a nursery near Salem, where he remained until 1875, when he came to Bridgeport and took the position of foreman of the nursery of Oliver Albertson, continuing in this office until the death of his employer, in 1879, while in 1881 he became associated with the latter's son, Emery Albertson, in the purchase of the nursery business, which they have since successfully conducted under the firm name of Albertson & Hobbs, employing the most modern methods of management and cultivation, having one of the best nurseries in the State. The original proprietor was a pioneer in this line of industry in Indiana, having established himself in business at Canton, Washington county, in 1840, and becoming the most extensive retail nurseryman in the State. He there remained until 1875, when failing health led him to dispose of a portion of his interests, and he then came to Bridgeport, where he started a small business in the same line, in the mean while continuing to supervise the Canton business, which was conducted under the firm name of Albertson & Co. After his death his son Emery and our subject continued in charge of the Bridgeport business until the formation of their partnership, as noted. The enterprise is now unmistakably the largest of its kind in the State, and one which has the highest reputation for a high grade of stock and absolute fidelity to representations, so that the business is cumulative, and is ever expanding in scope and importance, being a valuable item in the industrial activities of the State, all classes of nursery stock being propagated and handled. 'One original nursery here comprised twenty acres, and at the present time 300 acres are utilized, the same being closely planted to young fruit and ornamental trees and shrubbery, and, in addition to the home place, the firm have large plants in the State of New York and at Topeka, Kans., their stock being sold in all sections of the Union, and they also control an increasing export trade. That the industry has been of direct benefit to Bridgeport is evident when we note the fact that employment is here given to about fifty workmen, while as many more are employed during the slipping season. In politics Mr. Hobbs takes no active part, but he gives his support to the Prohibition party. He is a member of the American Association of Nurserymen, as is also his partner.

In 1876 Mr. Hobbs was united in marriage to Miss Anna M. Albertson, who was born in Canton, Ind., in 1851, a daughter of Oliver and Mary (Morris) Albertson, both natives of this State. Her father was a son of Benjamin Albertson, who located in Washington county in 1816, where he reclaimed a farm and also engaged in the practice of medicine, being one of the honored pioneer physicians of that section of the State, while both he and his wife, Sarah Parker, were worthy members of the Society of Friends. Their children were as follows: Charles, who died in Kansas City; Edmond, a physician, died in 1863; Isabella, wife of W. N. Trueblood; Sarah, wife of Nixon Morris; and Oliver, father of Mrs. Hobbs.

The mother of Mrs. Hobbs was a daughter of Benoni and Rebecca Morris, who removed from North Carolina to Indiana in 1816, and here established a home in the pioneer wilds, aiding in the work of development and progress. He passed away at the age of eighty-nine, and his widow, who had been his companion and helpmate for sixty years, lived to the advanced age of ninety-four. Their children were as follows: Thomas; Nixon; Catherine, wife of John I. Morrison, ex-treasurer of the State of Indiana; Jephtha, who died in Washington county, an octogenarian; Joanna, wife of Phillip Parker; Robert, a resident of Salem, Washington county; and Mary, who became the wife of Oliver Albertson. Mr. and Mrs. Albertson's children were as follows: Anna M., wife of our subject; Albert, now of Long Beach, Cal., who was bookkeeper for the firm of Albertson & Hobbs; Emery, senior member of the firm of Albertson & Hobbs; and Frederick, who died in 1887. Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs have five children, namely: Oliver A. and Harry W., both graduates of Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., and now engaged with their father in the nursery business; Laura, deceased, who was a student at Central Academy, Plainfield; and Carrie and Frederick, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs are both consistent members of the Society of Friends, with which both families have been identified for many generations.

COL. FRANK ERDELMEYER, one of Indiana's noted defenders of the Union, who won his high rank through personal courage and unwavering devotion to duty, and who in time of peace has proved himself a stalwart, patriotic citizen, is a native of Germany, born at Herrnsheim, near Worms, Nov. 2, 1835, son of Philip and Elizabeth (Tag) Erdelmeyer. His education was acquired in the superior schools of the Fatherland, and he inherited the habits of industry and methodical thoroughness characteristic of the German race. In 1852 he bade farewell to the familiar scenes of his boyhood and youth, and turned his face toward the New World. In New York State he worked about three years at the upholstering business, and then went to Cincinnati, Ohio, where for one year he followed the same line. He first reached Indianapolis in 1857, and here he continued to follow his trade of upholsterer until the breaking out of the Civil war.

In 1861, when the call for volunteers for the defense of the government startled the country, the young German was one of the first to offer his services, enlisting for three months in the 11th Indiana Volunteer Infantry. At the end of his term of enlistment he returned to Indianapolis and raised a company, known as Company A, 32d Indiana Volunteer Infantry, of which he was made captain. The 32d regiment was recruited entirely from the German citizens of Indiana. In this capacity he participated in the battles at Rowlett's Station, near Green River, Ky., Shiloh and the siege of Corinth. At the end of a year, on Oct. 20, 1862, he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel, and on Aug. 8, 1863, colonel, commanding the regiment from Oct. 1, 1862, until its muster out. As colonel he played an important part in the battles of Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, siege of Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, finally joining in Gen. Sherman's Atlanta campaign. The 32d Indiana was in action at Dalton, Resaca, Dallas, Altoona Hills, New Hope Church, Marietta, and the siege of Atlanta. On Aug. 16, 1864, the regiment was ordered to the rear to be mustered out, because of expiration of term of service, the discharge papers bearing the date Sept. 7, 1864. Gen. John Coburn wrote thus of Col. Erdelmeyer: "Col. Erdelmeyer is a gentleman of education and good standing, having the respect of all good people, and an excellent soldier. He ranks among the leading colonels of the State of Indiana. His regiment was prominent and among the foremost of the State. Well drilled and disciplined, it had a notable record for doing their duty well. He is one of our leading volunteer officers. Coming from a foreign country he seemed to imbibe the American spirit that inspired the soldiers in the army of the Union."

Returning to Indianapolis, Col. Erdelmeyer did not resume his trade, but entered the drug business as a partner in the firm of A. Metzner & Co., in January, 1865. In 1868 he bought out the firm and afterward conducted the business on his own account and under his own name. In the business world he has attained a high place, and his reputation for honorable dealing is without a blemish. He has taken an active part in public affairs, but he has never been looked upon as a seeker for political favors. In 1868 he was elected county treasurer, and served two years, giving universal satisfaction. In fraternal connection he is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, the Loyal Legion, the Masons, the German Veterans and the German Hause Turnverein, and he is particularly popular among his fellow countrymen in Indianapolis, being looked up to and respected to a degree unusual.

In October, 1864, Col. Erdelmeyer was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Hoffman, daughter of Henry and Catherine (Lang) Hoffman, and to this union have come three daughters and one son, namely: Francisca, Katie, Meta and Frank William. The family home is at No. 915 North New Jersey street.

WILLIAM HOUSTON CRAIG, a prominent and influential citizen of Noblesville, Ind., who is editor and proprietor of The Ledger, was born March 23, 1857, son of John Sawyer and Sydney Neil (Houston) Craig.

Records of the Craig family are very meager, and all that can be given in this sketch is from inscriptions upon monuments, from data found in old Bibles, and from testimony of living witnesses who have carried down from generation to generation the story of their ancestors. From the best evidence obtainable it is known that the Craigs and Sawyers came to East Tennessee from Virginia some time about the middle of the eighteenth century, attracted there by the rich valleys and beautiful mountains of that section. They were of Scotch-Irish descent, and were faithful and devout supporters of the doctrines and policies of the Presbyterian Church. During the Revolutionary war they were loyal patriots, and distinguished themselves in that great contest. John Sawyer, great-grandfather of William H. Craig, was a colonel in that war, and led 1,000 of the pioneers of Tennessee, who sprang out of their hills in defense of their home and country. These backwoodsmen and Indian fighters, it is told, assembled in a grove, and leaning on their squirrel rifles listened in silence to a stern Presbyterian preacher, who blessed them and then called upon them to do battle and smite the foe with the sword of the Lord and Gideon. The story of how these pioneer patriots acquitted themselves at the battle of King's Mountain is told with pride by Tennesseans to this day. Col. John Sawyer became a great hero, was beloved and respected by all who knew him, and he wielded a great influence among his fellows. The silver buckles that he wore as colonel were cut up and given to his descendants as souvenirs. The Craig and Sawyer families settled about ten miles north of Knoxville, and were among the founders and supporters of the Washington Church, which celebrated its 100th birthday some time ago. In the graveyard nearby are many monuments marking the last resting place of the heroes who wrought mightily for God and country in the pioneer days. Around these old landmarks cluster the most tender and hallowed memories. A visit to Washington Church and the graveyard shows that time, man and the elements have wrought many changes. Col. John Sawyer was born in 1735, and died in 1831. His children were: John, Josiah, William, Elizabeth, Rebecca and Nancy. John Sawyer, Jr., became a colonel in the Mexican war.

On May 12, 1808, Samuel Craig married Nancy Sawyer, and to them were born these children: James A., born May 14, 1809, died Oct. 14, 1830; William C., born May 31, 1811, died July 25, 1849; John S., born Jan. 30, 1814, died April 4, 1893; Rachel, born May 11, 1817, died Aug. 30, 1827; Robert S., born Jan. 7, 1821, died Sept. 24, 1847; Martha C., born Jan. 7, 1828, died Aug. 6, 1849; and Rebecca A., born July 2, 1830. Samuel Craig was born June 27, 1781, and in about 1836, with five children, he moved to Lebanon county, Ind. He died July 1, 1839, and is buried at the side of his wife and children in the old cemetery at Lebanon. John S. Craig was left behind and lived with his aunt, Rebecca Sawyer, until after he graduated from Maryville seminary.

REV. JOHN SAWYER CRAIG was married May 13, 1841, to Sydney Neil Houston, and the union was a happy one. They were devout, earnest Christians, and lived faithful and exemplary lives, believing that it was the chief end of man to glorify God. They took the Bible as their rule and guide of life. No higher tribute to their characters would they ask were they living than that they were God-fearing, honest Christians. John Sawyer Craig was born ten miles north of Knoxville in a log cabin. His early education was such only as the meager opportunities of that day afforded. He entered Maryville Seminary in December, 1832, and graduated some four years later. Many stories are still rife in Maryville about his adventure and course in college. He came from the backwoods clothed in the plainest of homespun. He appeared to be strong neither physically nor mentally. It is said that the teachers discouraged him from entering college, fearing he would be a failure, and the students made fun of him on account of his appearance. But the day of reckoning was soon at hand. The boy in homespun with the florid face and yellow hair soon led his classes, and was recognized by all for his keen intellect and untiring industry. It is said that on one occasion, desiring to make up some special work, he took a cake of corn pone and a pitcher of water and locked himself up in a room until he had mastered the subject on hand and was able to pass an examination. He was licensed to preach Jan. 1, 1840, and ordained in April, 1841. He was elected professor of languages in Maryville College Sept. 3, 1840, after acting as tutor for some time, and continued in that capacity until the college was closed by the Civil war in April, 1861. When that fierce struggle came on and the liberty of man and the union of the States was at issue, there were no two sides to the question with him. He espoused the cause of the Union, and declared that the black man should be free. He was so outspoken in his loyalty to the Union that the Confederates threatened his life. They made it so disagreeable for him that he was compelled to become a refugee, and in September, 1861, he with his family left his native State and the home he loved so well and moved to Lebanon, Ind., where his parents had located some twenty years earlier. In March, 1862, he removed to Anderson, and for six years filled the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church at that place. In June, 1868, he was called to the Presbyterian pulpit at Noblesville, where he remained for seventeen years. On March 5, 1885, Mr. Craig offered his resignation and the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, That we tender to Rev. J. S. Craig our sincere and grateful thanks for the self-sacrifices, fidelity and ability with which he has served this church and its ministry."

This record of the church is in the familiar handwriting of that pillar of the church and devoted friend of Mr. Craig and his family, the Hon. Joseph R. Gray. To this loyal friend and steadfast Christian is largely due credit for the reorganization of the Noblesville Presbyterian Church in 1867, and its support thereafter. Through storm as well as sunshine, through adversity as well as prosperity, Joseph R. Gray always was faithful to the little church he loved so well. It was reorganized in 1867 with twenty members. During Mr. Craig's pastorate it increased nearly ten-fold. Mrs. T. J. Kane, of Noblesville, is the only charter member now belonging to this church. After his resignation in 1885 Mr. Craig had no regular charge, but preached in different places in the Muncie Presbytery at different times until his death, April 4, 1893. It was a great trial for him to put off the harness and quit work. He remarked on one occasion that a pulpit sweat was healthy, and his pulpit work seemed to give new energy and life to him. For many years before his death he was called the "Nestor" of the Muncie Presbytery, and to him were referred all questions of doctrine and church government. He believed in the Calvinistic doctrines, and preached them straight from the shoulder. He was a logical thinker and profound scholar, but not what is called a "popular" preacher, for he called black black and white white, and denounced sin in all of its forms in severest terms.

The following estimates of his character are worthy of a place in this sketch. Capt. W. H. Henry of Maryville, in an address at the last Commencement, said:

"Prof. Craig, who taught in the college longer than any other man excepting Dr. Anderson, was a man of great strength of mind, a rare scholar, and a minister of great power in the pulpit when aroused. Although of rough exterior, he was respected and beloved by his students. So complete was his mastery of the college curriculum that he often heard recitations in the Greek, Latin and mathematical courses without the use of a text book. He was an avowed abolitionist during all the years of his professorship, always boldly and publicly declaring his convictions upon that much mooted question. He, with his family, passed through the Confederate lines to the State of Indiana in 1861. The Confederate authorities, it is said, granted him a pass at that particular time, to prevent him being mobbed by the soldiery of the country."

Rev. W. H. Lyle, a pupil of Dr. Craig, paid this high tribute to him:

"Rev. John Sawyer Craig was brilliant as a student at college. He was profound and able as a teacher, a thorough master of all he taught. He was a profound thinker and went to the bottom of every subject that he undertook to investigate. Although stern and inflexible, yet he was approachable, and loved to tell an anecdote and pass a joke. In politics before the war he was an earnest Democrat, but an intense hater of slavery and a lover of freedom. When the conflict of arms came in 1861 he was the fast and unflinching friend of the Union cause. As a preacher he spoke extemporaneously, yet not without preparation. When thoroughly aroused he was powerful, at times truly eloquent, and could hold an assembly spellbound. He had the martyr spirit and the courage of his convictions. He stood like a rock in what he conceived to be right. With him it was a small matter whether the crowd was with him—the great question was whether he was right."

Some time in the seventies Mr. Craig was given the degree of Doctor of Divinity by his alma mater. He thoroughly believed in the missionary cause, and was a liberal giver to all the boards of the church. In his last bequest he gave $1,600 to the different boards—money that he had saved by the strictest economy and the most arduous labor.

Mrs. Craig, who was Sydney Neil Houston, was the youngest of fourteen children of Major James Houston. Five of her sisters married preachers. She was a noble woman of tender affection, sweet disposition and wonderful patience. She was afflicted with deafness, but submitted without murmuring to the trials and inconveniences that it brought upon her. In her early life she showed much artistic ability, and pictures now in the possession of relatives, painted by her more than half a century ago, are prized very highly. She was passionately fond of her home and family, and to them she gave her love and her life work. To John Sawyer and Sydney Neil (Houston) Craig, there were born the following children: James Houston, born May 7, 1842, died Oct. 15, 1842; Mary Caroline, born Nov. 20, 1843; Nancy Elizabeth, born Nov. 20, 1846, died April 10, 1894; Samuel Hanson Cox, born July 1, 1848; Malinda Hester, born March 23, 1851, died Sept. 3, 1860; John Chalmers, born July 27, 1854; and William Houston, born March 23, 1857. The father of these children died April 4, 1893, and the mother Jan. 1, 1892, and both are buried in Crownland cemetery, Noblesville, Ind. Of these

Miss Mary C. Craig lived with her parents until their respective deaths, and was a great help and comfort to them in their old age. She lives in Noblesville and is active in church and charitable work.

Elizabeth Craig married at Anderson, Ind., March 13, 1866, Thomas C. Fisher, and she died April 10, 1894. She was a remarkable woman, and although the mother of ten children, she always found time to do her full share of her church and charitable work. Her death was peculiarly sad and unfortunate as it left this large family of children to the care of the bereaved husband. The children were: Charles H., born July 27, 1867, died Jan. 19, 1892; John Craig, born April 14, 1870; Chauncey B., born Jan. 8, 1873; Houston S., born June 7, 1875; Carrie B., born May 11, 1878; George F., born May 11, 1878, died Jan. 23, 1903; Thomas C., Jr., born Nov. 1, 1880; Robert W., born Nov. 24, 1883; Paul L., born May 15, 1887; and Benjamin S., born June 13, 1890.

Samuel H. C. Craig lives at Noblesville, and is a successful stock dealer and farmer. He was treasurer of Hamilton county during the years 1900 and 1901. On June 19, 1876, he married Miss Jane Loehr, born Jan. 30, 1855, daughter of Daniel and Rachel Drake Loehr. Their children are: Harry Loehr, born Feb. 12, 1877; John Daniel, Oct. 20, 1881; and William Sydney, Jan. 7, 1884.

John C. Craig began his business career as a grocery clerk. By industry and perseverance he soon became a partner of his employers, and afterward succeeded to the sole ownership of a very large and prosperous business. He was one of the few merchants that succeed. He retired from business some years ago and is now devoting his time to looking after his three farms. With his family he resides at Noblesville. He was married Nov. 10, 1882, to Miss Sallie Evans, daughter of Hon. James L. and Sarah Evans, and she died Aug. 5, 1883. To them was born one child, Sallie Evans Craig, who became a student at Indiana University. He was married (second) Oct. 10, 1889, to Miss Mary Prudence Arnett, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Moses Arnett, of Hanover, Ind., Scotch-Irish Presbyterians of United Brethren faith, and to this union were born six children, as follows: Mary Elizabeth, born Dec. 14, 1890; Chauncey Arnett, Sept. 28, 1892; James Lloyd, Nov. 6, 1894; Sydney Pollock, Oct. 28, 1896; Anna Prudence, March 13, 1901; and Josephine, Dec. 15, 1902.

William Houston Craig when a boy attended the public schools at Noblesville. With his brothers during the summers he helped his father in the farming, the latter believing that there was no exercise so good for boys during the summer months as that secured in tilling the soil. In 1876 he entered Hanover College, and graduated in 1880 with the degree of A. B. A few years ago his alma mater conferred the degree of Master of Arts upon him. For two years after graduation he taught the grammar school at Noblesville, and the two years following he studied law with Moss & Stephenson. A failure in his hearing compelled him to give up the legal profession. In 1884 he went into the grocery and feed business, and like his brother John made a success of this venture, and retired in 1896. In November of that year he entered the newspaper field, and since that time has been the editor of the Daily and Semi-Weekly Ledger, the Republican organ of Hamilton county. He has taken an active part in politics, but has had no desire to hold office. He has served as director and trustee in many corporations, was treasurer of two of the leading building and loan associations of Noblesville for ten years and handled nearly $1,000,000; was trustee of the Noblesville school board six years, and was largely instrumental in securing the erection of the new High school building; was a delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1900 that nominated McKinley and Roosevelt.

On Nov. 26, 1884, Mr. Craig was married to Matilda Emma Hare, daughter of Wesley and Mourning Tut Hare, his father, Dr. Craig, officiating. To this union there were born children as follows: Shirley Sydney, born Dec. 12, 1886, a student of Rollins College at Winter Park, Fla.; Nellie Marguerite, born Feb. 6, 1889, died March 20, 1889; Alma, born Nov. 30, 1891, died Dec. 7, 1891; and Houston Hare, born Sept. 19, 1893, lives at home and is attending school.

HOUSTON. The Houston Coat-of-Arms, which is registered in the Office of Heraldry, London, is as follows: A greyhound rampant on a broken column. An hour-glass with the last sand running out. The motto: "In tempore." The origin of these emblems is said to have been this: At an early period in the history of the Houstons, John Houston, with a body of soldiers, reinforced a broken column, and for his great courage and energy was knighted on a field of battle. The greyhound indicates the fleetness of his command in coming to the rescue. The last sand of the hour-glass shows the perilous extremity of the army, and the motto ("In time") its victory.

John Houston, the progenitor of all that branch of the Houstons to which Mr. Craig belongs in America, came from Ireland with his family in 1735. He first settled in Pennsylvania, but in a few years removed to Rockbridge county, Va. His children were as follows: James, Robert, Isabella, Esther, John, Samuel and Matthew. It is tradition that the Houstons dwelt in the "Lowlands" of Scotland, and being persecuted for their religious opinions, fled to Ireland to escape their blood-thirsty enemies. They took a decided stand in favor of the Reformation; adopted early the tenets of Calvin; sustained with their hearts, substance and blood the religious views of John Knox; and were persecuted for their religious adherence to the Bible as their rule of faith and practice and to "Presbytery" as the scriptural form of church government.

Samuel Houston, the sixth child of John Houston, was born in Ireland in 1728, and was seven years old when he came to this country with his parents. On March 20, 1753, he married Elizabeth McCroskey, and their children were: John, James, Robert, Margaret, William, Matthew and Elizabeth.

Of these children James, the second child, and grandfather of Mr. Craig, was born in Rockbridge county, Va., Nov. 12, 1757. In the year 1782 he removed to Washington county, Va., and a few years later to Blount county, Tenn., where he resided until his death. He was an intelligent and influential citizen of the county, was a delegate to the convention which framed the first Constitutional Convention of Tennessee, and afterward served with credit to himself and profit to the State in both branches of the Legislature. He was next elected clerk of the Circuit Court of Blount county, Tenn., which office he held for forty years, until he became blind and unable to perform his duties—though in his blindness he led an active life. He bore the title of "Major," and was a gentleman of worth and distinguished popularity.

James Houston was twice married. His first wife was Esther Houston, his cousin, and his second wife Polly Gillespie. To the first marriage were born four children, namely: Patsy, Betsy, Robert and Malinda, and to the second union there were ten children: Esther, Hettie, Lucinda, Phebe M., Polly, Samuel F., Patsy G., Betsy Gillespie, Malinda G. and Sydney Neil. The Houstons, like most of the early settlers, believed in large families, and thousands of the descendants of Col. John Houston, who came over from Ireland in 1735, are now scattered all over this country. Many of them have become distinguished in public life, and nearly all have become useful and influential citizens.

Of the hundreds of descendants of Col. John Houston, none of the name or blood have become so distinguished as Gen. Sam Houston, and a few salient points in his career are here in order. He was a cousin of Mr. Craig's mother, and the latter was often heard to speak of him as a visitor at her home. For the facts about Sam Houston, as well as much of the data concerning the Houston family, we are indebted to Rev. Samuel Rutherford Houston, D. D., of Pickaway, W. Va., who in 1882 published a history of the Houston family. Sam Houston was an odd, unique character, but forceful and influential. He was born March 2, 1793, in Virginia. His father died in 1807, and soon after this they removed to Blount county, Tenn., and located on a farm. He cared not for books but loved the wildness of the woods and the romance of Indian life. He was a born soldier, and when eighteen years of age engaged in the war of 1812 under Andrew Jackson. In 1818 he studied law and was soon admitted to the Bar, his natural ability allowing him to accomplish anything he undertook. He was afterward elected to Congress, and became one of the most effective speakers of the House. About 1826 he was elected Governor of the State of Tennessee, but soon thereafter contracted an unfortunate marriage. He separated from his wife, resigned the governorship and retired to the wigwam of an Indian chief, and from this wild life among the Indians drifted to Texas, where the revolutionary movement was brewing. He was mainly instrumental in achieving its independence. On the banks of the San Jacinto, with a small army, he overcame and captured the Mexican Chief, Santa Anna, but generously spared his life and finally gave him his liberty. It has been said that the reason for this humane action was because they were both Masons. He was first president of Texas, and was elected the second time in 1841. By wise and skillful diplomacy he secured the annexation of Texas to the United States in 1844, and represented Texas in the United States Senate, distinguishing himself as an orator of high rank and as a genuine patriot. During the stormy period preceding the Civil war he was loyal to the Union, and it is said that when Texas went out of the Union it broke his heart. "Sam" Houston cared not for money. He had great opportunities to accumulate riches, but would not avail himself of them. It was a saying of his: "Of all men in the world I hate a miser the worst. I am afraid to get a dollar ahead, for fear I might become one."

SILAS BUSBY, one of the few remaining pioneers of Jackson township, Madison Co., Ind., where he is a respected citizen and retired farmer, was born Dec. 13, 1822, in Wayne county, Ind., son of Isaac and Sarah (Willets) Busby.

Isaac Busby was a son of Isaac and Prudence (Tucker) Busby, and was a descendant of the Scotch-Irish family of Busby, which early settled in Virginia. Isaac Busby, grandfather of Silas Busby, was born Nov. 10, 1759, probably in Monroe county, Va., where it is known he was later engaged in agricultural pursuits, and from which section he came to Wayne county, Ind., with his son Isaac, being at the time an old man. He had reared a family of seven children in Virginia, as follows: Thomas; William, who moved to Missouri many years ago; Isaac; John, who settled in Iowa; Jane, who married Henry Perry, and settled on Lick creek, in Madison county, Ind., where she died, and he later removed with his family to Iowa; Prudence, who married in Virginia, Joseph Elliston, and they settled in Stony Creek township, near Lapel as pioneers, and there reared a family; Mary, who married, in Virginia, Addison Elliston, and they settled near Lick creek. The death of Isaac Busby, the grandfather, took place at the home of his son, Isaac, in Madison county, Aug. 30, 1843. In early life he had united with the Methodist Church, but in later years became a Universalist.

Isaac Busby, son of Isaac, was born March 10, 1796, in Monroe county, Virginia, and it is believed that he came on horseback to Indiana, as it is known he once returned to Monroe county in that way. On Oct. 14, 1819, he was married in Wayne county, Ind., to Sarah Willets, a native of Ohio, daughter of Jesse Willets, a pioneer of Wayne county, Ind. Later the Willets family removed to Illinois and the father died in Mercer county, that State. His children as remembered by Silas were: Silas, William, Dudley, Eli, Sarah and Matilda.

Isaac Busby rented land in Wayne county, Ind., but in 1822 he came to Madison county, and entered 240 acres of land in the woods, three miles east of Pendleton. After making a small clearing he returned to Wayne county, where he continued to live until December, 1825, when he moved to his land, built on it a log cabin with a stick chimney, and started upon its improvement. Through hard work he cleared up a goodly homestead, later built a commodious house, and became a substantial farmer. To Isaac and Sarah (Willets) Busby were born the following children, this record having been taken from the family Bible, which is now in the possession of Silas Busby: (1) Mary, born in Wayne county, Ind., July 29, 1820, married (first) a Mr. Richmond, who died leaving no children; she married (second) George Rambo, and they settled in Hamilton county, Ind., and are survived by one son, Edward. The mother died March 22, 1880. (2) Silas is mentioned below. (3) Susannah, born in Wayne county, Ind., April 30, 1825, married John Wilson, and they settled on Pike creek, east of Alexandria, where they reared a family; she is still living. (4) Eliza (as were the rest of the children) was born in Madison county, April 27, 1827. She married Jonathan Jones, and they settled in Madison county, Ind., where she died Dec. 3, 1872. They are survived by descendants in that region. (5) Margaret, born July 16, 1829, married James Wilson, settled on Pike creek, where they reared a family and still live on their original homestead. (6) Jesse, born Oct. 3, 1831, died Feb. 22, 1848. (7) Jane, born Sept. 17, 1833, married Joshua Fusell, and they still reside in Markleville, where they reared a family. (8) Elizabeth, born April 28, 1836, married (first) Joseph Dunwoody and (second) Frank Darlington. She settled on Lick creek, where she reared a family of four children, three by her first marriage and one by the second. She died May 14, 1904. (9) Thomas, born Dec. 24, 1838, died Sept. 29, 1860. (10) Matilda, born Feb. 13, 1845, died at the age of five years, Oct. 15, 1850. The mother of these children passed away Dec. 15, 1865, in Madison county, Ind. At the time of his death Isaac Busby owned 320 acres of excellent land, and had assisted all of his children to start in life. He was an Universalist in religious faith, and an honorable man in every relation of life. He was one of the original Republicans, voting for John C. Fremont, and later for Abraham Lincoln. His death occurred April 21, 1874, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Darlington.

Silas Busby was about three years old when his parents removed to Madison county, Ind. He was reared among pioneer surroundings, his home and school house both being log cabins. His school attendance covered about three months in the winters, the rest of the year being filled with work, assisting in clearing the farm and putting it under cultivation. He was ambitious and took every opportunity to improve himself, and although he had so few advantages he learned to write a plain hand, worked through Pike's Arithmetic, and read every thing which came in his way, books being rare at that time. He has always been a close student of the Bible, and during the past year has almost read it through for the second time.

When a little over twenty years of age, Feb. 23, 1843, Mr. Busby was married in Fall Creek township, to Elizabeth A. McAllister, born in Mercer county, Va. (now West Virginia), daughter of John and Hester (McGrady) McAllister, of Scotch-Irish descent. John McAllister removed to Madison county, Ind., in 1833, making the journey with oxen and settling on Lick creek. Here he entered 160 acres of land in the woods which he cleared up into a fine farm. In advanced life he retired from the farm and bought a residence property in Anderson, where he resided until his death at the age of sixty-five years. His wife died March 21, 1887. John McAllister was a prominent man in his day in Madison county, and was one of the early commissioners. In politics he was a Democrat. With his family he belonged to the Missionary Baptist Church. His children were: Elizabeth Ann, Mary, Susan, Thomas, James, Frances, John, Augustus, Hester and Benjamin.

After marriage the Busbys lived on the Busby farm for five years. Silas having an interest in the same. In 1846 he bought his present farm, then in two tracts, consisting of 155 acres, about thirty acres of which was cleared. For this he paid $900. In March, 1847, he took possession of it, and the family lived in a split-log house, the remains of which are still standing. It is the most remarkable log house in all this section, being made of heavy split logs more than three inches thick, from an immense yellow poplar. It was built by the original settler, a Mr. Barrett. The remaining planks are still as sound as when originally split, more than sixty years ago. It was a small structure of one room, with a loft, had a brick chimney and a fire-place. Mr. Busby lived in this house for thirteen years, and all of his children except two were born in this place. Later he cleared up his farm and built a substantial barn, and in 1860 he erected his present comfortable residence. Through industry and thrift he added to his farm until he had 200 acres of land, which is generally considered the best in this locality.

The children of Silas Busby and wife were: (1) Thomas M., born Dec. 1, 1843, is a farmer in Miami county, Ind.; he married Dec. 11, 1864, Eliza Ellen Morris, and had children: Augustus, Silas and Hester (who married Benjamin White, now deceased, and she died Oct. 30, 1905, at Anderson, leaving no children). (2) Hester A. was born May 28, 1846. (3) Susan Ann, born July 31, 1850, died in infancy. (4) Elizabeth O., born Jan. 10, 1854, married Feb. 13, 1873, Samuel M. Hanger, formerly a farmer, but now engaged in the grocery business at Anderson. Their children were: Ohmer W., Ward (deceased), Grace, Ethel, Bessie and Irving. (5) John M., born Jan. 13, 1858, married Emma Laura Brown, and they reside on the old homestead. Their children are: Lena May, born Dec. 15, 1883; Charles Elgar, June 6, 1885; Alonzo Grattan, Nov. 15, 1887; Blanche Anna, Sept. 30, 1889; Edith, April 17, 1892; Ernest, July 22, 1894; Frederick, Oct. 21, 1896; Lloyd, July 4, 1899; and Arthur, Sept. 9, 1902. (6) Isaac Vinton Busby, born Feb. 6, 1860, now superintendent of the schools of Lapel, was educated in the Indiana State University at Bloomington. He married Florence Kemp, and their children are: Laura, George, Ralph, Horace, Frank and Robert. Mrs. Elizabeth A. (McAllister) Busby died Aug. 14, 1888, on the homestead. She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, and a woman of many virtues.

Mr. Busby voted for Abraham Lincoln, but for many years has been identified with the Democratic party. During the Civil war, although a strong Union man, he was obliged to remain at home on account of the demands of his young family, but hired another to serve in his place. For some twelve years he served as justice of the peace. In his younger days he united with the U. B. Church, but for the last thirty years has been a member of the Protestant Methodist Church, in which he has been class leader and steward, and he has given active assistance in the founding of several churches in this vicinity. He is one of the few remaining pioneers of Madison county, and is a man who enjoys the respect and esteem of all those who have been brought into business or social relations with him during his long life.

CHARLES FRENCH SAYLES (deceased) was a power in the real estate circles of Indianapolis for a generation. He was generally conceded to be the best judge of property values in the city, and some of the most important transfers of real estate ever made here were negotiated by him. His personal investments included interests in some of the most valuable and desirable down-town property, as well as smaller holdings outside of the center of the city.

Mr. Sayles was a type of the ideal American citizen—notably intelligent, of fine moral fibre, of unquestioned ability in business and engaging social qualities. His career, too, was typical of American enterprise and ambition, for he attained his high position by sheer force of merit. He sustained in his well-rounded life the traditions of a line of ancestors who have figured in the history of the country from Colonial times, being of the eighth generation in direct descent from John Sayles, the first of this line on American soil, and of the ninth generation from Roger Williams, whose daughter John Sayles married. A brief outline of these earlier generations follows, beginning with the founder of the family in America. Information relating to the first four generations is found in such eminent authorities as Austin's Genealogical Dictionary of Rhode Island, Austin's Thirty-three Rhode Islanders, Publications of the Rhode Island Historical Society, and the Vital Records of Rhode Island.

about 1650, Mary Williams, of Providence, who was born in August, 1633, in Plymouth, and died in 1681. She was a daughter of Roger Williams (1603-1683) and his wife Mary Barnard (died after 1766).

He married Elizabeth Olney, of Providence, born Jan. 31, 1666, died Nov. 2, 1699. She was a daughter of Thomas Olney, Jr., born in 1633 (who served as deputy and boundary commissioner), and granddaughter of Thomas Olney, Sr., one of the most important citizens of Providence in his day. Thomas Olney, Sr., was born in 1600 at St. Albans, Hertfordshire, England; was one of the thirteen original proprietors of Providence Plantations, 1638; governor's assistant, 1649, 1652, 1653, 1654, 1655, 1656, 1664, 1665, 1666; commissioner for Providence, 1651, 1655, 1656, 1658, 1659, 1661, 1662, 1663; deputy for Providence to General Assembly, 1665, 1667, 1670, 1671; was named in the Royal Charter of King Charles II, 1663; died at Providence, 1682; will proved Oct. 17th.

I., was ensign (1722, 1723, 1724, 1725), lieutenant (June, 1725, May, 1726) and captain (June, 1729) of the 2nd Providence Company, captain of the Smithfield Company (May, 1731) and captain of the 2d Company of Smithfield (May, 1733). He was deputy for Providence, 1730, and afterward deputy for Smithfield, October, 1738. He was married (first) Nov. 24, 1720, to Mercy Phillips, of Providence.

(IV) Capt. Richard Sayles, Jr., also of Providence and Smithfield, son of Richard and Mercy (Phillips) Sayles, was born in Providence Aug. 5, 1723. He was ensign of the 1st Company of Smithfield, May, 1756; and captain of that company, June, 1762. He was justice of the peace for Smithfield, 1766, 1767, 1768. On Sept. 2, 1742, he married Abigail Hawkins, of Providence, daughter of John Hawkins and granddaughter of William Hawkins, Jr., who married Lydia Ballou, widow of George Gardiner. William Hawkins, Jr., was deputy from Providence, 1678, 1703, 1705, 1706, and died July 6, 1723, at Providence.

(V) William Sayles, son of Richard and Abigail (Hawkins) Sayles, was born Feb. 28, 1744, and died Feb. 19, 1832. He lived at Smithfield, R. I., Smithfield, Madison Co., N. Y., and Lenox, N. Y.; was first lieutenant in Capt. Reuben Ballou's Company, Col. Benjamin Tallman's Regiment, Smithfield, R. I., 1776. His wife Anna (Mowry), who died Sept. 1, 1836, was the daughter of Asail Mowry, of Smithfield, R. I., a private in Carr's Company, Colonel Crary's Regiment, who served for fifteen months.

(VI) Silas Sayles, son of William and Anna (Mowry) Sayles, was born March 12, 1777, at Smithfield, R. I., and lived in that place and in Lenox, Madison Co., N. Y., where he died Oct. 24, 1852. He served in the 74th New York Regiment during the war of 1812. On March 2, 1803, he married Phila Griffith, of Shaftsbury, Vt., who was born May 28, 1780, and died May 7, 1845. Her father, Seth Griffin or Griffith, a Revolutionary soldier, was wounded at the battle of Bennington and crippled for the rest of his life.

(VII) Oney Sayles, son of Silas and Phila (Griffith) Sayles, born Sept. 6, 1807, was a farmer during his active years, was a large land owner and proprietor of a sawmill and flourmill, and lived at Lenox and at Bridgeport, Madison Co., N. Y., and in Indianapolis, Ind., where he died July 9, 1893. His first wife, Betsey Benson (Fowler), of Lenox, N. Y., whom he married March 3, 1830, was born March 6, 1809, and she became the mother of nine children, five of whom are still living, namely: Oney Sayles, of Bridgeport, N. Y.; Lewis W. Sayles, of Lawtey, Bradford Co., Fla.; Silas Sayles, of Bay City, Mich.; Kirk Sayles, of South Bay, N. Y.; and Mary, Mrs. Nathaniel Dunham, of Lawtey, Fla. The mother of this family passed away Feb. 4, 1858, and Oney Sayles subsequently married Mrs. Jane P. Corbin, who still survives, making her home in Syracuse, New York.

(VIII) Charles French Sayles was born March 17, 1847, in Bridgeport, Madison Co., N. Y., and was the eighth of the nine children born to his parents. His early life was spent on his father's farm, and he began his education in the common schools of the neighborhood, also attending the seminary at Cazenovia, in his native county, when he was sixteen and seventeen. Later he was graduated at the celebrated Eastman Business College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He was only a young man of nineteen years when induced by his stepmother's brother-in-law, Mr. James H. Baldwin, to try his fortune in Indianapolis, where Mr. Baldwin was conducting a "Fancy Bazaar," a general notion store, at No. 6 East Washington street. He arrived in this city in June, 1866, and at once commenced clerking for Mr. Baldwin, with whom he remained about five years—subsequently taking a position as bookkeeper with Barnard, Johnson & Co., real estate and insurance agents. During the years he spent in their employ Mr. Sayles and Mr. Eugene Barnard, son of M. R. Barnard, the head of the firm, formed a mutual attachment, which in 1877 culminated in their entering a business partnership to buy out the old concern. Mr. Coe also had an interest for a year, the name being Barnard, Coe & Sayles, but the other partners bought him out at the end of that time and continued together as Barnard & Sayles until 1884, enjoying a patronage which grew steadily during that period. Mr. Barnard then went to Chicago, and Mr. Sayles formed a partnership with W. T. Fenton, under the style of Sayles & Fenton, but the latter withdrew after a year to engage in the banking business, also in Chicago, and from that time until the year before his decease Mr. Sayles was in business alone. On April 1, 1901, he organized the C. F. Sayles & Company Real Estate & Insurance Company, of which he was the head, his associates being his son, Herman B. Sayles, Campbell H. Cobb, and John E. Milnor.

Such is a brief statement of the main facts in Mr. Sayles's business life. Of the insurance branch it is sufficient to mention the fact that he was local agent for such high-class companies as the Home of New York; Phoenix of Hartford; Commercial Union of London; Norwich Union of England; North British & Mercantile of London; St. Paul Fire and Marine of St. Paul; and Fidelity and Casualty of New York. A record of his real estate transactions, both as an investor and as regards his negotiations in the interests of other investors, would form an accurate account of the development of property in Indianapolis and indicate many of the changes which have affected certain sections of the city. Mr. Sayles was both shrewd and farsighted in estimating the duration of real estate values, and the correctness of his conclusions as proved in time won him the reputation of being the best judge of such values in the city. He was conservative, relying for his success upon methods of indisputable integrity and unceasing fidelity to all affairs entrusted to him. In fact, it was the strain of over-conscientious devotion to complicated financial problems which hastened his demise. Though of slight build he possessed qualities of endurance which enabled him to attend to a variety of interests without neglecting any of them. His rise as a real estate man dated from the time he entered business on his own responsibility, in partnership with Mr. Barnard, an event which he himself regarded as the turning point in his life. The association proved profitable as well as agreeable to both partners. Then, as afterward, Mr. Sayles considered hard work his most valuable asset. But even tireless industry without great ability would not have enabled him to accomplish the vast amount of work which he undertook. He had a faculty for management which amounted to genius. His ambition carried him past the goal with which many might have been contented. But his enterprise had a worthy object, and was more the result of enthusiasm in his undertakings than the mere desire to achieve financial success, although that came to him in no small measure.

At the time of his death Mr. Sayles owned a large number of valuable properties in Indianapolis, including among his down-town holdings the building occupied by W. H. Block & Co., a half interest in the When building (which he and Thomas H. Spann owned together) and a fourth interest in the post office building. He also owned a number of lesser rental properties of considerable value. He dealt principally in improved real estate, doing comparatively little in the way of platting or sub-dividing land. Mr. Sayles organized the syndicate which purchased the post office from the government when it was preparing to erect a new Federal building, and retained the interest he took in same, which proved to be one of the best paying real estate investments ever made in Indianapolis.

Though well fitted by nature to be an agreeable companion Mr. Sayles exercised his qualities as such more in his daily intercourse with business associates and friends than in purely social life. He never devoted much time to society, but his pleasing manner and keen wit made him a factor in any circle he chose to enter, and he was a welcome member of the Country, Commercial and Columbia Clubs, being a charter member in all. He was also prominent in the local insurance association and a member of its executive committee.

He was a Scottish Rite Mason of high degree, holding membership in Ancient Landmarks Lodge, No. 319, F. & A. M., as well as in the Mystic Shrine. For many years he was one of the most prominent members of the Second Presbyterian Church, one on whom the congregation relied to place the finances of that body on a substantial footing, and at the time of his decease he was still serving as treasurer and trustee. In this work he formed a particularly strong friendship with Rev. Dr. Joseph A. Milburn, now of Chicago, who was pastor of the Second Church until a short time before Mr. Sayles's death, and who appreciated deeply his devotion and effective assistance. They often took long trips together, Mr. Sayles finding great pleasure in travel. He made two trips to Europe shortly before the close of his life.

Mr. Sayles passed away at his home, No. 1307 North Meridian street, Feb. 17, 1902, after an illness of less than a week. Although he had been occasionally indisposed his health had not been impaired to such an extent as to alarm his friends, and his sudden seizure and death came as a painful shock to all who knew him. He was stricken suddenly, while at work in his office, and never actually regained consciousness until the end came. The many inquiries regarding his condition, during those anxious days, revealed the number of his friends. A lover of simplicity, the funeral services were conducted in accordance with his known tastes, without pomp or display. His old friend and former pastor, Dr. Milburn, came from Chicago to officiate at the services, which were held in the Second Presbyterian Church, after which the remains were interred in Crown Hill cemetery. The beautiful tribute paid by Dr. Milburn to the life and character of Mr. Sayles was so true a presentation that at least part of it should be included in this sketch:

"There were certain qualities in Mr. Sayles that stood out visibly to be seen readily of all men. His physical relation to the world was susceptible of easy estimate. We all saw him as a virile, active, victorious man of business—a man shrewd, keen, capable, bringing to bear a splendid judgment in matters purely mundane.

"But there was another man besides this outer man, besides this physical man, the Mr. Sayles that only those who knew him intimately could know. He did not carry his heart upon his sleeve. The deeper things of life were so sacred to him that he did not offer them as a matter of world comment. Yet he had a soul that was filled with beauty and sweetness and grace.

"He was a beautiful friend, devoted, and not only so far as mere sentiment was concerned, but a friend anxious and willing to bear the burdens of his friends. I know this. He was one of the very few men that I have known to have come to me personally more than once and put his purse without limit at my disposal. He has told me without qualification that his means were at my command.

"That I think is a kingly kind of friendship. He was a perfect lover in his home, chivalrous, thoughtful, tender. He had the gift of adoration strong and deep in his character. In his religious life he was not given to cant. He was a man of few professions. He had his convictions, and they were strong—very strong. He thought he best could serve his church and the Lord of the Church by works rather than by words.

"He was a large part of the strength of the Second Presbyterian Church—a large part of its financial strength, a large part of its enthusiasm, a large part of its inspiration. He was a fine man; and this city has lost in him a most efficient citizen."

On Jan. 10, 1872, Charles French Sayles was united in marriage at Lakeport, N. Y., to Frances Tuttle, whom he first met at the Cazenovia Seminary. Mrs. Sayles was born July 1, 1850, in Madison county, N. Y., daughter of Reuben B. Tuttle, of Lakeport (which is four miles from Bridgeport), and is a sister of Herman C. Tuttle, who like her late husband has been prominent in the real estate business in Indianapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Sayles had two children, namely: Herman B., born in Indianapolis July 11, 1876, who has succeeded to his father's business; and Mary Helen, born in this city, Oct. 12, 1879, now the wife Harriot V. D. Moore, of New York, to whom she was married Nov. 25, 1903.

Mrs. Sayles is of distinguished Colonial ancestry in the Tuttle line, and was active in securing the establishment of the local chapter of Colonial Dames, writing the first letter pertaining to its foundation. Her ancestors for several generations took an active part in the military operations of their time. She is descended from Capt. Daniel Tuttle, who was born Nov. 11, 1680, in Wallingford, Conn., and died there in 1748. He was established and confirmed captain of the southeast company of Wallingford in October, 1738. He married Ruth Howe, and the line is continued through their son, Jehial Tuttle.

Lieut. Jehial Tuttle, son of Capt. Daniel and Ruth (Howe) Tuttle, served as lieutenant in the French and Indian war, taking part in the expedition against Ticonderoga and Crown Point, in which he was wounded, dying in camp in 1759. He married Hannah Hull, who was born March 18, 1720, daughter of Dr. Jeremiah Hull, of Wallingford, and granddaughter of Dr. John Hull, who was surgeon of the Connecticut forces during King Philip's war—1675-76. Dr. John Hull, born in 1640 in New Haven; removed to Stratford, 1661; moved to Pawgasset, now Derby, Conn., 1668; moved to Wallingford, 1687; died there Dec. 6, 1711. He was thrice married, the name of his first wife being unknown; his second marriage, on Oct. 19, 1671, was to Mary Jones, and his third, on Sept. 20, 1699, was to Rebecca Turner. His children were: John, Samuel, Mary, Joseph (by the first marriage), Benjamin, Ebenezer, Richard, Jeremiah and Archer (by the second marriage).

Dr. Jeremiah Hull, born in 1679, died in Wallingford May 14, 1736. On May 24, 1711, he married Hannah Cook, who died Dec. 11, 1741. Their children were: John, Moses, Tabitha, Hannah, Anna, Jeremiah, Joseph, Patience and Keturah.

Charles Tuttle, son of Jehial and Hannah (Hull) Tuttle, married Sarah Bliss. He enlisted at Wallingford, Conn., and served five years in the Revolutionary army. He was at the battle of Bunker Hill, and was with General Gates at the time of Burgoyne's surrender. He was first a private in the 7th Company, Isaac Cook, Jr., captain, from Wallingford, 1st Regiment, General Wooster, raised in April and May, 1775. Charles Tuttle was discharged Nov. 28, 1775. He was also a private in the 6th Company (Captain Brackett's Company), 5th Battalion, Wadsworth's Brigade (raised in June, 1776), Connecticut State Troops, 1776, Colonel Douglass.

Ephraim Tuttle, son of Charles and Sarah (Bliss) Tuttle, was the grandfather of Mrs. Frances (Tuttle) Sayles. He married Sylvia Bushnell.

Reuben Bushnell Tuttle, son of Ephraim and Sylvia (Bushnell) Tuttle, married Armenia Bushnell, and they were the parents of Frances Tuttle, who married Charles French Sayles.

BENJAMIN DICKOVER, a resident of Arcadia, Hamilton county, for thirty-five years, is a wealthy farmer and one of the extensive property owners of the locality. He is a native of Indiana, born in Wayne county, Jan. 26, 1838, son of Samuel and Martha (Whistler) Dickover.

The parents were both from Pennsylvania, the mother from the city of Lancaster. They came overland in the twenties, and located first in Wayne county, Ind., where they cleared land and settled down until 1857. In that year the family moved to Hamilton county, and bought a farm in Jackson township, where the parents spent the rest of their days. They improved the place greatly and made it into a fine piece of farming property, and one which produced more than a good income. Mr. Dickover was a Republican in his political views. The family consisted of seventeen children, all of whom grew to maturity, and were married before the parents died. Samuel Dickover lived to see ninety grandchildren. Their seventeen children were all given good educations, and all learned some remunerative trade or were engaged in farming. Ten of them are still living. Samuel Dickover, son of Samuel and Martha, was a minister in the Evangelical Church, and at the same time carried on his farm.

Benjamin Dickover was the twelfth of this large family, and grew up at home where he remained assisting his father until he was of age. Then he started out for himself and worked for a year as a farm hand before he began learning the carpenter's trade. That occupation he followed for some years, and then was engaged in the general mercantile business for a similar period. Another line in which he was interested for a few years was a planing mill. By 1880 he had determined to make farming his primary vocation, and in that year bought a farm of eighty acres, to which he has since added sixty-eight more. While of late years Mr. Dickover has lived in town, he has continued to manage the farm. The residence was rebuilt in 1886, and is now a fine home. Mr. Dickover also owns considerable town property.

On March 22, 1865, Benjamin Dickover was married to Ann Carter, who was born in Rush county, Ind., daughter of James and Mary (Tompkins) Carter, natives of Kentucky. The Carter family is of Irish descent. James Carter was a son of Arthur and Ann (Tyler) Carter, and came to Indiana in an early day. He first lived in Rush county, but in a short time moved to Hamilton county, where he bought a farm, cleared and improved the land, and made it his home for the rest of his life. He had three children. Benjamin and Ann Dickover were the parents of two children, but neither lived long. The first one, Augustus, born March 13, 1866, died Sept. 29, 1867; Gertrude, the second, was born Sept. 5, 1867, and died Aug. 2, 1878. Having lost their own children Mr. and Mrs. Dickover have taken into their home three children, relatives, who have been given every care and attention which they could have received from their own parents. One, William Dickover, is now married, and has three children; Charles Carter was given a good education, and for some years taught school, but he was always proficient on the violin, and is now studying in Indianapolis, with the view of teaching music; Effie Carter is a graduate of the high school and is now studying music in Indianapolis to fit herself for a vocal soloist.

The family are all members of the Christian Church, where Mr. Dickover is a liberal supporter. In politics he is a Republican, but has never been specially active in party work. Fraternally he belongs to the I. O. O. F., and the A. O. U. W. Benjamin Dickover is characterized by much ability, augmented by industry and perseverance, and is one of the successful and esteemed citizens of Arcadia.

DUNKIN. The Dunkin family, some members of which spell their name Duncan, was originally from Scotland, and the branch herein described is from the old Colonial stock of Pennsylvania in the Red Stone country.

John Dunkin, grandfather of Michael and William Dunkin, of Selma, Ind., was a farmer, who went from Pennsylvania to Ohio when a young man. In the latter State he married Elizabeth Sunderland, who died July 15, 1843, in Union county, Ind. She was the daughter of Peter Sunderland, one of the original pioneers. The Sunderlands had preceded the Dunkins to that section, and when John Dunkin, accompanied by a companion, crossed the mountains with a knapsack on his back, he found them well settled and much better off than the average pioneer. Dayton, Ohio, was then a hamlet of a few log houses and a block-house for the protection of the whites against the Indians. After marriage John Dunkin settled on Mad river, three miles southeast of Dayton, where he cleared up a farm and resided until his death. He and his wife were the parents of these children: William, born Sept. 22, 1788, died Nov. 22, 1870; John, born Oct. 21, 1790; Peter, born June 8, 1792; Michael, born Jan. 29, 1795, died young; Rachel, born Jan. 20, 1797, died Jan. 2, 1860; Benjamin, born Aug. 20, 1799; Michael, born Aug. 28, 1801; John, born Sept. 5, 1803; Joshua, born Sept. 25, 1805; Polly, born Nov. 22, 1807; and David, born Sept. 22, 1810, died Sept. 1, 1881. These names and dates are from the records left by William Dunkin, and copied in the family Bible.

William Dunkin, born Sept. 22, 1788, son of John, was reared on Mad river, in Montgomery county, Ohio, and there was married May 11, 1815, to Hannah Smith, born in New Jersey, daughter of John Smith, who died in that State, the daughter removing to Montgomery county, Ohio, with friends, Joseph Silver and his family. Mr. Dunkin resided in Montgomery county on a farm for some years, but about 1820 removed to Indiana and settled in Union county. In May, 1827, the family removed to Delaware county, there then being six children, and settled on the farm now occupied by William Dunkin, one of the children. This tract then consisted of 160 acres, eighty of which had been purchased from Robert Bronson, and eighty from Jacob Jackson. The first home of the family here was a round log house with puncheon floors, and covered with boards held down by weighting poles, there being no nails used in the cabin's construction. There was a stick chimney and a large fire-place. Mr. Dunkin cleared up a farm, and in 1854 built the present two-story house, although prior to that time he had erected a comfortable two-story hewed log house, 24x18 feet.

In the first log cabin, which was built probably a year before the settlement, there was a buckeye log in the wall of the west side of the house, and the first spring after the family settled in the house, a green sprout appeared and blossomed. The spaces between the logs had been chinked and daubed, and the pioneers believed that this kept the log green and in life. Two years later Mr. Dunkin purchased a window sash and glass in Union county and put in a window in his cabin. This cabin, standing on rising ground, was very pleasantly situated, and in pioneer days was a well known place.

The older Dunkins were "Hardshell" Baptists, John Dunkin having been a preacher of that faith in Ohio, and a pillar of the church. Wilson Thompson, a celebrated preacher in the church, caused a split in that denomination by preaching the doctrines of free will; he later came to Indiana and settled in Connersville, being elected to Congress from that district. William Dunkin followed that belief, and Thompson came to Smithfield to preach, the meeting being held at the log cabin home of Rev. B. Garrison, a Methodist minister. When Thompson arose to preach he picked up the Methodist hymn book and read the old-fashioned Methodist hymn: "When I can read my title clear to mansions in the sky," and then said impressively: "I read this hymn because I believe I can read my title clear." He referred no doubt to his belief in his doctrinal position. In this log cabin the early Methodists held their meetings for several years, but later built a church in Smithfield.

In politics William Duncan was originally an old-line Whig, and later became one of the original Republicans, voting for John C. Fremont and for Abraham Lincoln. He assisted to lay out Smithfield, part of which city is now located on his farm, and assisted in building the first church. He served in the war of 1812 for two years as corporal in an Ohio regiment, his service being in Canada. He was also stationed at Terre Haute, Ind., when the battle of Tippecanoe was fought, and, acting on orders brought by a runner, asking for reinforcements on the battleground, his regiment made a forced march, reaching the battlefield two hours after sun-up, but the Indians had already retreated. He was in the battle of the Thames, where Tecumseh was killed, but the cavalry in which he served was not in the thick of the fight. This regiment was recruited at Dayton, Ohio. Mr. Dunkin rode a three-year old colt, raised on his father's farm, using him for the two years that he was in the service, after which he brought him home. "Old Badger," as he was named, was a dark bay, chunky and fifteen hands high. Later Mr. Dunkin rode him to the old muster field on Lewis Reese's farm in Delaware county, Col. David Kilgore being the mustering officer. "Old Badger" lived to be thirty-seven years old, and was the pet of the family, being fed on ground feed in his old age. He finally got so weak that he could not rise, neighbors sometimes being called in to help him to his feet, and finally Mr. Dunkin had to shoot him. Mr. Dunkin died Nov. 22, 1870, aged eighty-two, respected by all who knew him; his wife had passed away in February, 1870. Their children were: John S., born Feb. 10, 1816, in Union county, Ind.; Louisa, born May 18, 1818; Elizabeth, born May 31, 1820; Michael, born Feb. 25, 1822; Elmira, born Sept. 2, 1825; Aaron, born Feb. 19, 1828; William, born Feb. 22, 1832; and George, twin of William. The above record was copied from the family Bible, where it is inscribed in the clear handwriting of Edward Henry, an old-time school teacher of Wellsburg, Va., and dated 1849.

WILLIAM DUNKIN, son of William, was born on the old homestead Feb. 22, 1832, and reared among the pioneers, many of whom he can well remember. The deer and wild turkeys were then in plenty, and his wife, then a little girl, ate some of a bear which had been killed by a neighbor and cooked in her father's house. The Indians had not yet left the county when Mr. Dunkin was born. He attended a neighboring school, held in a log schoolhouse, this being a subscription school one mile northwest from Smithfield, on the present site of Mr. Bartzfield's place. George Moody, a Virginian, was his first school teacher, and later Edward Henry, also of that State, who was a noted educator of the early days, was the instructor. William Dunkin received a good education for the times, being able to write a plain hand and spell fairly well. He attended school until eighteen years old, and was brought up on a farm, assisting his father to clear the land from the forest. When twenty-two years old Mr. Dunkin was married to Elizabeth Ellen Clevenger, born on the edge of Randolph county, Ind., May 5, 1838, daughter of Morgan and Rebecca Ann (Conner) Clevenger, the former the son of Samuel and Margaret Clevenger. Samuel Clevenger was a Virginian and a pioneer of Randolph county, Ind., where he cleared a farm from the woods and died aged eighty-two years. His children were: William, Betsy, Morgan, Mahlon, Alsey, Nancy, Mary, Jonathan and Rebecca. Morgan Clevenger and his wife, Rebecca Ann Conner, were members of the Methodist Church and staunch supporters thereof in Randolph county, Ind. John Conner, Mrs. Clevenger's father, was one of the original pioneers, settling at an early day, but later than William Dunkin, Sr. He cleared up a good farm, and had the following children: Mary Jane; Elizabeth; William Harrison, a soldier of the Civil war; and Rebecca Ann.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. William Dunkin settled on the old homestead, where Mr. Dunkin has since resided, the farm of 160 acres being his property, which he has greatly improved. He is a member of the Methodist Church and his home was often the tarrying place of the old Methodist circuit riders of pioneer days, although it was open to preachers of all denominations. In political matters he is a Republican. He is one of the most highly esteemed men of his locality, where he has spent so many years. To Mr. and Mrs. William Dunkin there were born six children, three sons and three daughters, as follows: George Morgan, Hannah Jane, Frances Helen, William Sherman, Lida Pauline and David J. Mr. Dunkin gave all of his children a good education, and has lived to see them grow up to be honorable men and women, each successful in his or her walk of life.

MICHAEL DUNKIN was born in Union Co., Ind., Feb. 25, 1822, and was five years of age when his father removed to this section near the first of May in 1827. The father planted a little corn and a small garden, and the family lived on this and the provisions brought by them from Union county, they also bringing six head of sheep, two milk-cows, nine shoats and two horses, and the journey, which consumed three days, was made by horse and wagon. Michael Dunkin attended school in a little round log cabin in Smithfield, the first one at the place, which was taught by William Williams, the first justice of the peace of the section, whose father was a Revolutionary soldier. The latter is buried in the old burying ground on the south branch of the river, one-quarter of a mile east of Smithfield, on land owned by George Cannadey, which is now a stock pasture, unfenced, and the grave of this Revolutionary patriot is unmarked and desolate. The primitive graveyard has given way to woods and brush, and is entirely neglected, although as many as 150 of the original pioneers of Delaware county rest there. Michael Dunkin later attended school one summer in Union Co., Ind., living with his grandmother, Elizabeth Dunkin, after the death of her husband, John, in Ohio. Four of her sons and Samuel Wilson, who had married her daughter, Rachel, had settled there. Michael Dunkin also attended school in Delaware county one term, one term in Smithfield and two terms in the district schoolhouse one-half mile south of Selma. The latter was a hewed log house with a fireplace four feet long, a log being cut out to admit light. There was a long writing desk made of a plank on one side of the room and the seats were puncheons. Here Michael learned to read and write, becoming a good reader and plain penman, and was well versed in Pike's old arithmetic. He worked on the farm in the summer time, and when eighteen years of age commenced working out.

On Nov. 9, 1843, Michael Dunkin was married in Liberty township, to Hannah Caroline Stiffler, born in Bedford county, Pa., March 5, 1823, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hull) Stiffler, the former of Pennsylvania Dutch stock, born in Bedford county. Mrs. Stiffler was of German descent. After marriage John Stiffler removed to Delaware county, and settled in Liberty township about 1838-9 on a farm adjoining that of Mr. Dunkin. He purchased eighty acres of Francis Kauffman, six acres of which had been cleared, and this he finished clearing. There was a round log house on this place when Mr. Stiffler settled on it, but in 1840 he built a good hewed-log house and barn, and kept a pioneer tavern. This was on the Indianapolis and Terre Haute road, and in the pioneer days there was a regular procession of covered wagons and stages going West, the old taverns doing a good business. It is said that teams and passengers on foot were always in sight going West to locate. John Stiffler and his wife had three daughters and one son: Mariah, Susan, Hannah, Caroline and John. Mr. Stiffler lived to be about sixty-seven years of age and died on Mr. Dunkin's farm, his wife having passed away at the age of sixty-three years. He was a reliable man of hearty manners and kindly disposition, was opposed to drinking and sold no liquors at his tavern. On the night of Mr. Dunkin's marriage to his daughter, four big covered wagons, loaded with people, stopped and bought feed for their teams, and these people slept in their wagons. John Stiffler and his wife were Free Will Baptists in religion, and took an active part in the work of their church.

After marriage Michael Dunkin settled in Smithfield and worked for fifty cents a day, and that spring put out on his father's farm three acres of oats and ten acres of corn. He hired out to Francis Dowlin, a carpenter and cabinet maker, who was also a Campbellite preacher, who had removed with his family from Wheeling, W. Va., and bought property in Smithfield, owning eighty acres on the site of the present town. Mr. Dowlin agreed to pay Mr. Dunkin eighty cents per day to rough out timber, but soon offered him a partnership in the business, this connection continuing for five years during which time they did a prosperous business. Mr. Dunkin then bought out Mr. Dowlin, and continued the business alone until 1852, when he purchased his present property of 160 acres of William Irving. This was partly improved, twenty acres were cleared, and there was a hewed-log house and a barn sixty feet long and forty feet wide on it. This property cost Mr. Dunkin twenty dollars an acre. Mr. Dunkin finished clearing the property and built a good frame house and barn, and here he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits ever since, although for many years he carried on carpenter work in connection therewith, and built many houses and barns in his section.

Mr. Dunkin is a member of the Campbellite Church, although formerly connected with the United Brethren denomination. He joined the Campbellite Church in 1854, under the ministrations of the Rev. John Blackman, a noted revivalist. In politics he was first a Whig and later a Republican, voting for John C. Fremont and Abraham Lincoln, but when the "Salary Grab" came up he voted the Greenback ticket, and later for William Jennings Bryan. He was a strong Union man, and had two sons in the Civil war: Benjamin Franklin and John Sampson. Mr. Dunkin is a charter member of Burlington Lodge of the Masonic fraternity. He was authorized and commissioned a captain to recruit and organize a company of Home Guards during the Civil war, and organized a company which he drilled for four years, being called out during the Morgan raid, but the capture of Morgan prevented active service.

Mr. and Mrs. Michael Dunkin had these children: Benjamin Franklin, born Feb. 4, 1845, married Mary Bradfield, and had two children—Cora (who married Isaac Wingate, a farmer of Delaware county, and has one daughter, Ethel) and Clay (who married Hattie Williams, and has two children, Helen and Emily); John Sampson, born Aug. 28, 1846, a farmer of Delaware county, married Julia DeWitt, and has children—Maggie (who married Nebraska Bullock, a farmer of Delaware county, and has three children, Mark, Ruth and Paul), Mattie (twin of Maggie, who married Charles Dill, a farmer of Delaware county, and has one child, Dorothea), Hattie, Ann, Joshua, Joseph and Jessie; Zachariah Taylor, born June 18, 1850, married Maggie Norris, and has children—Edgar (who resides in St. Louis and has one child, Kenneth), Nellie and Kirby; Hannah Elizabeth, born Nov. 11, 1852, died aged thirteen years; Mary Louisa, born Oct. 7, 1854, married Charles Carmichael, and they have two children—Carrie (who married V. Smithson) and Myrtle (who married William Kessling, and had three children, Elsie, Kenneth and Floy); John Fremont, born June 28, 1857, a farmer of Delaware county, married Dora Reece, and has children—Louis, Earl, Grenada and Margaret; Aaron Clay, born Feb. 15, 185—, married Jenny Carmody, and had two children—Floy and Lois; and William Perry, born Nov. 14, 1848, died in infancy.

JOHN H. STEPHENS, of Muncie, Delaware Co., Ind., has been a resident of that place since the close of the Civil war, in which conflict he gave three full years of service. He was born May 25, 1840, in Dayton, Ohio, son of Alexander and Eliza (Anderson) Stephens, the former a native of Virginia and of the same stock as Alexander H. Stephens, the famous vice-president of the Southern Confederacy. The family is of Scottish descent. Alexander Stephens was a pioneer of Montgomery county, Ohio, on the Mad river, not far from Dayton. His children were: Elizabeth, Nancy, Hugh A., Charles, John H., Isabella, George and Nora.

John H. Stephens received only a limited education in the common schools. His father's farm was on the edge of Greene and Montgomery counties, and there he was reared to agricultural work, at the early age of eleven beginning to work for wages—fifty cents a day. He saved his money and continued to work out until he was eighteen years of age, meantime attending school at Cedarville, Ohio, near Xenia, where his mother settled and where both his parents died. In 1811, when twenty-one years of age, he came to Delaware county, Ind., and locating at Yorktown, went to work for William Peltz. On Aug. 11, 1861, he enlisted at Yorktown, becoming a private in Company B, 36th Ind. V. I., for three years, or during the war, and remained in the army until honorably discharged at Indianapolis,

April 16, 1865. He was in the Army of the Cumberland, and saw service in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia, being in numerous skirmishes and many important battles, Shiloh, Chickamauga, McMinnville, Muschel Shoals, Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, the second battle of Franklin, the battle of Nashville, and was on the march to Atlanta after the expiration of his term, his regiment remaining in the field. He was in hospital two and a half months at Camp Dennison, Ohio, and after partially recovering went with Sergeant Morgan and fifty others, under the command of Sergeant Wagoner, of the 16th U. S. Regulars, to Milford Bridge, three hundred of Morgan's men attempting to burn the bridge. In the encounter Mr. Stephens received a wound through the left ankle and was laid up in hospital three weeks at Camp Dennison, after which he was sent home on furlough. At Chickamauga he was taken prisoner, being captured by the Confederate Black Horse Cavalry, but he was held only one hour, being recaptured by the Federal Black Horse Cavalry. They were enabled to effect the recapture by the aid of two girls who deceived the Confederates by pointing out the Federal Black Horse as part of the Confederate troops. On this famous field Mr. Stephens met his three brothers, all in the Union service, and all of whom gave their country good service and escaped without wounds. Hugh A. Stephens enlisted at Yorktown, entering the service as a private, and was promoted to captain, commanding Company B, 36th Ind. V. I. Charles Stephens was a private in the 75th Ind. V. I. George Stephens was in a cavalry company from Ohio, was captured at Beverly, Va., and was confined in the famous Libby prison and at Belle Isle, being a prisoner in the former place fourteen months and in the latter three months; he was reduced almost to a skeleton during this long period of confinement.

After the war John H. Stephens came to Muncie, Ind., where he became engaged as clerk in a grocery store, and he was also in the clothing store of Aaron Rothschild for a time, later clerking for Beemer & Hibbits. When that firm dissolved he remained with Mr. Hibbits for three months longer. He has been a continuous resident of Muncie for over forty years, during which long period he has gained the esteem of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances, and he is known as a reliable citizen and industrious man. He owns a small farm two miles west of Muncie.

In 1866, in Muncie, Ind., Mr. Stephens married Harriet Houston Galbraith, who was born in Hartford City, Blackford Co., Ind., daughter of Robert Galbraith, and they have had two children, Claude D. and Susie M. The former is now engaged as a merchant in Muncie. In fraternal connection Mr. Stephens was at one time a member of the Knights of Lebanon, and served as master workman in his lodge.

GEORGE A. COBLE, M. D., was born in 1861, in Pike township, Marion County, Ind., son of Jeremiah and Susanna (Pitts) Coble, the former of whom was born in 1834, and the latter in 1835, in Henry county.

Philip Coble, great-grandfather of Dr. George A., was born in Wittenberg, Germany, and came to America in 1776 and took part in the battle of Cowpens.

George Coble, son of Philip, was born in North Carolina, and he came overland to Indiana in the very early days, passing over the present site of Indianapolis without ever dreaming of the beautiful city that should some day grace that spot. He entered government land, and erected a log cabin in which his son Jeremiah was born. He was a farmer all of his life. He was a prominent member of the English Lutheran Church, in which he served as deacon and elder. In his political faith he was a Democrat. In the days of his early settlement in Indiana he saw many wild animals, wolves and deer, and often killed the latter before breakfast, so near did they come to his habitation. His death occurred in 1876, when he was aged eighty-one years. He married Sarah Ingold, and their children were: Barbara, who married Jacob Klingensmith, a farmer; Mary, who married George Staton, a farmer; Sarah, who married Anderson Guthrie, a farmer; Leah, who married Rev. John F. Lautenschlager; Jeremiah; Elizabeth, residing with her brother; Jane, who married Dan Fox; and Samuel, deceased, who went to California in 1854.

Jeremiah Coble, son of George and father of Dr. George A., was born on his father's farm in Pike township, Marion county, Nov. 30, 1834, and his education was secured in the log school house near his home. He is the owner of 100 acres of fine land, and has it all under cultivation. His entire life has been devoted to farming pursuits, and he raises good stock, Jersey cattle and Poland-China hogs, and has met with very satisfactory success in all his efforts. He has been very active in public affairs and is one of the most progressive and public-spirited men in his locality. In 1870 he was elected trustee and served about ten years in that office. As a member of the school board he assisted in the hiring of the teachers, and was very keenly interested in the schools. He was one of the first to move in the establishing of the English Lutheran Church, which he has liberally supported. He is a charter member of Hosbrook Lodge of Masons, No. 473, at New Augusta. In 1855 Mr. Jeremiah Coble married Susanna Pitts, daughter of Isaac and Charity (Willits) Pitts, farmers of Henry county, Ind. To this union were born five children: Laura, wife of Jeremiah M. Neidlinger, who keeps a general store at Whitestown, Ind.; George A.; Maggie, who married Eli Rodibaugh, a farmer; Fred W., who died aged twenty-eight years; Clara B., who married Marion Todd, deceased, and now resides with her father.

Dr. George A. Coble attended the local schools in Pike township, and the high school in Zionsville for one year, and then entered Butler University. After one year there he entered the Medical College of Indianapolis, in 1879, and was graduated therefrom in 1882. He practiced one year in the city dispensary, and one year at Whitestown, and then settled at New Augusta, where he has continued to make his home. He has built up a large and lucrative practice, and he owns a fine home here.

In 1886 Dr. Coble was united in marriage with Miss Florence H. Trout, daughter of William W. and Emelia (Neese) Trout, the former a native of Indiana, and the latter of Tennessee. Two children, a son and a daughter, have been born of this marriage, namely: Stella; and George F., who is still a student. Like his forefathers, Dr. Coble is a strong supporter of the principles of Democracy, although he has not found time, nor has he had the inclination, to fill political office. His fraternal associations include the Masons and the Odd Fellows, he being past master of Hosbrook Lodge, No. 473, in the former organization, and a member of Lodge No. 511, in the latter. He is one of the prominent members and liberal supporters of the English Lutheran Church at New Augusta.

WILLIAM H. DELINGER, one of the substantial agriculturists of Madison county, Ind., who is carrying on operations on his fine farm situated near Orestes, Monroe township, was born April 12, 1842, in Wilkes county, N. C., son of Jacob and Mary (Gillam) Delinger, and grandson of George Delinger.

Jacob Delinger was born in 1815, near Fin-castle, Va., son of George, and was married in Wilkes county, N. C., to Mary Gillam, daughter of William and Elizabeth Gillam. Mr. Delinger and his wife owned sixty acres of land in North Carolina, but this they sold, and in 1854 removed to Indiana, settling in Rush county on rented land. In 1869 they removed to Madison county, whence they went to Stanton county, Nebr., but Mr. Delinger was taken sick, and going to Madison county, Nebr., he died at the home of his son, James A., in his seventy-first year. He was a Baptist preacher for twenty-nine years, and although his education had been limited, he was a strong exhorter of the gospel and preached in North Carolina and Rush and Madison counties, Ind., was pastor of the L—— Creek Missionary Church, and for two years was State missionary minister in Nebraska, where for four years he was also a justice of the peace. His children were: Thomas; John, who died in North Carolina; Elizabeth; William H., Nancy, Catherine, Jane and James A.

William H. Delinger received no educational advantages as a boy, learning to read and write after marriage. He was brought up to the hard work of the farm, being but twelve years old when he came to Indiana with his parents. At the time of his enlistment, in July, 1862, in Rushville, Mr. Delinger was living in Rush county, and he was enrolled Aug. 13th of that year as a private of Company H, 16th Ind. V. I., Capt. James M. Hildreth, for three years, or during the war. His honorable discharge took place at Yazoo Point, La., in 1863, on account of disability, he having been attacked with measles, which settled in his throat, this trouble still giving him annoyance. His service was in Kentucky, Tennessee and Louisiana, and he was in the battle of Richmond, Ky., where with most of his regiment, he was taken prisoner, being sent to Indianapolis for exchange, and from there to Memphis, Tenn. He then took part in the great battle at Haines Bluff. Mr. Delinger was stationed on a picket line at a big oak tree, near a bayou, across which a body of Confederate sharpshooters were concealed in a thicket. Three of Mr. Delinger's comrades had been shot here while on duty, and while he was here stationed the sharp-shooters shot all of the bark from the tree where he was stationed. For twenty-four hours he had neither food nor water, and he was not relieved until after dark, when the relief guard came. Mr. Delinger's war record is a good one, and shows him to have been a brave and gallant soldier.

After his service Mr. Delinger returned to Rush county, Ind., and was there married July 17, 1864, to Margaret Warfield, born in Rush county, Sept. 7, 1841, daughter of Henry and Mahala (McDaniel) Warfield, the former of German stock, born in Ohio. Henry Warfield's children were: Margaret, Adam, Polly, Ann and David. In 1886, Mr. and Mrs. Delinger located in Madison county, where they have since made their home. They are consistent members of the Christian Church, in which he has been a deacon for seven years. He is a very temperate man, having never used either liquor or tobacco, and his many sterling traits of character are recognized and appreciated in the community in which he has lived so long. He is an ex-member of Elwood Post, G. A. R.

DR. MAHLON C. HAWORTH. Among the prominent professional men of Noblesville, Ind., may be mentioned Dr. M. C. Haworth, a well-known physician and substantial citizen, who belongs to an old and honored family of Colonial Quaker stock.

George Haworth, the progenitor of this branch of the family, came to Pennsylvania with William Penn in 1699. Although a Quaker, a member of this family was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. James Haworth, the great-grandfather of the Doctor, was a farmer in Virginia, and his son, Jonathan, removed from that State to Ohio, where he owned mills in Highland county, manufacturing flour, woolen cloth, etc. He married Sarah McPherson, of Scotch stock, and she died in Ohio, leaving three children,—Daniel, Mary and George. Mr. Haworth married a second time Esther Evans, their sons, William, Joel and Isaac, being born in Ohio.

In the spring of 1834 Jonathan Haworth came with his family to Hamilton county, Ind., and settled in Noblesville township, on Government land, which was then covered with heavy timber, and here he built a log cabin and partly cleared his land, which he later sold to purchase an 160-acre tract on which there was no clearing. Here he made a good home and erected substantial buildings. He was a stanch Friend or Quaker, and the head of the meeting, opening and closing the services, and taking a leading part in the Church. He was a stanch Union man and one of the original Republicans, voting for Fremont and Lincoln. He was an exemplary citizen, public-spirited and patriotic, and was held in much esteem by his fellow townsmen.

George Haworth, son of Jonathan, was born April 20, 1821, in Randolph county, Ind., the family later removing to Ohio, but returning to Indiana in 1834. He received a good common school education in the schools of Ohio and although after the return to Indiana, when he was thirteen years of age, he did not attend school, he became a very well-read man. He followed agricultural pursuits all of his life. Mr. Haworth was married in Hamilton county, Ind., to Ann Haworth, born in Marion county, Ind., daughter of George and Jane (Thornburg) Haworth, early settlers of Marion county, Ind. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Haworth settled on a farm of forty acres in the woods, on which Mr. Haworth built a log house and cleared up the farm. He purchased land from time to time, and finally owned about 500 acres. He and his wife were Quakers, and he was an active politician, although he would never accept office. Like his father he was an original Republican and voted for Fremont. Mr. and Mrs. Haworth had children: James, Sarah, Elma, Dr. Mahlon C. and Mary. George Haworth died on his farm, April 20, 1892, aged seventy-one years, and his wife passed away in 1854.

Dr. Mahlon C. Haworth was born June 27, 1851, in Noblesville township, and his early education was secured in the district school. He then spent three years in Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., and attended the Indiana Medical College, Indianapolis, Ind., from which he was graduated in 1877. Immediately thereafter he began the practice of his profession in Noblesville, and soon established himself thoroughly in the confidence of the people of the community.

On May 15, 1878, Dr. Mahlon C. Haworth was united in marriage, in Cicero, with Miss Celista Dewey, who was born in West Alexandria, Preble Co., Ohio, daughter of Dr. Annin and Catherine (Benjamin) Dewey, the family being of old Colonial Vermont stock, of which Commodore Dewey is a member. Dr.

Annin Dewey graduated from the Cincinnati Medical College, and practiced medicine in Preble county for a time, but later came to Indiana and was one of the early physicians at Strawtown and Cicero, where he carried on his profession for many years. He was assistant surgeon of the 101st Indiana Regiment in the Civil war. He and his wife had four children: Nathaniel, Lemuel, A. Mary and Celista.

Dr. Mahlon C. Haworth is a member of the Hamilton County Medical Society, the State Medical Association, the American Medical Association, and takes the leading medical periodicals, keeping himself well in touch with all the latest inventions and discoveries. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, Scottish Rite, and a member of the Shrine, at Indianapolis; is a Knight of Pythias, Noblesville Lodge, and a member of the Elks. In his political belief he is a Republican, and from 1877 to 1880 was coroner of Hamilton county. He stands as high as a citizen as he does professionally and is very popular in Noblesville. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, and the parents of three children, namely: Ione, Elma and George D.

JOHN T. WILLS, of No. 928 Wheeling avenue, Muncie, Ind., is one of that city's highly esteemed residents, and a soldier of the Civil war. Mr. Wills was born Sept. 25, 1835, in Darke county, Ohio, son of John E. and Mary (Thomas) Wills.

John E. Wills was born in New Jersey, and descended from old Colonial stock, probably of English ancestry. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. It is believed that he married in Darke county, Ohio, Mary Thomas, daughter of Dr. John and Anna Thomas. About 1850 Mr. Wills removed to Indiana, purchasing sixty acres of land near Milton, Wayne county, and later removed to Louisville, where his wife died, and he passed the remainder of his days with his children, dying in Darke county, Ohio, aged seventy-eight years. His children were: Francis, Elizabeth, Mary Ann, Hannah, John T. and Esther Ann.

When John T. Wills was ten years of age his father removed to Milton, Wayne Co., Ind., and when he was fifteen to Louisville, Henry Co., Ind., in both of which places young Wills attended the district school. He worked on the farm in the summer months until about sixteen years of age, when he learned the brick-laying trade, beginning to work thereat when about eighteen years of age at Cambridge City, and this has been his occupation throughout life. When he reached his twenty-first year he married Charlotte Saums, daughter of John Saums, and to this union there were born two children: Charles and Howard.

Mr. Wills enlisted as a musician, in Richmond, Ind., in 1861, for three years or during the war, becoming regimental bugler of the 36th Ind. V. I., and his services were principally in Kentucky and Tennessee, he being honorably discharged on account of the discharge by the government of all regimental bands, after a service of about one year. Returning to Indiana, he located at Newcastle, where he worked at his trade, but after the death of his wife, a few years later, he located in Anderson, where he lived a short time. He was married (second), Jan. 15, 1866, to Emma C. Justice, born in Muncie, Ind., April 19, 1846, daughter of Patrick and Frances (Van Horn) Justice, and to this union has been born one daughter: Lula M., who married Llewellyn Jones, an iron worker, and they have one child, Emma Elizabeth, attending the public schools of Muncie.

Mr. Wills continued work at his trade, locating in Muncie some time during the Civil war, and here he has resided to the present time. Although past his seventieth year, he can still turn out a full day's work, and it takes a skilled, rapid workman to keep up with him. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., Anderson, and he belongs to the United Brethren Church. In politics he is a Republican, his first vote being cast for John C. Fremont, and he has voted for every Republican candidate for the Presidency to the present time. Mr. Wills purchased his present home about twenty-five years ago, and has resided in it for about twelve years.

Patrick Justice, the father of Mrs. Wills, was born Dec. 20, 1791, probably in Virginia, in which State he was educated. He was married Jan. 5, 1818, to Catherine McGowen, born April 18, 1794, probably in Richmond, Ind. Their children were: Mary Ann, born April 20, 1819; James, Dec. 24, 1821 (resides in Chanute, Kans.); David, March 16, 1823; Henry, Dec. 14, 1825; Sarah Ann, Oct. 25, 1827. Patrick Justice was an early merchant of Richmond, Ind., and in 1833 removed to Muncie, making the journey with wagons. He engaged in the mercantile business for a time, but later operated a hotel. His first wife died Sept. 22, 1836, and he was married (second),

April 11, 1839, to Frances Van Horn, born in Bucks county, Pa., Dec. 31, 1814, daughter of Joseph Van Horn, and to this union there were born: Catherine, Feb. 27, 1840; Hannah Elizabeth, Nov. 24, 1841; Caroline, Jan. 1, 1844; Emma Caroline (record in Bible is Emma), April 19, 1846; Malinda, Dec. 18, 1848; Louis Carol, March 18, 1852 (died in October, 1856); and George, Jan. 15, 1857.

Patrick Justice followed various business enterprises after locating in Muncie, including a tan yard and shoe shop, a crockery business, a nursery, and also conducted a farm of fifty acres. He passed away Oct. 5, 1859, in Muncie, in the Methodist faith, while his second wife, who was a Quaker, died Aug. 23, 1888. Mr. Justice was on old-line Whig in politics, and for several years held the office of recorder of Delaware county.

DR. S. C. DOVE, of Westfield, Ind., is one of the oldest physicians in Hamilton county in point of service. He was born at New Vienna, Clinton Co., Ohio, April 10, 1839, son of Jacob and Nancy Jane (Skegge) Dove. The Doves are an old Colonial family of New Jersey, and of Scotch-Irish origin, while the Skegges are of Welsh descent.

Jacob Dove, the father, was a resident of New Jersey, whence he went West. At Little Rock, Ark., in 1837, he married Nancy Jane Skegge, whose father was born in Wales, while her mother was a native of Little Rock, Ark. Jacob Dove was a tailor by occupation, and in 1838 he settled at New Vienna, Ohio, where he opened a shop and worked at his trade three years, at the end of that time buying a farm of 150 acres and the remainder of his active life was devoted to farming and the stock business. He died in 1882, and his wife died April 22, 1863. One of their sons, Mark, was a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, serving in an Ohio regiment, and for six months was a prisoner in Libby prison.

Dr. S. C. Dove received his early education in the New Vienna high school. He carried on his professional studies in the Ohio College of Medicine and Surgery, and under the preceptorship (for three years) of Dr. Aaron T. Johnson, of New Vienna. He began the practice of medicine in 1862, and almost immediately entered the United States army as assistant surgeon, being assigned to Camp Denison, Ohio, Hospital Department, and later that year was sent to Lexington, Ky., remaining three months. In June, 1863, he came to Carmel, Ind., and remained in general practice until the spring of 1864. In August, of that year, he was appointed consulting assistant surgeon at Camp Morton Prison Hospital, where he remained three months. The prisoners had all the care and attention that could be given them. In 1864 the Doctor was appointed a member of the State Board of Medical Examiners, examining drafted men. Other members of the board were: Drs. C. J. Kipp and Newcomer. On Nov. 4, 1864, Dr. Dove resigned and located in Westfield, where he has since been successfully engaged at his profession. He took the place of Dr. Dugan Clark, and has endeared himself to a large clientage. He purchased Dr. Clark's residence, and in it all his children were born.

Dr. Dove married (first) at Carmel, Ind., Oct. 22, 1863, Harriet Jane King, who was born in Indianapolis, daughter of Elijah and Harriet (Holmes) King, natives of Pennsylvania of Dutch descent, who soon after their marriage moved to Indianapolis, and three years later to Carmel, where they engaged in mercantile pursuits during the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Dove died Aug. 19, 1875, the mother of three children, namely: Lula King, born Sept. 27, 1865, was married, April 3, 1886, to Prof. I. I. Cammack, principal of the Central high school of Kansas City, Mo., and has a daughter, Edith, now a student in the Missouri State University; Orville Holmes, born Sept. 2, 1867, is mentioned below; and Halcyone Harriett, born Dec. 17, 1868, was married April 5, 1893, to Bert Smith, a prosperous merchant and stock dealer at Zionsville, Boone Co., Ind., and has a daughter, Irene. Dr. Dove married (second) Sept. 14, 1876, in Hamilton county, Ind., Mary Ellen Hoskins, born in Guilford county, N. C., daughter of Seborn Hoskins, also a native of North Carolina, who shortly before the Civil war moved to near Westfield, Hamilton county, Ind., and passed the remainder of his life engaged in farming. To this union came two children: Walton H., born July 15, 1880, who died Oct. 15, 1880; and Charles Herschell, born March 13, 1887. Dr. Dove is a member of the State Medical Society, and a charter member of the Hamilton County Medical Society. He has a very valuable medical library, and is a subscriber to all the reputable medical periodicals. In politics he is a Republican, and for eight years was coroner of Hamilton county. He joined the Masons in 1863. His religious faith is that of the Society of Friends.

Dr. Orville Holmes Dove, son of Dr. S. C., gained his medical education under his father, and in the Indiana Medical School, graduating in 1894. He also attended the Post-Graduate College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City for two years, after which he made a six-months professional trip to Europe. He is now practicing in Kansas City, Mo., and is meeting with deserved success as a specialist in gynecological surgery.

WILLIAM J. MORGAN, a successful farmer and thrifty resident of Mooresville, Morgan Co., Ind., and a member of the Friends Church, was born in Tennessee, Jan. 13, 1833, son of Obediah and Ann (Jones) Morgan, and grandson of Thomas Morgan.

Thomas Morgan was a native of North Carolina, but of English descent. Tradition has it that three brothers came from England prior to the Revolution, bearing the name of Morgan. One brother was drowned, but the other two settled in North Carolina, whence this Indiana branch springs. The Morgan family all engaged in farming, and were men of substance, well considered in their several communities. Thomas Morgan died in Tennessee. His son, Obediah, was but sixteen years of age when the family made the trip overland to Tennessee from North Carolina, and arrived in their new home in 1812, and he became prominently identified with that section of country.

Obediah Morgan resided in Tennessee until 1833, when he came to Indiana, locating in Madison county, whence he went to Hendricks county in 1838, and there he died in 1889, at the advanced age of ninety-three years. When the family settled in Indiana, they were in the midst of wild woods, and many privations were endured. The good mother, a native of Tennessee, of Scotch descent, spun and wove all their clothing, in addition to cooking, washing and doing all the work of the family. In time the Morgans became well known in their neighborhood, and the father was regarded as one of the successful farmers of the county. Both he and his wife were Quakers, and peaceful, quiet people, honest and industrious, and earnest in their endeavor to live honestly and free from worldliness. Nine children were born into this family, of whom our subject is sixth in the order of birth. These children were all successful. With the exception of two they are now deceased.

At the age of twenty-one years, William J. Morgan, who had been educated in the common schools, rented a farm, and left his father. Three years later he took charge of eighty acres, in 1859, and some time later came to Morgan county, where he lived two years. He then bought a 100 acre farm in Liberty township, Hendricks Co., Ind., upon which he spent twenty years, but in 1882 he came to Morgan county, where he has since remained. In addition to general farming, he raises the best grade of trotting horses, full blood Shorthorn cattle and Shropshire sheep, and is quite successful in his operations.

In 1856, Mr. Morgan was married to Mary J. Woodward, born in Hendricks county, March 31, 1834, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah (Mendenhall) Woodward, both natives of Tennessee, who came to Indiana in 1830, and lived as typical pioneers, becoming in time successful farmers in Hendricks county. In 1853 they located in Morgan county, where they remained until death. They, too, were of the denomination of Friends. To William J. Morgan and wife were born the following children: Benjamin Frank, who resides in Mooresville, Ind., married in 1882, Miss Alice Hadley, and has two children, Lura and Mara; Virgil H., who resides in the State of Washington, was married in 1887, and has two children, Flossie and Mabel; Dora married Frank Sheets, and resides at Mooresville; and Pleas, at home assisting the father. These children have all been well educated, and are proving a credit to their parents. All of the family are members of the Friends Church, and the children have been carefully reared in its teachings.

In politics Mr. Morgan has always been a Republican, and his quiet, impressive influence is felt throughout the entire county. He has conscientiously filled the offices of township assessor, and member of the advisory board, and county council, and whenever he is called upon for advice or action, he can be depended upon to act as his judgment and conscience dictate, uninfluenced by any outside issues. Like so many of his creed, William J. Morgan is the soul of honesty and integrity, and his simple yes or no is taken as another's bond. What higher praise can be given any man?

COOK. In the early settlement of America there was great opportunity for homes and enterprise. In about the year 1732 there set sail from one of the German ports for America a member of the Cook family with his young wife, and during the course of the long voyage a son, whom they named Adam, was born to them. The family settled in Madison county, Va., on the Rappahannock, about thirty miles up the river, and on the same side as the Washington family had their home. Adam Cook grew to manhood, married and raised a family, but only three of his sons are of record, Daniel, Ephraim and John. Daniel and Ephraim moved to West Virginia, and John went to Kentucky.

Of Daniel Cook and his descendants we would speak in particular. When but a young man of eighteen he joined the Revolutionary army, and served throughout that struggle under George Washington. It is believed that he was in the siege of Yorktown and saw Cornwallis and his soldiers march out to the tune of "The World is Upside Down," and surrender to Washington. In 1792, when thirty years of age, he married Rosanna Wilhoit, of German descent, who was then eighteen years of age. They became the parents of thirteen children, as follows: Abram, Joel, Rhoda, Annia, David, Dinah, Cornelius, Jennie, Ephraim, Elizabeth, John, James and Madison. Daniel Cook, the father of this family, died in 1823, from an injury received while climbing a fence. His foot slipped, and, falling, he received internal injuries which resulted in his death a few days later. He was a large man, and though just below the average height, had very broad shoulders and was very muscular. He had black hair, blue eyes and red whiskers, and in his manner was blunt and outspoken. In all his dealings he was honest and upright. His wife was tall and had black hair and brown eyes. Of rather timid disposition, she was very domestic, loving her home and keeping it spotlessly neat. She never turned away an hungry person and was always ready to help the needy. Strictly attending to her own affairs, she said no harm of her neighbors and it is said she died without an enemy. In 1830 the widow and most of the family of Daniel Cook moved to Indiana, but all but the widow and four sons became homesick and returned to the mountains of West Virginia. Of those who remained in Indiana, Abram, Joel and John were buried in the Harlan cemetery, and Madison was buried in the Hess cemetery. Mrs. Cook was buried in the Gard cemetery.

Joel Cook, son of Daniel, was married June

2, 1820, to Nancy Farley, daughter of Capt. Matt Farley, and the union was blessed with five children, four of whom were born in West Virginia and one in Indiana, as follows: Matt F. (the father of Benjamin H. of this sketch, who died Nov. 28, 1898), Angeline, Daniel (died May 17, 1903), John F. and Jane. In 1830 Joel Cook emigrated with his family to Indiana, and they settled in Rush county, where they lived one year. Then for two years they lived in Henry county, two miles north of Lewisville. At the end of that time Mr. Cook entered eighty acres of land in Brown township, Hancock county, where the remainder of his life was passed. Mrs. Nancy (Farley) Cook died June 2, 1835, and on June 1, 1838, Joel Cook married Susanah Rogers, daughter of Nathan Rogers, who had come from Davidson county, N. C. To this union ten children were born, four sons and six daughters, all of whom are living at this writing except Cassinda, who married Robert J. Collins, and died Oct. 12, 1906. She is buried in the old family lot in Harlan cemetery, overlooking Sugar creek. The names of the other nine children are: Sarah, Nancy, Harrison, Martha E., Joel, Jr., Lorenzo D., Emily, Eli and Mary A.

In 1885 Joel Cook, Jr., with his brother Harrison, paid a visit to the Cook family and their old home in West Virginia. The accounts of the magnificent scenery and places visited are very interesting, but too much space would be required to occupy in this sketch. We quote Joel Cook's account of the latter part of his trip: "We crossed the Ferry and landing at the base of the mountain, made our way up 'New river' road to Capt. Matt Farley's residence, which is still standing. We went to the door, were introduced to the lady of the house and were given permission to examine the house. The inside looked old. It is built of pine logs hewed, and is two stories high. It has a large stone chimney at the north end. I went inside and the first room had a large stone fireplace, built in old Virginia style. Upstairs I found another fireplace. A window in the west gave me a nice view of New river. We then visited Grandfather's grave, and crossing the river we went to Aunt Anna Farley's. After a pleasant visit with her we returned to our home in Madison county." Mr. Cook says that the house was the oldest one he has ever in. We knew it stood there in 1820 and was probably built many years before. Another matter worthy of mention is the great number of descendants of Daniel Cook. He had thirteen children, 133 grandchildren, and 540 great-grandchildren.

Matt F. Cook, son of Joel, married Sarah Pritchett, daughter of Henry and Rachel (Carter) Pritchett, pioneers from the southeast section of the "Buckeye State," near Gallipolis, who emigrated to Indiana when the brave Red Men roamed, and the primeval forests were unbroken. This was about the time the Cooks also came West. Henry Pritchett was supposed to have met with death by unknown means in the fall of 1839. His family were unable to learn any trace of him. His widow, Rachel, died June 30, 1872. Of their children, Mary is the widow of the late Alfred Riggs, and now a resident of Syracuse, Kans.; Sarah is the widow of the late Matt F. Cook, and resides in Wilkinson, Ind.; Noah, Henry and John Pritchett were last heard of in Illinois and Iowa. Noah Carter, an uncle, brother of Rachel (Carter) Pritchett, now resides in the city of Kokomo, Ind., at the ripe age of ninety-eight years, and is enjoying good health; he was, in the early days of Indiana, the greatest "story teller" and hunter of the times. In illustration of his jocular manner is the following: "As I was going to my work in the wheat field with my reaphook on my shoulder I discovered a very large buck deer cross my path. I gave him chase and run him onto a pond of ICE where I soon overtook him and cut his throat with my reaphook, then WE had plenty of venison to eat during harvest."

BENJAMIN H. COOK, M. D., descended from the above illustrious family. He was born on the farm Aug. 22, 1858, son of Matt F. and Sarah (Pritchett) Cook, where he did such work as is common to the farmer boy. He attended the common schools, did some teaching and read medicine with Dr. Lundy Fussell, of Markleville, Ind. On Feb. 26, 1885, he graduated from the Medical College of Indiana, receiving the degree of M. D. For seventeen years he practiced in Wilkinson, Ind., and on June 15, 1903, moved to Anderson, where he now resides.

On Jan. 30, 1880, Dr. Cook married Miss Laura E. Cooper, daughter of James Madison and Sarah Melisse (Coffin) Cooper, the former a son of Judge David and Rachel (Hendricks) Cooper, natives of North Carolina who emigrated to Missouri in 1853, and the latter a daughter of Elisha and Anna Matilda Coffin, also natives of North Carolina. James M.

Cooper died April 26, 1905. Four boys and two girls have been born to the union of Dr. Cook and Miss Cooper, as follows: Theophilus Parvin, Harvey Weir, Robley D. Merle, Heretial Paul, Sarah Elma and Rachel Anna. Dr. Cook is a member of the Central Christian Church, as are also his wife and boys. Fraternally he belongs to Mt. Moriah Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Knightstown Chapter, Cryptic Council and Knightstown Commandery. He is an Odd Fellow in all the various branches of the order, and is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Red Men. He is ex-president of the Hancock County Medical Society, and is now (1908) secretary-treasurer of the Madison County Society. He is also a member of the Indiana State Association, etc. The family generally have been members of the Baptist Church. In politics they have all been ardent followers of the principles of Jeffersonian Democracy, they but seldom asking for office but being ardent politicians.

HON. ROBERT W. McBRIDE, who served as judge of the Thirty-fifth circuit for six years, and of the Supreme court of Indiana a little over two years, and now counsel for the Loan Department of the State Life Insurance Company, Indianapolis, was born in Richland county, Ohio, Jan. 25, 1842. His parents, Augustus and Martha A. (Barnes) McBride, were natives respectively of Washington county, Pa., and Richland county, Ohio. The Judge's grandfather was of Scotch birth, his ancestors coming to America just after the Revolutionary war and settling in Washington county, Pennsylvania.

Augustus McBride was brought to Ohio in his infancy, was reared there, and became a carpenter by trade. He died in the City of Mexico in February, 1848, aged twenty-nine years, while serving as a soldier in the Mexican war. He and his wife were identified with the Methodist Episcopal denomination. They had three sons and one daughter, three of whom are now living, namely: Judge Robert W.; Mary J., widow of R. S. McFarland, of Lawrence, Kans.; and James N., of Waterloo, Ind. Mrs. McBride married James Sirpless for her second husband, and they had four children, three now living: Albert B., of Lawrence, Kans.; William A., a farmer living near Shiloh, Richland Co., Ohio; and Mrs. Nellie Beeler, a widow of Lawrence, Kans. The mother of this family died in 1806 on her farm five miles from Mansfield, half a mile from where she was born. She was aged seventy-two years at the time of her death. Her father, Wesley Barnes, was born in Virginia in 1796, of English descent. He was a farmer and one of the pioneers of Richland county, Ohio, settling there in 1816, but he died near Kirkville, Iowa, in 1862, aged sixty-six years, and was buried in the Kirkville cemetery. He married Mary Smith, whose father, as well as his brothers, was in the Revolutionary war.

Robert W. McBride lived in Richland county until he was thirteen years old; then he went to Iowa, where he lived until he was twenty, teaching school in Mahaska county for three years. Returning to Ohio he enlisted in the 7th Independent Squadron of Cavalry, which afterward became President Lincoln's body-guard and was his mounted escort until he was assassinated; the Judge was a non-commissioned officer in same.

After the war Judge McBride taught school and studied law in Ohio; and at Waterloo, Ind., and was admitted to the Bar in April, 1867. He began practicing at Waterloo, Ind., in a partnership with Judge James I. Best, now one of the leading attorneys of Minneapolis, and who was a member of the Supreme Court commission of Indiana during its entire existence. They were together one year. He then practiced alone for a year, and later with Joseph L. Morlan, who died while they were in partnership, in 1879. He was again alone until 1882, when he was elected judge of the Thirty-fifth Judicial district. In 1890 he moved to Elkhart, and in December of that year was appointed one of the judges of the Supreme court, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Judge Joseph S. Mitchell. Judge McBride served until January, 1893, when he returned to his practice, and in April, 1893, formed a partnership with Caleb S. Denny, at Indianapolis, Ind. They were together until Feb. 1, 1904, and meantime, on Sept. 1, 1900, associated with them William M. Aydelotte, the firm becoming McBride, Denny & Aydelotte. Later Mr. Aydelotte retired, and Mr. Denny's son, George L. Denny, became a member of the firm, under the name of McBride, Denny & Denny.

In 1893 Judge McBride moved to Indianapolis, where he has had his home ever since. On Sept. 27, 1868, he married Miss Ida S. Chamberlain, daughter of Dr. James N. and Catherine (Brink) Chamberlain, the former of whom was a graduate of the Western Reserve College of Physicians and Surgeons, Cleveland, Ohio, and was one of the most eminent physicians and surgeons of Indiana. They have been blessed with four children: Daisy I. married Fred. C. Starr, and bore him two children, Kathryn M. and Robert McBride; she is now the wife of Kent A. Cooper, of Indianapolis. Charles H. married Minnie Cohu, who died a few months after their marriage. Herbert W. spent something over two years in British Columbia, engaged in mining, but now lives with his father in Indianapolis and is associated with him in the practice of law. Martha Catharine married James P. Hoster; they live in Indianapolis, and have two sons, George McBride and James Perry, Jr.

Judge McBride and his wife are members of the Central Avenue M. E. Church. Fraternally the Judge has been a member of the Scottish Rite Masons since Jan. 9, 1867, and he holds membership in Pentalpha Lodge, F. & A. M.; Keystone Chapter, R. A. M., of Indianapolis; Raper Commandery, No. 1, of Indianapolis, and has been exalted to the thirty-second degree in the brotherhood. He is past eminent commander of Apollo Commandery, No. 19, K. T., of Indiana. He is also a member of Waterloo Lodge, No. 221, of Odd Fellows, and of Star Lodge, No. 7, Knights of Pythias, and a member of the Grand Lodge of both of those orders. He is also a member of George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R., of Indianapolis, and is a past post commander. In political sentiment he is a Republican.

Judge McBride was a member of the Indiana National Guard from 1879 to 1893, joining in 1879 as captain of a company which afterward became Company A, 3d Regiment. He was the first to hold the rank of lieutenant-colonel of the regiment, and was afterward its colonel, but resigned as colonel in January, 1891, after he went on the bench of the Supreme Court.

JOHN KISSEL, a prosperous and highly esteemed farmer of Pike township, Marion Co., Ind., and a man widely known as a representative of agricultural matters, died March 15, 1907. He was born in Dauphin county, Pa., near Harrisburg, May 19, 1821, son of Henry and Catherine (Cunkelman) Kissel.

Henry Kissel was born in Armstrong county, Pa., near Harrisburg, and was a tailor by trade, working at his trade the greater portion of his life. Seven children were born to himself and wife: John; Polly, deceased; William, deceased; Peggy, living in Pennsylvania;

Sarah, deceased; Henry, in California; and Solomon, living in Pennsylvania.

John Kissel settled in Marion county, Ind., in 1851, and cleared off 100 acres of land. Prior to coming here, he was a shoemaker by trade. When he first located in this section, he bought forty acres, but added to it, until he owned 110 acres, 100 of which he cleared, as before stated. This land is in a high state of cultivation, and worth $100 per acre. All the improvements upon the place were made by Mr. Kissel, including his handsome barn and a comfortable and modern house.

In 1844, Mr. Kissel was married in Pennsylvania to Elizabeth Ely, by whom he had two children,—Ephraim, deceased; and Mary, who married Wiatt Farrington.

In May, 1856, Mr. Kissel married Elizabeth Rodebaugh, daughter of Samuel C. and Sarah (Klingersmith) Rodebaugh; she died in 1902, the mother of three children: Henry, who married Jennie Hollingsworth, and operates the home place; Samuel, whose sketch appears elsewhere; Sarah, who married John Myers. In politics Mr. Kissel was a Republican, but later became a Democrat and Prohibitionist. He was a very active member of the Baptist Church, in which he held the office of deacon. The success which attended him was the result of his hard work, intelligently directed, and his trust in his Maker. He reared his children to fear and honor their God, and to work, and was gratified that they became good, honorable and successful citizens of the several localities in which they make their homes.

COTTINGHAM. The origin of the Cottingham family is largely a matter of tradition, but there is good reason to suppose that it was founded in America by two brothers, James and Jeremiah, who left England on account of persecution, and who probably belonged to the family for whom the town and park of Cottingham, in England, were named. The descendants of these brothers, if not the men themselves, settled in Maryland. The earlier generations here were adherents of the Tory party during the Revolution.

From one of these brothers descended Thomas Cottingham, the grandfather of William H. Cottingham, of Noblesville. He was born in Snow Hill, Maryland. During a visit to England he fell in love with Rhoda Townsend, daughter of Bartley Townsend, and granddaughter of Lord John Townsend, eloped with her and married her on shipboard, bound for America. A brother, Peter Townsend, also immigrated to America and was a pioneer of Hamilton county, Ind., where he settled on a part of the present Gascho farm and reared a large family. He was the possessor of a Townsend token, known as the Cob Dollar or Cob penny, but giving it to his children one day as a plaything, it was lost. Years after, one of the Gaschos found it while plowing, and after holding it some six or eight years, handed it on, about 1890, to Newell Townsend, of Downeyville, Decatur Co., Ind. William H. Cottingham made a drawing of the heirloom, which shows it as a parallelogram in shape, with the corners roughly rounded and with the inscription in scrawling letters, "Jeremiah Townsend, B. 1708. Died, Jan. 20, 1784, aged 76 years." This Jeremiah was a brother of Bartley, Rhoda's father. Of this Bartley Townsend's family four are remembered by name, Rhoda, Patsy, Joshua and William. Both the Townsends and Cottinghams of England are supposed to have been wealthy.

Thomas and Rhoda Cottingham became pioneers near Maysville, in Nicholas Co., Ky., and there the wife died. She was the mother of these children: James; Elijah; Isaac; Joshua T; Purnell; Sarah, who married William Ridgeway; and Harriet, Mrs. Henry Scarce. By a second marriage Thomas Cottingham had two sons, William and John. He moved on into Indiana and cleared up an eighty-acre farm near Flat Rock, Rush county, where he lived till nearly ninety years old. He then started with his sons, William and John, for Iowa, but died either on the way or very soon after getting there. He was a member of the Methodist Church.

Elijah Cottingham was born in either Delaware or Maryland, in 1800, and when a mere child was taken to Kentucky to live. He grew up there and married Nancy Cottingham, likewise born in Delaware or Maryland, but not a near relative. They lived for the first two years in Carlisle, Nicholas Co., Ky., but in September, 1824, moved to Indiana, and located at Noblesville. Mr. Cottingham was a tailor by trade and continued at that work for a few years in Noblesville, but finally entered 160 acres of land adjoining the Gascho farm, and expected to live there. His plans were never carried out, as he died suddenly, Feb. 27, 1832. He was a Methodist in religion, but his wife was a Campbellite. In politics he was an old-time Whig, and was a great admirer of Gen. Harrison, who had lived near him in Kentucky and was a family friend. Elijah Cottingham left four children, namely: William H., named for Gen. Harrison; Sidney, born in Noblesville; Luther, who was killed in the Civil war while fighting under Gen. Lynn against Price; and Rhoda. All but the eldest are now deceased.

WILLIAM H. COTTINGHAM was born in Carlisle, Ky., April 5, 1824, and was only five months old when his parents moved to Noblesville. There were then but three or four cabins in the place, which was merely an Indian trading post, and Mr. Cottingham remembers seeing 700 Indians in procession when the government moved them to a reservation further west. He attended the first school in the town with Curtis Mallory, who had already taught one term on his own farm, as teacher, and among his fellow pupils were Guss Shirts, John and Garrett Ridgeway, William Davis, and Garrett and Ketchum Wall. This first school house was of very rough construction, made in true pioneer fashion, and the teacher was as truly of the olden time.

At a recent school meeting and exhibition Mr. Cottingham related various stories of Mallory's dealings with his pupils, all corroborated by Mr. Shirts. The little boys were seated on a teeter board, supported in a notch cut in a buckeye log, and the teacher would force the little fellows to the edge until they were afraid of falling off. He invented most of his punishments and a favorite one with him was to make the boys in winter take off their shoes and place their big toes over an auger hole in the floor, so that, as he said, "the snakes could bite them." Another unique punishment was inflicted on the oldest boy then in school, who was compelled to suck the dried teat of a cow, which so mortified the boy that he never went to school again. Mallory seldom used the rod except when a boy took his toe off the auger hole, when he would apply it most heartily. Mr. Cottingham went here to school until he was but nine years old, for after his father's death he was with an uncle on a farm, until old enough to take care of himself.

In the winter of 1838-39, when about seventeen, Mr. Cottingham went to Springfield, Ill., making the journey on foot, with a knapsack on his back. It was hard work, for the houses were sometimes twenty miles apart, and wolves were still numerous, as were also deer, prairie chickens and other game. At Springfield he found employment in the blacksmith shop of old Robert Eckler, on the south side of the Square. Lincoln at that time had an office on the north side, and Mr. Cottingham frequently heard him make speeches. Temperance was a leading topic just then, and in the meetings held in the brick Presbyterian Church, Lincoln often spoke. Mr. Eckler was another local orator, although a confirmed drinker. Mr. Cottingham remained in Springfield for some time, and one of his jobs there was hanging the car-house doors for the first railroad in Springfield.

On returning to Indiana, Mr. Cottingham engaged in farming, and also did threshing all through the region. He owned the first threshing machine in the county, made in Richmond, but for the first year his enterprise failed, for he was paid in grain and prices were so low that he could not sell what he had. There was no sale at all for wheat, even at 30 cents a bushel, while oats brought but ten cents, and corn $6\frac{1}{2}$ cents cash, with hogs bringing only a dollar a hundred. As conditions improved, Mr. Cottingham went quite extensively into dealing in stock, and before he was able to ship by railroad to Buffalo he used to drive cattle to Cincinnati. For forty years he bought and sold hogs, sometimes shipping as many as 1,400 in a day, while he has fed 800 head. From 1854 to 1858 he owned a warehouse in Noblesville which proved very profitable, and then bought a farm again, the 120-acre homestead of John Davis. He sold this later, and at once purchased the Wainwright farm as another investment, paying fifty dollars and soon selling it for \$100. He has also bought and sold much valuable property in Noblesville, and once owned the site of the present opera house. For three years, from 1861 to 1864, he was in business there as a merchant, and ran a hardware store. He had at first owned two there, but combined them. In 1868 he bought the farm on which he has since resided, paying eighty dollars an acre for the original 100 acres, to which he later added sixty acres. As soon as he acquired possession he built a good, substantial two-story brick house and good substantial barns.

On Jan. 8, 1846, in Noblesville, William H. Cottingham was wedded to Miss Elizabeth Hare, who was born near Xenia, Ohio, March 4, 1823, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Freshour) Hare, and granddaughter of Daniel. She died Oct. 30, 1907. The Hare family Bible gives her father's birthday as Oct. 28, 1791, and her mother's as four days earlier.

William and Elizabeth Cottingham had five children, all daughters, Nancy M., Amanda, Almarine, Mary and Hattie, of whom Mary remains at home, caring for her aged father. William Cottingham has always been characterized by unusual energy and force of character and has been markedly successful in his undertakings. Casting his first vote for W. H. Harrison, he has been most of his life a good Republican, voting for every candidate of that party from Lincoln on. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Odd Fellows, and was a charter member of the Noblesville Lodge.

Through another line of this same family is descended Henry A. Cottingham, a local Methodist minister, who was born Sept. 6, 1833, in Noblesville, and is still residing in that region. His father was Joshua T., son of Thomas and Rhoda (Townsend) Cottingham.

JUDGE JOSHUA T. COTTINGHAM was born in Snow Hill, Md., Sept. 8, 1808, but was brought up in Kentucky. At the age of sixteen he ran away from home and joined his brother, Elijah, in Noblesville, arriving there with only sixteen cents in his pockets. He helped his brother for a while in his tailoring, and then engaged to clear up twenty acres for John D. Stephenson, a tract now known as the Chipman addition, and received $100 as his payment. He then entered eighty acres a couple of miles east of Noblesville, cleared this, built a hewed log house and made his home there a number of years. As early as 1845 he opened a general mercantile business in Noblesville, which he continued until his death, and also had extensive dealings in real estate, meeting with much success in both lines. In his political views he was a Whig, then a Republican, voting for Fremont and Lincoln, and was always a strong Union man through the exciting times before and during the war. In religion he was a member of the Methodist Church. Judge Cottingham, as he was usually called, died in the prime of life, Feb. 11, 1868, when aged fifty-nine years, five months.

On Dec. 30, 1830, Joshua T. Cottingham was married to Miss Elizabeth Selby. She was born in Maryland, Jan. 17, 1811, and died the year following her husband's demise, Sept. 1, 1869, aged fifty-eight years, eight months and twenty-one days. Of the eight children born to them, six died in infancy. The other two were Henry A. and Mary L., the latter the wife of Eli Shumack. This family name was originally Shoemaker. Mrs. Cottingham's parents were James and Mary (Cottingham)

Selby, the former the son of Henry and Rebecca Selby. James Selby was born in December, 1787, and was a soldier in the War of 1812. He brought his family from Maryland to Indiana, and settled on eighty acres which he entered two miles northeast of Noblesville. There he died, Aug. 29, 1855. His children were: John; Eleanor, Mrs. John Leach; Sarah, Mrs. Calspy; Dale; and Elizabeth, Mrs. Cottingham.

ANDREW J. GILL, a highly respected citizen of the city of Muncie, Ind., who makes his home at the corner of Pierce and Eleventh streets, is one of the survivors of the war of the Rebellion. He was born June 9, 1840, in Ross county, Ohio, son of James G. and Julia Ann (Jones) Gill.

James G. Gill, father of Andrew J., was born Aug. 24, 1813, near Harrisburg, Pa., and when a young man of seventeen years crossed the Alleghany Mountains and located in Upper Sandusky, Ohio. He was well-educated, understanding both German and English, and for some years taught school. He was married in Ross county, Ohio, to Julia Ann, born in New Harrisburg, Pa., daughter of Col. John and Mary Jones. Col. John Jones was born near Harrisburg, Pa., and was a colonel in the Mexican war. He settled in Ross county, Ohio, ten miles from Chillicothe, at an early day, owning there a farm and large tannery, but in later life he removed to McLean county, Ill., where he lived with his children. He was a remarkable man, and at the age of eighty-four years hunted for deer in "old town timber," and tired out his grandson, Andrew J. Gill, then a stout lad of fourteen years. He was a splendid shot, and did not then use glasses except to read. He died a few months later of typhoid fever. After his marriage to Colonel Jones' daughter, Mr. Gill resided on the latter's farm and leased the tannery, of which he later became manager. He removed to Wayne county, Ind., about 1851. He was a soldier in the Mexican war, and a captain in Colonel Jones' regiment. After three years in Indiana, during which time he was engaged in agricultural pursuits, he removed to McLean county, Ill., but in 1859 located in Indianapolis, Ind., where he carried on a tannery. His first wife died during the Civil war, and he died April 14, 1870, in Hamilton county, Ind., where he had settled after his second marriage. The children born to Mr. Gill and his first wife were: Fannie Jane, Mary Ellen, David, Thomas, Andrew J., Sarah C., Reed A., Elizabeth A., Jane (who died young), Amanda J., Martha C. and John.

Andrew J. Gill lived in Ross county, Ohio, until eleven years of age, when he removed with his parents to Wayne county, Ind., here attending school for the first time. He completed his common school education in Illinois, and when nineteen years of age graduated from the High school at Cerro Gordo, Ill. Before the outbreak of the Civil war he had begun to learn the carpenter's trade. In June, 1862, at Indianapolis, Mr. Gill enlisted in Company E, 20th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and his service, which was with the army of the Potomac, lasted nine months, at the end of which time he was honorably discharged on account of disability. He was then appointed a recruiting officer by Governor Morton, and did recruiting service in Lafayette, Tippecanoe county. He re-enlisted March 4, 1865, in Lafayette, Ind., as a private of Company E, 154th Ind. V. I., to serve one year or during the war, and was honorably discharged Aug. 4th, at Stevenson Station, Va., the war having closed. His service included much skirmishing, he being sent out as captain of a scouting party, and he was wounded twice during this expedition, once at Winchester in the foot, the bullet having never been removed, and once in the right hand, both times by Mosby's guerrillas, with whom the Federal troops had many skirmishes. He was an expert in drilling with the musket, and was often engaged at drilling both the officers and men, and his brother, R. A. Gill, who was a private of an Indiana infantry regiment, was an expert with the sword. Mr. Gill was a good, faithful soldier, and had an honorable war record.

After the war Mr. Gill went to Prince William, Carroll Co., Ind., and there clerked in a store, also traveling considerably working at his trade. He was married in Noblesville, Ind., Jan. 27, 1870, to Rebecca Marnee, born in Columbiana county, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1853, daughter of Gerard B. and Elizabeth (Phillips) Marnee. Mr. Gerard Marnee was a shoemaker by occupation, and in 1862 located in Cass county, Ind., where he opened a shoe shop and followed that business as he had in Ohio. He had these children: Nancy A., James S., Rachel A., Rebecca, Harpley, Ira and Allen, all born in Ohio. Mr. Marnee enlisted during the Civil war, April 14, 1864, as a private of Company B, 13th Ind. V. I., for three years or during the war, and at the battle of Pittsburg Landing was shot in the right hand. The injury affected the whole arm, two amputations being performed, and he died in the hospital at Philadelphia, July 14, 1864. His widow reached the age of eighty years, and died Nov. 27, 1905.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gill settled in Noblesville, where he worked for one year on the farm, and later engaged at his trade. He then spent several years at Bunker Hill, two years in Hamilton county, thirteen years in Johnson county, Mo., and then, in 1893, located in Muncie, where he worked at his trade for some time, being now engaged in work at the Midland Steel plant. He and his wife are members of the Missionary Baptist Church. He is a member of Williams Post, No. 78, G. A. R., Muncie, and is an honorary member of the Ladies of the G. A. R., of which she is chaplain, and of which her daughter, Gertrude, is conductor.

To Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Gill have been born the following children: William, who married Effie Landry, had four children, Lydia, Ivy, Andrew and Venetta, and died at the age of thirty-one years; Edgar, an iron worker, who married Blanche Butler, and has three children, Garnett, Clarence and Bernice; Charles, a clerk in Muncie, who married Nettie Kreager, and has two children, Ralph and Rollin; Ivy, who died at the age of seven years; and Gertrude, Guy and John, at home.

Mr. Gill is one of the well known citizens of his community, and the social standing of his family in Muncie is high. All the members of this family have been prominent in one walk of life or another, and they are esteemed by all with whom they are acquainted.

JOHN R. DARLING, late one of the most highly respected citizens of Pike township, Marion county, Ind., was a native of the State, born on Tanner's creek, near Guilford, Dearborn county, April 15, 1835, son of John and Abigail (Gipson) Darling.

John Darling was born in New York in 1810, son of Thomas Darling, who, with his four sons, fought in the war of 1812. It may be mentioned here that the family has a noble record for military service in defense of country, our subject recalling twenty-six of his relatives who lost their lives in the Civil war, truly a remarkable testimonial to family loyalty.

John Darling came to Indiana in 1856, and settled at Augusta. He was a mechanical engineer, and for some years he assisted his father in operating a saw mill. His death occurred in 1873 and that of his wife, in 1864. Their children were: William, who served in the 52nd Ind. V. I., and who lives on the old home place in Dearborn county, entered by his grandfather; Martha, deceased; Lucy, who lives in Cincinnati; John R.; Isabella, deceased; Silas, who now lives in North Indianapolis, and who served in the Civil war in the 52d Ind. V. I.; James, deceased, who served in the 10th Ind. V. I.; Jacob, deceased; and Samuel, a painter in Indianapolis. Mr. Darling saw four of his six sons enter the army and he applauded their patriotism, as he was a staunch supporter of the administration, a Republican from the organization of that party.

John R. Darling was reared to habits of industry and had the faculty of being able to turn his efforts successfully in almost every direction. He followed milling, farming and broom making, working at the latter business for fifteen years at Augusta. Early in the opening of the Civil war, he enlisted in Company H, 83d Ind. V. I., under Capt. Crawford and Col. Ben. Spooner, the latter of whom lost an arm at the battle of Kennesaw Mountain. After enlistment, Mr. Darling remained eight weeks at Lawrenceburg, then went to Cairo, Ill., then by water to Memphis, and was one of the gallant soldiers who gained the approbation of the loyal people of Tennessee by driving Gen. Price and his army out of that State. From there Mr. Darling's command was sent to Holly Springs, and later joined the army of Gen. Sherman, in its March to the Sea, and finally enjoyed the Grand Review at Washington City. During his service he was engaged at Vicksburg, on the Yazoo river, at Haines Bluff, where the command was skirmishing for two weeks continually, and then back to Vicksburg. The regiment worked one winter on a canal around Vicksburg, and in the spring went to Arkansas Post, stormed and captured it, returned to Young's Point, then to Yazoo City, and on to Port Gibson, crossing the Mississippi river in time to take part in the Melvin Hill fight. Mr. Darling was taken sick and was honorably discharged in June, 1865.

After his return from the army, in 1865, Mr. Darling was married to Melissa Mericle, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Gibson)

Mericle, natives of Pennsylvania, who came to Dearborn county, Ind., at a very early date. Mr. Mericle and his wife had a family of seven children. By trade he was a carpenter and was very well known. Mr. and Mrs. Darling had five children, namely: William, a painter at Augusta, married Lou Myers; George is a carpenter, and he married Bertha Williams; and Abigail, John and Ernest, are all at home.

Mr. Darling voted the Republican ticket. He was well fixed in a material sense, having several valuable lots in Augusta and other property, all of which he earned himself. He was well known and universally respected.

JAMES GRAY, a well known and successful contractor and a highly respected citizen of Union township, Madison county, Ind., is a veteran of the great Civil war. He was born in Madison county, in the town of Columbus, Nov. 4, 1844, son of William and Mariam (Jackson) Gray.

William Gray, father of James, was a native of North Carolina, being born near Elizabeth City, and was a pioneer of Adams township, Madison county, Ind., where he settled about 1825. Here he cleared up a small farm, where he reared the following children: Miles, William, Samuel, Martha, Mary Ellen, John and James, all born in Indiana except Miles, who was born in North Carolina and brought to Indiana in infancy. William Gray died in Columbus, Ind., aged about forty years, while his wife survived him until 1879, when she passed away in her seventy-seventh year. They were both members of the Baptist Church. He was a justice of the peace in Columbus, Ind., for many years, and was well known and highly respected. Two of his sons, James and John, were soldiers in the Civil war. John was a member of the 47th Ind. V. I., and served in that regiment until he accidentally broke his leg, when he was honorably discharged.

James Gray attended the common schools, and received the usual pioneer education. He began to learn the carpenter's trade when about sixteen years old in Columbus, Ind., and continued at this until about seventeen, when he enlisted, in October, 1863, at Indianapolis, Ind., as a private of Company A, 7th Indiana Cavalry, under Captain John Sloan. He served until the close of the war, being honorably discharged at Indianapolis, Ind., in March, 1866, having participated in the following battles: Ocaloon, Miss.; Guntown, Miss.; Port Gibson, and Grand Gulf, Miss.; Verona, Miss.; Egypt Station, Miss.; Tallahatchie River, Hurricane Creek and Oxford, Miss.; Independence and Little Blue, Mo.; Little Osage, Mo.; Raleigh, Tenn.; Bolivar, Tenn.; Mine Creek, Kans.; and Bastrop, La. He was never wounded in battle, but was captured at Osage River, being immediately recaptured, however, by the Union troops. In an accident while drilling at Memphis, Mr. Gray was thrown from his horse, breaking his nose, and was confined to the hospital for a few days, erysipelas setting in. Two horses were shot under him,—one at Osage River, and the other at Guntown. He was always an active soldier and was in all the campaigns, battles and skirmishes, in which his regiment took part, doing his duty as a soldier, cheerfully and promptly. His services took him through Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Kansas and Texas. After the close of the war, Mr. Gray's regiment saw a great deal of service in Texas, being the last from Indiana to be discharged. The regiment was engaged in Texas in gathering up the army supplies lost by Banks on his disastrous expedition. Horses, mules, wagons, saddles, harness, in fact anything marked "U. S." was gathered by the soldiers.

After the war, Mr. Gray returned to Indiana and engaged in carpenter work in Madison county. He was married (first) in April, 1867, in Columbus, Madison Co., Ind., to Susan Surber, to which union there were no children born. Mr. Gray's first wife died in 1873, and he was married (second), in Madison county, Oct. 2, 1877, to Miss Hulda Mier, born in Union township, Madison county, on her father's farm, Oct. 2, 1854, daughter of Andrew and Salina (Saxton) Mier. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gray settled on a farm in Union township, he following the business of farmer, carpenter and contractor. Mr. Gray has built many buildings in Anderson and Madison county, and has also erected a large number of barns. Possibly in the latter line he has exceeded any carpenter-contractor in the county, he making a specialty of this work at one time.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Gray are as follows: Jane, born Aug. 19, 1878; Richard, Jan. 15, 1881 (died Feb. 19, 1900); Jesse, Sept. 17, 1884; Samuel, Sept. 15, 1887; Lucy, July 5, 1889; and Nellie, July 15, 1894. These children have all received good educations. Mr. Gray purchased his present property in 1886. He is a popular member of Major May Post, G. A. R., of Anderson. His wife is a member of the Church of God. Mr. Gray has always been industrious and care-taking and his work invariably gives satisfaction. Able and efficient, a skilled workman, his contracts are always finished on time, and he has the confidence and patronage of the people of the surrounding country.

Andrew Mier, the father of Mrs. Gray, was born in Germany. He came to America when a young man, and was married in Marion, Ind., to Salina Saxton, daughter of William Saxton, a pioneer of Marion, where he cleared up a farm of 200 acres. Andrew Mier was a farmer, and owned a tract of land in Union township, consisting of 160 acres of fine farm land, which he had cleared from the bush. Here he operated until his death, at which time he had one of the good, productive farms of the county. His death occurred in 1870, his wife dying in 1875, aged about fifty years. They were the parents of these children: Henry, Mary, Savannah, Jane, Hulda, Fred, Andrew and Salina.

J. WILLARD PARRISH, M. D., was born at Shelbyville, Ind., a son of James F. and Frances (Clarke) Parrish, both natives of Shelby county, the father born in 1833, and the mother in 1834.

Edmund Parrish, the paternal grandfather, a native of Kentucky, settled at Shelbyville early in the 19th century, where he took 160 acres of land, cleared and improved it and died upon it. His wife was Mary Floyd, a native of North Carolina. The great-grandfather was of Scotch-Irish parentage, and was one of three brothers who emigrated from the North of Ireland in the latter part of the 18th century, landing at Philadelphia, but later removing to Lexington, Ky., and dying there.

James F. Parrish in early life engaged in farming in Shelby township, Shelby county, but for a few years before and during the Civil war, engaged in the hardware and agricultural business at Shelbyville. About 1862 he returned to the farm, where he died May 17, 1902. His children were: Eliza, wife of Ezekiel A. Jackson, a prominent farmer of Washington township, Shelby county; James Willard; William L.; Mary E., wife of William Gray, a practical, progressive farmer of Addison township, Shelby county; George A.; Frank, in business at Long Beach, Cal.; Edmund, who resides on the homestead farm; and Eva F., who is the wife of Elmer Hurste.

On the maternal side, Dr. J. Willard Parrish traces his ancestry to his great-great-grandfather, John Clarke, a farmer in good circumstances of Denshanger, Buckinghamshire, Eng. Through his wife, Ann Lopidge Smith, the family claims relationship with John Dryden and Dean Swift.

James Clarke, the immigrant and great-grandfather of our subject, was born June 27, 1778, at Denshanger, Eng., and received the rudiments of an English education at Abthorpe, in the County of Northampton. He was married Nov. 10, 1803, to Frances, daughter of Thomas and Alice Chesshyre, of a respected and rather aristocratic family of Manchester. Her father claimed some connection with the barons of Halton, in County Chester, while her mother claimed some relationship to the royal family of Stuarts, through the Stanleys or Earls of Derby. John Chesshyre, the elder brother of Frances, attained distinction in the navy, rising to the rank of admiral.

The great-grandfather of Dr. Parrish, with his wife and six children, emigrated to America in 1817, landing in Philadelphia. In 1824 he settled in Jackson township, Shelby county, Ind., where he died Aug. 29, 1826, in his forty-ninth year. His widow died in 1841, in her sixtieth year.

William Clarke, maternal grandfather of Dr. Parrish, was born Nov. 21, 1812, near Manchester, England, and came to Shelby county, Ind., with his parents in 1824. His marriage took place Dec. 25, 1833, to Mary, daughter of James Van Benthusen, a member of the Indiana Constitutional Convention of 1852, and soon after his marriage, he settled on forty acres of land in a region called "The Slash," situated in the north-west part of Washington township, in Shelby county. Here through industry and economy, he was enabled to add considerably to his possessions. Of his children: Elizabeth married Isaac Watson; Frances married James Parrish; Mary A. married James Green; and Margaret married William Chesser. The two sons bore the names of John and William.

Dr. Parrish was reared on the farm, where he remained until he had attained his majority. During his minority he attended the common schools during the winter months, but being of a studious nature, he applied himself to reading such books as came in his way, so that, when he left home, he had fitted himself to enter the Normal School at Danville, Ind., where he was graduated in 1884. For ten years thereafter, he taught school, becoming one of the most prominent educators in Shelby county, one whose services were most sought and most generously paid for, receiving the highest salary of any teacher in the county, outside of Shelbyville.

While teaching school, Dr. Parrish began the study of medicine, which resulted in his graduation from the Indiana Medical College at Indianapolis, in 1896. Since that time he has taken advantage of other educational opportunities, doing post-graduate work in the Polyclinic and hospitals in Chicago, in 1899, 1900 and 1903. In 1896 he began the practice of his profession in Shelby county, where he still retains an office, although his main office is at Shelbyville, where he has been located since July, 1903.

Dr. Parrish is a member of the Shelby county and Indiana State Medical societies; the orders of Modern Woodmen and Court of Honor, being the medical examiner for these organizations. He is also fraternally connected with the F. & A. M. and I. O. O. F. His success in the practice of his profession has been phenomenal. With a large measure of ability and possessing a high standard of excellence, he has gained the respect and confidence of his fellow colleagues as well as the general public. Thoroughly versed in the ethics and teachings of his noble profession, of strong and sterling personal characteristics, he is fast winning that attention from the thoughtful people of Shelbyville and vicinity, to which his talents so justly entitle him.

JAMES G. ESSINGTON, one of the prominent citizens of Noblesville and a soldier in the Civil war, came of true pioneer stock, and was born in Wayne township, Hamilton county, April 8, 1844, son of James' M. and Elizabeth (Carlin) Essington, and he died Oct. 1, 1906.

Joseph Essington, grandfather of James G., was a native of England, but was exiled for some political cause and came to America. He was one of the earliest settlers in Hamilton county and bought a farm four miles east of Noblesville, where he lived to be ninety-two years old. The farm was partly cleared when he purchased it, and he improved it and made a good home there. His children were: Joseph; Gibson; James M.; Sarah, who married Miles Bush; Susan, who married Thomas Leonard; Betsey, wife of Israel Finch; and Nancy, Mrs. Benjamin Shoemaker.

James M. Essington was born in 1810, while his parents were residing in Ohio, previous to their settling in Indiana, and was ten years old when the family moved to the latter state. His education was such as the schools of that pioneer day and place, afforded and on reaching man's estate he settled down to farming. He first cleared a farm in Wayne township, and lived on it five years, after which he bought an improved farm near Noblesville. This was his home till June, 1846, when his death occurred at the early age of thirty-six years. Mr. Essington married Miss Elizabeth Carlin, a resident of Hamilton county, but born in Pennsylvania. They became the parents of these children: William M., who enlisted in Company I, 6th Ind. V. I., for three months' service, and was in the battle of Laurel Hill; Marion; and James G. Mrs. Essington survived her husband but three years.

The maternal grandparents of James G. Essington were Joseph and Margaret (Darrow) Carlin. The former was of Irish lineage originally, but the Carlins had settled in New England in Colonial days. Joseph Carlin joined the tide of migration flowing westward, and was among the pioneer settlers in Wayne township, Hamilton county, where he made his home while the Indians were still inhabiting the region. He cleared up a farm of eighty acres, and lived there nearly all his life. His last few years were spent in Noblesville where he died at the age of eighty years. Mr. Carlin was both a respected and prominent citizen of his section and served as justice of the peace for twenty-five years. In religious faith he was a Presbyterian, and was a member of that church. Joseph Carlin married Margaret Darrow, and their children were: William D., John T., Robert L., George M., Joseph, Nancy, Martha, Elizabeth and Mary.

James G. Essington was left an orphan at the age of five, and was brought up by his uncle, William D. Carlin, of Noblesville. He received a common school education, and when eighteen years old enlisted for three years service in the Union army in Company D, 75th Ind. V. I. He served his country faithfully till the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged at Washington, June 16, 1865. He saw much actual fighting, was in the battles of Chickamauga, Mission Ridge, Dalton, Resaca, in the Atlanta campaign, and took part in a number of skirmishes. He was one who made the memorable March to the Sea, was in the return march to Richmond and shared in the Grand Review in Washington. James Essington was always on active duty, enduring the many hardships well, took part in all the marches and battles of his regiment and was never taken prisoner nor in hospital, but he was slightly wounded twice at Chickamauga, although it did not oblige him to leave the line. In that same battle his brother Marion, sergeant of Company D, was shot through the waist and badly wounded. He lay on the battlefield eleven days before he was discovered by a relief party, cared for by other wounded comrades all that time.

After the war Mr. Essington settled down at Noblesville and worked at the tinner's trade, which was his permanent occupation, he conducting a shop of his own. On March 22, 1868, in the Noblesville Methodist Church, his marriage to Miss Ann Eliza Collier was solemnized. Miss Collier was born in that town Aug. 26, 1843, to William and Margaret (Paswater) Collier. Mr. and Mrs. Essington became the parents of five children, namely: Mary Alice, born July 21, 1869; Margaret A., Aug. 25, 1873; Julia A., Oct. 12, 1878; Luna B., Jan. 4, 1881; and Walter C., Nov. 8, 1886.

The Collier family originated in Germany. Mrs. Essington's grandfather, Thomas Collier, was a farmer in Franklin county, where he died. His children were: Susan; Ann; Hulda; Wesley, a soldier in the Civil war; Benjamin and William. William Collier, born in Franklin county, was a settler of Hamilton county, where he followed the tanner's trade. He married Miss Margaret Paswater, daughter of William and Rachel (White) Paswater, and of an English family. Mr. Collier died when only thirty years old, leaving his widow with three children, viz.: Thomas; Ann Eliza; and Caroline. Another, Hulda, died young. Mrs. Collier afterward married John Rhodes, but there were no children to that union. Mrs. Rhodes' death occurred Jan. 5, 1904, at the age of eighty-seven years.

James G. Essington was prominent in municipal matters in Noblesville. He was a strong Republican, who voted that ticket every time after he cast his first ballot for U. S. Grant on his first nomination. A public-spirited citizen, Mr. Essington served on the city council for twelve years while he gained still greater prominence, perhaps, by his connection with the fire department. Under the old hook and ladder organization he was captain, and afterward held the position of chief of the department for six years. As an old soldier Mr. Essington was naturally to be found in the ranks of the G. A. R., and he was one of the charter members of Lookout Post, No. 133, in which he had filled the offices of senior vice commander and officer of the day, and was serving as commander at the time of his death. Fraternally he was a member of the Noblesville Lodge, I. O. O. F. Mr. Essington was also active in the work of the Methodist Church, of which he was a member, as is his widow, and in which he was a class leader and also a trustee. Being in touch with the life about him at so many points as indicated above, it was not strange that Mr. Essington was very widely known and influential, with a large circle of friends.

LYMAN O. LEACH, a survivor of the Civil war and past commander of Williams Post No. 78, G. A. R., was born May 10, 1834, at Fairfield, Franklin Co., Vt., son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Prouty) Leach, and has been a resident of Muncie, Ind., since 1888.

The Leach family came from England in 1726, and settled in Connecticut. John Leach, the grandfather of Lyman O. Leach, was born in Connecticut and was married in Vermont. He then settled on new land which he bought from the Government, located on Otter Creek, and there he developed a farm. His children were: Brush, Hiram, John, Patty (who died unmarried), Rana, and another daughter who married a Newton. John Leach lived to the age of eighty-four years, and died on his farm in 1844. He lived on a large tract of land, some 640 acres, on which he built a two-story house and became a man of comfortable circumstances and an honorable citizen.

John Leach (2), son of John, was born in Connecticut, and he received a common school education and learned the trade of millwright. He received 100 acres of the home farm from his father. In Vermont he married Elizabeth Prouty, born in 1807, in that State, daughter of a soldier of the War of 1812, who died in the service. After marriage John Leach followed his trade and continued to live on his farm. Late in life he gave up his former occupation and worked at the cooper's trade. He was a man of skill in both crafts, and was industrious, temperate and exemplary. In politics he was a Democrat. In religion he was a Methodist. He died at St. Albans, Vt., in 1857. John and Elizabeth Leach had children: Lyman O., Edgar D., Hannah L., James, Lucius W. and John C. Three of his sons, Edgar D., Lucius W. and Lyman O., were all soldiers in the Civil war. Edgar served four months in the same regiment with our subject, and was then shot in the hand, closing his usefulness as a soldier. Lucius served three years in the 9th Vt. V. I., and died three years later from troubles incurred in the army.

Lyman O. Leach received a fair common school education, and worked on the farm until he was twenty-seven years of age. He enlisted early in the Civil war, on June 1, 1861, entering Company C, 3rd Vt. V. I., as a private and on July 16th following was mustered into the United States service. He faithfully performed a soldier's duties through the successive three years, and re-enlisted Dec. 21, 1863, in the field. In 1862 he was promoted to be corporal, and in 1865 to be sergeant, and he was honorably discharged at Hall's Hill, near Winchester, Va., July 11, 1865. He had participated in the following battles: Lewinsville, Va.; Lee's Mills, Va., April 16, 1862; Williamsburg, May 5, 1862; Golding's Farm, June 26, 1862; Savage Station, June 30-July 2, 1862; Crampton Gap, Sept. 16, 1862; Antietam, Md., Sept. 17, 1862; Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 13, 1862; Marye's Heights, May 3, 1863; Salem Heights, May 4, 1863; Fredericksburg, June 5, 1863; Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, July 3, 1863; Funkstown, Md., July 10, 1863; Rappahannock, Nov. 7, 1863; and the battle of the Wilderness which lasted from May 5 to May 10, 1864. At the battle of the Wilderness, Mr. Leach was shot in the right thigh, and the seriousness of his wound kept him in a hospital from May until the last of September. He was sent to Fort Washington and was transferred ten days later to Baltimore, where he remained until fall, and then rejoined his command which was then in the Shenandoah Valley. The above does not enumerate all of the battles in which Mr. Leach took part, numerous though they were. Some of the later ones were: Cedar Creek, Oct. 19, 1864; Petersburg, March 25-27, 1865; second battle of Petersburg, April 26, and Salem Creek in April, 1865. He then took part in the great march through the Carolinas to Danville, Va., and then on to Washington, D. C., to the Grand Review, one of the most notable gatherings ever held in the Capitol City.

After the war Mr. Leach returned to Vermont, and settled for three years on a farm near the Vermont Central Railroad and served as engineer on this road for twelve years. After his marriage he was located at St. Albans for three years, and then went to Tonawanda, N. Y., remaining two years, and in 1875 located in Michigan, where he accepted a position as engineer on the Canada Southern Railroad, remaining there until 1887. That year he moved to Fort Wayne, Ind., where he worked as a carpenter until 1888, when he settled at Muncie. Here for the past twelve years he has been pattern maker for the American Steel Company, and is considered a very skilled workman.

On Aug. 22, 1869, at Bakersville, Vt., Mr. Leach was married to Arabella King, born in Enosburg, Vt., April 10, 1849, daughter of Peter and Louisa (Pale) King. Peter King was born at Richfield, Vt., son of Edward and Margaret King. The King family is of French descent and among the early pioneers of Montreal. The name was originally LeRoi, meaning "the king," and was thus Americanized. Peter King was a stone-mason by trade. In the province of Quebec he bought a small property and died thereon aged sixty-four years, his wife surviving ten years. Their children were: Louis, Henry, Lucy, Celesta, Arabella and Abbie.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Leach were: Gilbert, born Aug. 29, 1873, in New York, who married Cora M. Davenport, and they reside at Indiana Harbor, where he is baggage-master at the Lake Shore & Michigan station; and Ella May, born Oct. 31, 1876, at Trenton, Mich., who married John Herbert, an iron worker, and has one child, Velma E., Mr. Leach's only grandchild. Mr. and Mrs. Leach are members of the Baptist Church. In politics he is a Democrat. In 1882 he joined the G. A. R. post at Fort Wayne, Ind., and is now a member of Williams Post No. 78, of Muncie of which he is past commander. He is an unaffiliated Mason, having joined a Vermont lodge, and he belongs also to the Knights of the Golden Eagle.

CHARLES HAYNES, a retired agriculturist of Hartford City, Ind., who bears an active record for services in the Civil war, was born Dec. 6, 1839, in Clinton county, Ohio, son of Daniel and Jane (Stowe) Haynes.

Charles Haynes, grandfather of Charles, was a pioneer of Clinton county, and was the son of a Revolutionary soldier, killed at the battle of Bunker Hill. It is believed that he was born in New York or one of the New England States, and his wife, who died in 1863, was believed to be 115 years of age. Charles Haynes was an Abolitionist, and his home in Ohio was a station in the underground railway.

Daniel Haynes, son of Charles, came from Clinton county to Delaware county in 1839, and here entered 160 acres of land, building a log cabin on a hill. He was a great hunter, and was known throughout the neighborhood as "Old Daniel Boone." He killed hundreds of deer, bear and wolves, and turkeys by the thousands. The children of Daniel Haynes were: Martha, who died in Ohio, at the age of five years; Wright; Hannah Maria; Charles; Rosetta; Hiram; Melissa; Martha; Desdemy; John; Daniel; Fred; and Benjamin Franklin. Mr. and Mrs. Haynes also reared Laura Jane Miller, who was left an orphan at the age of three weeks on the death of her mother.

Charles Haynes was but six weeks old when the father started from Clinton county with the family, the journey being made through the wilderness in a two-horse wagon. He here grew up and assisted to clear the farm in what was afterwards Union township, and helped cut the stumps out of the State road, running from Muncie to Cincinnati and to Hartford City. He attended school for about six weeks in winter, this often being interrupted as he was needed to work at home on the farm, he being next to the eldest son. The schoolhouse, built in a swamp in the woods on the edge of Delaware county, was made of round logs, and a log was cut out of the side of the wall, the space thus left being filled with greased paper, thus admitting light. The paper used in this was the old Cincinnati Gazette, which his father subscribed for in Ohio, and from his first settlement in Indiana to the close of his life. The schoolhouse had a puncheon floor, a slab for a writing desk and a stick chimney daubed with mud. This huge fireplace would take in a log six feet long. He learned to read and make letters, but did not learn to write correctly, although he learned to spell well in Webster's old spelling book. The children of this family gained more education around the fireplace at night, when the father would read "Uncle Tom's Cabin" to them and to the neighbors for miles around. He was a good reader and would read this story with much dramatic force. From this pioneer family came three soldiers in the Civil war, John, William F. and Charles.

Charles Haynes, son of Daniel, enlisted in May, 1861, in Iroquois county, Ill., where he had been working for a farmer, as a private in a company of infantry, which, however, was never organized. Then he went to Camp Douglas, Chicago, and was enrolled in the 1st Regiment of the Douglas Brigade, or the 42nd Ill. V. I., in 1861, for three years or during the war. He served in this regiment nineteen months, and was then transferred to Company D, 1st Bat., U. S. Inf., regulars, at Nashville, Tenn., being with this battalion for the rest of his term. He served out his term and was honorably discharged at Jonesboro, Ga., twenty-two miles south of Atlanta, in the fall of 1864. He did not return home at once, but remained with his regiment, being in four battles thereafter, doing veteran service. In the winter of 1864 he returned home. His services included the breaking up of Confederate camps, among them the one on the Big Black river, and on this expedition the regiment marched from Smithton, Mo., forty-four miles to the river, where the camp was found to contain valuable provisions, tents and cattle for Price's army. The regiment then returned to Smithton, Mo., where eighteen of Mr. Haynes' comrades were stricken with smallpox. He took care of one of his comrades, Daniel Prewitt, and nursed him through his sickness. In January, 1862, he started with his regiment for St. Louis, whence they went to Cairo by steamboat and then to Fort Holt, Ky., where the fleet was attached to Commodore Foote's fleet on the Mississippi. Mr. Haynes' services at this time being principally on a gun-boat. He was present at the capture of Island No. 10 and New Madrid, and was in the bombardment of Fort Pillow, going thence to Pittsburg Landing. He was in the siege of Corinth, the battles of Farmington, Iuka, Tusculumbia, Ala., first battle of Courtland, Dogwalk, Ky., and Perryville, Ky., Stone River, Hoover's Gap, Tunnell Hill and many small battles in this region. He was also a participant at Chickamauga, then fell back to Chattanooga (where the army suffered through being short of rations), battle of Lookout Mountain, where he captured two Confederates, charge of Missionary Ridge, and was then in the Atlanta campaign, where the army was under fire for four months and seven days. He was at Rocky Ford Ridge, Buzzards Roost, Lost Mountain, battle and charge at Kenesaw Mountain, Resaca, New Hope Church, in the battle where General McPherson was killed, and at the great assault on Atlanta, Jonesboro and on the return with "Pap" Thomas. He was slightly wounded on the collar bone by a musket ball at the battle of Farmington, but was always an active and faithful soldier, cheerful in his duties and gallant in action. He returned home with two comrades, Daniel Prewitt and Samuel Freeman, the only survivors of thirteen that had enlisted from that neighborhood.

After the war Mr. Haynes engaged in farming for William Adsit, for whom he had worked as a boy. On Oct. 25, 1866, he was married in Blackford county, Ind., to Mary Quackenbush, born July 27, 1844, in Henry county, Ind., daughter of Andrew and Charity (Potter) Quackenbush, and to this union were born four children: Andrew, born Dec. 2, 1867; Ida Ann, born July 18, 1869, married John DeWitt, a farmer of Blackford county; Benjamin, born Aug. 25, 1871; and Almira Jane, born Dec. 9, 1877, married Albert Thomas, a farmer of Adams county, Ind., and has two children, Aurora and Mary Alta. Mrs. Haynes died Dec. 14, 1877, and Mr. Haynes married (second) Nancy Jane Christian, born near Bourneville, Ross Co., Ohio, April 19, 1853, daughter of Allen and Catherine (Beath) Christian, and to this union there were born children as follows: William Elwood, born Aug. 22, 1885; Wright, born May 5, 1888, and Addie Alta, born in December, 1889, all in Blackford county, Indiana.

Allen Christian was born Jan. 25, 1799, in Montgomery county, Va., son of William and Mary Christian, of early Colonial Virginia stock, the former a farmer and a captain of the war of 1812, who settled in Ross county, Ohio, at an early day, clearing a large farm of 300 acres. The children of Allen and Catherine (Beath) Christian were: Margaret Ann, born March 14, 1835; Anna Barbara, born May 6, 1837; Christina, born Jan. 25, 1839; William Allen, born Nov. 24, 1840; Emily, born June 25, 1842; Joseph, born Dec. 24, 1844;

John, born Dec. 17, 1846; Adeline, born April 12, 1850; Nancy Jane, born April 19, 1853; and Hiram Elwood, born Dec. 29, 1857, all in Ross county, Ohio. Of this family, William Allen served in the Civil war, belonging to Company A, 18th O. V. I., and was in the three years service, serving out his time and receiving his honorable discharge. He was in many battles, and was slightly wounded in the shoulder. In political matters Mr. Christian was a Democrat. He died in his seventy-eighth year, after having put in a hard day's work at mauling rails. Mr. Christian had never had a day's sickness nor taken a dose of medicine from a doctor in his life.

After his second marriage Mr. Haynes settled on the homestead purchased by him ten years before, and here he has lived to the present time, making improvements on his property, which ranks among the best in the community. Although always troubled by sickness brought on by army life, Mr. Haynes has been an industrious, hard-working man, and has the respect and esteem of his fellow townsmen, who elected him to the office of road supervisor for twenty-six years. He also served as justice of the peace for one term. In politics he is an independent voter. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church, as was also the first Mrs. Haynes.

JOHN W. COOK, M. D., a prominent physician of Madison county, Ind., who has spent twenty-five years in the practice of his profession there, was born Feb. 8, 1852, in Pendleton, Ind., son of Dr. Ward and Mary J. Harvey Cook.

The Cooks are of old Colonial Virginia stock, of English descent. Dr. Ward Cook was born in Monroe county, W. Va., Oct. 9, 1808, son of Rev. Jacob and Isabella (Humphreys) Cook. Rev. Jacob Cook was a pioneer Methodist minister, born in Pennsylvania, son of Valentine Cook, Sr., who was the son of John Hamilton Cook, of London, England, a first cousin of Captain Cook, the famous mariner who was killed in the Sandwich Islands. Valentine Cook lost his father when six years old, and was taken by his mother to Amsterdam, Holland, where he received a good education, both in English and German. He came to Pennsylvania before the Revolution, and took part in that struggle, after which he settled down in Pennsylvania, where he lived many years. Later he removed to Greenbrier county, W. Va., where the remainder of his life was spent.

One of his sons, the Rev. Valentine Cook, Jr., was a famous Methodist minister in pioneer days in West Virginia. He was an educated man in German and English, having been schooled at the old Cokesberry College, W. Va. His license as deacon was signed by the famous Francis Asbury, May 27, 1793, in Greenbrier county, W. Va., and has been carefully preserved. Rev. Jacob Cook married Isabella Humphreys in West Virginia. She was of Scotch-Irish stock. The Rev. Mr. Cook spent his life and died in Monroe county, W. Va., where he preached many years and was widely known. He built a church, called Cook's Chapel, at Greenville, W. Va., which is still standing, and was a substantial man, owning both a mill and a farm. The children born to him and his wife were: Polly W., born Tuesday, July 10, 1798; Sallie McKendry, Thursday, April 24, 1800; John H., Tuesday, April 27, 1802; Nancy, Saturday, Feb. 25, 1804; Lorenzo, Sunday, Nov. 23, 1806; Ward, Sunday, Oct. 9, 1808; and Christopher F., Friday, Jan. 1, 1811. The first wife of Rev. Mr. Cook died in childbirth, March 1, 1813, and he married (second) Rachel Cordon, by whom he had these children: Riley B., born Sept. 15, 1825; Caroline C., April 29, 1822; Jacob A., Oct. 28, 1823, and Lewis G., Nov. 2, 1827. The above data are copied from the record in the original family Bible of Rev. Jacob Cook, made by his son Dr. Ward, Dec. 15, 1895.

Dr. Ward Cook has always held that his paternal grandfather, Valentine Cook, emigrated from Amsterdam, Holland, and that he married in Pennsylvania, a Miss Roseylemon. They had seven children besides Jacob: David, John, Henry, Sarah, Valentine, William and Christina. All these children, with the exception of Jacob, emigrated to Kentucky. Rev. Jacob Cook died in West Virginia, May 7, 1844, aged eighty-two years.

Dr. Ward Cook, father of Dr. John W., received his education in Maxwell Academy, in Tennessee, and secured an excellent knowledge of Greek and Latin. He received his medical education in the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, having as preceptors some of the most noted physicians of his day, among them being Drs. Williard Parker, Samuel D. Gross, Daniel Drake and Joseph McDowell. Dr. Ward Cook first settled in the practice of medicine in Red Sulphur Springs, Va. Here he was married July 21, 1842, to Mary J. Harvey, born in Red Sulphur Springs, daughter of James Harvey, who was born in Tennessee, of old Colonial stock. James Harvey was the owner of the famous watering places of Red and White Sulphur Springs, Va., and was a man of wealth and a slave owner. His property was destroyed during the Civil war and his slaves set free. Mrs. Cook was born Aug. 11, 1827, at Red Sulphur Springs, where her father died. The children born to Dr. and Mrs. Mary J. Cook were as follows: James Harvey, born Tuesday, Aug. 1, 1844; Elizabeth Ellen, Saturday, July 24, 1847; Virginia, Tuesday, Aug. 28, 1849; John Wallace, Sunday, Feb. 8, 1852; William Ward, Saturday, Aug. 12, 1854; Oliver Valentine, Sunday, Sept. 20, 1857; and Ossian, Tuesday, June 5, 1862.

In 1849 Dr. Ward Cook removed to Pendleton, Ind., arriving there March 22nd of that year. Here he found a pioneer physician, Dr. Madison G. Walker, and immediately began the practice of his profession, continuing the same from 1849 until 1890. He was a successful and well known pioneer physician, and early practiced surgery and obstetrics, possessing instruments long before any other physician in this part of Indiana. He was a man of high reputation among the medical fraternity of Indiana, and was a member of both county and State medical societies, and was greatly interested in the advancement of medical science, an interest which he maintained until his death, at the age of eighty-six years. He was well read and possessed an excellent medical library. He was a strong church man and a great friend of the Methodist Church in Pendleton, of which he was a liberal supporter. For many years he was class leader, and teacher of the veteran Bible class, composed of the old men. He was well versed in the Bible, and was a strong exponent of that Book and of theology. In political sentiment he was a strong Jacksonian Democrat. The Doctor was also a staunch Union man, and an enemy to slavery. He died Dec. 24, 1894, in Pendleton, and his wife passed away in April, 1866.

Dr. John W. Cook, son of Dr. Ward, received his preliminary education in the public schools of Pendleton, and later the high school. His medical studies were prosecuted at the University of Kentucky, Louisville, from which he was graduated in the spring of 1879. He immediately went into partnership with his father, and at once met with an assured success. The Doctor has an excellent medical library, and takes the leading medical periodicals of the day, keeping up with modern medical progress in this way, and by his membership in the State and county medical societies, having been president of the latter three terms. He has the latest instruments and appliances and a well regulated dispensary. Fraternally he associates with the I. O. O. F., of Pendleton, in which he has passed all of the chairs, including that of Noble Grand, and is a member of the Grand Encampment. In politics he is a Democrat.

Dr. Cook was married Oct. 2, 1895, in Indianapolis, Ind., to Miss Sarah Skillen, daughter of James S. and Margaret Skillen. Dr. and Mrs. Cook went abroad in 1900, visiting England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, Holland, Switzerland and France. They visited the leading hospitals in these countries, receiving very courteous treatment from the officials. The Doctor stands high in his profession, and is well known throughout this part of Indiana, where he has spent his entire life. He has the respect and esteem of the community.

SAMUEL GAYMAN, a representative citizen of Muncie, a veteran of the Civil war and a descendant of an early settled family of Washington county, Pa., was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, Jan. 22, 1840, son of Jacob and Mary (Van Buskirk) Gayman.

The Gaymans were of German stock, the original spelling of the name being Ghaman. Tradition says the great-grandfather of Samuel emigrated from Germany in an early day, and his son Daniel, grandfather of Samuel, was an energetic and far-seeing pioneer farmer in Washington county, Pa. Daniel Gayman had cleared up a fine farm, and was regarded as a substantial citizen. Besides his homestead in Pennsylvania, he entered land for two of his children in Pickaway county, Ohio—this tract consisting of 300 acres. He himself remained in Pennsylvania, but the two children, Jacob and Nancy (who married Henry Harsh), went there, Nancy and her family later removing to Illinois.

Jacob Gayman, son of Daniel, was born Jan. 8, 1791, in Washington county, Pa., and was reared to manhood on his father's farm, early becoming conversant with the best known methods of agriculture. In his young manhood he went to Pickaway county, Ohio, and settled on the land entered by his father, and there cleared up a fine farm. In that county he married Mary Van Buskirk, who was born there, a daughter of a prominent pioneer who had cleared up and owned a large farm near the Gaymans at the junction of Deer creek and Buskirk's run. The Van Buskirks were remarkable for their stature, some of the men attaining to six feet and four inches in height. The children born to Jacob and Mary (Van Buskirk) Gayman were as follows: Sarah Ann, Daniel, Eleazer, Mary J., Isaiah, Samuel, Abigail and John—all born in Pickaway county. Jacob Gayman entered some 380 acres of land in Delaware county, Ind., and 100 acres in Blackford county, that State. In about 1848 he moved his family to his farm in Delaware county, where only about twenty acres had been cleared, and there he engaged in farming. He was a practical farmer, and full of the endurance and energy that characterized the pioneer settler. He died there in May, 1873. His widow survived him until April, 1894, when she passed away, aged ninety-three years. They were both members of the Christian Church. Mrs. Gayman was tall like the members of her family, and several of her children, including Samuel, inherited her fine physique.

Samuel Gayman was reared on a farm, and received the advantages of the district schools during the winter months until he was about twenty-one years of age. He was only eight years old when his parents settled in Delaware county, and made their home in a little log cabin. He early became inured to the hardships of pioneer life, and has very distinct recollections of those early days, when after a long day spent in arduous clearing of the forests, night would be made hideous with the howling of the wolves in the timber near the home cabin. Game, too, was plentiful, especially deer, the latter having a crossing over the home farm.

When the hour of the nation's necessity was at hand, and the call for volunteers made in April, 1861, the sturdy pioneer youth rallied in answer. Samuel Gayman enlisted at Muncie Aug. 5, 1862, as a private in Company B, 69th Ind. V. I. "for three years or during the war." He left Muncie for Richmond, Ind., August 9th, and a few days later went to Louisville, Ky., and on August 30th he was engaged in battle at Richmond, Ky. They retreated six miles from the original battlefield, making three stands. At the last stand, since known as the Green Pike fight, the Captain of the Company called for volunteers to advance on the enemy who were in a sheltered position out of sight. Mr. Gayman was one of the volunteers, and on advancing with his comrades from a slight elevation about sixty yards from the company, he was shot by a minie ball fired by a Confederate sharpshooter. The ball passed through the left shin bone, causing a very painful wound. Mr. Gayman was captured with many of his regiment, and was placed in the College Hospital at Richmond, Ky., where his wound was treated by a Union surgeon. He remained about four weeks in the College Hospital, and then was transferred to a hospital in Lexington, where he spent five weeks. His leg had been amputated above the knee while in Richmond, and the wound was very slow in healing. He was honorably discharged April 29, 1863, in Indianapolis, Indiana.

After his return from the war, Mr. Gayman began teaching school, a profession he followed for some time. In the winter of 1863-64 he taught the Mount Pleasant school in Mount Pleasant township, and then came to Muncie, and entered the high school as a student. The next fall he taught the Brady school in Harrison township, again returning to Muncie to attend school. He taught the Sugar Grove school four consecutive terms, and attended school in Muncie in the meantime, in every instance giving good satisfaction for thorough and efficient work. Mr. Gayman had, however, been brought up on a farm, and his tastes led him to an agricultural life. While teaching he had bought a small farm in Mount Pleasant township, and rented it, but when his father died he bought out the other heirs to the homestead, which consisted of 200 acres. He has greatly improved the place with good drainage, and substantial buildings, everything about the place betokening the successful and progressive and scientific farmer. He has done much speculating in real estate, buying and selling a great deal of property, and conducting his affairs in a safe and profitable manner.

Mr. Gayman has always been a staunch Republican, and he believes it the part of every good citizen to take an interest in public affairs if good government is to be had. In November, 1870, he was elected recorder of Delaware county, and was re-elected for a second term, serving in all eight years. His administration was marked for his careful, systematic work, and he proved an ideal public official. Mr. Gayman erected, in 1873, a beautiful and comfortable modern home at No. 311 West Adams street.

On Aug. 5, 1873, Mr. Gayman was united in marriage with Martha J. Clyne, who was born July 6, 1846, daughter of Thomas Clyne. Her father and mother both came from Troy, Ohio, and were of German stock; they settled in Perry township, Delaware county, in an early day, the father clearing up a good farm of 160 acres. Thomas Clyne was the father of Mary, Henry, Martha J., David, Nancy, Addie, Bryant, Hattie and Abbie. Of these children, Henry and David both served in an Indiana regiment in the Civil war, David dying in the service, while Henry participated in many battles and has a most honorable record. Thomas Clyne died aged sixty-five years. To Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gayman have been born the following children: (1) Grace C., born June 5, 1875, married W. M. Wood, chief engineer of the Decatur Bridge Company, Decatur, Ill., and they have three children, Margaret, Robert Julian and William M., Jr. (2) Clyde C., born Dec. 15, 1882, is a draughtsman in the office of the Decatur Bridge Company. Both the son and the daughter were educated in the Muncie high school.

CAPT. WILLIAM EASTIN ENGLISH was born at the old English homestead, "Englishton Park," near Lexington, Scott Co., Ind., Nov. 3, 1850, and is the only son of Hon. William H. English, former Speaker of the Indiana House of Representatives, ex-Member of Congress, Democratic candidate for Vice-President in 1880, author of the "Conquest of the Northwest" and "History of Indiana," and one of the ablest men Indiana has produced. His grandfather, Hon. Elisha G. English, was also long a prominent citizen of Indiana and was appointed by President Buchanan United States marshal for that State, and was for twenty-four years a member of the Indiana Legislature, serving in both House and Senate. His great-grandfather, Elisha English, was one of the pioneers of Kentucky, having emigrated from Delaware to Kentucky in 1792. He was the son of James, of Delaware, son of James, who emigrated to Delaware about the year 1700, son of Thomas of England. Through his father on the maternal side Captain English is directly descended from four celebrated pioneers of the Kingston, N. Y., district, Cornelius Barrentsen Slecht and Jan Eltinge, who were among the earliest emigrants from Holland to the new "Wiltwyck" settlement, Matthew Blanchan, the Huguenot refugee from Wicres, France, and his son-in-law, Louis DuBois, the noted Huguenot patentee, who at the head of his Huguenot colony received from the Crown patents for 40,000 acres of land, settled upon the grant and founded the town of New Paltz, N. Y. Through this same line Captain English is likewise a descendant of the famous "Baron" Jost Hite, who emigrated from Strasburg, Germany, and who, in 1732, brought the first colony to Virginia that settled west of the Blue Ridge mountains, locating on a grant of land of over 100,000 acres, made to him by King George II, of England. He contested the title to these lands with Lord Fairfax in a celebrated lawsuit which went through all the courts and lasted many years, but which was finally decided in his favor. Captain English's great-grandfather of this same line, Lieut. Philip Eastin, was an officer in the 4th and 8th Virginia Regiments of the Continental Line, and served during the entire Revolutionary war. His great-great-grandfather, Capt. Charles Smith, was an officer under Col. George Washington in the French-English Colonial war and was wounded at the battle of Great Meadows, and his great-great-great-grandfather, Col. John Hite, was a Colonial military officer and a member of the first Board of Justices of Frederick county, Va., after independence was declared. Colonel Hite, after first taking the oath of office under the new government himself, then administered it to all the other members of the board. Another great-great-grandfather, Capt. Revel Wharton, was captain of an American privateer during the war of the Revolution; was captured in action, and died on board a British prison ship.

Captain English removed with his parents to Indianapolis at fourteen years of age, and received his rudimentary education in that city. Having decided to take up the law as a profession, he entered the law department of the Northwestern Christian University, and upon graduating therefrom formed a partnership with Hon. John R. Wilson, under the firm title of English & Wilson. After five years thus spent he retired from the firm, and arranging his business affairs to that end, he went to travel abroad, remaining for some three years, during which time he visited every country in Europe, from Norway to Greece, and various portions of Asia Minor, North Africa, Canada, Mexico, Cuba and South America. During his various tours he wrote a series of letters which appeared in the Indianapolis papers, and attracted general attention, evidencing marked literary ability. His letters from the Holy Land, North Africa, Turkey and Egypt were widely and favorably commented upon.

Captain English is one of the prominent members of the Masonic fraternity in Indiana, and his "History of Early Masonry" in that State, published in 1902, was highly indorsed by his Masonic brethren. He has attained the greatest honor that can come to a Mason, having on May 26, 1903, been elected Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Indiana, the office of Grand Master being the highest known to Masonry. He has taken a total of forty-three Masonic degrees, of various kinds, and has served as president of the Masonic Relief Board of Indianapolis, Worshipful Master of Center Lodge, No. 23, F. and A. M., High Priest of Indianapolis Chapter, No. 5, Royal Arch Masons, Illustrious Master of Indianapolis Council, No. 2, Royal and Select Masters, Sir Knight of Raper Commandery, No. 1, Knights Templar, Noble of Murat Temple, of the Mystic Shrine, and is a thirty-second-degree member, as well as life member of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. Captain English is also connected with various other societies and organizations, and is Past Grand Exalted Ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the United States, ex-president of the Indianapolis Commercial Club, ex-president of the Indianapolis Board of Park Commissioners, ex-president of the Indianapolis Board of Police and Fire Commissioners (Safety), ex-president of the Indiana Society Sons of the American Revolution, president of the Indiana Society of Colonial Wars, vice-president of Indiana Historical Society, vice-president Indiana Society, Sons of the Revolution, vice-president Indianapolis Benevolent Society, vice-president Old Northwest Genealogical Society, besides being a member of the Society of the Cincinnati, Huguenot Society of America, Holland Society of Chicago, American Social Science Association, National Civic Federation, National League of American Sportsmen, Western Writers' Association, Indianapolis Bar Association, Indianapolis Art Association, Indianapolis Board of Trade, Indianapolis Deutscher Haus, New York Lambs Club, Washington, D. C., Army and Navy Club, Indianapolis University Club, Columbia Club, Marion Club, Country Club, Canoe Club, etc. Captain English has been made an honorary member of two labor unions, "The Musicians' Protective Association" and "The National Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes," in recognition of his various services to the cause of labor as represented by the Indianapolis branches of these organizations.

The Captain is a gentleman of fine appearance and of great personal popularity, a quick and ready debater, an eloquent speaker, and an excellent presiding officer, and when occasion requires, and he is called to address or preside over public meetings or conventions, his capacity is made most manifest and his abilities show to their best advantage.

Captain English has long been a leader in Indianapolis politics, and has repeatedly represented his party associates as delegate to municipal, township, county, State, and national conventions. In his earlier political associations and affiliations he was strongly bound to the old Democratic party, and an active participant in its councils, but when the new element in that party came into control of its organization, and assumed a position upon national affairs which he believed to be in total abandonment of its former correct Jeffersonian principles upon questions of sound financial and governmental policy, he promptly affiliated with the Republican party, of which he has ever since been an active, zealous and influential member. He began active participation in politics some years previous to attaining his majority and was treasurer of the leading local political club of the young men of his party in the Presidential campaign of 1872, president of the same in 1876, and again president of the Young Men's Club in 1878. In 1875 he was the Democratic nominee for council in the Eleventh ward of Indianapolis, but declined. In 1882 he was chairman of the Center township delegate convention, in 1885 and 1891 he was chairman of the Indianapolis city convention, in 1890 and 1896 he was chairman of the Marion county convention, and at the national convention of Democratic party clubs, held in New York, Oct. 4, 1892, was elected vice-president of the organization and member of the national committee for the State of Indiana for the ensuing four years. Captain English served as a member of the Democratic State executive committee, as a member of the county committee of Marion county for over twenty years continuously and for years as a member of the city committee of Indianapolis at the same time, and in 1878 was elected chairman of the city committee. In that capacity he so satisfactorily conducted the affairs of the campaign at the spring election of 1878, that in recognition of his ability as a political organizer and manager, he shortly after was also unanimously chosen to the position of chairman of the Marion county committee and given the general management there during the exciting campaign of 1878. It was while holding these two important positions that he was unanimously nominated by his party friends in Marion and Shelby counties as their candidate for joint representative, notwithstanding there were several worthy and talented competitors for the nomination.

His canvass for this office attracted general attention throughout the State, and although the district was carried by the opposition two years before, by a majority of nearly 700, at this election, on the general ticket, Captain English was elected by over 200, leading his ticket nearly five hundred votes. He had the honor of being the youngest member of the House of Representatives, although representing the then largest district in the State, and of being the third of his immediate family to hold a seat in that body, his father and grandfather both having previously been members of the House of Representatives. He served with distinction during both the regular and extra sessions, and was a recognized leader. He was considered one of the best parliamentarians in the body and Speaker Cauthorne frequently called upon him to preside over the deliberations of the House. The Speaker appointed him to the chairmanship of the standing committee on the affairs of the city of Indianapolis, and a member of the committee to reapportion the State for Congressional and legislative purposes. His bill upon Congressional apportionment—"House Bill No. 468"—passed both Houses and became the law after one of the most bitter legislative struggles ever witnessed in the State. He was also author of the popular law limiting the indebtedness of Marion county, and various other bills and resolutions of like importance were proposed by him. Among them were the first bill introduced at that session, providing for a reduction of official fees and salaries, the bill abolishing the unnecessary offices of city treasurer and assessor, the bill providing for a reappraisal of real estate, and the reduction of taxation thereon, and the original bill providing for a metropolitan police system in Indianapolis.

Captain English was prominently spoken of as a candidate for Congress at the expiration of his legislative term in 1880, but owing to the fact that his father was the party nominee for Vice-President in that campaign, declined to allow the use of his name before the convention of that year. However, at the succeeding election, two years later, there was a general desire among his party friends that he should become the candidate in his district, and, although several prominent and able gentlemen were candidates for the position, he was in the end unanimously nominated at the convention held at Shelbyville, May 8, 1882. The opposing candidate nominated against him had the advantage of being a candidate for re-election, having been elected two years before by nearly one thousand majority. But in the face of this large majority to overcome Captain English entered upon a vigorous campaign, making a thorough personal canvass, besides speaking in every township in the district. His ability as a canvasser being well known, his nomination alarmed the opposition, notwithstanding their previous majorities in the district, and every effort was made to insure his defeat. However, despite the majority to overcome, and the exceptional fight made against him, he carried the district and was elected after one of the hottest political campaigns ever known in the State. In the words of the Washington Chronicle, at the close of his term, "Mr. English made a useful, capable and attentive representative, always in attendance upon the sessions of the House, and ever watchful of the interests of his constituents." Among other important bills introduced by him were those providing for an international copyright law, the issuance of coin certificates of small denominations, and the increase of the pensions of crippled soldiers and sailors. His comprehensive report on the proposed alcoholic liquor traffic commission, from the committee of which he was chairman, was adopted by the House, and attracted much favorable comment. At the close of his official term it was the general desire of his party that he accept a renomination, but, influenced by personal considerations, he positively declined to be a candidate. His declination was received with regret, and the Congressional convention, upon assembling at Indianapolis, Aug. 31, 1884, to nominate his successor, unanimously adopted the following in reference thereto:

"Resolved, That we hear with regret of Mr. English's wish and determination not to be a candidate for re-election, and we unqualifiedly express our confidence in him as a faithful representative."

Representative English was not only thus warmly approved by his party friends, but his course in Congress received indorsement from his constituents regardless of party. One of the leading opposition papers of the State at that time, the Indianapolis Daily Times, said: "He is fair and liberal toward his political opponents, and always ready to do a favor. He won the reputation of being a hard-working and successful member of the Indiana Legislature, and we are glad to find him on the same line in Congress." The able opposition organ of Hancock county, the Greenfield Republican, said: "He makes a faithful and efficient representative, and in his official duties does not discriminate against those who differ from him politically. As a business representative, he is now, as when a member of the Indiana Assembly, far above the average, and entitled to the confidence of his constituents."

Thus Captain English left official position with kindly words from both political friend and foe, after never having suffered defeat in convention or at the polls. In the language of the Washington Free Press, at the close of the Congressional session, "Mr. English came into the House of Representatives, the youngest member of that body, going out with the good-will and respect of the entire House, and with as many personal friends as the most popular members." Although frequently spoken of in that connection, Captain English has never been a candidate before the people for election to any office since that time, but has continued an active, zealous worker in political affairs.

In the Presidential campaign of 1892 he was a prominent participant both before and after the Presidential nominations. In the heated preliminary contest within his party ranks between the friends of the various aspirants for the Presidency he was one of the leaders in Indiana of ex-President Cleveland's following, and as a result thereof was selected from the Indianapolis district as a delegate to the national convention at Chicago over several well-known and active competitors. He was one of the most prominent members of that body, having been chosen in the organization as chairman of the important "committee on rules and order of business" for the government of the convention, and having been later unanimously selected by the Indiana delegation to make the speech to the convention on behalf of the State of Indiana presenting Grover Cleveland as their choice for the office of President of the United States. In the performance of this distinguished duty he acquitted himself with great credit and honor, his speech being generally pronounced by press and public to be, in the language of the Daily News, "one of the best oratorical efforts" delivered before that magnificent assemblage. The Associated Press declared it "eloquently" rendered, and the telegraphic special of the Indianapolis Sentinel from Chicago voiced the general verdict in the statement "that it was generally conceded that Mr. English made the best seconding speech of the convention."

Captain English was for the second time elected unanimously a delegate from the Indianapolis district to the national convention of his party, held in Chicago in 1896, where he was one of the managers of the campaign of Governor Matthews, Indiana's candidate for nomination as the Presidential standard bearer. However, he found himself totally at variance with the platform of principles adopted by that convention and took no active part in the National contest of that year.

In the national campaign of 1900 Captain English was again a most active participant in the Presidential contest, and made a brilliant speaking campaign throughout the various parts of Indiana in behalf of McKinley, Roosevelt, and the entire Republican ticket. No speaker was in greater demand at all Republican gatherings, and he was everywhere greeted with the most enthusiastic audiences. He accompanied Candidate Roosevelt on his tour of the State, speaking with him at various towns and cities on the trip. His influence was widely felt in all parts of Indiana in this campaign, and at its close he received personal letters from both President McKinley and Vice-President Roosevelt, in acknowledgment of his eminent services in behalf of the Republican nominees.

In the presidential conflict of 1904, in which his comrade of the Santiago campaign, Theodore Roosevelt, was the Republican nominee for President, and his fellow-townsmen and neighbor, Charles W. Fairbanks, the nominee for Vice-President, he was especially zealous and canvassed Indiana from one end to the other, speaking for the Republican ticket in every part of the State. Again he accompanied the Vice-Presidential candidate's special train over the State, and spoke with Mr. Fairbanks at various important places each day during the tour. Since the year 1900 he has frequently served as a delegate to Republican city, township, county, legislative, Congressional and State conventions. He was a member of the Republican city executive committee in the campaign of 1901 and was appointed president of the board of safety by the successful Republican candidate for Mayor. In the State campaign of 1906 he served as an active member of the Marion County Republican executive committee throughout the contest. He was chairman of the Marion county Republican convention of 1906 and the Republican joint legislative convention of Marion and Hancock of 1904. He was a Vice-President of the Republican State convention of 1902, chairman of the committee on Rules and Order of Business in the State convention of 1904, and chairman of the committee on Credentials in the State convention of 1906.

Upon the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, notwithstanding his large business interests, and the sacrifices incident thereto, Captain English promptly tendered his services to Governor Mount of Indiana, and through the Governor was shortly thereafter offered an appointment by President McKinley as paymaster in the army with the rank of major. This tender was promptly declined, he stating that he desired active service only, and requesting an appointment of lower rank, if need be, provided the service was at the front.

Following this, after failure to receive appointment in the adjutant-general's department, for which he applied, he was on May 17, 1898, appointed by President McKinley to the rank of captain of United States Volunteers, and assigned to the quartermaster's department. Not desiring to serve in that department for the reason before given of a desire for more active service at the front, at his own urgent and personal request he was, on June 10, 1898, promptly detached and transferred from service in that department, without having performed any duty in it, and was immediately assigned to duty as an aide upon the personal staff of Major-Gen. Joseph Wheeler, commanding the Cavalry Division (and served as such throughout the Santiago campaign), as shown by the following special order issued by General Wheeler:

Headquarters Cavalry Division, U. S. Army.
Special Order No. 22.

Pursuant to instructions from the War Department, Captain William E. English, U. S. Volunteers, is assigned to duty as Aide to the Major-General commanding, to date, June 10, 1898, the day on which he reported for duty. By command of Major-General Wheeler.

J. H. DORST.
Lieut.-Col. U. S. Vols. Assistant Adjutant-General.

Official: M. F. STEELE, Aide.

Captain English was among the first soldiers who embarked for Cuba, sailing from Tampa, June 13, on the transport "Allegheny," in company with General Wheeler and the members of his staff. He had the distinguished honor to be the only Indiana volunteer in General Shafter's entire army.

In the bombardment of El Poso hill, during the battle of July 1st before Santiago, he was disabled and dangerously injured by his frightened horse rearing and falling backward with and upon him, as a result of a Spanish shrapnel shell exploding close to him, which slightly wounded his horse upon the shoulder, besides killing and wounding several soldiers about him, among the wounded being Mason Mitchell, the well-known actor lecturer, and Sergeant Devore of Colonel Roosevelt's Rough Riders. President Roosevelt, in his history of the Rough Riders, states that he himself received a slight wound on the arm from a piece of the same deadly missile, and, as shown by the following extract from the Evansville (Ind.) Daily Journal of Oct. 13, 1900, he later confirmed this statement in a public address delivered in the city of Evansville during his Vice-Presidential campaign, in which, in closing, he said: "I want to have the privilege of introducing the speaker who is to follow me. My successor on this platform is a man disabled as a result of the same shell which struck me, in the war with Spain. He refuses to follow men who are opposed to civic honesty at home and national honor abroad. I have the honor to introduce Captain English, of your own State."

Gen. Samuel S. Sumner was in command of the cavalry division at the time referred to, as a result of the absence of General Wheeler on account of illness (General Wheeler reaching the front later), and Captain English was for that reason serving temporarily upon his staff. General Sumner, sitting on his horse a few feet away, was an eye-witness to the injury which disabled Captain English, and in reference thereto the following valued evidence has been placed on file in the War Department by General Sumner:

August 23, 1899.

Brigadier-General Theo. Schwan, President Board, War Department, Washington, D. C.

Sir: I remember very well the injury of Captain Wm. E. English on July 1st at El Poso, where he was temporarily acting as an Aide upon my staff. I was quite near him and saw his horse rear and fall; at the time I thought he was struck (or the horse) by a piece of the shell which burst over our heads, but learned later that he had escaped a wound, though severely injured by the horse's fall.

S. S. SUMNER,

Col. 6th Cav., late Brig.-Gen., Commanding
Cavalry Brigade and Division.

Captain English was crushed beneath the falling horse, and upon removal was found to be dangerously injured internally, and while still disabled and confined from these injuries was attacked by virulent dysentery, accompanied by malaria, until his condition from these various complications became so alarming that after consultation the surgeons in charge ordered his immediate removal from the climate of Cuba and return to the United States as the only hope of saving his life. He was therefore ordered transferred to the hospital at Siboney by written order signed by Major L. M. Crampton, chief surgeon in charge of headquarters hospital, upon the recommendation of Major Frederick J. Combe, assistant surgeon in charge, and thence together with many other sick and wounded soldiers on board the hospital transport "Seneca" for removal to the United States. The transport sailed from Cuba the day the surrender of Santiago was agreed upon by the Spanish and American commanders, and it became well known through the newspapers because of the extreme privations and hardships endured on the homeward voyage.

It was first ordered to Tampa, but the restrictions of the health authorities there caused its destination to be changed to Fortress Monroe, where it was again refused a landing on account of yellow fever being reported on board, and after various vexatious delays it was eventually permitted to land in New York harbor. Mrs. English, who had unsuccessfully but persistently and courageously sought and followed her husband to each of these ports, finally secured his release from quarantine, in which he was held in New York. After the necessary rest and recuperation in that city Captain English returned to his home in Indianapolis, where his friends received him with congratulations and rejoicings, his death having been bulletined by the newspapers but a short time before. Shortly after his arrival his enthusiastic friends of the G. A. R. veterans marched in a body to his residence to tender him their fraternal welcome on his return, which was followed a few days later by a public reception given to him by the Columbia Club, the leading club organization of the city, and still later on his brethren of the Masonic fraternity at a public assemblage presented him a beautifully jeweled officer's sword, with the words, "As a token of his services to his country," handsomely engraved upon it. A most striking and gracious welcome and greeting was extended by the Indiana Republican State convention, which, being then in session, invited Captain English to a seat in the convention near the presiding officer, and when he appeared before them, bronzed, feeble and emaciated from his Cuban experiences, gave him three rousing cheers and a patriotic ovation such as has seldom been witnessed in a political convention.

Captain English continued in such bad health, as a result of the effects of the injury received and the illness contracted in Cuba, that he was granted an extended sick leave by the War Department, and peace in the meantime having been formally declared he was finally, at his own request, honorably discharged from the army of the United States, Dec. 31, 1898. On that evening, at a dinner in celebration of the event, the following highly flattering and complimentary letters were read from his old commander,

General Wheeler, and from Governor Mount, Vice-President Fairbanks (then Senator) and Senator Turpie of Indiana, who were most largely responsible for his appointment to the army by the President of the United States:

House of Representatives.
Washington, D. C., Dec. 8th, 1898.

Dear Captain English: I am very glad to hear that friends of your city are to tender you a manifestation of their esteem and respect. I was very glad, indeed, to have you on my staff in Cuba, and it was with regret that your being disabled in front of Santiago, on July 1, and your subsequent illness deprived me of the continuance of your service with me. Wishing you many years of happiness and trusting that your State and country may have the continued benefit of your services, believe me truly your friend,

JOSEPH WHEELER.

Executive Department, State of Indiana,
Indianapolis, Dec. 18th, 1898.

My Dear Captain: I desire to express to you through this communication that which I have stated publicly, viz.: My appreciation of the promptness with which you tendered your services in the war with Spain. You were one of the first in this State to pledge your support and offer your services to the government. It gave me pleasure to promptly recommend you for the position of paymaster, with the rank of major. It was a truly chivalrous spirit which you manifested when you declined this and asked for "active service at the front." You were commissioned a captain and assigned to the staff of fighting General Joseph Wheeler. In front of Santiago de Cuba you found what you sought—"active service at the front." In this severe battle you were disabled, and by subsequent sickness compelled to return home. You did your duty promptly and faithfully. I trust God will give you many years in which to enjoy the privileges and blessings of the country to the defense of which you so promptly responded.

Sincerely your friend,

JAMES A. MOUNT, Governor.

United States Senate,
Washington, D. C., Dec. 30th, 1898.

Dear Captain English: I am in receipt of your favor of recent date, advising me that you are to retire from service in the army on the 31st inst. Permit me this opportunity to congratulate you upon the fact of your early tender of services during the recent war, and upon the excellent record made by you while in the army. I am gratified to have been of some little service to you in securing the commission which you desired. You have splendidly vindicated all I promised in your behalf. Wishing you health and happiness, I remain,

Very sincerely,
CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS.

United States Senate,
Washington, D. C., Dec. 9th, 1898.

Hon. W. E. English, Indianapolis, Ind.—Having learned from the War Department that your resignation from the army had been accepted, to take effect from the date of December 31st, next, allow me to congratulate you upon this highly honorable conclusion of your military service. Your very early tender of service to the government in the late war with Spain, your voluntary and earnest declination of non-active duties, and your urgent request to be assigned to the field at the front, your gallant participation in the victorious campaign against Santiago, until you were disabled in action in the face of the enemy, have amply justified the expectation of your friends and the sound judgment of the heroic Wheeler in selecting you as a member of his military staff and household. You may thus now retire and return again to civil life with the consciousness of having rendered to the State and to your country the bravest and truest service in a perilous time destined to be memorable in our history.

Yours very truly,
DAVID TURPIE.

At the close of his service in the army Captain English patriotically decided that he would not accept the pay due him from the government therefor, and so notified the War Department in the following letter (copied from the official records), addressed to the Adjutant-General of the army at Washington:

Indianapolis, Oct. 20, 1899.

General H. C. Corbin, Adjutant-General U. S. A.

Sir: I have drawn no pay at any time and do not know the amount due me from the government for my services as Captain U. S. V. and A. D. C. on the staff of Major-General Joseph Wheeler during the Spanish-American War. My active service was confined to the Santiago campaign, but whatever the amount due me is. I desire to turn it back into the United States treasury. This is simply a little matter of sentiment on my part, and if you will inform me as to the procedure necessary to cover it back into the treasury or forward me any papers which it will be necessary for me to sign, I shall be under obligations to you.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM E. ENGLISH.
Late Captain U. S. V.

In pursuance of these instructions the necessary papers were prepared, forwarded and promptly signed by Captain English whereby $1,150, the full amount due him for his entire army service, was covered back into the United States treasury, as shown and attested by the official records of the auditor of the treasury for the War Department and the assistant treasurer of the United States.

On the day following his retirement from the United States army Governor Mount, in recognition of his services; honored Captain English still further by appointing him inspector-general on the staff of the governor of Indiana, with the rank of colonel, and he has since been reappointed to a position on the governor's staff by Governor Mount's successors in office, Governors Durbin and Hanly.

Captain English was one of the three founders of the National Association of "United Spanish War Veterans" and was its first elected commander-in-chief. He gave it the name which it bears and was the most important factor in bringing it together as a strong and influential organization in every part of the country. He has not only served as commander-in-chief of the National Organization of United Spanish War Veterans of the United States, but also as department commander of Indiana of the Association of Spanish-American War Veterans and vice-commander of Indiana Commandery Military Order of Foreign Wars and is a member of the Naval and Military Order of the Spanish-American War as well as of the Society of the Army of Santiago de Cuba, made up of soldiers who served honorably in the Santiago campaign. Captain English had the honor to be selected to command the division of Spanish War Veterans in the great inaugural parade incident to the inauguration of their distinguished comrade, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, as President of the United States. A warm personal friendship existed between Captain English and his beloved commander, General Joseph Wheeler, and at the time of the great soldier's death his family selected Captain English to serve as one of the pall-bearers at his funeral.

Captain English became identified with Indiana military affairs at an early date, and was one of the charter members of the well-known Indianapolis Light Infantry, signing the original charter agreement April 14, 1877, and with the rest of the company being mustered into service in the Indiana National Guard on July 14, 1877. He was a member of the committee that prepared and filed the original articles of incorporation, member of the first committee on finance and member of the board of audit during the first year of the company's existence, and for many years was one of the most active members, serving through the Coal Creek riots and on other important and notable occasions. The "William E. English Guards," named for Captain English, was organized and mustered into State service May 16, 1886, and was the first colored company in the State to enter the Indiana National Guard. The "William E. English Zouaves," of Indianapolis, one of the crack zouave companies of the United States for many years, was also named in his honor, as was "Captain William E. English Camp No. 64" of the National Association of Spanish-American War Veterans.

Captain English and wife made an extended tour of Europe in 1902, he having gone abroad early in that year, under appointment of President Roosevelt, as a delegate to the International Congress of Commerce, held at Ostend, Belgium. On March 10, 1903, shortly after their return, their only child, Rosalind Orr English, was born at the family home in Indianapolis. Mrs. Helen Orr English, wife of Captain English, is a descendant of the well-known Orr and Worley families. Her grandfather, Col. John M. Orr, was lieutenant-colonel of the 16th and colonel of the 124th Indiana regiments during the Civil war and received a severe wound in the head at the battle of Arkansas Post from which he never fully recovered, and her great-great-grandfather, John Orr, served in the war of 1812 from Kentucky. Her great-great-grandfather, Peter Luke, was a soldier of the Revolution from Frederick county, Va., and her direct Colonial ancestor, Thomas Brassey, was a prominent Quaker and an important figure in the early history of Pennsylvania. He was a member of the "Society of Free Traders" formed in London by William Penn. He was elected in London May 29, 1682, the head of the committee of twelve to reside in Pennsylvania to represent that Society. He was a member of the First and Second Colonial or Provincial Assemblies of Pennsylvania and also a justice of the first court held in Chester county.

Captain English is one of the largest property owners in Indiana, and devotes the greater part of his time to his extensive interests in the city of Indianapolis, where he resides, although spending considerable time also at his beautiful country home, "English-ton Park," the old family homestead in Scott county, Ind., which has sheltered five generations of the English family. His magnificent block fronting on Monument Place in Indianapolis (occupying one entire square), in which is located the "Hotel English," English's Opera House, etc., is universally conceded to be one of the finest and handsomest buildings in the United States. Captain English, however, never permits his private interests to cause him to neglect public affairs or to lessen his activity and public spirit in all that affects the requirements and duties of good citizenship.

ALDRED. The following record of the early history of the Aldred family is from data obtained from the old Delaware home of the family.

(I) The American founders of the family, William and Catherine (Robinson) Aldred, and several children sailed from Liverpool, England, in the good ship "Pennsylvania," Capt. David Harding, Aug. 26, 1794. They arrived in Philadelphia the same year, and settled near Wilmington, Del., on a farm. In England, William Aldred, who was a dyer by trade, had been a member of the Ancient Guild of Dyers, and in America followed his trade in conjunction with his agricultural operations. A complete list of his children is here given: Richard, born May 22, 1784, died Oct. 23, 1786, in England; Sarah, born June 18, 1785, died Oct. 25, 1787, in England; John A., born Aug. 11, 1786; Lydia, born March 8, 1788, died in America, Jan. 18, 1798; Mary, born Sept. 24, 1790; Ellen, born April 18, 179—; William Aston, born in Wilmington, Del., Jan. 11, 1797; Sarah, born Sept. 7, 1801; and Thomas J., born Oct. 3, 1803. Other records of these children are as follows: Ellen married John Day; Sarah married Adam Talley, and one married a Mr. Grub. The marriage of William Aldred, Sr., to Catherine Robinson occurred in England, July 5, 1783. He died in Delaware, March 13, 1835, and she Oct. 25, 1835, aged seventy-five years, eight months, eleven days.

(II) John A. Aldred, son of William and Catherine (Robinson) Aldred, was born in Manchester, England, Aug. 11, 1786. He was a boy of eight years when he came with his parents to America, was reared a farmer, and married Mary Talley. Her brother, Major Talley, married a sister of John Aldred, and removed to Indiana, thence to Ringgold, Iowa, at an early day, where his descendants are still living. Leaving Delaware May 12, 1835, John A. Aldred removed to near Thornville, Perry Co., Ohio, where he cleared up a farm of 160 acres. Here he made a good home and farm, and erected good buildings. He was a substantial pioneer of Perry county, a man of retiring disposition, and a good citizen of straightforward and honest character. Mr. Aldred, wife and family were members of the Methodist Church. He died on his farm in Perry county, in September, 1852, his wife having passed away the preceding April, and a daughter, Rebecca, died unmarried, the same year. John Aldred was a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Aldred were the parents of the following children: William M.; Adam; John D.; Thomas; Sarah, who married Dr. Bryson; Rebecca; Catherine; Ellen; Mary, who married John Woltmire; and Eliza, all of these children, except Eliza, being born in Delaware, and she in Perry county, Ohio.

(III) William M. Aldred was born Dec. 28, 1817, in Delaware. His family records are copied from his family Bible. He married March 12, 1840, in Perry county, Ohio, Mary R. Henderson, daughter of James Henderson, a pioneer farmer of Perry county. Mr. Henderson was of Scotch stock, and was a substantial farmer. His children, besides Mrs. William M. Aldred, were: Nancy, who married George Leslie; James; John; Hinman, and Joseph. Mr. Henderson lived to be eighty years old. He made a trip on horseback to Indiana from Ohio to see his daughter, and returned. This was in 1850, and at that time Mr. Henderson was anything but a young man. After marriage Mr. Aldred and his wife lived on a farm in Perry county for about nine years, and in 1849 came to Indiana. He made the journey with two two-horse wagons, the family camping out at night part of the time, and at times sleeping in the homes of settlers. There were then the following children: Sarah Ann, born Jan. 26, 1841; Marion, born Nov. 29, 1842; Emma E., born Jan. 19, 1846; and in Indiana was born Mary C., Jan. 16, 1851. Mr. Aldred settled in Wayne township. His father had come out previously and purchased 160 acres of heavily timbered land, and this he gave to William M. and John, another son who had come out with the party. William sold fifteen acres to his brother John, retained sixty-five acres and bought forty acres adjoining which had thirty acres cleared, a good orchard and a log cabin built upon it, and this gave them a home and a good start. They raised a fine crop on the new land, which produced well from the start. Mr. Aldred cleared up his land from the heavy timber of black walnut, oak, poplar, etc., much of which had to be burned, the best being split up for rails for the fence. There was a saw mill on Stony Creek, within one-half mile of them, and they had some of the black walnut sawed up into timber, from which they built a house, the weather-boarding and sash and doors all being of black walnut. Mr. Aldred was a pioneer local preacher in the Methodist Church, in which he was also a class leader. He aided in building and establishing the Methodist Church in his community, and in building the school houses there. In politics he was an old-line Whig, and later became one of the original Republicans. His wife died Oct. 26, 1860, and he married (second), March 19, 1861, Paulina McKinzey. They had one child, Amanda L., who died young. Mr. Aldred died on his farm Oct. 30, 1866.

(IV) MARION ALDRED, son of William M. and Mary (Henderson), was born in Perry county, Ohio, Nov. 29, 1842. He was reared on a farm in Wayne township, Hamilton county, Ind., and he attended the district school, held in a log cabin, for a short time. He worked on farm during the summer months until he was twenty-one years old, attending school in the winter months. He thus obtained a good common school education, and became very proficient in arithmetic, his teacher, Rev. Michael Black, being an expert in mental mathematics, which was practically taught in those days. After his school days Mr. Aldred continued to work on the home farm. His mother died when he was about sixteen years old, and his father in 1866, and he then took the home farm to work. In April, 1864, he enlisted in Noblesville, in Company B, 136th Ind. V. I., to serve 100 days. His services took him to Murfreesboro, Tenn., where he had several skirmishes with guerrillas, and he was honorably discharged at the end of his term of enlistment in Indianapolis, returning then to Hamilton county. Mr. Aldred began in his young manhood, to trade and deal in stock, and he shipped his first car load in 1876, and in that year attended the Centennial at Philadelphia. He followed the stock business exclusively for about sixteen years, being very successful. He bought more land, owning a fine farm of 186 acres, with good buildings, and then purchased another farm two miles north of Noblesville, consisting of 260 acres. In 1879 he located in Noblesville, and one year later bought and improved his present residence. In March, 1893, he was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Noblesville, and was elected president on its organization. He is a very substantial citizen. In his political opinions Mr. Aldred is a stanch Republican. In his religious faith he is a Methodist, and his fraternal relations are with the K. P. of Noblesville.

In February, 1865, when only twenty-two years old, Mr. Aldred married, in Wayne township, Mary J. Ford, who died in 1869, the mother of one son, James William. He married (second), Feb. 13, 1873, in Arcadia, Ind., Margaret R. Gentry, born May 7, 1844, daughter of Thomas P. and Paulina (Wright) Gentry. To this union was born one child: Nellie Idonia, born Jan. 29, 1875, in Wayne township, is a graduate of the high school; she married, June 16, 1897, William E. Axline, a druggist, son of Dr. J. A. Axline, and has one child, Margaret C. James W., born Dec. 28, 1869, of his father's first marriage, was educated in the public schools, including the high school at Noblesville, and for seven years he held the position of bookkeeper in the First National Bank, but he has since engaged in stock farming, and is now established in that business on a farm north of Noblesville; in Fortville, Madison county, he married Maude Watts, and has one son, Marion W., born May 7, 1905.

GENTRY. The Gentry family to which Mrs. Marion Aldred belongs, was early planted in North Carolina. Richard Gentry, her grandfather, was born April 30, 1773, and lived in Guilford county, N. C., where he was the owner of 600 acres of land. He built and operated a flour mill, and was also a slave owner. He died May 14, 1831. He married April 19, 1796, Rebecca L. Barnett, who was born March 8, 1779, and who died at Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 18, 1858. Their children, according to records copied from the old family Bible, were: William B., born March 20, 1797; Nancy, Oct. 5, 1798; Eliza, Sept. 20, 1800; James, Oct. 2, 1802; Ira G., June 26, 1804; Harriet, Dec. 20, 1806; Richard, Dec. 3, 1808; Frances C., Feb. 4, 1810; Joel A., June 10, 1813; Thomas P., Oct. 30, 1815; Rebecca L., April 26, 1820; and John F., Oct. 26, 1821.

Thomas P. Gentry, son of Richard, born Oct. 30, 1815, in Guilford county, N. C., received a common school education, and then engaged in farming. He remained in Guilford county for two years after his marriage, and then accompanied his wife's people to Indiana, settling first in Hamilton county, and a short time afterward going to Marion county, where he settled on a part of the land owned by his father-in-law. Here he cleared up his farm, made a good homestead, and here died April 30, 1854. In Guilford county, N. C., Mr. Gentry married Pauline Wright, who was born June 26, 1818, daughter of Rev. James and Ruhamah (McEnnally) Wright. She died July 6, 1863, in Marion county. They were both members of the Methodist Church, and Mr. Gentry was one of the founders of the Methodist Church at Allisonville, Ind. Their children were: Eliza R., born Feb. 25, 1839 (in Hamilton county); James T., Dec. 12, 1840; William, Aug. 12, 1842 (in Marion county); Margaret R., May 7, 1844; John W., Oct. 15, 1846; Mary E., Jan. 3, 1849; Joseph H., Dec. 8, 1850; and Pauline Isabella, April 3, 1853.

Rev. James Wright was one of the early local pioneer Methodist ministers. He was of Irish birth, and as a small boy came to America with relatives. He came to Indiana as a pioneer, and entered 600 acres of land at Castleton, ten miles north of Indianapolis, where he established his home, clearing up his farm in the woods. He was one of the substantial farmers, and at his death left all his children land. He was one of the founders of Methodism in Indiana, and his brother, Rev. J. F. Wright, was also a pioneer Methodist minister, and the editor of the Western Christian Advocate, in Cincinnati.

DAVIS. Three years previous to the formation of the State of Indiana, there settled within the limits of the Territory the family of Paul Davis from South Carolina, and his posterity have remained in that locality ever since, a period covering nearly a century. Among them are a number who have not only achieved financial success, but have also won for themselves an inalienable place of influence and esteem in their several communities.

Paul Davis, the pioneer settler in Indiana, was well-advanced in years when he left South Carolina. He did not believe in slavery, and so, selling his homestead there of 500 acres, he started for his new home on the frontier, in company with quite a party of neighbors. He was accompanied by his wife, Margaret, who was a sister of James Alexander, a pioneer of Fayette county, Ind., and by most of their nine children, George, James, Wilburn, Robert, John, Paul, Thomas Jefferson, Jasper and Dulcinea, or Dolly. The daughter married a Mr. Caldwell, and lived on the old homestead. Paul Davis settled in the woods near Connersville, living at first in a log cabin which was afterward replaced by a brick house, the first in that region. He cleared up a farm of from 160 to 200 acres, and spent his remaining years there, dying in 1858, when about eighty-nine years old. He was one of the early Methodists in religious belief, and in politics was a Jacksonian Democrat.

George Davis, eldest son of the pioneer, was born in South Carolina, in the Pendleton district, May 9, 1792. During the war of 1812, although neither he nor his brother were of age, they both enlisted. George was in the army eighteen months, and was stationed at Fort Moultrie. The father finally came after his sons, and compelled them to leave the service. On Sept. 29, 1814, George Davis married, in Mecklenburg county, N. C., Miss Violet McCorkle, who was born in that locality, Nov. 26, 1793, daughter of Owen and Millie (Darius) McCorkle. Owen McCorkle was of Scotch-Irish descent, and was a farmer in North Carolina. He was killed by lightning. He left three children, Violet, Millie and one whose name is not known. An uncle of Mrs. Violet Davis, Hugh Forbes, was a soldier in the Revolution.

Immediately after their marriage George Davis and his wife started for Indiana, traveling with a one-horse "Durbin" wagon. Mrs. Davis rode, carrying with her all their worldly possessions in a bundle, while her husband walked. In some way the bundle was lost, and when the loss was discovered Mr. Davis turned back to look for it. He learned that it had been picked up by a man with a team whom they had passed on the road. In spite of the start this man had, Mr. Davis managed to overtake him and regain his bundle. Meantime his own party had gone on and he was obliged to walk day and night to catch up with them. On reaching their destination, they settled on eighty acres of land, which his father had entered, and for their first shelter they built a log cabin in sugar camp fashion. Two children were born to them here, but one died under most distressing conditions.

Left in the cabin while his parents were making sugar, he in some way managed to set fire to it and was burned to death. On the original tract of land Mr. Davis cleared all but six acres on the west side, which was left in timber, and by his industry and thrift he became the possessor of much land, and was one of the prominent men of his section. Besides his homestead of 240 acres, he entered 320 acres which he gave to his sons, and at one time he owned in different parts of Fayette, Madison, Hancock, Tipton and Delaware counties, 1,300 acres in all. His home, during the latter part of his life, was a handsome, two-story brick house.

George Davis, although not a church member, was a man of strict Christian character, straightforward, honest and of great determination, and naturally gained considerable influence among his neighbors. At first an old-line Whig, he was among the earliest recruits to the new Republican party, and voted for Lincoln in 1860. In 1829 he was treasurer of Fayette county, and for two years was justice of the peace, while he also served at one time as assessor. As a young man he taught one term in Fayette county. He shared his father's hatred of slavery and the stirring times in which he lived intensified this feeling. Mr. Davis died in Madison county, Ind., while visiting his son, Marion, in August, 1873, and his wife survived him nearly three years. Her death occurred at the homestead June 19, 1876. Their children were: Madison, born July 5, 1815; Marion, April 28, 1817; Almira, Aug. 1, 1819; George W., Aug. 9, 1822; Violet, Sept. 17, 1824; Volney, May 13, 1827; Addison Clay, Aug. 17, 1829; Margaret, April 16, 1832; Harrison, June 19, 1835; and Marshall, March 2, 1838.

VOLNEY DAVIS was born May 13, 1827, and was educated in the subscription schools of that early day, held in the beginning in the homes of the settlers. His first teacher was his uncle, John, and later another uncle, Jasper, who was lame, took the position. The latter was obliged to ride to school, and Volney rode behind him. The boy attended school winters until he was twenty-one, and then went a while longer after his father and the neighbors, in 1848, built a large brick school-house, where Edward Trowbridge was the first teacher. During all these years Volney Davis worked on the farm during the summers, but he learned the carpenter's trade, and for two years followed that. After his marriage, in 1850, he took up farming as a regular occupation, and in November of that year (1850) settled on 108 acres of timber land which his father gave him. This land was very wet and covered with oak, hickory, walnut, etc., the railroad route being the first clearing through that region. For a couple of months they lived in a log cabin on the Hamilton county line, while his father and brother, Addison C., helped to build a cabin on his own land, working in snow one foot deep. Cold though it was, the young couple managed to get through the winter comfortably, for the cabin had a big chimney where they kept a roaring fire. This stick chimney, daubed with mud, did not get topped off that first winter, but otherwise the cabin was finished, with a roof of clapboards, held in place by weight poles. Mr. Davis cleared his farm and also ran a saw mill on his place for twenty-five years. He has made a good home and been very prosperous, standing as one of the typical successful pioneers.

On Oct. 24, 1850, Mr. Davis married Miss Luarkie Jane Moss, born in Champaign county, Ohio, daughter of John Moss and wife (whose maiden name was Arbogast), both of Virginia families. John Moss was born in Buckingham county, that State, and became a pioneer in Ohio, and then in Madison county, Ind., where he settled on a farm two miles west of Anderson. There he died aged sixty-five. His wife, who was the older of the two, was an invalid for many years, and died at their home a few years before her husband. They were members of the United Brethren Church. They had ten children: Jefferson, Polly, Eliza, Elizabeth, America, Catherine, Luarkie, James, Isaac and Montezuma. The children born to Volney and Luarkie Jane Davis were: Marshall, Thomas Jefferson, George, Jasper N., Vinton E., and Nora A.

In politics Mr. Davis was a Whig until the Republican party was formed, and since then he has voted for every candidate for the President as a Republican from Fremont down to the present time.

ADDISON CLAY DAVIS, son of George and Violet (McCorkle) Davis, was born on the old homestead, Aug. 17, 1829. He went to school until he was seventeen or eighteen years old, but so irregularly that it amounted to only about a year and a half altogether. It was the day of subscription schools, and while there were four children in the Davis family to go, the father only subscribed for two, $1.50 each so that the children took turns.

Then, too, they were kept from school when the day proved fit for work on the place, and sometimes Addison C. did not get more than a day a week. However, he studied at night a good deal and finally secured a pretty good education. He was brought up to hard work on the farm, and practically gave all of his life to agricultural pursuits.

Addison C. Davis married at the age of twenty-seven, Sept. 23, 1856, Cynthia Ann Kellum, who was born on a farm in Fayette county, Jan. 3, 1833. She was a daughter of John and Jane (Morrow) Kellum, the former of whom was born in Preble county, Ohio, in 1810, son of John. Both the father and son cleared up farms in Indiana, the former one of 160 acres and the latter, who was a blacksmith, one of twenty acres. John, the son, died with his son, William M., in Iowa, a few years after his wife's death in Minnesota. Their children, besides Mrs. Cynthia Ann Davis, were: Margaret; Mary Isabel; Ralston M.; William M. and John M. John Kellum was an honest, upright farmer, and a Democrat in politics. His wife was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

After marriage, Mr. Davis and his wife moved to Hancock county, Ind., arriving there Sept. 16, 1858. His father had given him 106 acres there, entered in 1837 under Van Buren, and the son added forty acres more by purchase. On the latter part there was a clearing and a hewed log house, 18 x 22 feet, with a brick chimney and plank floor, which had been built the preceding spring. Mr. Davis later bought forty acres, partly cleared, from Harrison C. Davis, and also eighty acres in Madison county, so that he owned altogether 265 acres. By his thrift and industry he has accumulated a fortune. He still retains 146 acres in his homestead, on which, in 1870, he built a good brick house, but he has given the rest of his land to his children. In politics he is a Republican, and has voted for every Republican candidate from Fremont to the present, except on the first candidacy of William J. Bryan.

Mr. Davis has been married twice. His first wife died at the homestead, Feb. 23, 1897. He married (second) Miss Mary Isabel Burns, Feb. 11, 1898, but she lived only three months after their marriage. The four children born to Addison C. and Cynthia Ann Davis were: America, born Aug. 6, 1857, who married Jesse Gwynn, and died leaving one child; Lincoln, born May 14, 1861, a resident of Fortville, who married Miss Ettie Luts, and has three children; Charles F., born Oct. 17, 1862, living on a farm in Green township, Madison county, married to Miss Lottie Smith, by whom he has two children, Ethel and Fred F.; and Harrison C., born Sept. 26, 1866, a farmer in Vernon township, Hancock county, who married Miss Demia Apple, and has one daughter.

Paul Davis, the sixth son and namesake of the founder of the family in Indiana, also settled in Indiana and reared a family there. He was born in South Carolina in 1806, and was eight years old when the family moved to Indiana. Although he was in school but three months of his life, he studied by himself and succeeded in getting a good business education. Farming was the chief industry in Indiana then, and he adopted it as his occupation. He bought 160 acres in Rush county, partly cleared, but after three years returned to Connersville, whence in 1837 he moved to Madison county and settled on 200 acres of wooded land three miles west of the court house, occupying a log cabin built by the settlers a year before for a school house. This place Mr. Davis developed into a good farm, and in 1848 built a two-story frame house, which is still standing, but is now used as a barn. As his resources increased he bought new land in Cass and Rush counties, and became a large landowner and prosperous farmer. In politics he was a Whig, and later a Republican. Paul Davis died Sept. 25, 1865, at the age of fifty-nine years.

In 1826, in Connersville, Mr. Davis married Jane, daughter of Philip and Margaret Gordon, of Scotch-Irish descent. She was born in Hamilton, Ohio, where it is believed her father married. Philip Gordon came from Pennsylvania, and from Ohio moved on to Indiana, where he lived many years in Connersville. He died in Anderson, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Morris, at the age of ninety, while his wife also passed away there at the age of eighty. They were Scotch Presbyterians, and were the parents of eight children: John, Robert, Isaac, Alexander, Ross, Margaret, Jane and Elizabeth. The children born to Paul and Jane Davis were: John, who died at the age of seventeen; Nancy A., born in 1832, who married Philip E. Kemp; Isaac; Oliver C., who during his three years' service in the 19th and 16th Ind. V. I., was in a number of battles in the Civil war, and became second lieutenant (he died in 1880, leaving a widow and two children); and Albert C.

ALBERT C. DAVIS was born Dec. 19, 1843, on the farm near Anderson. He began school at the age of five in the first school house in his district, a typical pioneer structure, just built. The teacher chosen for the new school was Birket Eods, who lived two miles away in Anderson, and who walked in the first day bringing a large bunch of switches gathered on the way. He kept a constant supply lying ready on a shelf. Albert Davis went to school winters until he was about seventeen years old, working on the farm the rest of the time. In May, 1862, he enlisted in Anderson in Company K, 16th Ind. V. I., under Capt. C. T. Doty, and was at once named duty sergeant. He had signed for three years, but was honorably discharged in November, 1862, on account of a broken arm, which resulted in a disabled condition. He was in the battle of Richmond, Ky., and was one of the few who escaped capture. Returning to Anderson he learned the drug business, and was engaged in that line in Kingston, Mo., in 1866-67, but came back to Anderson and established himself there in a drug store which he continued until he was elected recorder in 1878. Since that time Mr. Davis has been occupied in looking after his farm interests, as he owns considerable farm property. He has always been active in politics, and in 1871 was elected city clerk on the Democratic ticket, serving two years, while from 1878 to 1882, he was recorder of Madison county.

Mr. Davis has been married three times. In 1865, he married in Anderson, Ind., Miss Sarah Catherine DeMotte, who was born in Preble county, Ohio, daughter of Jacob DeMotte. Mr. DeMotte is of French Huguenot stock. He came from Ohio where he lived on a farm in Preble county, to Madison county, about 1860, and settled in Fall Creek township. He died on his farm there at the age of sixty. His children were: Frank, Mary, Sarah, James, and one who died young. To this first union of Mr. Davis were born two children, who both died young, and in 1873 the mother, too, passed away, when only twenty-eight years old. The third wife was Miss Jeanette Ethell, who was born in Muncie, Ind., and was a daughter of William G. and Elizabeth (Williams) Ethell. Mr. Ethell came from Virginia to Muncie in the early days. He died in Anderson at the age of seventy-five. Mrs. Davis had one daughter, who lived to grow up, Lilian E., now the wife of Winfield A. Denny, principal of the Anderson high school. Mrs. Davis died Nov. 2, 1885. In religious faith Mr. Davis is a Presbyterian. One of the keen interests of his life is his lodge work, and he was early an Odd Fellow, joining the Anderson Lodge in 1865. He has passed all the chairs, including that of Noble Grand, and has often been a representative at the State Lodge.

Thomas Jefferson Davis, son of the pioneer Paul, also has a numerous progeny residing in Indiana. He was born Sept. 20, 18—, in South Carolina, but passed practically all his childhood in Fayette county. Reared to farming he was engaged in that pursuit much of his life, but also worked in the packing house in Connersville. He was very strong, and very skilful at almost any kind of labor, and had a great reputation as a worker. He first located west of Connersville, about seven miles from the Rush county line, but in 1854, after about three years there, he moved to a half section which he had bought in 1840, where Dr. B. Davis now lives. This was heavily timbered, and he had to cut out trees to make space for his little cabin of hewed logs. It was a very comfortable dwelling, with the spaces between the logs daubed and pointed and covered with oak shakes. It was thirty-seven feet long, was divided into two rooms and had a brick chimney and big fireplace at each end. Mr. Davis died in 1856, from improper treatment for malaria, given by an ignorant physician. Hardworking and industrious, he left to his children his half section of land, but there were also debts of some $600, and to settle these the timber had to be sold from eighty acres of this property.

Thomas J. Davis married in Fayette county, Miss Maria Ball, who was born in 1811, daughter of Dr. B. and Rachel (Dennman) Ball. The children born to them were: William; Jasper N.; Eliza Ann, Mrs. Montezuma Moss; James H.; Dr. B.; Sarah Jane, who married Guthrie Morris, a farmer near Remington; Elizabeth; Rachel Ann, Mrs. John Whittinger, of Anderson; and John E., a grocer and coal dealer at 15th street and Madison avenue, Anderson. Mrs. Moss is the only one of these children who is deceased. After her marriage she lived for a time in Anderson, and then moved to Nebraska, where she died Nov. 5, 1904. After the death of Mr. Davis, his wife remained on the farm and aided by her children brought it to a good state of cultivation. Her own portion was eighty acres, but she managed the entire tract until she moved to Anderson to live. Her daughter, Elizabeth Margaret, had bought her present home on 10th street, and Mrs. Davis lived with her until she died at the advanced age of eighty-three. She was a woman of most unusual resolution and force of character, and carried on her husband's undertakings with rare ability.

JAMES HARRISON DAVIS was the mainstay of his widowed mother in her heavy responsibility. Born Sept. 20, 1840, he was about sixteen years old at the time his father died. From that time on, as his older brothers were married, he was in a way the head of the family and worked hard on the farm, but he managed to attend school in the winter time, for a couple of months each year until he was about twenty-one. His early school days were passed in Stony Creek township, Madison county, where the primitive school-house was a mile and a half from his home. Later he went to school in Fayette county, but still with the same rough pioneer surroundings. Nevertheless he gained a good solid education, and has always been a reader of good books, besides patronizing several good agricultural papers.

Until he was twenty-seven Mr. Davis remained at home assisting his mother. Even before his father's death he was known as a good worker, and as a boy was so expert in dropping corn by hand that no one could tell which way it was dropped, and the straight furrows could be plowed each way. The farmers were always willing to pay him an extra ten cents a day. After his father's death, their own farm demanded all his time. When he married, and started for himself, he located on eighty acres of the home farm, which he bought, and improved it with a good frame house and barn. He had a fine farm there, but about 1870 he removed to his father-in-law's place, as the old people, Mr. and Mrs. Epperly, needed care. There he has remained many years, and besides operating the farm, he bought a saw mill and ran it for a long time, turning out many millions of feet of lumber, mainly of fine black walnut. Mr. Davis is a man who has made his influence felt in the community and is universally respected. In time of sickness or trouble he is frequently called upon, and is always ready to help. In his views he is decided and outspoken, and is a strong Republican, having voted first for Lincoln. Every Presidential candidate of that party since has received his support, except in the campaign when he voted for Peter Cooper. Mr. Davis was a member of the old "Grange," and also for five years was a regular lecturer in Centerville and Jackson township.

On March 16, 1864, Mr. Davis was married by Elder Barnes, of the M. E. Church of Centerville, to Miss Jemima Epperly, of Jackson township, who was born in Centerville, May 5, 1841, daughter of Joel and Lydia (Dicks) Epperly. To this union children were born as follows: Thomas J., June 14, 1866; Jesse Emery, Dec. 3, 1867, who died Feb. 4, 1900; and George, Sept. 17, 1871, who died Nov. 4, 1872. The surviving son, Thomas J., has received a good education in the public schools, and is now a practical business man of unimpeachable integrity, who enjoys the confidence of the community. He is president of the gas company, and often acts as administrator of estates or as guardian for minors. His mother, Mrs. Jemima Davis, died Feb. 17, 1900. She came of Quaker stock on one side, and was of that faith herself. In character she very strongly resembled her mother, Mrs. Epperly.

Joel Epperly, the father of Mrs. Davis, was of German descent, and it is believed that he was born in North Carolina. He was a pioneer settler of Wayne county, Ind., near Richmond. Later he located at Centerville, where he owned two farms nearby, and opened one of the first packing houses in that section. He hauled his products by team in big wagons to Cincinnati for a long time in the early days. His business ability was great, but he met various heavy losses in later life. At one time the owner of nearly 700 acres, he still held, at the time of his death, 250 acres, and owned the farm where Mr. Davis now lives. Mr. Epperly died there when about ninety-one years of age. His children were: Peter, deceased; Jemima, Mrs. Davis; and Jane, who married Prof. Harrison H. Bannefield, now principal of an Indian school in Arizona. The mother of these children died on the farm when about eighty years old, leaving a record of a beautiful life, full of patience and gentleness, and yet of great depth of character. She was a Quaker.

CARL H. TOMLINSON, M. D., a successful physician located at Cicero, Hamilton county, Ind., and one of the town's leading and representative citizens, was born in Hamilton county, near Westfield, June 12, 1869, son of Levi B. and Eliza (Hoag) Tomlinson.

The Tomlinsons are of Scotch-Irish de-scant, and were Colonial settlers near Guilford, N. C. They were Friends or Quakers, and a family of successful agriculturalists. Descendants of this family have in later years been graduates of Guilford College. Robert Tomlinson, grandfather of Dr. Carl H., came as a pioneer to Indiana, and settled near Plainfield and Fairfield, some time between 1830 and 1840. He moved to Hamilton county between 1840 and 1845, and there bought 200 acres of land in the timber. On his arrival not one acre of this land was cleared, but Mr. Tomlinson, assisted by his sons, cleared this land and made a fine farm, making it his home until his death when he was aged eighty years. All his life he had been a member of the Quaker Church. His children were Milton, Noah, Allen, Levi, Jane, Aseneth and Esther.

Levi Tomlinson was born in Hendricks county, Ind., in 1842, and was still a small boy when the family moved to Hamilton county. He grew up among the pioneers, receiving a common school education, and became a farmer and stock raiser. He was united in marriage with Eliza Hoag, who was born in Vermont of New England stock, of Scotch descent, daughter of Thomas Hoag, the latter of whom was born in New England and moved to Indiana at an early day. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Tomlinson settled on the homestead farm, where they passed the remainder of their days. He was a prosperous and substantial farmer, and was one of the organizers of the Hamilton County Agricultural Society, of which he was president for ten years. He was a practical business man, and a good farmer, and was one of the first to raise Short Horn cattle in Indiana. His death occurred in his fortieth year from the effects of being gored by a Short Horn bull. The two children born to Levi and Eliza Tomlinson were: Dr. Carl H. and Alice.

Dr. Carl H. Tomlinson was born on the old homestead, and his early education was secured in the schools in the locality of his father's farm, and he later attended the Union Academy, one of the first institutions of its kind in this part of the State. Always standing high in his class, he was graduated with honors, and then attended Earlham College, at Richmond. After leaving this school he attended the medical college at Indianapolis, Ind., from which he was graduated in 1895. In the following May he began the practice of medicine in Cicero, Ind., where he has since continued. He is a general practitioner, and in his treatment of many complicated cases has been very successful. Giving every case his careful attention, and sparing himself in no way when life or health are in the balance, Dr. Tomlinson has won the confidence and affection of the people of Cicero, and he enjoys as much practice as he is able to handle. He is a close student and has an excellent library of medical and scientific works, also being a patron of the leading medical periodicals, and keeping himself well abreast of the times. He takes advantage of every chance to learn new methods to conquer and control disease, and has associated himself with various medical organizations of the county and State, among which may be mentioned the Indiana Medical Association and the Hamilton County Medical Association. Fraternally the Doctor is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and has held the office of chancellor and commander in the Uniform Rank. He is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and is examining physician of the lodge in Cicero. In politics he is a stanch Republican. Mrs. Tomlinson is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Tomlinson was married June 30, 1896, in Westfield, to Luella Hadley, born in Hendricks county, daughter of Benjamin and Emily (Brown) Hadley, and to this union one child was born, Russell C., Dec. 15, 1898.

ADAM FORNEY, a prominent farmer and representative citizen of Madison county, who is residing on his farm in Adams township, was born in Lebanon county, Pa., Nov. 13, 1842, son of Jacob and Margaret (Shafer) Forney.

Jacob Forney, father of Adam, was born in Pennsylvania, son of Aaron Forney, who, it is believed, came from Germany. Jacob Forney's birth occurred in Hummelstown, Pennsylvania, in 1809 or 1810, and he married Margaret Shafer, born in Schaeffers-town, Lebanon county, Pa., daughter of Joseph Shafer. Schaefferstown was settled at an early date by the Shafers and received its name from the family. Jacob Forney settled there and was a farmer, owning eighty acres, forty of which were inherited from his father. He erected good buildings and became very prosperous, and in 1859 removed with his family to Madison county, Ind., settling in Adams township. He is still living at the age of over ninety-five years, and makes his home in New Columbus with his son, Jonathan J. Jacob Forney and his family were members of the Lutheran Church. In politics he is a Republican. His children were: Jonathan J., Adam, Harriet, Rosanna and Jacob (who died in Pennsylvania at the age of four years). Of this family two sons served in the Civil war, Adam and Jonathan J., who was in a Pennsylvania battery, and served three years, being stationed around Baltimore and Washington City.

Adam Forney was reared in Lebanon county, Pa., where he received a common school education. He worked on his father's farm when young, and came to Indiana in the spring of 1861, enlisting in Anderson, on June 10th of that year, and was assigned as a private of Company A, — Regt., Capt Cyrus J. Dobbs, for three years, or during the war. He received his honorable discharge at Washington, D. C., June 12, 1864, his services having taken him through Virginia, Kentucky and North Carolina, with the Army of the Potomac. He participated in the battles of Rich Mountain, Va., July 11, 1861; Harrisburg, Va., and many skirmishes on the B. & O. R. R., which his regiment guarded, beginning with Cumberland, Md., on to Harper's Ferry. He then served under Gen. George B. McClellan, in the seven days fight in front of Richmond, and was in the battles of Gettysburg and Fredericksburg, and through the battles of the Wilderness under Grant. He was taken prisoner at Fredericksburg, and was in prison ten days, eight of which were spent at Belle Isle, he being sent, after exchange, to Fortress Monroe and Washington City. He was in the hospital for a gunshot wound in the left hand, received during the seven days' fight in front of Richmond, July 3, 1862, and was in Douglass hospital, Washington City, for nine weeks. Mr. Forney was an able and efficient soldier, taking part in all the battles and engagements of any kind in which his regiment participated, and he bears a war record of which any man might feel proud. After the war Mr. Forney returned to Madison county, Ind., and engaged in shoemaking, in Anderson and Bloomington, Ind., a trade he had learned in Pennsylvania, prior to coming to Indiana.

On April 1, 1869, Mr. Forney was united in marriage with Catherine Stohler, in Anderson, Ind. Mrs. Forney was born in Lebanon county, Pa., June 5, 1849, daughter of Michael and Mary (Swanzer) Stohler, the former of whom, a well-to-do farmer, was a native of Lebanon county, who removed to Madison county, Ind., about 1840, settling in Adams township, and there purchasing 140 acres of land, half of which was cleared. He completed the clearing, and added to his farm from time to time, at the time of his death being the possessor of 320 acres of land. His children were: John, George, Mary, Michael, Catherine, Sophia, Henry, Elizabeth, Annie, Samuel, and Abraham. Michael Stohler died at the age of sixty-nine years. In his religious belief he was a Lutheran, and was one of the leading men of his church, which he helped to build and support. In political sentiment he was a Democrat. He was a hardworking, industrious and honored citizen.

After his marriage Adam Forney and his wife settled in Columbus, Ind., on a farm, which he rented for nine years. He then purchased fifty-six acres of his present farm, which with twenty-four acres Mrs. Forney inherited from her father's estate, makes the present farm of eighty acres. Here he has remained ever since, and has been very successful in his farming operations. Mrs. Forney is a member of the Christian Church. In fraternal circles Mr. Forney is a Mason, belonging to Ovid Lodge, No. 164, and has held the office of worshipful master. He is a Democrat and was assessor of his township for three years and trustee for seven years. No children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Forney, but they have reared Harry Blucher from the time he was six years old, giving him a good education, and the love and care of a mother and father. Mr. and Mrs. Forney are well known in Adams township, where they are very highly esteemed.

WILLIAM ELMER HENRY, former State librarian of Indiana, was born in the village of Waterloo, Fayette county, this State, son of John and Elizabeth (Chapman) Henry, natives of Pennsylvania, and the parents of four sons and five daughters, William Elmer being the seventh child. The father came with his parents to Indiana in 1820, the family locating in Fayette county, five miles northeast of Connersville. There he grew to manhood, and learned shoemaking, which he followed most of his life. The mother came to Indiana with her parents in 1825, and here grew to womanhood. They were married May 6, 1841, in Fayette county, and in 1873 moved to Howard county, where John Henry engaged in farming. He died there in 1885, aged sixty-eight years. His wife died Aug. 14, 1903, aged eighty-one years.

Henry Henry, the paternal grandfather of William Elmer Henry, was Scotch-Irish and a native of Londonderry, Ireland, born Feb. 12, 1777. He came to America about 1795, first locating in Philadelphia, later in Donegal township, Washington Co., Pa., where he bought a hundred acres of land. In 1820 he moved to Fayette county, Ind., where he bought a large tract of land and carried on farming the rest of his life. Agriculture was always his vocation, and his special delight was in good horses. He married Margaret Little, daughter of James and Katherine Little, natives of Scotland, who settled in Washington county, Pa., about 1776. Henry and Margaret (Little) Henry became the parents of eleven children, who were partly reared in Washington county, Pa., and partly in Fayette county, Ind. Mr. Henry's death, which occurred Dec. 31, 1859, when he was in his eighty-third year, was caused by falling on the ice.

Dr. Amos Chapman, the maternal grandfather of William Elmer Henry, was the first born child of Abraham and Elizabeth (Cox) Chapman, of Cox's Ferry, Va. (now W. Va.), where Miss Cox's father was the owner of a large estate and many slaves. Amos Chapman was a physician. He came to Indiana from Pittsburg, Pa., in 1825, first locating at Liberty, in Union county, and afterward moving to Fayette county, where he spent the remainder of his life in the practice of medicine, dying when about seventy-seven years old. He was married four times, and had six children by his first wife, Susanna (Garner) Chapman, and eight by his second. The mother of Mr. Henry was the eldest child of the first marriage.

William Elmer Henry lived on the farm, in Lafayette and Howard counties, Ind., until twenty-one years of age, when he began teaching school. He continued as teacher and student in all grades of school work from a country school to a College Professorship until 1897, in which year he was appointed State librarian by the State board of education, being continued in that position for ten years by successive re-appointments, in 1899, 1901, 1903 and 1905. On Sept. 1, 1907, seven months before the end of his fifth term, he resigned to accept the Head Librarianship of the State University of Washington, at Seattle, which position he now holds. Mr. Henry is a graduate of the State Normal School of Indiana, at Terre Haute; of the State University, at Bloomington; and did two years of post-graduate work as a fellow in English, at the Chicago University. While engaged in teaching he had various experiences and responsibilities, rising from the position of country school teacher to a professorship in the State University of Indiana at Bloomington, where he taught from 1891 to 1894. For five years he was principal of the high school at Peru.

On July 31, 1895, Mr. Henry married Miss Margaret Roberts, daughter of Junius B. Roberts, who has been professor in the high school in Indianapolis for thirty years. Her mother was Nancy (Gillette) Roberts. One child was born of this union, a daughter, Elizabeth Gillette Henry. The mother died Aug. 20, 1900, as a result of a railroad wreck which occurred on the Vandalia road in 1895. She was a graduate of the Indianapolis high school, and of the State University, and a member of Plymouth Congregational Church. On March 26, 1903, Mr. Henry was married to Miss Sylvia Allen, of Webster Groves, Missouri.

ALLEN QUINCY MAKEPEACE. The Makepeace family, of which Allen Quincy Makepeace, of Chesterfield, Ind., is a member, is of English Puritan stock, the American founder of this branch of the family, Thomas Makepeace, coming from England and settling in Boston. The family has since that time had representatives in that city, and among those who belong to this branch may be mentioned: William Makepeace, who lived to be over eighty years of age; and David, who attained the remarkable age of 105 years, voted first for Washington and cast his last vote for Grant. William Makepeace was a sea captain and merchant, but becoming wealthy retired and so lived until his death. He wrote a genealogy of the family which is believed to be in the New England Historical and Genealogical Society.

Amasa Makepeace, the grandfather of Allen Quincy, was born in Massachusetts, and in that State married Elizabeth Babbitt. After marriage they removed, in 1820, to Ohio, making the journey by wagon, and settling in Warren county. Their children were: Elizabeth, born in 1800, married (first) Thomas Fosnot, and (second) a Mr. Pursell, and they settled in Chesterfield; Allen, born in 1802;

Alfred, born in 1804; Ransome; Haydon; George; Lura, married Simon Landry and settled in Chesterfield; Bradley; Amasa, Jr.; and Julia, died in infancy.

Amasa Makepeace lived but two years in Ohio, coming in 1822 to Madison county, Ind., and settling where Chesterfield now stands, just east of the present town. Here he bought 137 acres of land, which had had some clearing done on it, and erected a flouring mill. Later he furnished his farm with good, substantial buildings, which are still standing in a good state of preservation, being occupied. He was one of the early justices of the peace, and was a constable, being also a juror in the famous case in which the murderers of the Indians were found guilty and executed. Mr. Makepeace was liberal in his religious views, and was an honest and upright man, and in his death the city lost one of its ablest citizens. He was postmaster of Chesterfield for many years.

Alfred and Allen Makepeace, his sons, came to Chesterfield before their father, coming directly from Massachusetts in 1820 without stopping in Ohio. They engaged in trading with the Indians, and made frequent trips to Cincinnati to dispose of their furs and other forest products, and to buy goods, trading on the way with the Indians. They afterward opened a trading store at Chesterfield and sold goods to the Indians and early settlers, and were very successful in this business, having the finest stock of goods in Chesterfield, and becoming well and favorably known throughout the country. Alfred Makepeace was born in 1804 in Massachusetts, and was married near Anderson, Ind., to Hannah Irish, born in 1810, in New York State, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Dibble) Irish, the former of French stock. He settled in Madison county about 1824-25, and bought 160 acres of land, being one of the early county surveyors. The children of James and Elizabeth (Dibble) Irish were: Samuel D., Oliver, William, James D., Hannah, Eliza, Clarissa, Mariah and Elvira. James Irish finally bought land in Texas, and there he was living at the time of his death. Alfred Makepeace after marriage opened a mercantile establishment in Anderson, being one of the first merchants there, and he did a successful business for years. He also owned a good deal of land, and was one of the early treasurers of Madison county. He was liberal in religion, while his wife was a Baptist. In politics he was an old-line Whig and a Republican. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Makepeace were: Allen, Alonzo, Horace B., Lura M., Ardelia A., Letitia, Samuel, Esta, Charles M. and Carey D. Alfred Makepeace was seventy years of age when he died at Anderson, March 5, 1874. He had four sons in the Civil war, namely: Capt. Alonzo D., Horace B., Samuel and Esta A.

Horace B. Makepeace was born in Pendleton, Ind., Aug. 13, 1834, and received a good common school education under Prof. Isaac N. Terwilliger in the old Anderson high school in 1855, receiving a certificate from him to teach school. He taught the winter of 1854-55 in Richland township and in Anderson township in 1855-56, and then engaged in the mercantile business on the Square, Anderson. He enlisted Sept. 24, 1861, having assisted in organizing a band for the 34th Indiana Infantry, and served until the regimental bands were mustered out under general orders. He then enlisted at Pendleton, Ind., July 5, 1863, in the 110th Ind. V. I., being mustered in as second lieutenant of Company G, serving until his regiment was mustered out in 1863. He was struck by a piece of shell at the battle of New Madrid, Miss., and while recovering from this wound was the only time when he was away from his regiment. He was ever a faithful and cheerful soldier, and was very popular with his comrades.

After the war Mr. Makepeace became a commercial traveler for some years, and lived in Indianapolis, being also in business in Anderson, Ind. In 1894 he was elected township trustee and overseer of the poor in Marion county, having charge of the schools. He served five years and three months, and performed all of his duties satisfactorily, being presented with an elegant gold watch by the teachers of the city and township of Indianapolis as a testimonial of their appreciation of his services. Since that time Mr. Makepeace has lived retired from active life. In political matters he is a Republican, and is connected with the George H. Chipman Post, G. A. R., of which he was commander, and was commander of the Indiana Department for one year. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F., Philoxenian Lodge, Indianapolis, has held the position of noble grand and represented the Lodge at the Grand Lodge of the State. He is also a member of Olive Branch, No. 2, K. P., Indianapolis; National Union; and the P.

O. S. of A. In 1858 Mr. Makepeace married Louisa Gregory, and to them were born two daughters: Cora I. and Anna B.

Allen Makepeace, father of Allen Q., was born in Massachusetts, Sept. 28, 1802, and received a good education. He was but eighteen years of age when he and his brother Alfred came to Indiana, and afterward became engaged with his brother in trading with the Indians. He traded a shawl for the property now occupied by lots Nos. 1 and 2, and built the finest house in Chesterfield, now occupied by his son, Allen Q. He was married to Nancy Shimer, born May 10, 1807, in Jamestown, Ohio, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Thompson) Shimer, who came to Indiana about the same time as Mr. Makepeace. Mr. Makepeace engaged in the mercantile business in Chesterfield, buying out his brother's interest, and continued in this business for nearly a quarter of a century, dying July 10, 1871. He was a natural trader and an excellent business man, and invested in lands in Madison, Blackford, Delaware and Jay counties, owning $60,000 worth of stock in the Big Four railroad, of which he was a director. He became the wealthiest man in Madison county. Mr. Makepeace was a spiritualist in his religious belief, and was a strong believer in that faith until his death. In politics he was an old-line Whig, and later became a Republican.

Mr. Makepeace and his wife were the parents of: Alvira J., born May 8, 1848, in the old homestead in Chesterfield, who married John E. Corwin, of Middletown, N. Y., and has four children, Allen W., Gussie, Pearl B., and Louisa; and Allen Quincy.

Allen Quincy Makepeace was educated in the district schools of Chesterfield, and when a young man became a clerk in his father's store, continuing with him until his death. He then engaged in the saw and grist mill business, as well as in mercantile pursuits, and also engaged in the horse business, handling some of the finest horses in the State, which have taken many prizes. He was married (first) in 1873 to Lucy Royall, and to this union were born: Edna and Alvira. He was married (second), Sept. 26, 1890, to Mary McDonald, born May 9, 1864, in Daleville, Ind., daughter of James and Mary (Stewart) McDonald, of Scotch-Irish stock. Mrs. Makepeace was educated in the high school at Anderson. She and her husband have three children: Ruth Agnes, born Sept. 20, 1891;

Nellie Nancy, born Oct. 27, 1893; and Mary Ellen, born Feb. 21, 1896. Mrs. Makepeace is a Catholic in religious belief, while Mr. Makepeace is a spiritualist. He is a Republican in his political views. He owns a good residence property, the old Makepeace homestead in Chesterfield, and one hundred and twenty-three acres of land in Delaware county.

DAVID BRANDT BABB. Among the highly esteemed and public-spirited citizens of Eaton, Delaware county, Ind., may be mentioned David Brandt Babb, who was born Nov. 11, 1836, in Clinton county, Ohio, son of John B. and Eve (Brandt) Babb, of German and Welsh stock.

David Babb, who was probably born in Virginia of an old Colonial family, was a farmer for some years in that State, where he married Mary Ann Hamilton, of Scotch-Irish stock. He moved in early days as a pioneer to Clinton county, Ohio, and settled on new land, which he cultivated until coming to Delaware county, Ind., about 1839. He settled on forty acres bought from his son, John B., in the woods, which was but partly cleared, and here he continued to live until his death at the age of seventy-two years, Feb. 17, 1851. His wife died in January, 1863, at the home of her son John B. They were members of the Christian Church, and had these children: John B., David, George, Mary, Barbara, Eliza and one who died young in Ohio.

John B. Babb was born Nov. 30, 1807, near Fredericksburg, Va., and received a common school education, removing with his father to Clinton county, Ohio, where he married Eve Brandt, born in 1804, in Susquehanna county, Pa., daughter of David and Ruth Brandt. David Brandt later removed to Fairfield county, Ohio, where he had a farm, and then to Auburn county, Ind., where some of his children had settled. He was a saddler by trade, but most of his time was given to agricultural pursuits. He died aged seventy-two years. Among his children were: Adam, Martin, David, John, Isaac, George, Eve and one daughter whose name is not remembered. Mr. Brandt was a German Baptist by religion, and a man of true worth.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Babb settled on forty acres in the woods, which he bought, cleared and cultivated until 1839, at which time he removed to Delaware county, and on Oct. 13, of that year, settled in Union township. He made the journey with teams, his five children, Martha, Mary Ann, Matilda, David B. and Louisa M., making the journey with him. Those born in Indiana were: Maria, John and Isaac. Mr. Babb bought 160 acres of land, a small part of which was cleared and a cabin erected. This land he cleared and improved, and later purchased 120 acres more, and owned a fine farm. He built a one and one-half story house of hewed logs, and this was his home the remainder of his life. Mr. Babb weather-boarded this house, and made it very comfortable, and it still stands on the farm now occupied by his son, David B. John B. Babb was a hard-working, industrious pioneer, and at the time of his death was in very comfortable circumstances. He and his wife were members of the Disciples Church, meetings of members of which were first held in the homes of the settlers, later in a frame church at Eaton, which is still standing and used as a dwelling, and finally in a brick church on Harris street. Mr. Babb was one of the organizers of this church and was ever liberal in its support. In politics he was a Democrat, and served as commissioner two terms. He died Aug. 30, 1866. Two of his sons served in the Civil war; David B.; and Isaac, in Company B, 84th Ind. V. I., three years' service, participating in many battles, was shot through the wrist and on the retreat for sixty miles in hot weather gangrene set in, entered his body and caused his death in the hospital at Stevenson, Alabama.

David Brandt Babb was about three years old when he was brought to Delaware county, Ind., by his parents, and he attended school for about two months in the winter seasons. Being the eldest son, he had to remain home much of the time and assist in the work on the farm. The first school he attended was a log house, with puncheon floor and greased paper window, one end of the cabin being filled with a big fire-place and mud chimney. The seats were split out of puncheons and supported by pins, as was the writing desk. Mr. Babb's first teacher was Susan Wilson. He continued to go to school until nineteen years of age, working on the farm in the summer months. When twenty-five years of age Mr. Babb enlisted Aug. 28, 1861, at Eaton, Ind., and was mustered in at Indianapolis as a private of Company A, 8th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, and served until honorably discharged at St. Louis, in January, 1863. His services were in Missouri and Arkansas, and he was in a march through Missouri, Arkansas and Kansas, it being on this march that General Fremont, then commander of the Western Division, was superseded. He was also in a march of 125 miles from Springfield, Mo., to Otterville, Mo., and sleeping on wet ground and marching through wet, marshy land kept the soldiers wet through all of the time and caused them to suffer greatly from rheumatism, from which Mr. Babb has never entirely recovered. After the war he returned to Indiana.

Mr. Babb was married Sept. 28, 1865, five miles east of Eaton, in Niles township, to Elizabeth Youngs, born in that township, Jan. 31, 1845, daughter of Enoch and Catherine (Ray) Youngs, the former born in Cincinnati. Mr. and Mrs. Youngs were married in Fayette county, Ind., whence he had come with his father and where he cleared a good farm from the woods. After marriage they settled in Niles township, Delaware county, and here he cleared eighty acres, which he sold to remove to Jay county, Ind., but in later life he was disabled by paralysis, and he died at the home of one of his children in Eaton, aged seventy years. His wife passed away on the farm in her forty-fourth year. Their children were: Mary Jane, who married and died aged sixty years; Lewis R.; Benjamin Franklin, Margaret Ann, Sarah Matilda, Elizabeth, Zachariah, Mary Jane, Amanda and Catherine. Mr. and Mrs. Youngs were members of the Christian Church. In politics he was a Democrat, and for a number of years was a trustee of Niles township, Delaware county.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Babb settled one and one-half miles west of the present home, and then moved to eighty acres of the old farm inherited by his mother, where he lived five years. His next location was his uncle Brandt's place, where he continued to reside for some years, in the meantime buying forty acres in the woods, two miles west of Union cemetery, where he built a log house of two stories, cleared the farm, and finally sold it and removed to Wells county. He purchased 120 acres of improved land and there resided five years, or until 1893, when he located on the present homestead, which is a part of his father's old homestead. The property, which consists of twenty acres of fertile soil, is in the best of condition and yields large crops. The present home was erected by Mr. Babb.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Babb were as follows: Orville L., who works in a grist mill and resides at Eaton, married Minnie King; Cora Viola, who died at the age of four years; Carlton Goldsberry, of Eaton, who married Mabel Ryan and has two children, Corinne and Lowell; John Alfred; Dora Mary; Bertie E. and Myrtie E., twins, the latter of whom married J. W. Taylor, a restaurant keeper of Upland, and had three children, Orville E., Vernie G. and Freedom A.; and William Asa, who graduated from the high school at Eaton, and the Muncie Business College.

David B. Babb is a member of the Disciples Church, which his wife and family also attend, and which they support liberally. In his political beliefs Mr. Babb is a Democrat, but he has never taken an active interest in public matters, although interested in anything that promises to be of benefit to the community in which he has made his home. He was a member of the G. A. R. post at Eaton, which, however, has since been disbanded. He is one of the good citizens of Eaton, and is highly esteemed by his fellow townsmen, who can recognize and appreciate his many sterling qualities of character.

MILAN MADISON TEETERS, who during his lifetime had always commanded the respect of the community not alone by his straightforward, honorable life, but by his patriotic record of service to his country in its great time of need, came of an early settled family, and his widow, Mrs. Eliza A. Teeters, who survives, is a native of Indiana, but of New England stock.

The Teeters family came to Indiana from Virginia, and trace their lineage back through the Colonial period to an English ancestor. William Teeters, father of Milan Madison, was born in Virginia, Aug. 11, 1815. On March 21, 1841, he married Miss Nancy Adeline Savage, born June 1, 1826, and very soon after he and his wife moved to Pendleton, Ind., where the remainder of their married life was spent. William Teeters was a teacher by profession. In religious belief he and his wife were members of the Methodist Church. Their children, all of them probably born in Pendleton, were as follows: Elzina R., born Feb. 16, 1843; Thomas M., Nov. 26, 1845;

Milan M., June 19, 1848; Eliza A., Dec. 27, 1850; Albina R., April 23, 1853; Emma F., Aug. 27, 1855; and Martha A., May 16, 1858. William Teeters died July 31, 1859, shortly before his forty-fourth birthday, and his widow later married David A. Ireland. There were no children to this union. Mrs. Ireland lived to be about seventy-three years old.

Milan M. Teeters received a good average education in the Pendleton public schools, but left school when only fifteen to enlist for the Civil war. He was enrolled, Dec. 12, 1863, in Company L, 39th Ind. V. I., which was also known as the 8th Ind. Cav. When he enlisted Mr. Teeters looked the boy he was, having a fair complexion, hazel eyes and light hair, and being only five feet four inches in height, but the hardships of military life matured him early, while this effect was heightened by the fact that his hair soon turned to dark brown. He was honorably discharged May 11, 1865, and in that year and a half saw much service. Besides participating in the terrible Atlanta campaign, and in Sherman's March to the Sea, he was in the battles of Pulaski, Fayetteville (N. C.), Savannah, Lovejoy Station and Macon (Ga.), and in the engagement at Franklin, Tenn. At Pulaski he had a narrow escape, as his horse was shot from under him and his own leg grazed by the bullet. He was captured at Fayetteville, March 11, 1865, and taken to Libby prison, but after only a month in that fearful place he was paroled.

Mr. Teeters remained in Pendleton till 1871, removing in that year to Green township, Madison county. The present homestead, however, was not purchased till 1882. It originally consisted of forty acres, partly improved but with no house upon it, and Mr. Teeters put up good substantial buildings and added to the place till he owned 100 acres of fine farming land, all well-improved. He worked hard, displayed sound judgment in all his undertakings and became one of the influential men of the locality. Politically strong as a Republican, he was active locally and was township supervisor for some years. His useful career, so well worthy of emulation, was brought to a close June 30, 1904. He was a devout member of the German Baptist Church, and a worker in its ranks. The subject of temperance was always one of great moment to him, and during his last years he left the Republican party in order to support his temperance views at the polls. In all that he did he was sincere and practical, and everyone respected him highly.

When eighteen years old Milan M. Teeters was married (first) to Miss Adeline Armstrong, of Pendleton. Their only child, Charles Elmer, was born June 4, 1867, and he died March 26, 1900, leaving a widow, Mrs. Mamie (Caton) Teeters, and a daughter Myrtle. Mrs. Milan M. Teeters died after a few years of marriage, and July 22, 1876, Mr. Teeters was united to Miss Eliza A. Warren. To this union was born a large family, as follows: Rosa Adelaide, born July 11, 1878, who married April 9, 1899, Frank Boone, a barber in Hazelwood, and a descendant of Daniel Boone; Emma L., born Aug. 8, 1880, who married June 24, 1896, Frank Haskell, formerly of Madison county, but now a farmer in Kansas; Myrtle M., born Dec. 14, 1882, who graduated from the Anderson high school in 1901, received a first-grade teacher's certificate, and has taught one year each in her home district, Madison county, in district No. 5, and in district No. 1; Edna C., born Dec. 16, 1884; Lucinda, twin to Edna C., who died Aug. 13, 1890; William, born Dec. 18, 1886; Nora M., born Nov. 15, 1888, who has been studying the past two years in the Fortville high school; Warren C., born March 7, 1891, who died June 18, 1892; Durward M., born Dec. 18, 1892; and Eugene F., born Aug. 1, 1895, whose twin sister died two weeks later.

Mrs. Teeters, who was born Feb. 14, 1854, was a daughter of Druary and Lucy (Brown) Warren. Her mother, who was the daughter of Noah Brown, was born Feb. 13, 1818, and died March 24, 1880, aged sixty-two years and twenty-two days. She married first Job Haskell, and they had children as follows: Ulysses H., born May 26, 1838 (a soldier in the Civil war); Amelia, Jan. 20, 1840; Harriet L., Dec. 7, 1841; Jesse T., Oct. 7, 1843; Harvey P., Jan. 7, 1846; Arselline A., Dec. 26, 1847; John H., March 14, 1850; and George F., twin brother of John. Job Haskell died March 3, 1850, aged thirty-four years and ten days, and in 1853 his widow became Mrs. Druary Warren. The only children of this union were Eliza A., and James A., the latter dying in infancy. The Warren family is of English descent, through New England stock. Mrs. Warren owned a farm in Madison county, but in 1858 she sold it and took up her residence near McCordsville, Hancock county. In her old age she lived with her children and was making her home with Mrs. Teeters at the time of her death.

JOHN W. LEWARK, a substantial business man of Pendleton, Ind., is the proprietor of a large livery stable. He was born April 20, 1842, in Anderson, Ind., son of Andrew and Margaret (Marshall) Lewark.

John Lewark, grandfather of John W., was a pioneer of Rush county, Ind. He was from Virginia, and it was believed that he was of Welsh stock, of Tennessee. His father, also named John, was a sailor of Wales, who went to sea and never returned. The name is spelled in America, by some branches of the family, Luark.

Andrew Lewark, father of John W., was born in Virginia, and was a shoemaker and merchant. He was one of the pioneer merchants of Anderson, where he conducted a store, and was first married in Rush county to a Miss Dill. There were four children born to this marriage: William, Mary, Hattie A., and Henrietta, of whom William served in the Civil war. Mr. Lewark's first wife died, and he married (second) Margaret Marshall, who was born in Ohio of Irish descent. The children born to this union were: John W. and Robert H., both soldiers in the Civil war, Robert being in an Ohio regiment. Mrs. Lewark died, and Mr. Lewark took for his third wife Eliza Van Dine, by whom he had three sons and one daughter: Andrew, George W., Daniel Webster, and Annie. Mr. Lewark moved from Anderson to Wabash in 1842, and here he engaged in the boot and shoe business until his death in 1860, aged between fifty and sixty years.

John W. Lewark was bound out at the age of seven years, but being badly treated ran away on Christmas night, in 1856, and returned to his father's house in Wabash. In the winter of 1857 he went to Perkinsville, Madison county, and worked at farm work. He attended school that winter and located in Pendleton in 1858. In 1861 he started to learn the carpenter trade, and in the same year enlisted as a private in Company D, 34th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war. He served until his time expired, when he again enlisted, as a veteran in the same organization. His papers shown that he re-enlisted at New Iberia, La., but it was really at Matagorda Bay, Tex. He served faithfully for four years and over four months, and was honorably discharged at Brownsville, Texas, Nov. 6, 1865, the war having closed. Among the battles in which Mr. Lewark participated were: New Madrid, or Island No. 10; Grand Prairie, Ark.; Vicksburg, where he was detailed as a teamster; on the field and under fire at Jackson, Champion Hill, Yazoo Pass, and the last fight of the war at Palmetto Rancho, Texas, his regiment losing the last man killed in the war. This battle was fought May 13, 1865, near the Rio Grande, between a Union force under Colonel Barrett, and a Confederate force under General Slaughter. The war was over, and President Lincoln had been assassinated on April 14th preceding. A detachment of Union troops were out on a foraging expedition, and when attacked, called out the entire Federal forces. Colonel Barrett was forced to retire with considerable loss, but the battle was indecisive. A colored regiment of U. S. Troops fired the last volley in this battle, and therefore the last in the war. Mr. Lewark was always an active soldier. He was never wounded or taken prisoner, and was in all the campaigns and marches except one, and participated in all the battles and skirmishes in which his regiment was engaged. He was promoted to the rank of corporal.

Mr. Lewark returned to Indiana after the war and settled in Pendleton, where he married May 2, 1867, Emma E. Shattuck, born in Philadelphia, Pa., March 23, 1847, daughter of Orville W. and Emma (Herrick) Shattuck. The Shattucks are from New Hampshire, as are the Herricks, and belonged to the old Colonial families. Emma E. Shattuck was educated in Eastern Pennsylvania, where she taught for a time, coming to Indiana as a teacher in the public schools under principal H. P. Hall, her uncle by marriage. Mr. Lewark finished learning the carpenter's trade, at which he worked until 1872, when he bought a livery barn, and has since been engaged in that business, and also in handling and training horses exclusively for the track. He is one of the most skillful and experienced horsemen in this section of the State. In 1903 Mr. Lewark built a fine substantial two-story brick livery barn, which is one of the best in this part of the State, where, besides fine horses, he keeps first-class vehicles of all kinds.

To Mr. and Mrs. Lewark the following children have been born: Anna E., Clara E., Amy E., Mina E., Edith C. and Clarence O. Mr. Lewark is an honored member of the G. A. R., and belongs to Major Henry Post of Pendleton, in which he has held most of the offices, including that of post commander. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, Blue Lodge of Pendleton. In his political opinions he is an unswerving Republican, and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln's second term, and for every Republican Presidential candidate since that time. Mr. Lewark held the office of marshal of Pendleton for several terms, and was constable for many years, proving an honest and highly efficient officer. He is a man of strictly temperate habits, and can boast of what few men of his age can in this day—that he has never used tobacco or liquor in any form in his life.

GEORGE A. CARPENTER, one of the greatly esteemed citizens of Muncie, Ind., residing at No. 709 North Jefferson street, who bore a good soldier's part in the war of the Rebellion, was born July 17, 1845, in Salem, Washington county, Ind., son of Lemuel and Delilah (Griffith) Carpenter, and grandson of Lemuel Carpenter, a local minister of Northern Indiana.

Lemuel Carpenter, father of George A., was a painter by trade. He left his father's home when a young man, and went to Charlestown, Ind., where he was married to Delilah Griffith, born Jan. 29, 1817, daughter of Judge Griffith, of Charlestown, Clark county. Judge Wm. Griffith (born May 14, 1777, died in Charlestown in 1860) was one of the pioneers of Clark county, coming from Maryland, where he had been an owner of slaves, all of whom he had freed prior to coming to Indiana. He was a very large and powerful man, standing six feet, one inch, and weighing 240 pounds. It was the custom in the early days for the pioneers of Southern Indiana to settle their differences on election day by hand to hand encounters, and each district had its champion, but it is related that Judge Griffith was the best man in Clark county, and readily maintained peace by his personal prowess. He was a member of the Mounted Hussars, a military company of the Indiana pioneers. Lemuel Carpenter died in his forty-second year, at New Albany, Ind., and his wife was married (second) to John C. LaDuke, a farmer of near Elizabeth, Harrison county, Ind. She is still living in Harrison county on the farm, and has for over fifty years been a member of the U. B. Church. To her second marriage were born two children: LaFayette and Eldora B. By her marriage with Mr. Carpenter she had these children: William H., Susan, Mary G., George A., Charles and Hattie. Of these, William H. was a steamboat ship carpenter at Pocahontas, Ark.; he had enlisted in the Confederate army, and served four years and was in many battles, and died in the Confederate Soldiers' Home in Missouri.

George A. Carpenter received but little education. His parents had removed to New Albany when he was one year old, and at the age of five years he attended school there. His father died when he was six years old, and after his mother's second marriage he worked on Mr. LaDuke's farm until sixteen years old, attending school several winters. When about fifteen years old, he ran away from home to enlist at New Albany in Company D, 49th Ind. V. I., but his mother followed him and took him from the service. Soon thereafter he enlisted as a teamster in New Albany in Capt. Frank Smith's company of teamsters for three months, and served in Kentucky and Tennessee, and was on the battle field at Shiloh. This service lasted four months, and after his honorable discharge he re-enlisted for three months as a teamster, serving for that time in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama, and being in the forced march from Louisville to Perryville, and thence to Lebanon, Ky., where he was discharged on account of expiration of service in 1863. He had previously enlisted in 1862, in the Mississippi marine brigade (or ram flotilla) for one year or during the war, and was mustered out on account of sickness at Cairo, Ill., in January, 1863. His service was on the Mississippi river, and at the siege of Vicksburg and at the mouth of Duck River at Austin, Miss. He served on the steamer "Diana," and at Austin the brigade was landed with some artillery and a company of cavalry, the force comprising about 900 men altogether, and here, although charged eight times by the Confederates, the Union troops, who were under the command of General Elliott, were finally victorious. It was at this place that Blind Chaplain Milburn of the National Congress received the wound that caused his affliction. The flotilla took part in the engagement, this including the battleships "Autocrat," "Baltic," "B. J. Adams," "John Raine," "E. J. Fairchild," and "Woodford," and the rams "Monarch," "Switzerland" and "Queen of the West." Mr. Carpenter was never wounded nor was he a prisoner, but he served cheerfully and promptly, and was in every engagement until stricken with malaria or swamp fever, from the effects of which he has never fully recovered.

After the war Mr. Carpenter returned to Indiana and went into the rolling mill at New Albany and learned the iron worker's trade and puddling, then worked at the Ohio Falls iron works for fourteen years, and in 1879 went to Greencastle, where he resided for ten years. In 1889 he located in Muncie, and here he has been engaged in work to the present time, being a skillful and industrious workman. He owns some valuable real estate in the city, including three houses and lots, and is highly esteemed by all who know him, for a good, patriotic citizen and kindhearted neighbor. In politics he is a Democrat. He is a member of Williams Post, G. A. R., of which he has served as commander. He and Mrs. Carpenter are members of the Methodist Church.

On Dec. 21, 1869, at New Albany, Ind., Mr. George A. Carpenter was united in marriage with Cynthia Graff, who was born March 22, 1843, in Harrison county, daughter of James H. and Elizabeth Meek, and granddaughter of Sylvester and Rachel Meek. James H. Meek was born in Harrison county, Ind., and he died March 21, 1853, in New Albany, aged fifty-three years; his wife passed away in Greencastle, Ind., Sept. 11, 1884, aged seventy-eight years. They were the parents of these children: Gideon; John; Luther; Frank; Sylvester; Cynthia, who became the wife of Mr. Carpenter; Lucy E.; Ruth A.; Warren, who died in infancy; and Lemuel, whose death occurred at the age of seven years. Two sons of Mr. Meek were soldiers in the Civil war, one in the Confederate and the other in the Union army. Luther was a member of the 87th Ill. V. I., and was wounded at the battle of Peach Tree Creek; and Sylvester was a river man, and when the war broke out was at Arkadelphia, Ark. He was then mate of the "James Backman," a steamboat, and it has been reported that he was forced into the Confederate army. He has never been heard from since.

JOSHUA AUGUSTINE COMPTON, M. D., a physician of national prominence in homeopathic circles, has been located in Indianapolis since 1873. His reputation has been made in general practice, and he has also been active in the various societies—local, State and national—of his school, through whose meetings the most progressive thoughts are disseminated and the most practical results attained. Dr. Compton adopted the medical profession with a purpose, and he has pursued it in the same utilitarian spirit—always keeping before him the object of “the greatest good to the greatest number.”

The Doctor is a credit to a name which has been known and respected in New England from Colonial days, tradition relating that four brothers of the Compton family emigrated from England at an early period. Two of them settled in New York; one in New Jersey (at Liberty Corner, Somerset county) and one in Virginia. From one of these brothers descended Joshua Compton, the Doctor's grandfather, who was born Jan. 15, 1779, at Liberty Corner, Somerset Co., N. J., where he became a farmer. He married Catherine Cazad (originally spelled Casatt or Gazatt), and they had children: Mercy, Lydia, Catharine, Mary, Reuben, Anthony, Joshua and Israel.

Reuben Compton, son of Joshua, was born March 25, 1803, at Liberty Corner, N. J. He became a farmer, and continued to be actively employed as such until twenty-one years of age, when he removed to western New York and engaged in mercantile pursuits. He was a shoe merchant, and also interested in the leather business and tanneries. He married Miss Catharine Rhoades, and they had children as follows: Mary A., Joshua Augustine, Catharine, Reuben, William, Anthony, Sarah, Israel, Lydia and Charles. The father died in Bradford, Steuben Co., N. Y., July 20, 1871, aged sixty-eight years, three months, twenty-five days. His wife survived him until Sept. 4, 1888, reaching the age of seventy-eight years. They were Episcopalians.

Joshua Augustine Compton was born Feb. 26, 1835, in Bradford, N. Y. Excellent opportunities were at that day afforded at the Bradford Academy, and there the boy's earlier studies were pursued, not without difficulty, however, for he had at twelve years of age a severe attack of pneumonia that left him with weak lungs, which the confinement incident to close application greatly aggravated, necessitating the frequent interruption of his studies, for months at a time. He had long before fixed his mind on the law, and in 1862 entered Chancy J. Herring's office, at

Corning, N. Y., but remained only a few months, the confinement being irksome to him. During the fall of that year his father sent him to look after the welfare of his brother William, who had been wounded at the battle of Antietam and sent to hospital in Philadelphia, at Fifth and Buttonwood streets. While there the Doctor had the range of the hospital and availed himself of the opportunities offered for attending most of the clinics. He also had a special invitation from the Faculty of the college at Sixth and Willow streets to attend many of their lectures during the winter of 1862-63, which he embraced. He had early become distrustful of the efficacy of the old physic, and espoused the water cure system. He took a water cure journal, and purchased Dr. Trall's Encyclopedia, which he studied, applying the method in his own case. Not having found the desired relief under that treatment he was induced, in the spring of 1863, to try the homeopathic method, a change which was speedily followed by a permanent cure. He was so elated over the result that he immediately adopted the medical profession as his life work, beginning study about the 1st of May of that year with Dr. G. C. Hibbard, at Springville, Erie Co., N. Y. He attended his first course of regular lectures in 1864-65 at the New York Homeopathic College, occupying the summer months in practice at White's Corners, Erie Co., N. Y., where he followed his profession through a severe epidemic of dysentery without the loss of a single case. He went to Cleveland, Ohio, in the fall and graduated at the Western Homeopathic College with high honors in the spring of 1866, during this period of study acting as Demonstrator of Anatomy for his class. The West then opened an inviting field of labor to young men engaged in either professional or business pursuits, and Dr. Compton decided upon Indiana as his future home. He first opened an office in Muncie, Delaware county, May 1, 1866, and remained at that location until 1873, meantime establishing a reputation for ability and skill which won him both practice and profit, his patients including many of the most wealthy and influential families of the city. Having faith in his own capacity and ambition to fill a larger sphere than was possible within the limits of a country town he sought the metropolis of the State, locating here in May, 1873. Here his professional attainments gave him a leading position, and he soon found himself in command of a lucrative and extensive practice. He has been so successful as seldom to have lost a case when given full control of it, a fact which speaks equally well for his skill and for the confidence which patients have in his judgment and ability. Dr. Compton has proved himself to be a physician of studious and analytical mind, and a man of honorable ambitions, and his erudition and high personal character make him respected and beloved by all who have come in contact with him. Outside of his profession, his hobby is history, to the study of which he is devoted.

Dr. Compton is a member of the Erie County (N. Y.) Medical Society and of the Marion County Homeopathic Association; is a charter member of the Indiana Institute of Homeopathy, which he was instrumental in organizing, and of which he was elected vice-president a number of year and president for 1887; is a member of the American Institute of Homeopathy, of which he has been a senior member since 1892; and of the Hahnemann International Association of Homeopathy. He gives but little time to affairs of a political character, though he is firm in his support of the principles of the Republican party. In fraternal connection he is a Mason, holding membership in Pentalpha Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Keystone Chapter, R. A. M., Raper Commandery, No. 1, K. T., Indiana Consistory, and the Shrine, all of Indianapolis. He was formerly a member of Muncie Commandery, K. T. Dr. Compton was reared in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

On Dec. 14, 1887, Dr. Compton married Mrs. Mary J. Rhodehamel, a daughter of Vinage Russell. Mrs. Compton died Nov. 15, 1900, aged sixty-one years. She was a member of the Methodist Church. The Doctor has his home and office at No. 21 East Ohio street, Indianapolis, having had his office on Ohio street since 1876. In 1901 he sold his property at No. 75 East Ohio street to James Whitcomb Riley, the poet, and has since been located at No. 21 East Ohio street. He owns valuable real estate in Indianapolis, and also some fruit growing lands in Georgia.

SAMUEL HOWARD. For a quarter of a century the United States government had no more faithful and reliable servant than Samuel Howard, who for all that length of time had the responsibility of transferring the mail from the depot to the post-office in Alexandria. Like so many residents of Indiana,

Mr. Howard came there from the South, and belongs to an old North Carolina family.

Cornelius Howard, grandfather of Samuel, was a farmer in Davie county, North Carolina, in the latter half of the eighteenth century and became very prosperous. He was able to give his three sons 600 acres of land each, and to portion his daughter generously, these farms all adjoining. He died on his homestead, leaving four children, Benjamin, Cornelius, William and Catherine.

Benjamin Howard was reared a farmer, settling in Davie county, then a part of Rowan county. He married Miss Sallie Stephens, daughter of William Stephens, an old settler of North Carolina. He had two other children, Polly and Joseph. The children born to Benjamin and Sallie Howard were: Joseph, Samuel, Benjamin, William, Cornelius, Nathan, Nancy, Polly, Betsey, Charity, Susie, Sallie and Jessie. Mrs. Howard was a member of the Methodist Church. In politics Mr. Howard was an old line Whig. His death occurred in 1851, when he was aged sixty-six years.

Samuel Howard was born in Mocksville, Davie county, Sept. 16, 1825, and received the usual education of his time, in a subscription school held in a log school house. He was early accustomed to farm work, and began to plow corn when only eight years old. When he was fifteen he began to learn how to drive, and under the tutelage of the old teamsters, who knew their business thoroughly, became a splendid driver. He could drive a six-horse team, hitched to one of the old canvas-covered wagons, with its body turned up at both ends and could transport immense loads. The driver of such a team rode on the near wheel horse and drove with one line attached to the leader, the horses obeying a word of command. Mr. Howard hauled goods between Fayetteville, Mocksville and Winston, for several years, making two trips weekly. He was soon able to buy his own team and continued to drive until he went to Indiana.

Mr. Howard was married April 14, 1852, by Isham P. Ellis, justice of the peace, to Miss Mary Bailey, who was born on a farm in Davie county in 1834, a member of one of the pioneer families of the State. Her grandfather, Samuel Bailey, was a pioneer settler in that region, and owned a good farm there. By his wife, Polly Bailey, he had five children, Richard, Robert, Samuel, Greenberry and Lucy (who became Mrs. David Woods).

Samuel Bailey's life was spent on his homestead, and he died there at an advanced age. Greenberry Bailey was also a farmer, and cleared up a tract of 500 acres. He became a wealthy man, owned fifteen slaves, ran an extensive distillery, and had several teams on the road. He married Miss Polly Foster, and their children were: Sarah, Betsey, Bridget, Thomas, John, Samuel, Mary and Greenberry. The last named served three years in the Confederate army. The mother died when the youngest son was four years old, and Mr. Bailey also passed away while Mrs. Howard was a small child. She was reared by an old mammy, and married Mr. Howard when only eighteen years old. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Howard were as follows: (1) Leander Monroe, of Alexandria, married Miss Alice Fennimore and has two children, Herbert H. and Hallie. (2) Nancy Elizabeth, married Bradford O'Brien, a stone cutter of Alexandria, and has three children, Hazel, George and Herbert. (3) Mary Indiana is the wife of Montgomery Bratton, a plumber, and has one son, Howard. (4) Addie died at the age of five years and five months. (5) Sallie is Mrs. Edgar Smith, of Alexandria, and the mother of one son, Samuel Thomas. (6) Elsie married (first) Joseph McCowan, of Alexandria, by whom she had three children, Fred, Ruth and Joseph, and (second) Orville Maynard. (7) Cora Catherine married (first) Erastus Deadman, who died leaving three children, Samuel, Clifford and Mary; she married (second) William Baughman, of Alexandria. The three daughters last named were born after the war.

For one year after marriage Mr. Howard rented a farm in Davie county, N. C., and then engaged in teaming and freighting. In 1856 he moved to Indiana, making the journey in twenty-five days with a two-horse wagon. He settled in Alexandria, where he purchased a lease of forest land on which some clearing had been done and a log cabin built. Mr. Howard cleared up ten acres, and with this for a beginning at farming, again engaged in teaming. He hauled goods between Anderson and Alexandria before the railroad reached there, and in the days when the latter place had not more than 600 inhabitants. From April, 1865, to the close of the war, Mr. Howard served in the Union army, while three of his brothers, Joseph, Benjamin and Nathan, were fighting for the Confederate cause. He enlisted in Company I, 13th Ind. V. I., and served nearly a year in North Carolina. He caught a severe cold from sleeping on the ground and this settled in his eyes, making him almost blind. He was in the hospital at Raleigh two weeks, and then sent to New York where he was honorably discharged on account of injuries received in line of duty. His eyes have never entirely recovered, and have greatly troubled him since.

After the war, Mr. Howard devoted his attention to the dray and transfer business in Alexandria and had an extensive patronage. He did all the transfer work for the United States Express Company, and had charge also for twenty-five years of the mail, carrying it from the depot to the postoffice at Alexandria with unvarying reliability, no matter what the conditions. He finally resigned because at his age he feared the constant exposure, and when he left the mail service, the postmaster and employes presented him an elegant gold-headed cane, as a testimonial of their esteem and appreciation of his faithfulness. At that same time the whole post office force presented him with a picture of the postmaster and employes in a group, which same Mr. Howard has hanging on the wall in his parlor, prizing it highly. Accompanying the picture was a beautiful watch. Always industrious and frugal, Mr. Howard has accumulated considerable property, and now owns three residences and a business block in Alexandria. As an old soldier he belongs to Lew Taylor Post, G. A. R. His wife has been for thirty-nine years a member of the Methodist Church, and is a woman of deep religious convictions. Throughout their long married life she has been a devoted wife, and Mr. Howard's success must be partly attributed to her encouragement and help.

BENJAMIN BOOHER, a retired farmer now residing in Lebanon, Boone county, who was for long years owner and manager of one of the most extensive farms in the county, was born in eastern Tennessee, Sullivan county, Sept. 5, 1821, son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Barnett) Booher, natives of Pennsylvania.

The first of the Booher family to leave his native Germany, was John, grandfather of Benjamin, who came to America, and settled first in Pennsylvania, and then joined the pioneers of Tennessee, in which latter State he died. The maternal grandparents were Nicholas and Barbara Barnett, the former a native of Germany, and the first of his name to come to America. He and his wife lived in Pennsylvania for a number of years, and then moved to Virginia near the town of Bristol, among the pioneers on the Virginia-Tennessee line, where they engaged in farming. They were devout Christian people, and though of the most modest means, were always greatly respected. Their children were: George, Catherine, John, Adam, Jacob, Peter, Elizabeth, Mary, Margaret, Sarah and Nicholas. Elizabeth, who married Jacob Booher, was born Feb. 3, 1779.

Benjamin Booher was about thirteen years of age when his parents moved to Indiana. He first attended subscription schools and later was sent to the public schools and given a good education. All of his early years were spent on his father's farm in Montgomery county, and he rendered his father much assistance on the farm. Even after he was married he continued to live on the old place for two years before he started for himself in Boone county. He removed thither in 1845 and bought a farm of ninety acres, which he first improved, and then added to until eventually he became the owner of 1,500 acres. His home farm was in Worth township, and from one elevation on it he could see fully 1,000 acres of his property. He lived there from 1845 until Oct. 28, 1891, but on that date he left the place permanently, and, moving into town, bought the large and handsome brick residence at 304 E. Main street, which has been his home ever since. His extensive farm lands he has divided among his children.

Mr. Booher has been twice married; the wife of his youth, to whom he was united Oct. 20, 1842, was Miss Margaret Beelar, daughter of William and Margaret (Hughes) Beelar. She died June 2, 1888, aged sixty-five years, four months and a few days, a Lutheran in her religious faith. She was the mother of twelve children, born as follows: Martha, born Oct. 6, 1843; Margaret E., Oct. 4, 1845; William J., Aug. 25, 1847; Albert L., April 3, 1849, died four months later; Benjamin C., July 10, 1850, a resident of Zionsville, who married Martha J. White in November, 1870; Sylvester C., Oct. 7, 1852; Vando L., May 12, 1855, who married Elma O. Schooler, Aug. 20, 1879, and who served four years as deputy county treasurer, owns a large farm in Worth township, and is employed in the First National Bank; Adelaide M., Sept. 10, 1857, was married June 17, 1883, to S. N. Cragun, editor of the Lebanon Patriot, and has one child, living, Dwight; Mark A., Dec. 17, 1859, a farmer, married Miss Elma F. Hoggins, March 15, 1885, and has five children—Fary, Mabel, Lillian, Carl and Maurice; Emma R., March 6, 1862; Daniel W. V., June 24, 1864, married Miss Leah E. Barb, Aug. 2, 1885; and Minnie, April 12, 1866, was married March 15, 1885, to Leander W. Tomlinson, and has two children living: Bennie and Lloyd. Benjamin C. Booher lost his first wife, and was married (second) to Miss Clara M. Dooley. Of their three children, all are deceased.

Benjamin Booher, Sr., contracted his second marriage Oct. 21, 1891, and his bride was Miss Mary A. Ross, daughter of Henry and Sarah Ann (Ozias) Ross. Since this marriage he has resided in Lebanon. In politics he is a Democrat, and for some years was a township trustee, serving most efficiently. While the greater part of his time and attention was always devoted to farming, he was also interested for a number of years in a sawmill and veneer works in Indianapolis, and has proved himself an able business man as well as a most practical and successful farmer.

BENJAMIN CYRUS BOOHER, a farmer, stockman, capitalist of Zionsville, Boone county, who has been identified with the county all his life, was born there near Whitestown, July 10, 1850, son of Benjamin and Margaret (Beelar) Booher.

The parents were natives of Tennessee, the father of German lineage, and the mother of Swiss ancestry in her paternal line and of Irish in the maternal. Mrs. Margaret B. Booher was born in eastern Tennessee, Jan. 11, 1823. She attended the same school that her husband did and the beginning of their attachment dates back to that time. Their children were as follows: Martha; Margaret E.; William J.; Albert L., who lived only four months; Benjamin C.; Sylvester C.; Vando L., who married Miss Elma O. Schooler, and resides in Lebanon; Adelaide, wife of S. N. Cragun, of Lebanon; Mark A., who married Miss Elma F. Hoggins, and lives on a farm in Worth township, near the old homestead; Emma R., of Lebanon; Daniel W. V., a resident of Lebanon, Ind., who married Miss Leah Elsie Barb; Minnie, wife of Leander W. Tomlinson, of Lebanon, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Booher were early pioneers in Indiana, and endured all the hardships and privations incident to the life of that day and place. When they began their married life even the necessities of life were of the fewest and rarest. Their household equipment for the kitchen consisted principally of an oven, an iron pot, three knives and forks, two cups and saucers and three pewter plates. Mr. Booher was successful, however, in all that he undertook, and their condition improved steadily as civilization advanced. In 1845 they moved near Whites-town, and there the children grew up. For the past ten or twelve years Mr. Booher has lived in Lebanon, where he owns a handsome brick residence, and is a man of prominence among the citizens.

Benjamin C. Booher grew up on his father's farm near Whitestown, attended the district schools and assisted his father until he was twenty-one years of age. He then went to live with an uncle, William Marsh, where he remained twenty-two years. He has always been engaged principally in farming, and at the present time is the owner of valuable real estate in Boone and Hamilton counties, near the town of Zionsville. Besides his farming operations Mr. Booher is extensively interested in business in Lebanon. He is a stockholder and director in the Farmers' State Bank there, and in the Citizens' Telephone Company of Zionsville. For the past thirteen years he has resided in Zionsville, and owns his home there, a beautiful modern house, heated by the hot water system and with all other late improvements.

Mr. Booher was married before he was of age, in November, 1870, to Martha J. White. This estimable lady passed away March 31, 1884, and on Nov. 21, 1886, Mr. Booher married his present wife, whose maiden name was Clara M. Dooley. Three children have come to them, all of whom are now deceased: Benjamin B., who died early in 1904, in his seventeenth year; Myrtle; and one that died in infancy. The brother and sister both united at an early age with the Methodist Church.

The family into which Mr. Booher married were Kentuckians and on the father's side, at least, came in earlier generations from Virginia. The father, Thomas W. Dooley, came to Indiana in childhood with his parents, Robert and Julia (Shelburn) Dooley, who settled in Boone county and lived there till he died at an advanced age. She died in middle life. They were the parents of a large family of children. Thomas Dooley was a lifelong farmer in Boone county. He married Miss Frances Dulin, and became the father of six children, namely: Alice, wife of Millard Carr, of Indianapolis; Clara M.; Emma, deceased at the age of thirty-two; John Elmer, a farmer near Elizaville; Reiter Matilda, wife of Albert Saunders of Carmel, Ind.; Adelaide, unmarried, who lives with her father on a farm near Elizaville. Mr. and Mrs. Dooley were Missionary Baptists. In 1873 he lost his wife, who was only forty-two years of age, and he was afterward united to Sarah Ransdall. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Booher, John Dulin, Sr., was born in Virginia, Jan. 10, 1806, son of Edward and Mary Dulin, who were born in 1774 and 1772, respectively. John Dulin married Angeline Allen, Oct. 29, 1828, in Kentucky, and was left a widower Nov. 23, 1834. Their children were: James E., who died in Minnesota; Thomas W., who lives in Frankfort; and Nancy F., who died and was buried in Mount Run cemetery. For his second wife Mr. Dulin married Miss Priscilla Baswell, and had children as follows: George B., who married Miss Elizabeth Wysong; Mary A., wife of L. P. Shoemaker; Matilda J., wife of T. S. Dooley; John A., who married Miss Mary A. Carr; Sallie E., wife of Isaac Isenhour; Clarinda E., wife of E. Marsh; Thaddeus V., who died Aug. 31, 1849; Elizabeth M., wife of Willis West; and Cassius O., who married Miss Mary A. Baber.

Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Benjamin C. Booher are identified with any religious denomination. They both are members of the Eastern Star, and Mrs. Booher is a past matron of the order. Mr. Booher is a 32d degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of Zion Lodge, No. 247, F. & A. M.; of Murat Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and is a charter member of the Zionsville Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He has always belonged to the Democratic party, and in 1884 was elected a member of the board of commissioners of Boone county, an office he filled three years. He is a practical farmer, a splendid business man, and a shrewd financier and his opinion carries much weight with his fellow citizens.

WILLIAM RUFUS TEAGUE, who for three years has lived a retired life in Pendleton, Ind., where for a long period he was engaged in a mercantile business, was born in June, 1842, in Pendleton, son of Joshua and Martha (Malogue) Teague.

Joshua Teague was born in Guilford, N. C., and there married Martha Malogue. Their children were: Martin A.; Augustus H.;

Mary, who died young; Martha and William Rufus. Joshua Teague was engaged in farming his property in his native county, but on coming to Madison county, Ind., in 1839, he engaged in selling fanning mills. He was injured by a runaway team, and died from the effects thereof in 1842.

William Rufus Teague was reared in Pendleton and received a limited common school education in a little brick school-house. When about nineteen years of age he enlisted in Pendleton, Ind., as a private of Company D, 34th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, at the end of which period he veteranized on the peninsula or gulf coast in Texas, in the same organization. He was honorably discharged at Brownsville, Texas, in November, 1865, the war having closed. He took part in the battles of New Madrid, Island No. 10, Memphis, Helena, Ark., White River, Clarendon, Duvall's Bluff, Helena (second skirmish), Fort Gibson, Champion Hills, siege and campaign of Vicksburg, and many skirmishes and the capture of Jackson, Miss. Mr. Teague was never wounded, but was sick at Brownsville, Texas, where he was confined to the hospital for a short time. He was captured with others of his regiment at that place, and held for some time, for though the war had closed they had not yet heard of it. He was ever a faithful, active soldier, and earned the respect of his superior officers and of his comrades.

After the war Mr. Teague returned to Pendleton, and was with his brother, M. A. Teague, in the tailor business, but soon thereafter engaged in farming. He was married Jan. 7, 1868, in Pendleton, to Mary E. Seyvert, born in Madison county, Ind., daughter of Harvey and Martha (Davis) Seyvert, of Virginia, the former born in Virginia in 1825, and the latter in North Carolina, in January, 1825. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Teague lived for a short time on the Seyvert farm, and then settled in Pendleton where he was engaged for a time in teaming and farming, and later in the mercantile business. For the past three years he has lived retired. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Council. He is a political leader in the ranks of the Republican party, being a member of the town council and president of the school board, taking a great interest in educational matters.

Mr. and Mrs. Teague have these children:

(1) Effie Malogue, born in Pendleton, Oct. 29, 1868, married June 16, 1890, John H. Town. (2) Ernie Addison, born June 30, 1870, in Pendleton, is a train dispatcher for the Big Four railroad. He married in Bellefontaine, Ohio, Effie Tamblin, born in October, 1878, daughter of William Tamblin. (3) Harvey Wilber, born April 30, 1876, married Oct. 4, 1899, Della Sparks, born in Hancock county, Ind., daughter of Marion and Margaret (Collins) Sparks. They have two children: Zelma Ruby, born May 31, 1902, and Ernie Everett, May 29, 1907. (4) Mattie Pearl, born Oct. 31, 1878, died Dec. 16, 1885.

GEORGE HICKOK, ex-deputy sheriff of Delaware county, Ind., and a survivor of the great war of the Rebellion, was born March 16, 1847, in Harpersfield, Ashtabula county, Ohio, son of Hiram and Lydia (Edmonds) Hickok, and grandson of Heman and Lucinda Hickok.

Heman Hickok was a pioneer farmer of Schoharie county, N. Y., where he owned and operated a gristmill for many years. To him and his wife Lucinda were born children as follows: Heman, Ambrose, Benjamin, Hiram, Horace, Abigail, and Caroline and Catherine, twins. Mr. Hickok moved to Ashtabula county, Ohio, where he cleared up a farm of 160 acres from the wild woods.

Hiram Hickok, father of George, was born in Schoharie county, N. Y., near Harpersfield. He married Lydia Edmonds, born in Ohio, daughter of Robert and Lucy (Messenger) Edmonds. Her father was a native of New York, and an early settler at Harpersfield, where he cleared up a farm of eighty acres, upon which he resided until his death. Mr. Edmonds' children were: Augustus, James, Alvina, Lydia and Charlotte. After his marriage Hiram Hickok settled on a farm of 160 acres in Harpersfield township, which he cleared and improved, building here a good frame two-story and one-half house and a barn, which at that time was the best in the township. His children were: Orin, Lewis, Robert, Heman, George, Franklin, Hiram, Mary, Lucinda, Arthur, and one who died in infancy. In politics he was an old-line Whig, and later became a Republican. He was a noted horseman, and kept a number of fine horses, and two of his sons were also prominent in that locality as breeders of fine stock, one of these, Orin, later becoming the owner of the noted trotting mare, "Lucy," as well as "St. Julian," and many others.

Hiram Hickok was a strong Union man, and saw five of his sons enter the service during the Civil war, Lewis, Robert, Heman, George and Frank. Lewis was a member of Battery B, 1st Ohio; Robert, of the Independent Battery, 14th Ohio; Heman, of the 3rd Ohio Cav., and all three of these veteranized. Frank enlisted when but fourteen years of age, in 1864, in the 60th O. V. I. Hiram Hickok died in Harpersfield township, aged seventy-two years. He was a charter member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge of Geneva, Ohio. Both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Church.

George Hickok was reared on his father's farm and attended the local schools until he enlisted for service in the Civil war, when but sixteen years of age. In 1862 he first attempted to enter the army, desiring to become a member of the 2nd Ohio Heavy Artillery, but he was not enrolled, and on account of the influence his father exerted, he returned after a service of several months, to his home, during which time he drove a mule team in the Transportation department through Kentucky and Tennessee. In December, 1863, he enlisted at Cleveland, Ohio, as a private in Company C, 1st Ohio Light Artillery, Capt. M. B. Gary, to serve three years or during the war. This contract he fulfilled and he was honorably discharged in June, 1865, his service having been in Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia. Mr. Hickok participated in all the battles of the Atlanta campaign, the Union troops being under fire for nearly four months. His regiment was attached to the 20th Corps, in the center, and was under the command of Gen. Joseph Hooker. This position was one of more danger than almost any other and was under constant fire almost day and night. The 20th Corps had the honor to be the first corps to enter Atlanta after its fall, and Mr. Hickok took part in the closing scenes of the great siege. After a few weeks in Atlanta, the 20th corps started out with only eight days' rations, orders being to live off the country, and Mr. Hickok was in many foraging expeditions. Before his battery marched through Goldsboro, N. C., and later to the capital of that State, they had few engagements, but on March 16, 1865, were in the battle of Averysboro, and they took part in the hard fight at Bentonville March 19th. The regiment proceeded to Richmond, thence to Washington, and took part in the Grand Review, a pageant which has become a matter of history. During the whole term of his service Mr. Hickok was a good soldier, and participated in all the battles in which his company was concerned, including: Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Cassville, Marietta, Rocky Face Ridge, and Peach Tree Creek. Being born and reared a horseman, his skill caused him to be given the lead horse on the gun-carriage, and this position of danger, as well as honor, he held throughout the whole term of his service. At the battle of Peach Tree Creek his horse was shot under him, and the same thing happened at Savannah, but he was not injured.

After the war Mr. Hickok returned to Ash-tabula county, and resumed work on his father's farm, attending school during two subsequent winters. He then engaged in a lightning-rod business for four years and in settling accounts, but after marriage lived near Jefferson, Ohio, where he engaged in farming and also kept a hotel for two years. He then became traveling salesman for the L. M. Crosbie Company, manufacturers of fanning mills, and traveled in this line over Ohio and through several States in the South. He continued in this business for six years, and then resumed hotel-keeping at Springboro, Pa., where he remained two years, coming to Muncie in 1893. Here he first engaged in a livery business, but later became interested in the monument business. In 1901 he was appointed deputy sheriff under W. N. Swain, and served until the expiration of his term, Jan. 1, 1906.

Mr. Hickok was married at Jefferson, Ohio, April 19, 1873, to Mary Cornelia Gilbert, born at Conneaut, Ohio, Oct. 16, 1854, daughter of Daniel W. and Cornelia (Krick) Gilbert. They have had two children: (1) Mary A., born in Ashtabula, Jan. 6, 1874, died at Muncie, Ind., April 1, 1897. (2) Ray Gilbert, born Aug. 6, 1875, at Jefferson, Ohio, was educated in the Ashtabula high school, and a business college at Erie, Pa., served as bookkeeper for the Muncie Transfer Company for several years, later was a clerk in a shoe store, and in 1902 was elected to his present position of city clerk; he married Rena Cope, of Muncie.

Mrs. Hickok comes from old and distinguished ancestry. On the maternal side she belongs to the Kricks, who were prominent early German settlers of Philadelphia. Peter Krick, her grandfather, came from Germany and engaged in a hardware business in Philadelphia, later carrying on a similar business at Conneaut, Ohio, where he subsequently died. He was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church. His children were: George, who served in the Civil war; Cornelia; Caroline; Amanda, and Henry. On the paternal side Mrs. Hickok's great-great-grandfather was Rev. J. Gilbert, a Baptist minister and native of Connecticut, where he died. His son, John, the great-grandfather, married Rachel Bishop, at Butternuts, N. J., and in 1811 he settled in Ohio among the early pioneers. His land was on Lake Erie, on the one side, and the river Conneaut was on the west line. Here he entered 300 acres of land in the woods, and his log house was erected on the highest point on the Lake Erie shore. Three years later, in 1814, he built a large two-story frame house which was destroyed by fire only a few years since. It was a substantial building, with a big brick chimney, and remained the home of the Gilberts for generations. One of the sons of John, Clement, was one of the party that went to the assistance of Sweetland, a pioneer who was driven off the shores of Lake Erie by a heavy wind on Long Point to the Canadian shore, the rescue being accompanied by great danger. The children of John and Rachel Gilbert were: Clement, Jonathan, Daniel, John B. and Electa.

John Bishop Gilbert, the grandfather of Mrs. Hickok, was born in 1798, in New York, and was thirteen years old when his parents removed to Ohio. He followed agricultural pursuits and kept up the old Gilbert homestead. In early manhood he married Aris Smith, of Springfield, Erie county, Pa., born at that place Jan. 22, 1808, daughter of a pioneer of that place who settled there in Indian times. The grandmother of Mrs. Hickok could remember hearing the reverberations of the cannons fired over Perry's victory on Lake Erie. John B. Gilbert died in 1862, aged sixty-five years. His children were: Giles B., Daniel W., Emily and Mary.

Daniel W. Gilbert, father of Mrs. Hickok, was born Aug. 11, 1831, in the old family homestead on Lake Erie, and was afforded excellent educational opportunities, becoming an excellent penman, having been under the instruction of Prof. Spencer, a native of Ashtabula county, and the father of the great Spencerian system of penmanship. After his marriage Mr. Gilbert engaged in a shipping business, became owner of several boats, and commanded one of these himself. He continued on the water until his death at Conneaut in 1871, at the age of about forty years. In politics he was a Republican. In religion he was liberal-minded. Fraternally he was a Mason. His wife, Cornelia (Krick), died April 20, 1856, at Conneaut, at the age of twenty years. Their one daughter, Mary, is the wife of George Hickok.

On the maternal side Mr. Hickok is also connected with the old Vermont family of Edmonds. Augustus Edmonds, his uncle, was a partner of the famous Prof. Spencer mentioned above, and a fine penman himself; he assisted in establishing the Spencerian system and for a number of years taught penmanship, his writing looking like copper plate.

In politics Mr. Hickok has always been a strong Republican. Formerly he was a member of Giddings Post, No. 9, G. A. R., at Jefferson, Ohio, but transferred his membership to Post No. 78, at Muncie. He is an unaffiliated member of the I. O. O. F., at Ashtabula.

ROBERT EDGAR POINDEXTER, who is now living retired at his residence in Indianapolis, has passed the greater part of his life in Indiana, but was born in Mason county, W. Va., near Charleston, April 18, 1825, son of Josephus and Sidney (Conner) Poindexter.

The name of Poindexter has been associated with the history of this country from early territorial days in Virginia. The first Poindexter to land on these shores bought land there, and meeting with success in his farming and tobacco raising sent for his fiancée, who had remained behind in England. She made the voyage in the same vessel with Captain Smith, whose life was saved by Pocahontas. Tradition says that this first settler was George Poindexter, who went to England from France with his father, and fell in love with a girl of lower rank. To separate them the father supplied him with sufficient money and sent him to America, which was, in fact, the wish of the son, who settled in what is now Hanover county. On page 37, Vol. III, Historical Magazine of Virginia, we read "George Poindexter, in 1667, bought a large piece of land from Edward Wyat known as the 'Middle Plantation.'" In Old Churches, Ministers and Families of Virginia, p. 42, Vol. II, we read, "Amongst the papers found (later than 1742) in the English Church Vestry was the Oath of Allegiance in the time of King George II, and of the twelve prominent men of Virginia who signed the oath was John Poindexter, son of George Poindexter, of 'Middle Plantation.'" In Henning's Statutes at Large, pp. 1600 to 1800, Vol. V, Chap. XXIX, mention is made of a piece of land owned originally by the Poindexter family in Hanover county, and known as Poindexter's Neck, which was sold by William Merriweather to other parties. In William and Mary Quarterly, p. 206, Vol. II, is found mention of 'George Poindexter, born 1739 in Louisa county, grandson of George Poindexter of the "Middle Plantation."

George Poindexter (born in Virginia in 1779, died in 1853), son of George, of Louisa county, governor of Mississippi from 1819 to 1821, was a cousin of Josephus Poindexter, father of our subject, and he and the Governor were well acquainted. They always called each other "cousin." Governor Poindexter came near having a duel with General Jackson, when they were in Congress, but they afterward became the greatest of friends. Governor Poindexter subsequently fought a duel with Abijah Hunt, who was killed. In Johnston's Memoirs of Virginia Clerks mention is made of James Poindexter, also son of George Poindexter of Louisa county, who was clerk of Powhatan from 1802 to 1816. He was known as the brother of Frank Poindexter, the old clerk of Chesterfield county, "beau ideal of an old Virginia gentleman in character, bearing and personal appearance."

Josephus Poindexter, father of Robert Edgar, was a son of James, and settled near Charleston, in Mason county.

Robert E. Poindexter was a boy of twelve when in the fall of 1837 he came with his parents to Indiana, the family settling in Madison county. He attended the common schools of that county for six months, but he commenced work early, and the best part of his education has been acquired by his own efforts, or rather in the pursuit of his natural inclinations. He is a born student, and has never ceased to keep up with the times by reading and study. It is peculiar that the two vocations which he followed in his early years were only stepping-stones to the real work of his life. He learned the carpenter's trade, and followed it for ten years, after which he engaged in farming for a time. But he was obliged to give up that calling on account of his health, selling out. From that time on he gave his attention principally to his inventions, which have for the most part been the result of observation and study in his work as carpenter and farmer. He is the holder of patents to the unusual number of sixty-seven. Among the most important, and one which has all along brought Mr. Poindexter substantial returns, may be mentioned the Dexter Cross Cut Saw. He has also invented various other labor-saving tools, and his latest success is the now famous corn splitter, a machine which splits corn for the feeding of cattle. Mr. Poindexter still retains his interest in agriculture as the owner of a first-class stock farm in Marion county, and he also has property in Indianapolis, owning the fine home in which he lives, situated at the southwest corner of Bellefontaine and Twentieth streets. The location is beautiful, and the home is worthy of its surroundings. Though Mr. Poindexter is now living retired, he continues to take a deep interest in what one may call his life work, and he keeps abreast of progress along the mechanical lines in which he is interested.

Mr. Poindexter first married Miss America Jane McAllister, daughter of Garrett and Elizabeth (McGrady) McAllister, of West Virginia, and subsequently Mrs. Nancy Stinson Sebrell, a daughter of John Stinson. His present wife, to whom he was married March 22, 1892, was Mrs. Lydia Craft. Mr. Poindexter has one daughter, Emmazetta Hicks (born of the first marriage), who is now the widow of Jeremiah Hicks, who died in the early seventies, and as she has grandchildren, Mr. Poindexter is a great-grandfather. Mrs. Hicks has two sons, Dr. J. R., of Covington, Ind.; and Edgar J., of the Atkins Saw Works, Indianapolis, an inventor like his father. Both are married, the latter having four children. Though Mr. Poindexter is the father of but one child, he has reared eight children, the youngest of whom was but five days old when he assumed the parental responsibility, and is now forty years of age. No better evidence of Mr. Poindexter's real character could be given than is afforded by the simple statement of the fact that his home has so often been opened to admit strangers to his hearthside.

JOHN V. PRESTON, a lieutenant in the Union army in the Civil war, and now a prominent citizen of Madison county, belongs to a family which came to Indiana from Virginia, and was descended from English ancestors of the early Colonial period.

The first of the name to settle in Indiana was Zenith Preston, whose early life was passed in Campbell county, Va. He was a farmer and stone mason, and built the arches for many of the stone bridges on the Lynchburg and Winchester Pike, in Virginia. In 1824 he moved to the West and at first located at Liberty, Union county, Ind., but afterward bought 320 acres of forest land eight miles south of Laporte, which he improved, becoming one of the substantial pioneers and the owner of two farms. He was a Quaker in religious faith and he helped to found the first church of that sect in Laporte. Of strong physique, Zenith Preston lived to be eighty-nine years old. He married Miss Elizabeth W. Stanton, of Virginia, and their children were: Elam, Irving, Albert G., Elizabeth, Vickers, Calitha and Enoch.

Dr. Albert Gallatin Preston, father of John V., was born in Campbell county, Va., April 17, 1815. He died in Greencastle, Ind., in 1892, aged seventy-seven years, and the following extract from his obituary indicates the main events in his career and his valuable services to his fellowmen:

"Dr. Albert Gallatin Preston died yesterday at Greencastle, where he had lived and practiced his profession for forty-six years. A man of marked ability, extensive and accurate acquirements and of striking individuality of character, his death calls for more than mere passing comment. * * *

"Dr. Preston commenced the study of medicine at Liberty, Union county, in the office of Dr. Hardy, when only seventeen years old. In 1833, at the age of twenty years, he located at Middletown, Henry county, Ind., and at once entered into an active practice. One year later he married in Middletown Miss Jeanette Balingall. In 1843 Dr. Preston removed to Greencastle, and there resided until his death. In 1844 he married Miss Margaret Fisher, who survives him.

"Dr. Preston achieved a leading position in his profession at a very early age, and when the war broke out in 1861, he was regarded as one of the foremost physicians and surgeons in the State. His services during the war were conspicuous. He was surgeon of the 55th Indiana Regiment at the disastrous battle of Richmond, Ky., and was captured in the discharge of his duties. By the Confederates he was placed in charge of wounded soldiers who, like himself, were captured, and in this way it fell to his lot to be of immense service to his fellow captives. After being exchanged he was appointed a surgeon by the Sanitary Commission and was assigned to the greatest and most important military movements and engagements in the southeast, where Indiana troops were present. He was on duty at Donelson, Shiloh, Vicksburg, Murfreesboro, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and other great historic battles of the war in the Valley of the Mississippi. He came back from the front in impaired health from constant exposure and overexertion. During the last year of the war he was surgeon to the Bureau of Enrollment for the 7th Congressional District with headquarters in Terre Haute.

"It can be truthfully said that in every sphere of action throughout his long life Dr. Preston always displayed conspicuous ability, courage and fidelity to his trusts. He was an honored member of the medical associations of his State and county, and also of the American Association of Physicians and Surgeons. Thirty, thirty-five and forty years ago the medical fraternity was composed in the main of the Talbots, the Cowgills, and Dr. Preston and is now very strong. They are all gone now. Dr. Preston was the last of the very able class of those with whom he worked, and to whom he belonged. His life was full of strong, earnest and, at times, aggressive convictions, while his purposes were always upright, bold and manly. He talked of death, and met it with absolute composure and serenity, sustained, as he said, by the consciousness that he had always aimed to be just with his fellowmen, and faithful to duty. Thus sustained and soothed he approached the grave 'like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams.'"

As stated above Dr. Preston was twice married, first to Jeannette, daughter of Dr. George and Elizabeth Balingall. Mrs. Preston died in 1840 leaving three children, Zenith George, John V. and Sanford. Four years later Dr. Preston married Miss Margaret Fisher, and became the father of ten children, seven of whom survived him, namely: Jeannette B.; Dr. Samuel C., a prominent physician in Terre Haute, who died when about forty years old; Joseph L.; Kate, a graduate from De Pauw University, who died aged eighteen; Mary, who married C. W. Smith, a leading lawyer in Indianapolis; Abraham; and Maggie.

On the maternal side the grandparents of John V. Preston were of Scotch lineage. Dr. George Balingall was born in Cooperfife City, Fifeshire, and was married in his native land. In 1818 he and his wife came to America, locating first in Virginia, and from there going to Indiana, where they settled in Henry county. Dr. Balingall was finely educated, had studied medicine in Scotland, and for many years practiced in Indiana. A man of great ability and strong character, he became prominent in the growing State, was a member of the provisional legislature and was one of the promoters of the free school system of Indiana. Always fond of science, Dr. Balingall was specially versed in astronomy, and made the first telescope in the State, if not in the whole northwest. He ground the lenses himself, being offered $600 for one of them many years later. The Doctor lived to be ninety years old, and at his death was the oldest member of the Masonic fraternity in America, having joined the order in Scotland. His three children were Sanford, John and Jeannette, and they were the heirs of a considerable estate which their father had accumulated.

John V. Preston was born in Middletown, Henry county, Ind., June 24, 1834, and was ten years old when his father moved to Greencastle. He received a good common school education, and also attended for one year the preparatory department of the old Asbury University. In 1850 he went to Boone county, Iowa, and though only sixteen years of age, opened up a 160-acre farm there, from a large tract which his father owned. He also did much hunting and trapping. Returning home he worked under Mr. Staggs and became a very thorough workman in stone masonry. In 1860 Mr. Preston married and then settled down in Middletown to work at his trade, but in 1862 he answered a call for volunteers and went to the war. He enlisted Aug. 10th, in Company H, 69th Ind. V. I., was discharged at Mobile, Ala., May 20, 1865, because of promotion, and was made 2d lieutenant of Company E, 156th Ind. V. I., his commission bearing date April 12, 1865. He served until the close of the war, and was honorably discharged at Stevenson Station, Shenandoah Valley, Va., Aug. 4, 1865. Lieut. Preston saw much active service, was in the battles of Richmond, Ky., Chickasaw Bluffs, Fort De Russie, Richmond, Va., Smith's Plantation, James Plantation, Grand Gulf, Port Gibson, San Antonio, was at the Siege of Vicksburg, in the Red River Expedition under Banks, and in many minor engagements. He was never wounded, but was in the New Orleans Marine Hospital for a time with spinal fever, and also suffered from ague during the Vicksburg campaign. After his promotion he was in command of his company much of the time, as the captain and 1st lieutenant were frequently away on duty. At Richmond, Ky., the regiment was captured, and Lieut. Preston was ordered to assist his father, who was taken in the same battle, in the care of the wounded Union men. On Sept. 15, 1862, he was paroled, but stayed with his father two days longer. He has preserved his parole, as a family relic from the war, and a copy is given herewith:

"Headquarters Army Kentucky,

"Richmond, Sept. 15, 1862.

"I, John V. Preston, Private Co. H, 69 Reg. Indiana Volunteers, a prisoner of war, captured by Confederate troops under Gen. Kirby Smith and this day paroled, do solemnly swear that I will not take arms against the Confederate States, that I will neither give aid nor comfort to the wrongs thereof, nor communicate any military information to them until duly discharged, according to the usages of war.

"The violation of this parole to be punishable with death.

"(Signed) JOHN V. PRESTON."

After the war Mr. Preston returned to Middletown, but soon removed to Anderson, where he has since resided engaged as a stone mason. He was an expert in building chimneys and fireplaces, and did a large amount of work in that vicinity, but about 1890 he was obliged to retire from business, as his health was much broken down. He is a well-known citizen of Anderson, where he is highly respected.

Mr. Preston's wife was Miss Deborah Fattic, to whom he was united Jan. 3, 1860. She was born in Middletown May 6, 1840, daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth (Bowers) Fattic. One child, Cora Alice, was born to this union, in Middletown, Nov. 14, 1860. This daughter lived to be only fourteen years old, and her death was a blow which permanently darkened her parents' lives. Both Mr. and Mrs. Preston are members of the Methodist Church. In politics Mr. Preston is a good Republican. His first ballot was cast for John C. Fremont, and he has voted for every Republican Presidential candidate since. He is a member of Major May Post, G. A. R. of Anderson, and was at one time sergeant major.

Mrs. Preston's family is of German ancestry. The earliest record in their possession is a certificate of birth and death, probably of Mrs. Preston's great-grandfather. It is written in the German language, gives the date of birth as June, 1781, and of death in 1832. The document was given by Jacob Fattic to his son Andrew, and by the latter to his daughter, Mrs. Preston. The family settled in Rockingham county, Va., in the early days and there Jacob Fattic was born and married. His wife was a Miss Fannie Thurma and their children were named Jacob, Andrew, John, Nicholas, Peter, Henry, Elizabeth, Fannie, Catherine, Barbara, Sallie, and Nancy, who died in infancy. Jacob Fattic moved to Middletown, Ind., in pioneer times, cleared up a good farm one mile from the settlement and there lived to old age. He was a Lutheran in religious belief.

Andrew Fattic was born in Virginia, Feb. 29, 1816, and was a young man when his father moved to Indiana. On Nov. 3, 1837, in Middletown, he married Miss Elizabeth Bowers, who was born in Ohio Dec. 25, 1819, daughter of Solomon and Deborah (Lane) Bowers, the former of whom settled in Middletown in 1825, and cleared a good farm there of eighty acres. Andrew Fattic was a stone and brick mason and followed his trade nearly all his life in Middletown, but in his latter years moved to Anderson. He died there in the home of Mrs. Preston June 26, 1870, aged fifty-four years. His wife passed away there Dec. 19, 1899. Both were members of the Protestant Methodist Church. To Andrew Fattic and his wife the following children were born: Jacob, Sept. 26, 1838; Deborah, May 6, 1840; and Elizabeth, Aug. 20, 1842.

THOMAS MOORE, of Cicero, Hamilton county, this State, is a native son of Ireland, born in County Down, Feb. 4, 1845, son of William and Mary (Patterson) Moore, both natives of the same locality and of Scotch-Irish descent.

William Moore was a farmer by occupation. He brought his family to America in 1845, landing in New York. He located in Pittsburgh, Pa., where he remained in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company until his death in 1862, when he was aged about fifty-five years. His wife died in Pittsburgh in 1887, at the age of seventy-four. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church (Cumberland branch). Their children were: James, who enlisted for service in the Civil war in the 8th Pa. V. I., was mortally wounded at the battle of Fredericksburg, Md., and died three weeks later in Lincoln Hospital, Washington; Samuel served in the 63d Pa. V. I.; Thomas; William was born in Pittsburgh; John McCracken, named for Rev. John McCracken of Pittsburgh, died at the age of seven years; Mary J.; Eliza; Isabella; and John McCracken (2). The eldest son was not quite twenty-one when he enlisted.

Thomas Moore was but six weeks old when his parents left the old home in Ireland to try for home and fortune in the New World. He received a limited common school education, and when he was seventeen he learned the glass blower's trade. On July 13, 1864, he enlisted in Company A, 193d Pa. V. I., for one hundred days. He re-enlisted Sept. 6, 1864, in Company L, 14th Pa. V. C., for one year or during the war, and he was honorably discharged at Alexandria, Va., May 11, 1865. He participated in the battle of Winchester under General Sheridan, and saw that famous general at the conclusion of his noted ride, when Sheridan exclaimed "Boys, right about, we will soon whip them." He was in many skirmishes with Mosby's guerrillas, and did much scouting. In the winter of 1864-5 on an expedition with thirty-eight scouts after Mosby he was caught in a severe snow storm, and as they were without shelter of any kind many of the men were frozen and rescued with difficulty, Mr. Moore having his feet frozen. This was the only misfortune he suffered in his army service, passing through all the battles and skirmishes unscathed.

Returning to Pittsburgh at the close of the war Mr. Moore resumed work at his trade. In 1879 he came West and located at La Salle, Ill., from there moving to Ottawa, and in 1894 to Streeter, finally settling in Indiana, where he has proved himself an excellent citizen. He owns a good home. In politics he is a Republican, and has voted for every Republican President. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

On April 27, 1869, in Pittsburg, Pa., Mr. Moore married Miss Eliza A. Mahood, who was born in County Down, Ireland, Nov. 5, 1844, daughter of Samuel and Jane (Southford) Mahood. James Mahood was of Scotch Irish parentage; he was a farmer in Ireland where both he and his wife died. Their children were: George, Eliza A., James, Margaret, Sarah, Janet and Mary. Mrs. Moore came to America when about twenty-two years old, and settled in Pittsburg. Thomas Moore has six living children: James, Mary J., Eliza, Margaret, Carrie and Thomas. Mrs. Eliza A. Moore died April 21, 1907, sincerely mourned by a wide circle of friends.

ELLIS WORTHINGTON FOSTER, a veteran of the Civil war, and an esteemed resident of Tipton, was born in Beaver county, Pa., Feb. 19, 1837, son of William Woods and Martha (Burns) Foster.

The Fosters come from an English family whose representatives settled in Pennsylvania in early Colonial days. John, the paternal grandfather of Ellis W., spent the greater part of his life in Beaver county, and was a farmer by occupation. During the war of 1812 he was in the government service as a teamster. His last years were spent with his son, William W., after the latter had moved to Indiana, and there John Foster died, in Franklin county, at the advanced age of eighty-four. His wife was Mary Woods, who was also of an old Pennsylvania family, of English ancestry. Their children were: Stephen; William W.; John; Jane, who married Robert White; and Polly, wife of a Mr. Castor.

William Woods Foster was born in Beaver county, Pa., April 19, 1802, and was given the ordinary-common school education of that day. A farmer by occupation he was also local minister, both in Pennsylvania and Indiana. His was a very strict religious character, and he lived up to his principles in every act of his life, and his home was the refuge of every itinerant preacher of the frontier. He made it a point to attend camp meeting every year, and would sometimes travel fifty miles on horseback to reach the gathering. He was an ardent advocate of temperance and was one of the first Indiana pioneers to oppose the use of whiskey at log rollings. As he refused to furnish it for his own helpers, men for a while refused to work for him, or, if they did, would bring their own liquor, but finally his neighbors came around to his view and willingly supported and assisted him. His religious ministrations were greatly helped by the fact that he was a fine singer, besides being a good performer on the violin.

William W. Foster made his home in Pennsylvania until 1839, when he moved to Indiana. He and his brother Stephen purchased a flat boat and made the trip by way of the Ohio river as far as Lawrenceburg, but at that point changed to a team, which they had brought on the boat, and continued with that as far as Franklin county. Here Mr. William W. Woods bought 160 acres, some few of which had been cleared, and on which stood a log cabin, and he settled down to three years of strenuous toil improving his farm. In 1842, when only thirty-nine years of age, he was suddenly struck down with typhoid fever and died. Mr. Foster had married, in Beaver county, Sept. 24, 1827, Miss Martha Burns, who was born in that county Dec. 24, 1807, of Scotch-Irish descent, daughter of Samuel and Ellen (Tucker) Burns. They had seven children: (1) Jonathan Holt was born Oct. 3, 1828, and married Nov. 14, 1848, to Miss Sarah Jane Sutfin, who was born Dec. 19, 1830. Jonathan H., was a soldier, in the Civil war, and served two and a half years in the quartermaster's department, as a private in Company D, 123d Ind. V. I. He was in the battle of Nashville, and in the advance to Goldsboro, N. C. (2) William Henderson, born Sept. 20, 1830, married July 31, 1851, Miss Matilda Coen, who was born Aug. 24, 1821. (3) Mary, born Oct. 7, 1832, married Sept. 3, 1849, Thomas Johnson, born June 5, 1829. (3) Emeline, born Jan. 15, 1835, was married Sept. 25, 1852, to Joseph Wiley Alley. Mr. Alley was born Sept. 25, 1819, and was a soldier in the war, in the 123d Ind. V. I. (5) Ellis Worthington. (6) Samuel B., born May 15, 1839, became a local minister. On June 4, 1861, he married Miss Eliza Ann Gant, born June 2, 1843. (7) Ellen, born Aug. 2, 1841, was married June 4, 1861, to Charles B. Martin, whose birth occurred May 28, 1841. The eldest of these seven children was but fourteen years of age when the father died. With the help of her children, however, the widowed mother finished clearing and paying for the farm. She was a shrewd manager and great worker, toiling early and late, out-of-doors and in-doors, clearing, farming, weaving, spinning and knitting all for her little family. She had been converted at the age of thirteen and had united with the M. E. church, and she remained a Christian, loyal to her church to the last, and she lived to see all of her children become members of the church. She lived on the old farm until her death, which occurred in March, 1895, when she was aged eighty-eight years.

Ellis W. Foster was but two years old when his parents moved to the West, so that as a boy he enjoyed only the limited opportunities for an education which the frontier afforded. The school house of his day was built of logs, with a huge fire place, stick chimney, writing desks along the walls, supported by pins, and benches split from punch-ions. But later he attended the Brookville Academy, and also studied much at home evenings, working entirely through Ray's Higher Arithmetic alone. During the winters of 1859 and 1860, he taught in his home district. Teachers were then elected by their patrons, and the greatest interest was taken in the elections, but Mr. Foster was always sure of being chosen whenever he presented himself as a candidate, never being defeated. When not in school he worked on the farm and from the age of fifteen he was the main dependence of his widowed mother in keeping up their place.

On Aug. 22, 1861, Ellis W. Foster enlisted at Lawrenceburg, Ind., as a private in Company B, 37th Ind. V. I., under Capt. Thomas Kimball for three years. When discharged at Ringgold, Ga., in 1864, he re-enlisted, Company B being assigned to the 22d Ind. Regiment, where he continued in the service until honorably discharged at Louisville, Ky., Aug. 2, 1865. These years were spent in Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, the Carolinas and Virginia. He was in the battle of Stone River and there was shot, the bullet striking him in the thigh, passing downward and scaling off a piece of the bone. He tried to get to the field hospital, but was fired upon and surrounded by the Rebels, and was only rescued by the company wagon. By this he was carried to the hospital, which was under control of the enemy, who were paroling the wounded soldiers until charged on by the Federal cavalry and so compelled to flee, leaving their prisoners behind. After three weeks in the field hospital, part of the time lying on the floor of a negro hut, Mr. Foster was sent to Nashville for six weeks, then taken by boat to New Albany, Ind., and at the end of six weeks there was ordered back to his regiment at Murfreesboro. For the rest of the term Mr. Foster shared in every experience of his regiment, and was known to be a man to be relied on for prompt and efficient discharge of duty. After a year he was promoted to corporal, then third sergeant, was for some time on duty as orderly sergeant, and in 1862, at Nashville, he was appointed color guard. He carried the colors in all battles, including Chickamauga and Chattanooga, until he veteranized with his company. After veteranizing the company became part of the 22d Ind. V. I., but at roll call was a detail of the 37th. Mr. Foster saw much hard fighting and participated in numerous battles, including Tullahoma, Dry Gap, Missionary Ridge, Tunnel Hill, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Dallas, Kennesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Savannah, Averysboro, Bentonville and the engagements of the Atlanta campaign. During the siege of Chattanooga, the men suffered especial hardships, as the supplies were nearly cut off for three months, and the rations of hard tack and salt meat for a day would scarcely make a single meal. The clothing also gave out, and Mr. Foster was without either shirt or overcoat until in January. But he was a man of unusual character and bore the privations in a more cheerful spirit than many. He was also different from most of the men in that he used neither tobacco nor whiskey.

When at home again Mr. Foster resumed his old ways of life, working at farming through the summers and teaching in the winters for fourteen years. About a year after his discharge from the army, he married and settled permanently in Franklin county. He first bought part of the Foster land and added to it until he owned 100 acres. In 1882 he bought his present home in Tipton county, an eighty-acre tract, which then had but a small log cabin on it, and not more than twenty acres cleared. Mr. Foster has improved this farm and brought it into a high state of cultivation. Both he and his wife are most industrious and frugal, and have done well financially.

On Dec. 20, 1866, Ellis W. Foster was united in marriage with Martha Jane Calpha, who was born in Franklin county, Sept. 5, 1842, daughter of Simpson and Eliza Charity (Baldwin) Calpha. She is a faithful Christian, always ready to relieve the poor and suffering. She was an invalid, not walking for eighteen years, but was healed by faith about 1884. Two daughters have been born to this union, Ocee Belle and Anna Mary. Ocee Belle was born Dec. 27, 1867, was well educated, attending the Central Normal College at Danville five terms, and began teaching at the age of twenty years. She taught four terms in her home district, four more in that same region. On Oct. 12, 1899, she married John M. Niedhamer, and they have one child, Merrill Foster, born Dec. 30, 1901. Mr. Niedhamer was born in Millersburg, Hamilton county, and was of German descent, although his father was a native of Indiana. The second daughter, Anna Mary, was born Oct. 23, 1872, and married John S. Batzner, of German parentage, and a blacksmith by occupation. They have two daughters, Naomi Leon and Mary Lucile. Mr. and Mrs. Foster are members of the Methodist Church and were among the seven original founders of the Methodist Church near Hobbs in 1883. This church has now grown to a membership of over seventy, and is in a flourishing condition. In politics Mr. Foster was a Republican, and cast his first vote for Lincoln, but standing by his convictions he left that party about 1896, and became an earnest advocate of the Prohibition party.

The family name of Mrs. Foster was in early days spelled Calfee, and was of English origin. The Calfees settled in Virginia in Colonial times and Mrs. Foster's grandfather Henry Calpha, born there June 15, 1779, migrated from there to Indiana while the Indians were still numerous, and it was necessary to have a blockhouse to which the settlers could flee for shelter. The one nearest Mr. Calpha was four miles from Brookville. He cleared a farm of 160 acres on the White Water river bottom, and also owned hill property. He had married in Virginia, Aug. 13, 1801, Miss Nancy Calpha, and they had a family born as follows: William, June 7, 1802; John, Dec. 7, 1803; James, Aug. 8, 1805; Simpson, March 22, 1807; Samuel; Lucinda, Dec. 25, 1811; Malinda, Feb. 22, 1813; Ursula, June 16, 1817. Henry Calpha died Aug. 20, 1827, and his wife Jan. 30, 1857. These records are from Henry Calpha's old Bible, now nearly 100 years old, and in the possession of Mrs. Foster.

Simpson Calpha was brought to Indiana when two years of age. He married Miss Charity Eliza Baldwin, who was born in Franklin county, daughter of Amos and Hattie (Stuart) Baldwin. Amos Baldwin came from

New York State, but was of New England ancestry. A pioneer of Rush county, he eventually settled in Franklin. Simpson Calpha and his wife settled on the old homestead, which he bought and they remained there until death called them. He reached the age of eighty years and is interred in the old family cemetery. He was a prominent man in his locality, served as commissioner of the county and was a leader in church work, a man whose integrity of character made him greatly respected. For fifteen years he was an elder in the Baptist Church, to which his wife also belonged. They had five children, William H., James D., John A., Anna and Martha Jane. Mrs. Calpha was an earnest Christian woman, loved by everybody. She had an unusually kind and sweet disposition, and was known by all the neighbors as "Aunt Eliza." She died Sept. 8, 1881, and is buried at the side of her husband in the old family cemetery.

PERRY T. JOHNSON. The fertile soil of Indiana and its favorable climatic conditions have made the State a particularly promising field for farming operations, and many are the tillers of the soil who have reaped a competence, even a fortune, from their labors. For those who are industrious and progressive, kind nature does all the rest, and prosperity has been very general. Among those who by their own efforts have risen to prominence is Perry T. Johnson, of Nora, Delaware township, Hamilton county, who was born in Montgomery county, Md., about thirty-five miles from the city of Washington, July 23, 1838, and who came to Indiana in 1858.

Benjamin Johnson, father of Perry T., was likewise a native of Maryland, born in 1813. He lost his father when still young, and was always obliged to be hard at work, but he was successful and became a prosperous farmer, owning at one time 210 acres of land in Montgomery county, which he had cleared himself. He owned two of the finest gardens in that part of the country. He was an active member of the M. E. Church, and in his political views was a Republican. He married Miss Martha House, who was born in 1819, and who died Nov. 9, 1906, in Maryland near the old home place. Eleven children were born to them, of whom survive: Ebenezer, Benjamin, Jacob J., Perry T., Elizabeth A., Mary E. and Martha. The father passed away in 1902.

enty-two acres in a high state of cultivation. He is also extensively engaged in stock-raising, and has fine breeds of hogs, cattle and sheep. The farm was bought in 1869, and has been improved so much that it is now worth over $100 an acre. Mr. Johnson is a thoroughly up-to-date farmer, and is informed on all the newest methods and machinery. Like his father he is a Republican in his political principles, and is a member of the M. E. Church; in the latter line of work he has always been most active, is a trustee in the Church, and is superintendent of the Sunday-school. He has never held any political office, nor has he ever taken any interest in any of the various lodges. All his life Mr. Johnson has been a hard worker, and has consequently attained success; he is well-off, a leading man in his community, and one who is regarded with the utmost respect by all. One specially admirable trait has been his filial devotion, for although a number of years had passed since he left his home and native State, he frequently returned to visit his aged mother, and sought the old familiar scenes no less than nine times.

Perry T. Johnson has been twice married. His first union was in 1860, when he was united to Miss Sarah Dawson. By her he had two children: Benjamin A. and Louise. In 1870 he was married to his second wife, Miss Maria M. Elliott, and to them five children have been born as follows: Charles O., a farmer, who married Miss Bertha Fisher; Mary M., deceased; Perry A., a farmer, who married Miss Minnie Liellyn; Sarah E., who married Lewis Hussey; and Anna E., at home. All the children have been well educated, and each has completed a high school course. Mrs. Maria (Elliott) Johnson is the daughter of Assalom and Polly (Maxwell) Elliott, the former of whom was born in North Carolina, June 18, 1813, and died in 1893; and the latter of whom is still living now aged ninety-two, and makes her home with her son, Oliver Elliott. Absalom Elliott came with his parents to Wayne county, Ind., in 1816, and was among the early permanent settlers. Mrs. Johnson's grandparents were Jacob and Mary Elliott, of North Carolina, and her great-grandparents Exrim and Enterprise Elliott, also of North Carolina. On her mother's side she is descended from the Maxwells, a family in eastern Tennessee. Both Mr. and Mrs.

Johnson are descended from ancestors who generally lived to be aged.

ROBERT C. LIGHT, M. D., who is engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery, and also carries on a real estate and loan business, having his business office in Room 535, State Life Building, Indianapolis, was born in Grundy, Pulaski Co., Ky., June 3, 1856, a son of James and Nancy (Graves) Light. He is of old Virginia stock, William Henry Light, his grandfather, having been a native of Virginia and an early settler of Kentucky, where he was one of the pioneer farmers, and he reared a large family. He died when seventy-five years old.

There is a tradition in the family that Dr. Light's father was a descendant of George Washington's grandfather, and the Doctor has often heard his father speak of the family connection, of which he was very proud. Dr. Light neglected to get the facts from his father. The Lights are among the old families of Virginia, North Carolina and Kentucky.

James Light was born in Virginia June 25, 1810. His parents removed to Kentucky when he was twelve years old, and he was reared to farming. When he was twenty-one he became a merchant, and, acquiring considerable wealth, invested largely in slaves. The emancipation of the negroes left him a financial wreck, but by thrift, industry and enterprise he recovered much of his fortunes. In politics he was a Whig, and later became a Republican. In 1867 he moved to a farm, which he bought, near Lebanon, Ind., but later he sold it and settled at Clinton. In Clinton county his wife died, in 1879, at the age of fifty years. In 1881 James Light became an inmate of the home of his son, Dr. Robert C., in Broad Ripple, and there he lived until his death, in October, 1899, at the age of eighty-nine. Under President Harrison Mr. Light was made postmaster, and held that position for five years. James Light married Nancy Graves, a native of Kentucky, and of the children born to them five are now living: John M. is a resident of Somerset, Ky.; Elizabeth is the wife of Dr. T. F. Holmes, of Clinton county, Ind.; Mary Ann, who married James Doolan, is deceased; Amanda is the wife of Thomas Thurman, of Sheridan, Ind.; Ellen is married and living in Oklahoma; Dr. Robert C. is our subject.

R. B. Light

William Graves, the father of Nancy (Graves) Light, was a native-born farmer of Kentucky, where he died at the advanced age of ninety-five years. He was the father of a numerous family.

When a small boy Robert C. Light moved with his parents to Boone county, Ind., where his education was begun in the common schools. Later he attended the Indiana Medical College, and was graduated from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1879. His medical career at once began in Broad Ripple, where he has followed his profession in the most earnest and successful manner.

Dr. Light has decided business talent, and is engaged as a broker in the State Life building, giving special attention to placing Interurban stocks and bonds. He has always been interested in the development of the city, and he was one of the first promoters to develop the natural gas resources of Indiana, organizing the Broad Ripple Natural Gas Company; it was while he was secretary of that company that the first natural gas was delivered to the city of Indianapolis. He also organized and built the Broad Ripple electric railroad, the first interurban electric road in the United States. He also promoted, organized and financed the "White City" of Indianapolis, the greatest amusement resort in the State, located at Broad Ripple. His influence has always been given toward the promotion of every enterprise which promises to be of value to the city.

Dr. Light was married Jan. 15, 1873, to Miss Caroline Robbins, daughter of George W. Robbins, and to this union was born one child, Lola Montz, who married George T. Kirkpatrick, and is the mother of two children, Robert and Lillian. Mrs. Light died in 1874; she was a member of the Baptist Church. Dr. Light was married Jan. 15, 1882, to Miss Cynthia Hubbard, daughter of John Hubbard, and to this marriage came three children: Robert Sherman, who died at the age of ten months; Vallie N., and Mason Blaine. Mrs. Light died Dec. 24, 1897. She was a member of the Lutheran Church, to which the Doctor also belongs. He married for his third wife, July 3, 1899, Miss Anna M. Springer, daughter of Jacob and Martha Springer.

Dr. Light is a member of the Broad Ripple Masonic Lodge, and the Odd Fellows Lodge and Encampment, and in social connection belongs to the Marion and Columbia Clubs. In politics he is a Republican.

HUGH J. CREIGHTON, one of the substantial business men and patriotic citizens of Anderson, Ind., was born at Massillon, Stark county, Ohio, June 29, 1842, son of Hugh and Jane (McPherson) Creighton.

Mr. Creighton attended the public and high schools of his native vicinity, and at the age of fourteen years began to learn the machinist's trade in Russell's shop, serving five years. On April 15, 1861, three days after the firing on Fort Sumter, Mr. Creighton enlisted as the first volunteer and signer of enlistment roll in Massillon—his company being also the first from the northeastern part of the State to reach Columbus—as a private in Company E, 13th O. V. I., to serve three months, following President Lincoln's call for 75,000 men. This regiment did not get out of the State of Ohio, as the term of service was spent in Camp Dennison, organizing and drilling. This regiment then re-enlisted for three years, Mr. Creighton being mustered into Company A, to serve three years, and he served until honorably discharged, at Blain's Cross Roads, Tenn., Jan. 1, 1864, by reason of enlistment as a veteran. He had been promoted to corporal, and was assigned to that duty in the same organization, his final discharge being dated June 25, 1865, by reason of General Order No. 77, mustering out paroled prisoners. On June 29, 1861, the regiment crossed the Ohio, and went to Western Virginia, where it remained five months, and then moved to Bacon Creek, Ky., joining the Army of the Cumberland. The service was in Kentucky and Tennessee up to the battle of Shiloh, and some of the battles in which Mr. Creighton participated were: Carnifex Ferry (Sept. 10, 1861); Cotton Mountain, Loop Creek, Ganley Bridge, Huddleston's Landing, Bowling Green, Ky., Duck River Bridge, Shiloh, Corinth, Guntown, Iuka, Larkins' Landing, Battle Creek, Perryville, Wild Cat Mountain, Stone River, Chattanooga, Ringgold Gap, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Strawberry Plains, Dandridge (where he re-enlisted as a veteran), Atlanta Campaign, Tunnel Hill, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, and New Hope Church, where he was made prisoner. At the last named fight, in a charge after dark, the Confederates came up a dry ravine, gaining the Union troops' rear, and captured 150 men of Wood's division, 4th Corps. Mr. Creighton and his comrades lay on the field together with the Confederates, and the next morning the officers took the name of each man, his hat, shoes, watch, money and blouse, the prisoners being left with only shirt and trousers. They were then taken to Marietta, Ga., and thence to Atlanta, where the 150 prisoners were paraded for the benefit of the citizens, and then to Andersonville by train, being taken immediately into the prison. This famous stockade had then 10,000 Union prisoners, and before the summer was out 35,000. There was no shelter of any kind here, and during June it rained twenty-two days in succession. The rations were served once a day and consisted of boiled corn meal and sometimes a piece of corn pone, and the prisoners who had no cup had to hold out both hands for the mush, which was brought out in a large dry goods box. There was nothing else served. All the drinking water that was to be obtained was in the creek, which was two yards wide. The Confederate guard, which consisted of between 3,000 and 4,000, were camped higher up, and the filth from their camp came down to the prisoners. The cook house was also above them, so that the filthy water running down was something indescribable. Vermin swarmed over the men and in the sand, and, with the terrible heat of the Southern sun, made the conditions frightful. This continued until the night of Aug. 11th, when a fine, large spring of water broke out over the dead line, and thereafter the prisoners had plenty of water, the Confederates having made a trough out of a hollow log. If a prisoner went over the dead line, however, he was immediately shot, and many lost their lives in this way. During the month of August one hundred men died each night. Mr. Creighton and his comrades became terribly emaciated. To escape from their sufferings, which had become intolerable, they began to make a tunnel, with the hope of escaping outside of the stockade, Mr. Creighton having for his implements a broken knife and half of a canteen. The mouth of the tunnel was situated under cover of the shelter which they had by this time erected from some brush and an old piece of blanket, and was first dug straight down six feet, one branch being run under the stockade, and one under a well in a street of the prison, so that the earth could be disposed of without attention being called to it. Mr. Creighton and six comrades were engaged in this attempt, but were betrayed by one of their fellow prisoners for a plug of tobacco. The commandant of the prison, Captain Wirz, came in on horseback with a long iron rod, or probe, sharpened on one end, which he repeatedly pushed into the ground, finally finding the tunnel. He then ordered Mr. Creighton and his comrades to come out, and they did so, supposing that they were to be shot. On the contrary they were taken to the north gate of the stockade and each given a quart of sorghum molasses. No reason was ever given for this singular freak of Captain Wirz, who is seldom reported by the prisoners in any other light than that of a cruel captor.

Mr. Creighton made his escape in a peculiar manner. There were one hundred soldiers to be sent to Charleston to be posted in such a manner that they would be exposed to the fire of the Union troops, and these men were assembled at the south gate of the prison and told to lie down. As the prison guards paced back and forth, Mr. Creighton, with two comrades, Morgan and Stephenson, both of his own age, twenty-two years, stepped in among the selected men and went through the gate with them, being placed on the car to go to Charleston. They watched their opportunity, and during the night jumped from the slowly moving train, finding themselves in a pine forest. They started northeast, being guided by the North star, traveling at night and sleeping by day, and lived on what they could find in the fields—sweet potatoes, peas, etc.—and what would be given them by the friendly negroes whom they met on the road. Morgan left them the third day out, thinking that he knew the better direction, but the poor fellow was soon thereafter captured. One night while traveling they came to where a railroad crossed the Little Pedee river and a guard stationed at the bridge challenged them and held them prisoners with his shot-gun, while he interviewed them. This was in the latter part of 1864, and the soldier seemed to be tired of the war. He said that he had friends in Ohio, and took Mr. Creighton and his comrade to the woods near his home and secreted them, after which he had his wife and daughter cook the starved soldiers three good meals, also giving them the first soap and towels to wash with that they had had since becoming prisoners. He then made a map for them, and told them how to travel, finally giving them two corn ponies to help them on their way. They found that the name of this good-hearted Southerner was Goodyear.

The next night the fugitives came to a schoolhouse, under which they secreted themselves, and during the day school was held, but they were not discovered. After school a little negro boy came near them, looking for some cows, and a dog with the boy barked at them. They then made themselves known to him and told him to get his parents and bring them to them. Soon afterward an aged darky couple came to the soldiers and seemed delighted to see them, giving them bacon and corn bread, and showed them the road through the corn brake. They missed their way, however, and walked twenty-six miles in the wrong direction, which they had to retrace, making fifty-two miles in a day and night. As they were barefooted, this was a very serious matter to them. Mr. Creighton had worn out his trousers, and had on but a pair of drawers and a shirt, the drawers being worn off above the knees. Finally, after being out sixteen days and as many nights, they were captured within sight of a United States gunboat. They had passed the worst dangers, but became careless, neglecting the proper precautions. It was daylight and Stephenson advised waiting until nightfall, but as they were crossing a road they met the adjutant of a Confederate regiment in a buggy. He halted them and asked where they were from. They replied from the 7th Texas, a Confederate regiment, and said that they had been "on a French" (meaning away without permission) and were trying to reach their regiment, under Davis' orders that all deserters would be pardoned who rejoined their regiments. The adjutant then told them: "Well, if you will go to the next town, I'll get you transportation." They answered: "All right," and followed the buggy, but lagged behind and soon took another road. Soon a man in a buggy overtook them, and, after asking them if they were the Texan soldiers, took them to Clinton, N. C. They were questioned by the military authorities, and were discovered to be Northern soldiers and were placed in confinement. Mr. Creighton here made himself known as a Mason, and received assistance, one man giving him twenty dollars and another $106 in Confederate money, advising him to get a pair of shoes, this money being very useful to him later when he was a prisoner. He was then taken to Columbia, S. C., and confined for six weeks, the rations being rice, sugar, molasses, corn meal and flour, uncooked. Later Mr. Creighton was taken to Florence prison, which, like Andersonville, was a stockade prison, and fully as bad as the other prison. Here he remained until the close of the war, receiving his release April 1, 1865, having been a prisoner of war since in May, 1864. He was passed on to the United States authorities at Wilmington, N. C., as a paroled prisoner and was exchanged in the fall of 1865. Mr. Creighton has never recovered from the effects of his army experience, and it was six months before he was able to resume his trade. He was always a faithful and brave soldier, and took part in some of the bloodiest battles of the great struggle. He was in the successful assault of Missionary Ridge, Nov. 25, 1863, by four divisions of the Army of the Cumberland, one of the most dramatic events of the war. In this assault, while acting as color bearer of headquarters flag of the 3rd Div., 4th Corps, Mr. Creighton's horse was shot from under him, but he continued on foot, and after the assault Gen. T. J. Wood found his headquarters' colors flying on top of the ridge. Mr. Creighton was on staff duty with General Wood from Oct. 1, 1863, until Jan. 1, 1864, prior to this having acted in a similar capacity with Gen. H. P. VanCleve, commander of the 3rd Division, 21st Army Corps.

The following letter from General Wood speaks for itself:

"The successful assault of Mission Ridge on the 25th day of November, 1863, by four divisions of the Army of the Cumberland was the most dramatic event of the stupendous conflict which prevailed between the States of the United States from 1861 to 1865. In the assault of Mission Ridge, Hugh J. Creighton was a member of my headquarters guard, and had been detailed to carry the headquarters' colors in the ascent of Mission Ridge. Creighton's horse was shot under him, but this great peril did not deter Creighton, and he continued with his comrades on foot until the grand success of the capture of the Ridge was achieved, and the enemy sent flying in hopeless disorder down the reverse side of the Ridge. Such heroism should live forever in the grateful remembrance of our countrymen.

"(Signed) TH. J. WOOD.

"Late Major Gen'l. U. S. Vols., Brevet Major Gen'l. U. S. Army, Retired."

The following is a letter written to the editor of the Anderson News, Jan. 2, 1906: "Editor News:—Speaking of the anniversary of the battle of Stone River, Dec. 31, 1862, to Jan. 3, 1863. The writer belonged to Co. A, 13th Ohio Vol. Inf., attached to 3rd Brigade of VanCleve's division, which had in addition the 44th and 86th Ind. Vol. Inf., 59th O., and Swallow's 7th Ind. Battery, and instead of crossing Stone River to our position on the extreme left of the army, were rushed to the extreme right and into the Cedars. The 44th Ind. and 59th O. were on the front line, the 13th O. and 86th Ind. on the supporting line, and Swallow's battery supported us and shelled the Cedars ahead. This was as early as 8 o'clock A. M. To say we had a fight does not express the hell we were into. All suffered alike, but Co. A, 13th O., which went into the battle with sixty men, had fourteen killed, twenty-three wounded, of which eleven were cases of amputation, and nine missing. Every officer down to a corporal was killed. Col. J. G. Hawkins dismounted and was killed, falling on the writer, making a loss of forty-five out of sixty, or seventy-five per cent.

"We crossed Stone River that night, and Thursday and Friday lay under a skirmish fire until about 4 o'clock, when we were charged by the combined Rebel force and driven into the river, on the north banks of which 'Old Rozy' had taken sixty pieces of artillery, which opened out with double shot, canister and grape, and if hell of Wednesday was not repeated I miss my guess, only we made the hell. That was all the Johnnies wanted for eight months,—then Chickamauga, after which you never heard the celebrated Rebel yell. And in all the Atlanta campaign, Franklin, Nashville and on into Texas. It was only talked about by Georgia militia. H. J. Creighton, Co. A, 13th O. I. V."

After the war Mr. Creighton returned to Massillon, but later went to Philadelphia, where he engaged in work at a machine shop, going thence to Louisville, Ky., and then to Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio, where he married Helen L. Beaumont. There were four children born of this marriage: Helen L.; Guila B.; Mary K., who died aged sixteen years; and Hugh Percy. Mrs. Creighton died Feb. 1, 1876, in Springfield, Ohio, and Mr. Creighton was married (second), April 18, 1877, in Springfield, to Mary Kenney, born Feb. 28, 1846, daughter of Elam and Charlotte (Maskill) Kenney. To this union there were born children as follows: Robert G., Paul L. and Ethel. After his second marriage Mr. Creighton lived in Springfield, Ohio, for about fifteen years, managing a large machine shop, and being one of the founders of the Creighton Engine works, manufacturers of stationary engines. In 1892 he located in Muncie, Ind., becoming connected with the Whitely Reaper works, and in 1894 located in Anderson, where he took charge of the Lambert Gas and Gasolene Engine works. He is now manager of the Perfection Magneto Company, manufacturing igniters for gas engines.

Mr. Creighton is an honored member of Major May Post, G. A. R., in which he has been senior vice-commander and junior vice-commander. In political matters he is a Republican.

PETER MINGLE, a substantial farmer and respected citizen of Madison county, Ind., and an old settler of Hancock county, was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, Nov. 12, 1836, son of George and Christina (Loy) Mingle.

John Mingle, grandfather of Peter, was a Revolutionary soldier from Pennsylvania, who moved to Montgomery county, Ohio, and settled on new land. He then moved from Ohio to Indiana, and settled three-quarters of a mile north of Pendleton, on a heavily timbered piece of land, which he partly cleared, and built a log house. Not liking the country, however, he returned to his old Ohio home, but in his old age again came to Indiana, to live with his son, George. He died at the home of his son David, in Madison county, at a ripe old age. He was a sturdy Andrew Jackson Democrat in politics, and an honest, hard working, upright man. His children were: Lewis, John, David, Elizabeth, Eva and George.

George Mingle was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, where he followed farming, being married in that county to Christina Loy, daughter of George Loy, and to this union the following children were born: Sarah, Melissa, George, John, Martha, Nancy, Henry, Peter, Adam and Rachel. George Mingle took his family to Hancock county in 1839, where he settled on 160 acres of land, on which a small clearing had been made. He finished clearing this farm, and built a good two-story brick house and an excellent barn. Mr. Mingle also added to his land until he was the owner of 200 acres of well-cultivated fields, being considered one of the good, practical, substantial farmers of that section. He was a Democrat in politics. He died on his farm in 1869, at the age of sixty-eight years.

Peter Mingle was brought by his parents to Indiana in 1839 at the age of three years. He grew up among the pioneers and attended school in a log school house, which was fitted with slabs for benches. There he received the limited pioneer education of his day, and was reared to a farmer's life, which occupation he has always followed. At the age of twenty-four years, on April 19, 1860, he was married in Green township, to Sarah Barnard, born Oct. 13, 1838, in Green township, Hancock county, Ind., daughter of Robert Y. and Mary (Hopper) Barnard. Robert Barnard was born in North Carolina, son of James and Annie (Walker) Barnard. The Barnards were of English stock, and there is a tradition in the family that they descended from an old New England family of Nantucket Island, off the Massachusetts coast. They were Friends, or Quakers, and, says tradition, among the early founders of the Massachusetts Colony, and, being persecuted on account of their religion, settled first in Nantucket, and afterward, just previous to the Revolutionary war, sought refuge in North Carolina. The Walkers were also of English stock. James Barnard was a farmer of North Carolina and moved to Ohio, where he married. About 1834 he located in Henry county, Ind., where he cleared up a farm from the woods and died at the age of seventy-five years. He was a Baptist in his religious belief. His children were: Robert, Roy, Melissa, Mary Ann, Elvira and Evans.

Robert Barnard was born in North Carolina, Jan. 3, 1814, and located in Ohio when a young man of twenty years. Here he worked one year, in 1835 removing to Henry county, Ind., where he carried on farming. He was married in Green township, Hancock county, to Mary Hopper, born in Wayne county, Ind., near Cambridge, Sept. 3, 1820, daughter of John and Sarah (Shortridge) Hopper. The Hoppers were pioneers of Wayne county, where John Hopper owned a farm, which he had cleared from the woods. He died when Mrs. Mingle's mother was only twelve years old. Robert Barnard settled on a farm of eighty acres in Hancock county, cleared it from the woods, and became very well-to-do, at his death owning 500 acres of land. He built two sets of good buildings on his farm. He was a Republican in politics. For many years he was a cattleman, buying and fattening cattle, and was an excellent business man. His death occurred at the age of eighty-eight years, seven months, at the home of his son Elwood. His wife was a member of the Christian Church for fifty years. To Robert Barnard and wife were born the following children: James W., a private in an Indiana volunteer infantry regiment, was wounded in battle and died in a hospital in Scottsburg, Ala.; Sarah; Mary Ann; Irwin; Vandelena; and Elwood.

After marriage Peter Mingle bought 120 acres of land in Green township, Hancock county, where he made some improvements, after which he sold it and bought eighty acres in the same township, which was partly cleared. He finished clearing this farm, upon which he built a hewed log house and good barn. This farm he also sold in 1869, and removed to Madison county, Ind., settling upon his present homestead, which then consisted of 130 acres. At one time Mr. Mingle owned 420 acres of fine land in Fall Creek township, but has given liberally to his children, still retaining, however, a fine farm of 186 acres.

Mr. Mingle is a member of the Methodist Church, as was his wife, and in that faith she died. Mrs. Mingle was a member of the committee appointed to collect funds with which to build the new Methodist Church in Pendleton. This committee collected $10,000, and of this sum Mrs. Mingle herself gave $1,000, Mr. Mingle, $250, their two daughters $250 each, and Mr. McCarty, a son-in-law, $250, making $2,000 from the family. In his political views Mr. Mingle is a stanch Democrat. He is a straight-forward citizen and much respected man, and assisted by his worthy wife, he has reared an excellent family as follows: Florence M., born Feb. 11, 1865, married Charles E. McCarty, a farmer of Fall Creek township, and has three children, Glen W., Greta L. and Helen S.; Viretta Alice, born Aug. 29, 1867, resides at home; and George R., born March 22, 1871, married Zella Worrell, and has children, Grace S., Robert and twin sons (he follows farming in Fall Creek township).

JOHN H. COTTRELL, a highly esteemed citizen of Ingalls, Ind., was born in Green township, Madison county, Ind., Oct. 10, 1829, son of Abraham and Susannah (Hilderbrandt) Cottrell.

John Cottrell, grandfather of John H., was a soldier of the War of 1812, during which he participated in an important battle. He was a pioneer of Darke county, Ohio, and removed to Union county, Ind., when that State was a territory. He remained there but a few years, when he removed to Green township, Madison county. Here he was an early settler, at one time being the only settler between Fall and Lick creeks. John Cottrell was an aged man when he located in Madison county, and he made his home with his son, Abraham. He died in 1860. To him and his wife Elizabeth were born the following children: Abraham, Thomas, William, Samuel, Polly, Peggy, Annie and Sally. In political faith John Cottrell was an old-line Whig.

Abraham Cottrell was a pioneer of Indiana, of Scotch descent, and was born in Ohio, June 11, 1803, son of John and Elizabeth Cottrell. He was married, in Union county, Ind., to Susannah Hilderbrandt, born June 27, 1803, daughter of Martin Hilderbrandt, a pioneer of Indiana, of Dutch stock, who died on his farm in Union county, which he had cleared from the woods. After marriage, Mr. Cottrell and his wife removed to Green township, Madison county, and settled on land in the wilderness, which they afterward entered. Mr. Cottrell added to his land from time to time, owning 260 acres, and clearing up a large farm. He was a typical pioneer, and first built a log cabin, but later, before the Civil war, erected a large frame dwelling house. The children born to him and his wife were: Elizabeth, July 13, 1820; Mary Ann, May 14, 1824; John H., Oct. 10, 1829; Abraham, Jan. 12, 1832 (died young); William, Jan. 29, 1834; Samuel and Lydia, May 11, 1836; Hester, March 17, 1839; and Thomas, Sept. 22, 1843. Abraham Cottrell was one of the organizers of Green township and was a substantial citizen. He had three sons in the Civil war: Samuel, who entered Company B, 11th Ind. V. I., for three years, was killed at Fort Donelson; Thomas, in the same company, served eighteen months, when he was honorably discharged on account of disability; and John H. Abraham Cottrell was an old-line Whig in politics, and an Abraham Lincoln Republican. He lived to be eighty-five years old, dying on his farm April 29, 1889.

John H. Cottrell received but a meager education. He was brought up in the woods and on the farm, attending the pioneer school in a log schoolhouse in Fall Creek, in which slabs served for seats and a plank fastened the length of the wall as a writing desk. When twenty-two years old, the January after the Taylor campaign and election, Mr. Cottrell was united in marriage in Green township, to Jane Pettigrew, born in Greene county, Ohio, in 1830, daughter of Washington and Polly (Parsons) Pettigrew.

Washington Pettigrew was a pioneer of Greene county, Ohio, of American descent. He bought 100 acres of land in Green township, Madison county, Ind., which he cleared up and improved, and he became a substantial farmer, owning several fine tracts of land. He died on his farm at the age of seventy-five years. His children were: John, Samuel, George, David, Robert, Marion, Nancy, Isabel, Elizabeth, Jane and Nettie. Of the above family, Robert served in the Civil war, in an Indiana regiment, for a short time.

After marriage John H. Cottrell settled on his father's farm, and lived there until his enlistment at Indianapolis, Aug. 9, 1862, as a private of Company G, 12th Ind. V. I., Capt. James Hueston commanding, to serve three years or during the war. He was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, June 8, 1865, the war having closed. He was in the battle of Richmond, Ky., when almost the entire 12th Indiana regiment was captured. Mr. Cottrell was among these, and was paroled the next day. He took part in the battles of Vicksburg; a hard fight at Jackson; Chattanooga; the great Atlanta campaign; Dalton; Kennesaw Mountain; before Atlanta, July 22d, and was captured with several hundred Union soldiers, and taken to Andersonville by rail, in a box car. This capture was made during the latter part of July, and Mr. Cottrell was confined there until April, 1865, nearly nine months. He was stripped of his coat, but was left his knapsack and other clothing. When captured Mr. Cottrell had about $80 in greenbacks on his person, but when searched dropped the money in the sand and stood upon it. This money he kept some time for a case of emergency. One of his comrades, Morris Fort, of Fortville, becoming very sick, was unable to eat the prison fare, and Mr. Cottrell engaged a Union soldier from Indiana, who worked for the Rebel authorities, and who came into the prison at night, to secure a chicken from citizens who brought them in to sell to the guards who traded with the Union soldiers. This man did not secure the chicken and returned the two dollar bill which Mr. Cottrell had given him, but three days later, five Confederates searched Mr. Cottrell, taking the $80 from his knapsack, leaving him nothing. At this time the conditions in the prison camp were frightful. The prisoner's rations consisted of a small piece of bread of coarsely ground corn or rye meal, and at times a very small piece of pork or beef. Salt and sugar were unknown luxuries, but at times the prisoners were allowed a little sorghum molasses. The rations were so small as to be insufficient to sustain life, and thousands of prisoners died of starvation. The water was filthy, and was supplied by a small creek from the Confederate camps above, the camps being drained by it. The grounds of the stockade sloped to this creek and much of the filth of the prison was emptied into it. Mr. Cottrell saw the famous spring which broke out just within the stockade. This spring, believed by many to have been an act of Providence, suddenly burst forth when the water of the creek was at its worst, and it proved to be the greatest blessing to the stricken soldiers, supplying them with plenty of fresh water from that time on. In the prison camp there was no shelter except that which the prisoners made for themselves, and Mr. Cottrell and three comrades, with whom he messed, dug a hole in the ground, over which they spread several blankets, this being all the protection they had. Mr. Cottrell suffered a sunstroke in the prison in August, 1864, which greatly weakened him. He stood the prison life a great deal better than many others, however, and had no other sickness than that caused by the sunstroke. When taken to prison Mr. Cottrell weighed 200 pounds, and when released nine months later, weighed eighty-five pounds. In 1865, the Rebels, seeing that the war was about to close, started many of the prisoners to Goldsboro, but before reaching that place, the news of Lee's surrender came. Until taken prisoner Mr. Cottrell had always been an active soldier, and was never in the hospital, serving in all the campaigns, marches, battles and skirmishes in which his regiment participated. From his injuries received from prison life, Mr. Cottrell has never fully recovered, and has, since his confinement, always been very deaf.

When he left home to serve his country,

Mr. Cottrell left his wife with four small children, namely: Thomas M., William, Daniel and George. After returning home, Mr. Cottrell settled on the homestead, where he remained twenty-three years. His first wife died, leaving him these children born after the war: Abraham, John, Charles, Rosetta and Mattie. Mr. Cottrell's second marriage was to Margaret Anderson, born in Pendleton, Madison county, July 17, 1837, daughter of Adam and Ann (Snyder) Anderson. The Andersons were of Scotch-Irish stock, and the Snyders were Pennsylvania Dutch. Adam Anderson was born in East Tennessee, son of Charles and Elizabeth Anderson. Charles Anderson, it is believed, came from Ireland to America, settling in Tennessee. Adam Anderson came when a young man to Madison county, Ind., with relatives. Here he married Ann Snyder, daughter of Thomas and Mary E. (Bloom) Snyder, the former of whom was from Bedford county, Pa., and he entered his land in Fall Creek township, Madison county. Adam Anderson, after marriage, settled down to farming, and continued that occupation in Madison county all of his life. His children were: Mary, Thomas, Lucellus, Margaret, Henry, Charles and John. Of this family Thomas, Lucellus and Henry were soldiers of the Civil war. Thomas served in the 89th Ind. V. I., in the three years' service, and participated in a number of battles. Henry and Lucellus were in the 53rd Ind. V. I., in the three years' service; the latter died of typhoid fever in a hospital, after having served in several important engagements. Adam Anderson lived to the ripe old age of seventy-eight years, passing away on his farm. In his political views he was a Democrat, but never sought office, giving the care of his farm his entire time and attention.

Mr. and Mrs. Cottrell are valued members of the Methodist Church. In politics Mr. Cottrell was first an old-line Whig, afterward joining the Republican party. His first vote was cast for Zachary Taylor, and he supported John C. Fremont, and later Abraham Lincoln, being one of the original members of the Republican party. Since that time he has voted for every Republican candidate for the Presidency, and takes a great interest in the success of his party. Mr. Cottrell is prominently associated with the G. A. R., belonging to Major May Post, Pendleton. He is also connected with the I. O. O. F., of Pendleton. Until locating on his present homestead in Ingalls in 1878, Mr. Cottrell lived on a small farm in Green township.

J. RICHARD FRANCIS, president of the Francis Pharmacy Company, Indianapolis, and chemist of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company, stands at the head of his profession, either from a business or a scientific standpoint. The concern of which he is now the head succeeded in 1905 to the business of the Hurty-Francis Pharmacy Company, which was founded by Dr. J. N. Hurty, the present Secretary of the State Board of Health of Indiana. The establishment, in its equipment and conduct, is worthy of its founder and of the present proprietors, all of whom have made an honest endeavor to maintain the highest standards known to the professional and business circles with which they have relations. The prescription department ranks among the very best in the Middle West, the laboratory has no superior in the city or in the State. The work done in both is always performed with the utmost regard for the public good as well as punctilious service to patrons. Mr. Francis, as the son of a physician who distinguished himself in thirty years of successful practice in Shelby county, this State, may be credited with inheriting the mental and moral stamina which have won him pre-eminence in his chosen line. Nevertheless, the credit is due for the most part to his own unabated exertions from the time he embarked upon his independent career.

Mr. Francis has an interesting ancestry, the early records showing instances in every generation of independence of spirit, enterprise and courage. These traits are indicated especially by their readiness to take up life in untried fields, the first generation of this branch of the Francis family in this country having come from Wales and settled in the Eastern States, whence his father moved to the new State of Indiana when he struck out for himself. On the maternal side we find that the emigrant ancestor came from his native Germany to Lancaster county, Pa., and later moved to Ohio, whence his son came to Shelby county, Indiana.

Three Francis brothers came to America from Wales, one settling in New York, one in New Jersey and one in Virginia. J. Richard Francis is descended from the New Jersey settler. His great-grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier. His grandfather, Richard Francis, was a large land owner in New Jersey, and a man of standing, being a squire of his county and noted for his strict Christian principles. He was a great Bible student. He married Anna Carr, a member of a prominent New Jersey family, and distantly related to Napoleon Bonaparte, and they had a large family.

Dr. Joseph Francis, son of Richard and Anna (Carr) Francis, was born in Monmouth country, N. J., and was there reared and educated. His father was a very strict disciplinarian with his sons, and because of a thrashing administered by his father, Joseph, who had some of the paternal spirit, left home at the age of eighteen years, coming West to Indiana with his brother, Dr. Edward T. Francis. The boys had grit and ability, and they determined to make their way to success in spite of the adverse circumstances then prevailing in their new surroundings. They settled in Shelby county, Ind., where they had found employment cutting cordwood for a prominent farmer of the locality named Banker. Being totally unused to such work they found it particularly severe, but they kept at it so bravely that they won the goodwill and respect of both Mr. and Mrs. Banker, who forthwith invited the young men to make their home with them. The offer was accepted, and the Francis brothers took up the study of medicine with Mr. Banker's sons Wilson and Adoniram, all four young men becoming physicians. They all attended the Hartsville Classical School, an Indiana institution of learning famous in that day.

Joseph Francis, in whom we are particularly interested, was graduated from the Ohio Medical College, of Cincinnati, and was offered the chair of Chemistry there, but he refused, preferring to embark upon private practice at once. He located at Fountain-town, in Shelby county, Ind., and though often urged to change to a wider field by brother physicians and patrons who recognized his unusual mastery of the science of medicine and his skill in applying his knowledge he remained there to the close of his days, a period of thirty years. As may be judged, he was uncommonly successful, both as to the number of patients he attended and the manner in which he handled his cases. He was a high type of the devoted family physician, possessing a comprehensive knowledge of general medicine equaled by few, and was regarded with especial confidence as a reliable obstetrician. At one time he did not remove his clothing for sixteen days. He was attending thirty-two cases of typhoid-pneumonia, and lost but one—a wonderful record indeed. Dr. Elder, for many years secretary of the Indiana Medical College, practiced in the same neighborhood with Dr. Francis, and in adjoining territories, and they became warm friends. When Dr. Elder settled in Indianapolis he tried to induce Dr. Francis to accompany him hither, as his partner, he, in common with other friends and admirers of the latter, believing he could win a high place in the profession under more favorable circumstances. But he preferred the location of his first choice, and continued in practice there until his death, March 14, 1893. Dr. Joseph Francis married Catherine Mutz, daughter of Hon. Jacob and Anna Maria (Snepp) Mutz, and their only child was J. Richard Francis, whose name introduces this sketch.

Hon. Jacob Mutz, maternal grandfather of Mr. Francis, was a native of Lancaster county, Pa., and a pioneer of Shelby county, Ind. His father was a native of Germany, his mother Mary (Frybarger) Mutz, a native of Switzerland. Jacob Mutz was three or four years old when his parents moved to Miami county, Ohio, about 1828-29, and there they died. When he was a young man he moved farther west, settling in Shelby county, Ind., and not long afterward married Anna Maria Snepp, like himself a native of Lancaster county, Pa. She belonged to an old family of that section. They had a wedded life of over fifty years, celebrating their golden wedding, and she passed away not long afterward, in October, 1898. Mr. Mutz subsequently married late in life. To the first union were born ten children, six of whom still survive, namely: Mrs. George Kinsley, of Shelbyville, Ind.; the wife of Dr. William Pierson, of Morristown, Ind.; Mrs. Dillon H. Payne, of Bloomfield, Iowa; Dr. C. M. Mutz, of Maysville, Kans.; Philo J. Mutz, of Jackson township, Shelby Co., Ind.; and Oscar U. Mutz, of Edinburg, Indiana.

Hon. Jacob Mutz was in his day one of the well-known Democrats of Shelby county, and he was three times elected to the Legislature, in 1860, 1862 and 1884, receiving a large majority at each election. He was well known in other public capacities, having served fourteen years as a member of the State board of agriculture, and for a number of years as a trustee of Purdue University, to which position he was appointed by Governor Porter; he continued to hold it until he went back to the Legislature, in 1884. He passed away Sept. 6, 1906, when nearly eighty-three years old, and his funeral was conducted by the Masonic fraternity, of which he was a prominent member. He was buried in St. George cemetery near the St. George Lutheran Church, near Edinburg, Ind., in which he had long held membership, and he was a firm believer in the doctrines of his denomination and a zealous worker in the church to which he belonged. He organized the Sunday-school of that church, which is still flourishing, a monument to his zeal and an honor to his memory. The members of this Sunday-school sent their tribute to the mass of blossoms which covered the grave of this honored man. Mr. Mutz not only reared a large family of his own, but also, at different times, had the care of several orphan children, to whose interests he gave his best energies. Seven grandsons and seven granddaughters survived him, Mr. J. Richard Francis, our subject, being the eldest of the grandsons.

J. Richard Francis was born Dec. 31, 1870, in Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind., where he was reared and received his early schooling. He obtained his professional preparation at Purdue University, graduating March 14, 1893—the day of his father's death. It was his father's ambition that he enter the medical profession, but upon his graduation he was recommended by the dean of his alma mater to Dr. J. N. Hurty for the position of assistant in his analytical laboratory. The Dean's judgment of his special fitness was verified in the aptitude he at once displayed for his duties, and he continued to assist Dr. Hurty until the latter was elected secretary of the State Board of Health, when Mr. Francis was admitted to a partnership, taking charge of the drug business which Dr. Hurty had established, and which was originally known as the J. N. Hurty Pharmacy Company. The business of this concern has always been conducted on a most honorable basis, and its name has never been used in connection with the advertisement or popularization of patent medicines, or questionable undertakings of any kind. In connection with his pharmacy Dr. Hurty opened an analytical laboratory, which has been continued successfully ever since. There all the drugs received into the pharmacy undergo careful preliminary inspection.

tion, and considerable work from outside sources is also done there, such as the analysis of water, the chemical work for the C. C. C. & St. L. Railway Company, etc., for which the laboratory is particularly well equipped. All this is carried on under the personal supervision of Mr. Francis, who has attained a reputation for ability and trustworthiness not surpassed by any member of the profession in this State. He is connected with the Indiana Pharmaceutical Association, the American Chemical Society and the American Pharmaceutical Society, and is at present a member of the committee on commercial interests of the last named organization. Mr. Francis has put his vigorous mentality to many severe tests in the past few years, which have been devoted to work taxing to the utmost his physical as well as his intellectual strength. Fortunately he is endowed with a strong constitution and has had excellent health, which has made possible his continued exertions from the time he entered upon his present line. The opinions of authorities in the medical profession who have been in a position to judge of his work and worth will be of interest here.

Dr. William N. Wishard has commented upon his achievements as follows: "J. R. Francis is a thoroughly scientific pharmacist who makes a conscientious effort toward the highest ideals of scientific dispensing. He is thoroughly trained, and has an enthusiastic devotion to his work and a keen appreciation of the present-day pharmaceutical requirements, and justly deserves the high reputation he bears."

Dr. Clevenger says (June 7, 1907): "Mr. Francis is a very fine chemist. Inheriting mental qualities of a high order, he has attained the position he occupies by hard study and natural adaptability. He has the strictly ethical pharmacy of the city and State, and the most completely equipped laboratory in the city or State."

Dr. Ferguson has expressed himself as follows: "J. R. Francis is one of the few ethical druggists of the State. Graduated in pharmacy and in chemistry in Purdue University, son of a distinguished physician, he came to Indianapolis as chemist of J. N. Hurty, and became Dr. Hurty's partner under the firm name of the Hurty-Francis Pharmacy Company, and later succeeded Dr. Hurty. He has a most complete laboratory, is chemist for the Big Four Railway Company. He is a success because doctors know they can trust him. He has trained pharmacists who put up his prescriptions. The store has always had a high reputation for honesty and purity in compounding prescriptions. Mr. Francis has sustained the high reputation established by J. N. Hurty. He is by nature and by training adapted to his profession—this is the secret of his success."—June 18, 1907.

Dr. Brayton, Editor of "The Indiana Medical Journal," says: "J. R. Francis is the head of a house that has sustained a high reputation for thirty years, established by Dr. J. N. Hurty, the secretary of the Indiana health board. J. R. Francis' father was a physician of prominence. Young Francis is a graduate of Purdue University. He is a technical chemist and has paid particular attention to the study and examination of oils and waters for manufacturing, commercial and sanitary uses. His ability was recognized by the Big Four. He has the confidence of the laity and profession of medicine, because of his training, capacity and honesty, and he has surrounded himself with trained assistants. His gentlemanly, genial qualities are of the highest order, and he is entitled to the high estimation in which he is held. He has taught chemistry in the dental and medical colleges of the city."—June 18, 1907.

Dr. Samuel E. Earp, a well-known medical teacher and writer of Indiana, also writes of him: "J. R. Francis is a competent, reputable and ethical pharmacist, but this is not all; the large retail drug establishment of which he is the proprietor has in connection with it a well equipped laboratory for the purpose of standardizing his stock and this he gives his personal supervision. His cautious and painstaking methods are characteristic of but few men in active business life. His thoroughness in details with a view of reaching perfection is the secret of his success."

Mr. Francis is well known socially, belonging to various prominent organizations of Indianapolis. He is a Freemason of the thirty-second degree and a well-known Shriner, a member of the University Club and of the Kappa Sigma fraternity, an honorary member of the Xi Psi Phi fraternity, a member of the Columbia Club and of the German House. He was married in August, 1899, to Miss Helen Dalrymple, a native of Morristown, Ind., only child of John M. and Mary Ellen (Hargrove) Dalrymple. Mr. Dalrymple is treasurer of the Indianapolis Saddlery Company. He is a native of Virginia, of an old and prominent family, his ancestors having come to the State at an early date from Scotland. He is prominently identified in the circles of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is an active member of the Central Avenue Church of Indianapolis of that denomination. He is prominent in the charities of the city and State, having served on the State Board of Charities and donated the John M. Dalrymple room in the Methodist State Hospital. Mr. Dalrymple is also prominent in Masonic circles, holding both the Knight Templar and Scottish Rite degrees. Mrs. Dalrymple, nee Hargrove, traces her ancestry on the paternal side through ancestors who came from Scotland to Maryland at an early day, and on her maternal side to an old Virginia family by the name of Smith, who were large slave owners before the war. She is of Scotch-Irish descent.

Mrs. Dalrymple and Mrs. Francis, her daughter, are both prominent members of Central Avenue M. E. Church. Mrs. Francis is identified with the musical circles of the city and the Federation of Women's Clubs, having served in official capacities in the last named organization. She is also a member of Alpha Chi Omega Greek letter society and was initiated at DePauw University, where she attended college. Mr. Francis, the subject of this sketch, retains his membership in St. George Lutheran Church previously mentioned.

OSCAR N. WILMINGTON, one of the highest salaried clerks in the registry department of the postoffice at Indianapolis, has been in that division for nineteen years, and in the efficient and faithful discharge of his duties has risen from the bottom to the top by regular promotion, serving at two different times as superintendent of the division under three postmasters. He has proved himself a most worthy official, and has seen the force of his department grow from three to eleven clerks. Born in Lawrence township, Marion county, Ind., he is a son of George and Emma (Day) Wilmington.

Elisha Wilmington, his grandfather, was of good English descent, and made his home for many years in Bucks county, Pa. A wagon and carriage maker by trade, he made that occupation the business of his life. After some years he moved to Ohio, in which State he passed his last days, dying there. In his family were nine children: John, who died in Indiana; Joseph, Thomas and Levi, who died in Ohio; George, who is mentioned below; Anna, Mrs. Jonathan Jones; Eliza, Mrs. H. Hatfield; Mary, Mrs. R. Marshall; and Marjorie, Mrs. J. Hunter. The two last named died in Lawrence township, Marion county. The father, a plain, honest mechanic, gave his attention for the most part to the steady pursuit of business.

George Wilmington, father of Oscar N., inherited his father's taste for mechanical work, and was possessed of much business ability. Born in Ohio, he was reared in that State, and there, assisting his father, early learned the wagon and carriage maker's trade, becoming in time a very proficient worker. Naturally he embarked upon life as a carriage maker, and settling in Ohio, there followed his business with marked success for many years; in 1844, however, he moved to Marion county, Ind., settling in Lawrence township, where he opened a shop and continued the manufacture of wagons and carriages. Prospering in his business, he conducted it throughout life, winning for himself a good livelihood, and commanding the confidence of the public as an expert workman. Soon after his arrival in this place, he purchased some sparsely improved land nearby, where he moved his family, and overlooked the cultivation and clearing of the land. A wise manager, he in time made here a very attractive home for himself, where he made his residence while carrying on his trade. Conducting an extensive agricultural industry, he made well out of this venture, and afterward purchased another farm, located in Hancock county, where he also superintended improvements, and from the cultivation of which he derived a good profit upon his investment. He was ever a shrewd, practical manager, and accumulated considerable property in his lifetime. He died at his home in Lawrence township, in 1848.

In his young manhood George Wilmington married Miss Emma Day, who was the daughter of an Irish farmer of Pennsylvania, who settled in Ohio and died there. He had eight children: Artemus; John; Elijah; Edith, Mrs. Philips; Artamica, Mrs. Hawk; Adda, deceased, who never married; Emma, Mrs. Wilmington; and Minerva, deceased, who never married.

Mrs. Wilmington survived her husband, and remaining on the home farm continued to improve it, and erected thereon one of the first frame houses in the neighborhood. She passed her last days with her daughter, Mrs. Johnston, and died in September, 1863. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilmington were born eight children: (1) Levi Franklin, who was disabled for life in the service of his country during the Civil war, and received an honorable discharge, was during his early manhood a blacksmith and cabinet maker, and after his discharge from the service he held the positions of railway postal clerk and secret service officer. (2) Edward Melvin, a farmer, school teacher, mercantile clerk, and serving as deputy treasurer and auditor of Marion county, was given the nomination on the Republican ticket for auditor, but was defeated with the rest of the ticket. He was elected recorder by the county commissioners to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Greenfield, and afterward made an unsuccessful race for the nomination for recorder, but was defeated by Col. Darnell. (3) Artamica died in infancy. (4) Oliver C. died in the service of the Civil war. (5) Adda died in infancy. (6) Narcissus married Joseph F. Johnston, a prominent farmer of this county. (7) Oscar N. is mentioned below. (8) Elijah D., a retired farmer and Civil war veteran, now resides in Eaton, Indiana.

George Wilmington, the father of the above family, was a large-hearted, generous man, with an open-door hospitality for all. Ministers of all denominations received at his home a hearty welcome, but especially those of the Methodist Church, to which both he and his wife belonged. A benevolent man, he gave liberally to all worthy enterprises. In political sentiment he was a staunch Whig.

Oscar N. Wilmington passed his early life on his mother's farm in Lawrence township, and there received careful rearing and practical training for the duties of life. For a time during his young manhood he assisted his mother in carrying on the farm. After she took up her residence with Mrs. Johnston, he started out as a farm hand, and thus continued until the commencement of the Civil war. Then in response to the call for troops, and when only sixteen years of age, he enlisted Dec. 18, 1861, at Indianapolis, Ind., in Company F, 57th Ind. V. I., under Col. J. W. T. McMullen, and on Dec. 23, 1861, went into camp on Gen. Buckner's farm near Louisville, Ky. With Gens. Buell and McCook in command, he with the rest of the force, soon went to the front. Arriving at Somerset, Ky., after the fight there, they proceeded to Shiloh, arriving there in time to witness the close of the engagement. Then moving forward to Corinth, Miss., they soon entered in earnest in the engagements, participating in the campaign with Bragg. After a march through Alabama they were with Gen. Buell on the famous forced march of 300 miles through Tennessee and Kentucky, Sept. 3d to 26th, 1862. Mr. Wilmington saw active service at the battles of Perryville, Tallahoma, Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, and took part in many other engagements with his command. He was in the forced march from Chattanooga to Knoxville, Tenn., in which they covered 140 miles in eight days, to relieve General Burnside. During the cold New Year's day and night of 1864 the command bivouacked without tents, blankets or overcoats. On Feb. 13, 1864, Mr. Wilmington re-enlisted as a veteran, and when the army was re-organized his regiment was made a part of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Fourth Army Corps, Army of the Cumberland. He went through all the hardest fighting in Tennessee, engaging in the battles of Rocky Face Ridge, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Jonesboro, Ga., and many others. From Jonesboro, Ga., under General Thomas, he participated in the pursuit of Hood. He was at the battle of Spring Hill, Nov. 29th; Franklin, Nov. 30th; at Nashville, Dec. 15-16th; and then proceeded to Huntsville, Ala., and from there to Buell's Gap, Tenn., in March, 1865. Thence he went to Nashville, and was soon afterward sent to Texas. He received his honorable discharge Dec. 14, 1865, at Port Lavaca, Texas, and was mustered out of service, Jan. 3, 1866, at Indianapolis, Ind. He was a thoroughly brave and faithful soldier. In November, 1864, he was promoted to corporal; on Feb. 2, 1865, to first sergeant; and on March 1, 1865, was commissioned and on April 1st mustered in as first lieutenant, receiving his commission from Gov. Morton. He was given the command of his company when only nineteen years old. Throughout his service in the army he escaped being made a prisoner, and received but a few slight wounds.

After the war Mr. Wilmington followed the business of contractor and builder in Lawrence township until 1880, working up a large business in that line. Encouraged by his successes he then located in Indianapolis, and for a year engaged in the same line there. In 1881, under Postmaster J. A. Wildman, he was appointed to the registry department, a position he filled with marked ability until 1885. Under the Cleveland administration he was engaged in carpenter work on the State House, which was then in process of construction, and he also filled other contracts. When Harrison was made President, he again received his appointment to the registry department, acting as superintendent through this term. In 1898 he was again appointed to this same position; he is at present acting as one of the clerks in the division. An excellent business man, conscientious in the discharge of every duty, he has won the entire confidence both of officials and of the general public. He is a man of means and owns a pleasant residence at No. 1516 Brookside avenue, in this city.

On Dec. 25, 1873, Mr. Wilmington married Christine Shubert, who was born in Cumberland county, Pa., and they have four children: Anna, who married James A. Daugherty (who is with the Atlas Engine Company); Edward N., who is a salesman with D. B. Fisk & Co., of Chicago; N. Gertrude, unmarried; and Elmer E., a salesman with the Fahnley & McCrea Millinery Company, of Indianapolis.

Mr. Wilmington is a man of many attainments, capable of turning easily from one line of business to another. In the discharge of each task he is conscientious, thorough and efficient, and is one destined to rise in whatever sphere he is placed. A broad-minded, well-informed man, he is keenly interested in the topics of the day. In politics he affiliates with the Republicans. Possessed of many social attributes, he has won for himself many warm friends, and fraternally he belongs to the I. O. O. F., the K. of P., and Buckle Post, G. A. R.

Adam Shubert, father of Mrs. Wilmington, was born in Hessen-Cassel, Germany, and during his early life came to America, and settled in Pennsylvania. He afterward settled in North Vernon, Ind., where he engaged in the mercantile business for the most part throughout his active career. He died in February, 1881. He was married twice, his first wife dying in North Vernon, in 1863. His second wife also died in that place. By the first union he was the father of six children: Julia, who married P. Seipel; Henry, who died young; Eliza, who married N. B. Freeman; George, who died in the service during the Civil war; Anna, unmarried; Christine, Mrs. Wilmington. By the second union he had two children: Caroline, unmarried; and Mamie, who is the wife of a Mr. Ervin. Mr. Shubert was a wealthy, influential merchant, and occupied a high social position. As a leading member of the Lutheran Church, he long acted as steward therein.

ANDREW J. VANMATRE, one of the good, reliable citizens of Madison county, Ind., who has for many years been engaged in agricultural pursuits in Fall Creek township, was a soldier in the great Civil war. He was born Feb. 27, 1841, in Mason county, W. Va., son of John and Delitha (Peck) Vanmatre.

The Vanmatres were of Pennsylvania stock. John was a son of Absalom, one of five brothers, among whom were John, Colonel Reeves and two others, whose names are forgotten. Col. Reeves Vanmatre was a colonel in the War of 1812, and was in the battle of Tippecanoe, under General Harrison. Absalom Vanmatre was born in Pennsylvania, and was one of the earliest pioneers of Mason county, W. Va. He settled in the woods and cleared his farm, which was situated a short distance back from the Ohio river bottom. The land was very fertile, and Absalom gained 260 acres, becoming a very substantial farmer. He lived to be eighty-five years old, dying on his farm, a respected citizen. For seven years he had served as justice of the peace. His children were: John, Reeves, Joseph, Peter, Betsy Ann and Sallie.

John Vanmatre was born in Mason county, W. Va. He secured land from his father, in the primitive state, on the Ohio bottoms, and owned a fine farm. He married Delitha Peck, born in the same county, daughter of Peter and Polly Peck. Peter Peck was a native of Pennsylvania, of German stock, and moved at an early day to Hancock county, Ind., where he was an early pioneer, making a fine farm for himself and family, upon which he died. He had two other children, James and Polly. After marriage John Vanmatre settled in Mason county, and there passed the remainder of his days on his farm, upon which he had erected good buildings. In politics he was a Democrat. His death occurred at forty-five years, the result of an accident, while his wife survived until her eighty-sixth year, dying at the home of her daughter, Mary Smith. The children born to John Vanmatre and his wife were: Nancy, Jacob, George, David, Andrew, Henry, John, Emeline, Agnes and Mary.

Of the above family four sons were in the Civil war. Henry and Andrew were in the same regiment. The former served from July, 1862, veteranized in the same regiment, and was honorably discharged at the close of the war. Although never wounded in battle, or confined to the hospital, Henry Vanmatre's health was greatly impaired by his long and arduous services on the field. Jacob was in Company C, 4th W. Va. Regiment, and served until the close of the war. His knee was shattered at the battle of Vicksburg, but he served out his time at Rock Island, Ill., in the Invalid Corps. David was in Missouri when the war broke out, and was obliged to enlist in a Confederate regiment early in the war, while trying to get home. He served until 1864, making several attempts to escape, once getting as far as St. Louis, when he was captured and returned to his regiment, after which he was carefully watched. He escaped in 1864 in Virginia, and enlisted in the 13th W. Va. Infantry, in which he served until the close of the war.

Andrew J. Vanmatre was reared among the pioneers, and had but little chance to receive an education, attending school sixty days each winter. This was a subscription school, held in a log cabin, furnished with split pinecheons for seats. He enlisted at the age of twenty-two years, at Point Pleasant, W. Va., July 4, 1862, as a private of Company B, 12th Virginia Light Artillery. He served until the fall of 1862, when an accident received incapacitated him for army service. While on his way to join his regiment at Wheeling, he was on a river steamer on the Ohio river. A cable was sent out by five men to fasten to a tree, the cable being fastened to the windlass. One of the men stumbling, the weight of the heavy cable and five men fell upon Mr. Vanmatre, injuring him, so that on this account he was finally discharged. After this he served on the Mississippi, Cumberland and Tennessee rivers as a boatman, being under Commander Foote on the Cumberland for three months. For three seasons he served as a hand on steamboats, all of which time was spent in the government's service except three months.

After the war Mr. Vanmatre returned to West Virginia and engaged in farming. In 1865 he came to Madison county, returning to West Virginia in 1866. He married, in Mason county, W. Va., Jan. 18, 1866, Louisa McLane, daughter of Milton and Mary (Somerville) McLane, who were of Scotch stock. Mary Somerville was the daughter of Mary and Robert (Young) Somerville. Robert Somerville was one of the earliest pioneers of Mason county, W. Va., and owned 500 acres of land, which he had cleared up from the wilderness. Milton McLane was born in West Virginia, in Jackson county, and followed farming in Mason county. He died in middle life, leaving two children: Wesley and Louisa.

Mr. Vanmatre rented land adjoining his present property in 1900, buying eighty acres of excellent farm land, which constitutes his present home. Mrs. Louisa Vanmatre died Feb. 16, 1891, on the farm, in the faith of the Presbyterian Church. She left these children: Otto, Osra W., Laura and Maryetta. In politics a Democrat, Mr. Vanmatre takes a great interest in the success of his party. Fraternally he is associated with the I. O. O. F., No. 88, Pendleton.

Mr. Vanmatre married (second) Catherine Jordan, nee Saunders, daughter of John and Maria (Shover) Saunders, and widow of William Jordan, a farmer of Fall Creek township, and a veteran of the Civil war, having served in a Virginia regiment of the Confederate army. The children born to Mrs. Vanmatre's first marriage were: Lora, Alice and Rettie.

ORVILLE C. AND JOHN N. GORDON.
Neither the history of Great Britain nor that of the United States could be written without the mention of a Gordon. Yet not alone in places so prominent as to be handed down to posterity have the bearers of the name been found, but also have there been Gordons who have lived honorable and useful lives in the various communities, removed from the limelight of publicity. Honorable lineage entails the responsibility of upright living, and in Madison county, Ind., dwell Orville C. and John N. Gordon, public-spirited and patriotic citizens and successful and popular business men.

The ancient seat of the Gordons in Strathgogie, Scotland, is one of the finest castellated remains in the country, and Gordon castle in Banffshire, the most princely edifice in the north of Scotland. The Gordon ARMS: Quartered, first azure, three boars' heads, erased or, for Gordon; second or, three lions' heads, erased gules, for Badenock; third or, three crescents within a double treasure gules, for Seton; fourth azure, three cinque foils, argent, for Fraser. CREST: In a marquis coronet or, a stag's head quadrant proper. Supports, two greyhounds, argent, each gougued with collar gules, and buckles or. Motto: Bydant. The badge is Rock Ivy, and the war cry "A Gordon! A Gordon!" The march and salute of the Gordons were fine specimens of the peculiar music of the bag pipes. The plaid is green striped with black and white.

The early Scotch line is of especial interest. It is definitely proved that there were many of the name in France prior to the Norman Conquest, and it is supposed that members of the family accompanied William the Conqueror to England, later going with King Malcolm Canmore, or his son King David, to Scotland. Tradition says that in the reign of King Malcolm Canmore, a knight by the name of Gordon visited Scotland and killed a huge wild boar which had infested the borders. For this the King granted him land in the Merse, or Berwickshire, which he called Gordon. He took the boar's head for his armorial bearings, and he afterward made Scotland his home, becoming the progenitor of all who bear the name in that country. Mention is made of Adam de Gordon, and Adam, his son, during the reign of King Malcolm and of his son King David.

Ricardus de Gordon, grandson of the Knight and son of Adam de Gordon, became prominent in the reign of King Malcolm IV, and his successor King William the Lion (1165). Donations made to St. Mary's Church at Kelso, "and the monks serving God there," and to St. Michaels in the village of Gordon, between 1150 and 1200, would indicate he possessed the family lands in Berwickshire. His death occurred about 1200.

Sir Thomas de Gordon, son of Ricardus, confirmed by charter his father's donations to the churches above named. He died in the reign of Alexander II. At this same time there lived one Adam de Gordon, who owned a part of the lordship at Gordon, hence is supposed to have been a near relative.

Sir Thomas de Gordon, son of Sir Thomas, died without male issue, and his daughter Alicia succeeded to the estates. She wedded her cousin Adam de Gordon, who was one of the chief commanders of the 1,000 auxiliary forces sent by King Alexander III to attend King Louis of France on his expedition to the Holy Land. He died while on this Crusade, and his son

Sir Adam de Gordon succeeded to the estates. He married an English maiden.

Sir Adam de Gordon, son of Sir Adam, became one of the leaders of his time, in learning, in statesmanship, and in the field. He was the friend and assistant of Sir William Wallace in his expedition to Galloway. After taking the castle of Wigtown Sir William made Sir Adam its keeper in 1297. King Robert of Scotland rewarded him for his faithful services by granting him the lordship of Strathbogie, in Aberdeenshire, and there he made his home, giving to his lands the name of Huntly. He was killed at the battle of Halidon Hill in 1333.

Sir Alexander Gordon, of Huntly, son of Sir Adam, was a loyal subject to King David Bruce, and behaved with great valor at the battle of Halidon Hill in which his father lost his life. He accompanied King David to England, and was slain at the battle of Durham in 1346.

Sir John Gordon, son and successor of Sir Alexander, was taken prisoner with King David at the battle of Durham, and did not secure his freedom again until 1357. His wife's name was Elizabeth.

Sir John Gordon, of Huntly, son of Sir John and his wife Elizabeth, became a noted soldier, feared by the English, but greatly beloved by his own vassals. In 1372, at Carron, he routed the English under Sir John Lilburn, whom he took prisoner, and he was killed in 1388 at the battle of Otterburn.

Sir Adam Gordon, son of the brave Sir John, was killed at the battle of Homildon Hill in 1402. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Keith, grand marshal of Scotland, and their daughter Elizabeth succeeded to the estates.

Elizabeth Gordon, daughter of Sir Adam, married Alexander Seaton, second son of Sir William Seaton, ancestor of the Earls of Winton. He was called Lord of Gordon and Huntly.

Alexander, Lord Gordon, son of Elizabeth, was a man of great wisdom and diplomacy, and was made one of the commissioners appointed to treat with the English for the liberty of King James, and in 1423 was one of the hostages for his ransom. Because of his services in the ministry of his country King James II created him Earl of Huntly.

George, second Earl of Huntly, became a privy councillor on the accession of James IV, and from 1498 to 1502 was lord lieutenant of the northern part of Scotland, resigning in the latter year. He died in 1507.

Alexander, son of George, and third Earl of Huntly, like his father, was a privy councillor. He was one of the sureties for peace with the English in 1509. At the unfortunate battle of Flodden Field he commanded the right wing of the army, being very successful, but as the left wing was overpowered, and the King and many nobles slain, he made his escape at sundown.

John, Lord Gordon, son of Alexander, married Jean, natural daughter of King James IV by Margaret, daughter of John, Lord Drummond. He died in 1517.

George, eldest son of John, succeeded to the title of Earl of Huntly. In 1535 he was made a member of the privy council, and was Lord Lieutenant of the West, and Captain General of the forces raised to oppose the English, whom he defeated at Holdenry. He held the Duke of Norfolk in check, and, it is said, attempted to apprehend the person of Queen Mary. He was attacked by the Queen's forces at Corrichie, defeated and killed. His son John was executed the next day at Aberdeen, and the estates forfeited to the Crown. Later another son, Adam, was pardoned, and in 1567 the estates, honors and dignities were restored to the family.

George, Earl of Huntly, to whom the estates were restored, became a favorite of the Queen, and was by her made Lord High Chancellor of the Kingdom. When the war cloud gathered he became commander of all the forces of the North, but being forced to come to terms with the Earl of Morton, returned to his estate, and died in May, 1576.

George, son of George, was a devout Catholic, and died in 1636. He was raised to the dignity of Marquis of Huntly.

George, son of the first Marquis of Huntly, was a captain of the Scotch gendarmes to Louis XIII of France, but returned to Scotland when the Civil war broke out, becoming Lieutenant of the North. For his loyalty to the King he was denied pardon by Parliament and his lands and estates forfeited in 1647. He was executed at Edinburgh March 30, 1649.

Louis, third Marquis of Huntly, did not long survive his father, but died in 1653, and was succeeded by his son.

Marquis of Huntly, the fourth of the title, was restored to the whole of the estates, and created Duke of Gordon, by King Charles II. On the accession of James VII he was made one of the lords of the treasury, member of the privy council, governor of the castle of Edinburgh and Knight of the Thistle. During the Revolution he held Edinburgh castle as long as there was any hope, and finally, surrendering to King William, retired to his home, and there passed away in 1716. He was the last Catholic chief of his race.

Alexander, second Duke of Gordon, died in 1728, and was succeeded by his son, Cosmo George, third Duke of Gordon, who was elected a member of the British Parliament in 1747. He died in August, 1754, and was succeeded by his son Alexander.

Lord George Gordon, great-grandson of the first Duke of Gordon, was the leader of the Gordon riots of 1780 in London, directed against the Catholics. In 1836 the title became extinct, but was revived in 1876 for the benefit of the Duke of Richmond.

Members of the family became Earls of Sutherland, and the Lords of Lochinvar were Gordons. Prominent members of the family were: Lord Byron (whose mother was a Gordon); Charles George Gordon, the "Hero of Khartum" or "Chinese Gordon."

The rapid spread of the name Gordon, however, was not due to the families of this line. Until the middle of the fifteenth century, surnames were practically unknown in the Highlands, and then they adopted the custom of the Irish, decreed by act of Parliament in 1465, that "they should take to them a surname," etc., and while the Irish in many cases took the name of town or trade, the Scotch took the name of their new lords, to whom they swore allegiance. A regiment of 1,000 Gordons went to the Crimean war, and were nearly wiped out. For many years the Gordon regiment has been a feature of the British army, and its review near Edinburgh castle is an imposing sight.

Among the American Gordons may be mentioned: James Gordon, 1746-1792, second lieutenant Capt. Nathan Adams' company, Col. John Haglet, Delaware Line, Jan. 19-Dec., 1776; Col. George Gordon, commander of Fort Pitt in 1777; Dr. William Gordon, an early historian of the American Revolution; Rev. William Gordon, 1774; George Gordon, born 1758, a patriot of the Revolution, and a descendant of Adam Gordon, of the Kenmore branch, who came to America with his brothers George and Alexander, and settled in Pennsylvania; Timothy Gordon (descendant of Thomas of Brantwood, N. H.), born at Brantwood, N. H., Dec. 30, 1757, died Newburyport, Mass., Jan. 16, 1838, a soldier in Capt. Daniel Moore's Company, Stark's Brigade, participating at Bunker Hill, Bennington and Saratoga, and in the war of 1812, doing the iron work on sloop of war; Thomas Gordon, appointed lieutenant in Maryland Line Feb. 20, 1777, and resigned July 1, 1778; Ambrose and William Gordon, both lieutenants, and Arthur Gordon, a private, in the Continental army; Abraham Van Gordon, captured at Fort Washington, and sent to prison ships in New York harbor, where he is supposed to have died; Thomas Gordon, a private in Capt. John Lacey's Company, Col. Wayne's Pennsylvania Battalion, in 1776; Alexander Gordon, a private, Jan. 24, 1776, Capt. Abraham Smith's company, Col. William Irvine's Pennsylvania Battalion; Col. James Gordon, in New York militia in Revolution; Capt. Henry Gordon, chief engineer of North America, 1767; George Henry Gordon, graduate of West Point, 1846, served in Civil war, and as Brigadier General at Cedar Mountain, South Mountain and Antietam, and a writer of note; John Brown Gordon, of Georgia, Lieutenant General in Confederate army, member of United States Senate, Governor of Georgia. In civil life may be found mention of Patrick Gordon, appointed Governor of Pennsylvania in 1726; and William Gordon, 1728-1787, a clergyman and writer, who emigrated from England to Massachusetts, but later returned to England, sided with the patriots in their struggle and published a four-volume "History of the United States."

The branch of the family to which Orville C. and John N. Gordon, of Summitville, Indiana, belong is descended from William Gordon, a farmer, who settled on the Potomac river in Virginia, about thirty miles above where Washington now stands. He married Mary Duckworth, who was born between Liverpool and Lancaster, England, Sept. 4, 1731, and who came when quite young to the Virginia colony. To this marriage were born children as follows: Alice, Nancy, Polly, Elizabeth, and Sarah and William, Jr., twins. The father died before the birth of the last two children, and the widowed mother sold her small farm in Virginia, and in 1796 moved her little family to Kentucky. The proceeds of the farm were spent before the family reached Kentucky. This was a five months' journey, and was made in a very inclement season. The little family was detained three months at various places, and six weeks by the ice at Braddock's Rifle in the Ohio river. Of the children, Alice died in Indiana; Nancy and Polly in Kentucky; Elizabeth, Sarah and William, Jr., were all living as late as September, 1855.

William Gordon, Jr., was born Aug. 11, 1779, and was seventeen years old when he went with the family to Kentucky. At the age of twenty-four, in 1803, he married, in Kentucky, Elizabeth Kelly, who was born in Virginia, May 10, 1786, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Kelly. Thomas Kelly was born in London, England, and was twenty-one when he came to America about 1777 as a soldier under Lord Cornwallis. Deciding to make this country his home, he deserted and with a comrade went into Virginia, and it is believed he settled in Kentucky about 1802, as his daughter Elizabeth went there at that time. She was seventeen when she married. To Thomas and Elizabeth Kelly were born the following: Orville, Julia, Salina, Elizabeth, Evaline, Hilton B., William H., Isabella, Leonidas, Angeline, Mahlon C., Melvin H. and Chilon T. In 1812 William Gordon brought his family to Indiana, and settled in Metamora, Franklin county, about eight miles above Brookville. There, in company with other pioneers, he built a block-house for protection against the Indians. He entered land in the heavy timber and cleared up a fine farm on Duck creek, and in time became the owner of 1,000 acres of land. He was one of the substantial and prominent farmers of the locality, of the typical pioneer kind. In appearance he was tall and of large frame, and was very strong. Both he and his wife were Methodists, and were active in establishing the church in their community. In politics William Gordon was an old-line Whig. He died on his farm at the age of eighty years, the grandfather of ninety-six children. His last surviving child, Mahlon, died in February, 1903, aged seventy-eight. The children born to William and Elizabeth (Kelly) Gordon were: Orville, Leonidas, Evaline, Mahlon, William, Taylor, Milton, Angeline and Salina. Orville Gordon, son of William and Elizabeth, was born in Kentucky in 1805, and was therefore about seven years of age when he accompanied his parents to Indiana. He was brought up to farming and also learned the miller's trade. After his marriage he engaged in merchandising and milling, with his brothers, Mahlon and Milton, under the firm name of Gordon Brothers. They built a mill and store, and for nearly twenty years were very successful, the completion of the White Water canal creating a large business. Orville Gordon became a wealthy man, owning 1000 acres of land in three farms, and an interest in two mills and a mercantile establishment. In politics he was an old-line Whig of considerable influence, and he was one of the original Lincoln Republicans. He died in Metamora, aged about seventy-eight years, esteemed by all men. In Metamora he married Drusilla Blacklidge, daughter of Jacob Blacklidge, who was of English stock, and at an early day had removed from Kentucky to Indiana, some time later than the Gordons, and there became the owner of 500 acres of land. To this marriage the following children were born: Lottie, Lavina, Elizabeth, William F., Orville C. and John N. William F. was a major in the 68th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and participated in several battles of the Civil war.

Orville C. Gordon, son of Orville, and now a wealthy grain dealer and merchant, was born April 11, 1847, in Metamora. In his boyhood he attended the common schools, but his pursuit of an education was interrupted when he was fifteen by his enlistment for service in the Civil war, in August, 1862. He enlisted in Company C, 68th Indiana Infantry, for three years or during the war. At the fight at Munfordville, Ky., the entire regiment was captured, paroled and returned to Indiana. On account of his health which had been impaired by exposure, Mr. Gordon's father procured his discharge, but as soon as he had, in a measure, recovered, he re-enlisted in the early part of the winter of 1863, as a private of Company C, 13th Ind. V. I., for three years or during the war. He participated in the skirmishes along the James river under General Butler, was wounded through the right hip, and captured at Chester Station, Va., May 10, 1864. For two and a half months he was in a Confederate hospital at Richmond, where the attention was scant and the rations coarse corn bread. From there he was sent to Libby Prison, where for one month (parts of August and September) he was confined on the third floor with about 200 other prisoners in the same room. He slept on the floor. The rations here consisted of a small piece of corn bread with, occasionally, a small bite of beef and a little pea soup. After Libby he went to Belle Isle, in the James river, where no shelter at all was given the prisoners, and after about six weeks, Oct. 10, 1864, they were paroled and returned to Indiana. Mr. Gordon was later in the hospital at Annapolis, Md., and at Baltimore, in the latter place being declared unfit for further service and honorably discharged in June, 1865.

After the war Mr. Gordon returned to Metamora and engaged in farming, and for a time had a general store there. For four years he was government store keeper at Lawrenceburg, Ind., after which he came to Summitville, and in 1890 engaged in the grain business.

In 1871, Mr. Gordon married (first) in Metamora, Emma Cox, and after her death, he married (second) in Lebanon, Ohio, in 1897, Christina Thompson, daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Adams) Thompson. Mr. Gordon is a thirty-second degree Mason, belonging to the F. & A. M., Alexandria; R. A. M., Marion; K. T., and A. A. O. N. M. S., of Indianapolis. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and he has always been active in public affairs. He is a man keenly interested in the commercial and industrial development of his community, and is always ready with time and means to do a good citizen's part.

John N. Gordon, son of Orville and brother of Orville C., was born in Metamora April 10, 1851. He received a common school education, and was brought up to work on the farm, there learning the habits of industry that have been a distinguishing trait in his character. At the age of twenty-two he engaged in a mercantile business for himself at New Salem, Ind., where he continued until 1874, when he returned to Metamora, and engaged in farming one year. He then went to Elwood, where he engaged in business, and in July, 1879, he came to Summitville and began a furniture business. He was postmaster under Presidents Garfield and Harrison. In 1888 he engaged in the grain business in company with J. H. Fulton and George W. Green, under the firm name of Green & Co.

Later Mr. Green retired and the firm became Gordon & Fulton, and is now Gordon & Son, doing a general grain business. The firm has a high reputation for fair dealing, and is very popular with all farmers.

On Oct. 4, 1874, Mr. Gordon was married in Rush county, Indiana, to Mary E. Freeman, who was born at Laurel Hill, Franklin county. Their children were: Orville Earl, who died aged twenty-four years; Annie Pearl; and William C., postmaster at Summitville. The family attend the Christian Church. In his political faith Mr. Gordon is a staunch Republican, and always ready to do his part toward the success of his party. He is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and K. P., of Summitville, and is well liked by all who know him.

JOSEPH YOUNCE, one of the highly esteemed citizens of Muncie, Ind., and an honored veteran of the great Civil war, was born Jan. 12, 1845, in Miami county, Ohio, son of Joseph and Lydia Macy (Thayer) Younce, and grandson of Philip and Margaret (Burkett) Younce, natives of Neuse River, North Carolina.

Tradition says that the father of Philip Younce came from Germany. Philip was a cooper by trade and was married in North Carolina to Margaret Burkett, who was of German stock, and they removed to Kentucky about 1809, and to Ohio about 1810, where Philip Younce served under General Wayne against the Indians. He finally settled in Miami county, Ohio, where he entered 160 acres of land at the present site of Nashville, built a log cabin, cleared his land and made a good farm. He was a member of the German Baptist Church, being a founder of several churches both in Ohio and Indiana, and riding horseback far and near to preach to the settlers. His children were: John, born in 1809, died in 1865; Joseph, born in 1811, died in 1872; Andrew, born in 1814, died in 1863; George; Abraham, born in 1818, died in 1881; Isaac; Catherine: Eli, born in 1825, died in 1879; Davis and Mary. Philip Younce later sold his original homestead, and in company with his son-in-law, Henry Hammel, purchased another in the same county, which they later sold, moving to another property near Covington, where Mr. Younce died in his eightieth year. Of his sons,

John Younce was born in North Carolina or Kentucky, and married Nancy Knife, by whom he had ten children: Philip, Benjamin, Mahala, Andrew, John F., Margaret, Catherine, Amy, Joseph and Eli. John Younce was a cooper by trade, as well as a farmer, and like his father was a minister in the German Baptist Church. He settled on the Mississinewa river, west of Eaton, about 1849, and cleared a farm of 140 acres, also building a saw and grist mill. He went to California in 1852, and returned some years later, and his death occurred in Delaware county in his fifty-sixth year. His first wife died in Miami county, Ohio, and he married (second) Lucinda Mikel, their children being: Philip, Mary, Lydia and Hannah.

Joseph Younce, second son of Philip, was born in 1811 in Miami county, Ohio. He married Amy Knife, and their children were: Mary, Philip, Margaret, Elizabeth, Nancy, and Emaline, who died in infancy. The others all lived to rear families. Mr. Younce's first wife died, and he married (second) Lydia Macy, daughter of Thomas, a descendant of Thomas Macy, the original settler of Nantucket Island, the hero of Whittier's poem. By this marriage there were three children: Joseph, born in 1845; Minerva, born Sept. 14, 1848; and Henry H., born Sept. 9, 1853. Joseph Younce was a farmer and tanner, operating a tannery and harness shop in Frederickstown, Miami county, Ohio. In 1851 he sold out and bought a farm of sixty-five acres in Troy, Ohio, and in 1856 moved to Delaware Co., Ind. He settled on the Mississinewa river in Union township, where he took up eighty acres of land, on which there were eight acres cleared and a hewed log house. He finished clearing this land and then sold out and removed to another farm in the same township, here passing the remainder of his life. He died in 1872, in the faith of the German Baptist Church. He was originally a Democrat in politics, but on the organization of the Republican party, he was converted to its principles. His wife, Lydia Macy, had married (first) Ichabod Thayer, a woolen manufacturer of Miami county, and they had three children: Davis, Phoebe and Enos. Mr. Younce had two sons in the Civil war: Philip and Joseph, of whom Philip was in the 3rd Indiana Battery in the three years service, was in a number of battles, serving out his enlistment, and his health was badly impaired by exposure. A stepson, Enos Thayer, was a private of Company E, 19th Indiana, the Iron Brigade, and served three years, being in many battles with the Army of the Potomac, and was slightly wounded in the battles of Gettysburg and the Wilderness.

Andrew Younce, third son of Philip, was born in 1814, in Ohio, and died in 1863. He married Catherine Ellis, born in Ohio, and their children were: Sarah, Isabella, Susan, Nancy, David, Simeon, George, Mary and Francis, who died in childhood. Andrew Younce was a farmer, and lived in Ohio until moving to Indiana in 1857. He cleared up a good farm of 160 acres in Union township, and was a highly esteemed citizen.

George Younce, fourth son of Philip, was born in Ohio, and was a farmer and cooper by occupation, owning a tract of forty acres in Miami county, and later eighty acres in Union township, whither he had moved in 1855. He later sold this and moved several times, dying in Hartford City in the faith of the German Baptist Church, of which he was a deacon. He was also a carpenter by trade, and assisted to build the church of that denomination on the Mississinewa river in 1856-7. Mr. Younce married Mahala Mikel, of Miami county, Ohio, and to them were born these children: Philip, John, Samuel, Elizabeth, Ahizah, Abraham, Mary, Joseph, Margaret, Daniel and Alice.

Abraham Younce, fifth son of Philip, was born in Ohio, and died in 1881. He carried on farming, milling and tanning, his home being in Ohio, where he was a minister of the German Baptist faith. He married Elizabeth Helmick, in Miami county, Ohio, and to them were born these children: David, Caroline, William, Esley, Oliver, Elmira, Eli, Andrew and Webster.

Isaac Younce, sixth son of Philip, was born in Ohio, but removed to Delaware county and settled in Union township, northwest of Eaton, Ind., on eighty acres of land, which he cleared, and here he died about 1850. He married Diana Knife, and their children were: Catherine, Wesley, Marietta and Minerva.

Catherine Younce, the daughter of Philip, was born in Ohio, and married Jacob Helmick, a farmer and land owner of Miami county, Ohio, and to them were born these children: John, Mary, Emeline, Arnold, Philip, William, Esther, Davis, Ephraim, Margaret, Melinda, Harvey and Edward. This family were members of the German Baptist Church.

Eli Younce, the eighth child of Philip, was born in Ohio in 1825, and died in 1879.

He married Mary Mickel, and to them were born: George, Martha, Millie, Webster, Eli, Amanda, Hannah, William and Charles, all of whom are deceased, except George, who is living on the homestead. Eli Younce was a cooper and farmer and about 1854-5 removed to Union township, Delaware Co., Ind., purchasing eighty acres of land, which he later sold and bought 160 acres near Granville, in Union township. At the time of his death he was one of the substantial farmers of his section.

Davis Younce, ninth child of Philip, was born in Ohio, and was a wagon maker by trade, an occupation which he followed in Miami county, O., until about 1871, when he settled in Warsaw, Ind., where he died. He was a German Baptist minister and preached for several years. Davis Younce married Mary Ann Helmick, sister of his sister Catherine's husband, Jacob Helmick, and to this union there were born children as follows: Harriet, Perry, Alva, Clarinda, Sarah, Eunice, Frank and Pernelia.

Mary Younce, tenth and youngest child of Philip, was born in Ohio. She married Henry Hammel, a farmer, and they settled first in Miami county, Ohio, later going to California, but afterward returned to Ohio, where both died. Their children were: Jane, Sabina, Philip, Rebecca, Andrew, Eliza, Mary, Elizabeth, Albert and Catherine.

Joseph Younce, son of Joseph and Lydia (Macy) and grandson of Philip, received a common school education in Ohio, and when between eleven and twelve years of age went with his parents to Indiana, in August, 1856, the journey being made with three two-horse wagons, which took three days to make the trip. This trip is well remembered by Mr. Younce. His father settled in Union township on eighty acres of land, twenty acres of which were cleared, and on these twenty acres were planted corn. Joseph assisted in clearing and cultivating the farm until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted at about nineteen years of age, at Muncie, Ind., May 1, 1864, as a private of Company B, 134th Ind. V. I., to serve four months, and served out his time, being honorably discharged at Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 2, 1864, being on detached duty in Tennessee, Kentucky and Alabama. He was ever an active soldier, and was cheerful and faithful.

After the war Mr. Younce returned to Indiana, and for a short time worked on the farm and taught school in the winter of 1864-5 in Hamlin township, and 1865-6 in Union township. In the summer during 1865-6 he worked in a woolen factory in Union township, and in Randolph county in summer during 1867-8. He attended the high school in Muncie in the fall of 1868, and then taught in Union and Hamlin townships, Delaware county, becoming known favorably as an educator. He came to Muncie in 1874, and in 1877-78 was in a bagging factory. Going to Hartford City, he conducted a bakery and restaurant there for five years, when he returned to Muncie and engaged in a sewing machine business, manufacturing sewing machine attachments and selling machines and supplies. Mr. Younce is a Republican in politics, and is connected with Williams Post, G. A. R.

Joseph Younce was married April 22, 1869, in Union township, to Sarah A. Hyland, born Jan. 18, 1848, daughter of Michael and Jane (Prewitt) Hyland, and to this union there have been born three children: Edward Wallace; Myrtle Olive, who married Ed. C. Souders, June 30, 1897, and has one child, Edward Claire Souders; and Gert-rude Lucille, who married E. Stanton Janney, June 25, 1902.

EZRA PATTON, a highly esteemed citizen of Anderson, Ind., where he is living a retired life, was born in Cass county, Ind., June 2, 1845, son of Abraham and Hannah (Scott) Patton.

Abraham Patton was born in Darke county, Ohio. He was a farmer, and a pioneer of Cass county, where he settled about 1840. He cleared up his farm at a very early date, having to cut the brush from the road leading from Logansport. He was the father of the following children: Isabel, who married Hiram T. Guard, and died before the Civil war; Madison, a private of the 9th Indiana Infantry, in the three months service, re-enlisted for three years or during the war, and served until its close; Ezra; and Alwilda, who married Lindol Smith. Lindol Smith, was a soldier in the Civil war, and was taken sick in the hospital at Gallatin, Tenn., and his wife, in order to care for him, was forced to become an army nurse, being regularly registered as such. She served in the army hospitals for two years, principally at Gallatin, Tenn., and Indianapolis, Indiana.

the death of his father, and he was brought up by his mother from the age of three years. Mrs. Patton, after the death of her first husband, had married William Pierson, a well-to-do farmer of Cass county, by whom she had one child, Sarah Amanda, who married Peter Williams. Ezra Patton received a limited education in the common schools, and was reared to the life of a farmer, working upon farms in the vicinity of his home until the Civil war, during which he enlisted at Logansport, Ind., in August, 1863, as a private of Company F, 116th Ind. V. I., to serve six months. He participated in the battles of Blue Springs and Tazewell, Tenn., and Clinch River. He was honorably discharged at Lafayette, Ind., in February, 1864, having served in Michigan (guarding an arsenal near Detroit), then in Kentucky, and was marched through that State to East Tennessee, where his services ended. He re-enlisted at Logansport, Ind., in September, 1864, as a private of Company K, 142nd Ind. V. I., to serve one year, being honorably discharged in April, 1865, at the close of the war, having been in a number of battles, including that of Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Patton was one of the good, faithful soldiers, and has a war record of which any man might well be proud.

After the war Mr. Patton returned to Cass county, Ind., and attended a high school at Merriam, Ind., for eighteen months. He then went to Kansas, where he engaged in teaming, crossing the Great Plains. For two summers he lived in Indian Territory and Colorado, driving cattle, at the end of which time he returned to Cass county.

In 1871 Mr. Patton was united in marriage with Jane Dorothy Adeline Idson, daughter of Henry and Salina (Reynolds) Idson. Henry Idson was a farmer of Cass county, and also followed carpentering in Logansport. Mrs. Patton died in August, 1899, the mother of several children, all of whom are deceased. Mr. Patton married (second) Sept. 6, 1900, in Logansport, Ind., Mrs. Sarah (Hatcher) Snuffin, a widow. Mr. and Mrs. Patton came to Anderson in 1902, where he engaged in a feed, wood and coal business, in which he continued until in February, 1903, when he bought five acres in Fall Creek township. He has since moved to No. 1405 West Fifth street, Anderson. Mr. Patton is a Lutheran in religion, while his wife is a member of the Methodist Church.

Mrs. Patton was born Sept. 19, 1852, in Logan county, Ohio, daughter of John and Kittie (Hess) Hatcher. John Hatcher was born in Illinois in 1815, and went to Ohio when fifteen years old. There he married Kittie Hess, daughter of Philip and Nancy Hess, the former of whom was an old settler of Ohio, who owned a fine farm of 400 acres of land in Logan county, which he had cleared from the woods. John Hatcher was a substantial pioneer farmer of Logan county, Ohio, where he owned 360 acres of land. He was three times married. The children by his first wife, Kittie Hess, were: Rebecca, Lucinda, Nancy, Sarah and Lydia. By his second marriage, which was to Ann Peterson, the children were: John, Abel, Cordelia, Abbie and Hope. No children were born to Mr. Hatcher's third union. After settling on his farm, John Hatcher spent the rest of his days there, never changing his location. One of his sons served as a soldier in the Civil war, in an Ohio regiment. He ran away from home when too young to enlist, but finally succeeded in doing so, and served four years, participating in many battles.

Mrs. Patton received but a meagre education in the pioneer schools of her native locality. She was married in Logan county, Ohio, to Wallace Snuffin, and they settled in Iowa, later removing to Cass county, Iowa, where they purchased land, and where Mr. Snuffin died, aged about forty-eight years. The children born to this union were: Mary, who married Alonzo Linhart, resides in Anderson, and has these children: Wood, Wallace L., Charles and Clinton; and Oliver, who married Stella Middleton, has two daughters, Zola and Jessie. Mr. and Mrs. Patton are among the highly respected and honored citizens of the county, and Mr. Patton bears an enviable reputation for honesty and integrity.

SAMUEL HICKS, an old settler, son of a pioneer, and a substantial farmer and veteran of the Civil war, was born March 6, 1834, in Lebanon county, Pa., son of Samuel (Sr.) and Sophia (Shafer) Hicks.

The Hicks family are of English stock and were early settlers of Colonial Pennsylvania, while the Shafers were of Pennsylvania Dutch stock. Samuel Hicks (Sr.) was the son of George Hicks, and it is believed that the father of George came from England. George Hicks was probably born in Lebanon county, Pa., and he married Mary Cramer of Pennsylvania. Their children were: Peter; Samuel; Sarah, who married Frederick Rent; Henry; Maria, who married John Showers; and a daughter whose name is not remembered, who married a Mr. Offenbach. George Hicks lived to be eighty-nine years old, and died in Pennsylvania. He was an industrious, hard working man, and was very highly esteemed by all who knew him.

Samuel Hicks (Sr.), son of George, was born Sept. 17, 1804, in Lebanon county, Pa. By occupation he was a weaver and was very skillful at this trade, being able to weave any kind of cloth, and the old-fashioned single and double coverlets, one of which, made by his father, his son Samuel carefully preserves and highly prizes. Samuel Hicks, Sr., was married in Lebanon county, to Sophia Shafer, a native of that county, daughter of Joseph and Sarah Shafer, of Pennsylvania Dutch stock. The children born to this union were: John, Hiram, William, Samuel, Catherine, Jeremiah, and Adam, all born in Pennsylvania, and Angeline, Sophia and George, born in Indiana. Mr. Hicks removed to Chambersburg, Montgomery Co., Ohio, in 1835, making the journey with horses and wagons. He lived in Chambersburg for three years, following his trade of weaver, and then moved with his family to Madison county, Ind. He hired Col. Thomas Bell's five-horse team, and a big, old Virginia covered wagon, which bowed up behind and before and could carry an immense load. Besides this old covered wagon Mr. Hicks had a one-horse wagon. The journey consumed two or three weeks, the family sleeping in the wagon and building campfires on the roadside in true pioneer style. Mr. Hicks settled on Fall Creek, in Adams township, near Thomas Bell. He bought forty acres of heavy timbered land, afterwards adding eighty more, which was partly cleared, and he made his 120 acres into a good, productive farm. He and his wife were members of the U. B. Church. In politics he was a Democrat until 1856, when he voted for John C. Fremont, and later for Abraham Lincoln. He was a strong Union man and had three sons in the Civil war: John H., Samuel and Jeremiah. John H., was in the Mexican war and was in four battles: Buena Vista, Palo Alto and two others. In the Civil war the brothers all served in Co. K, 8th Ind. V. I. Samuel Hicks, the father, died in New Columbus, Ind., Aug. 23, 1888, in his 84th year; his wife passed away, April 23, 1863.

Samuel Hicks, son of Samuel, Sr., was but four years old when he came to Indiana with the family in the big wagon, and can well remember the five-horse team, even the colors of the horses. The near horse was a bay, his mate a black, the tongue horses were dapple greys and the leader a dun. The driver, Harvey Bell, rode the near wheel horse, which was driven by a single line, and the leader controlled the others. It was the first team on the road, and all the horses had bells attached to bows which were fixed to the harness, except the saddle horse. The team, all spirited animals, weighing from 1400 to 1500 pounds each, were splendidly broken, and obeyed every word of command.

After reaching the Indiana home Samuel Hicks attended the pioneer school, which had slabs for benches. Attending school three months in the winter time, the rest of the year would be spent in work on the farm, and in this he continued until his twenty-first year. He enlisted at the age of twenty-seven, in the bottoms east of New Columbia, in a grove where a rally was held to beat up the volunteers. There were speeches by Col. Milton Robinson, Captain Myers of Anderson and others. Twenty-one young men enlisted from his neighborhood, every one of whom had a good record for three years service, all participated in many battles, and all returned home in safety, except one who took his own life on account of despondency and sickness. Samuel Hicks signed his name to the enlistment papers, Aug. 20, 1861, as a private of Company K, 8th Ind. V. I., to serve three years, or during the war, and he served until honorably discharged at Berryville, Va., Sept. 5, 1864. His service was in Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Virginia, and he participated in battles at Black Water, Mo.; Sugar Creek, Ark.; Pea Ridge, Ark.; Cotton Plant, Ark.; Port Gibson, Miss.; Champion Hills, Miss.; Big Black, Miss., and Vicksburg, Miss. He had partly learned the blacksmith's trade before going to war, and was detailed to serve as blacksmith, serving in this capacity until discharged. He was never a prisoner, nor was he sick in the hospital, always being an active soldier and doing his full duty promptly and cheerfully. He took part in all the campaigns, marches, battles and skirmishes of his regiment, marching over 3,000 miles.

After the war, Mr. Hicks returned to his home, where he engaged in blacksmithing, locating his shop on North Main street in Anderson, Ind., and there he remained six months. At the end of this time he engaged in farm work. He was married July 16, 1866, at New Columbus, Ind., to Martha Ann Hodson, born in Adams township, on her father's farm, Sept. 5, 1845, daughter of Isaiah and Mary (Otville) Hodson. Isaiah Hodson was born in North Carolina, the son of George Hodson, a pioneer of Adams township, whose children were: Hiram, Isaiah, Eli, George, William, John, Jonathan, David, Rachel, Elizabeth and two children whose names are not remembered. Isaiah Hodson came to Indiana with his parents when young, and was married in Madison county, Mary Otville being his bride. Mrs. Hodson was born in North Carolina, daughter of David Howard and Lettie (Carmichael) Otville. Isaiah Hodson cleared a farm of eighty acres from the timber land and built a log cabin with a slab floor. This was afterward replaced with a substantial two story brick residence, which is still standing and occupied. His farm was in Adams township, on the east side of the Madison county line, and he was considered one of the good, practical farmers of that township. His children were: George, Josiah, Isaiah, Hiram, David, John, Elizabeth, Mary, Sarah, Jane and Martha Ann. Mrs. Hodson was a member of the Christian Church. While Mr. Hodson was a member of no church he was a great Bible reader, as was also his wife. In politics Mr. Hodson was an old-line Whig. He died suddenly Dec. 19, 1852, while his wife survived until 1856, dying in her fifty-second year. A son of this union, Hiram, was a colonel in an Indiana battery, and was injured in his right foot, being lamed for life. Mr. Hodson was a respected citizen of his township, and was one of the early pioneer school teachers.

For twenty years Samuel Hicks and his wife resided on his father's farm in a big frame house which had been built by the father. Mr. Hicks bought his present farm of eighty acres in 1874, which was then mostly timber land. This he cleared by hard work, and in August, 1885, located on this place. He built a pleasant frame house and other substantial buildings, making his place one of the finest in the township. Mr. Samuel Hicks is a member of Major May Post, G. A. R., of Anderson. He and his daughter, Emma L., are members of the Christian Church. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and has served in a number of township offices, among which may be mentioned those of road superintendent and school director. He was guardian of the Harvey and Fox families, and administrator of the James Williams estate. Mr. Hicks is an honorable, straightforward citizen, and can recall many reminiscences of the early pioneer days of Indiana. He and his estimable wife have reared a large family of children, of whom they may well be proud. They are the grandparents of eight children—four boys and four girls.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hicks were all born on the Hicks homestead, and their record is as follows: Emma Lorena, born Sept. 16, 1867, married Alfred N. Hodson, has one child, Velma D., and they reside on the home farm; Anna May, born May 3, 1869 married Austin S. Cox, has two children, Minnie Murl and Samuel Andrew, and they reside in Emporia; Oliver M., born Oct. 3, 1870, died Sept. 17, 1871; Elmer Lawrence, born June 20, 1872, now a farmer of Adams township, married Laura Hoppes, and they have four children, Harry, Edith, Martha and Ralph; Isaiah, born Oct. 23, 1877, died aged ten days; Osco Ostarius, born Nov. 28, 1879, follows farming on the homestead; and May Sophia, born Sept. 15, 1881, married Curtis Sparks, a farmer, by whom she has two children, Harold J. and Hermes. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hicks, who until recently were very proud of being grandparents, are now still prouder in being able to bear the title of great-grandparents, their granddaughter, Mrs. Minnie Murl Hole, having an infant daughter born in August, 1907.

DR. CHARLES SEATON, physician and surgeon of Martinsville, Morgan Co., Ind., was born March 21, 1835, about two miles northwest of Hall, in Morgan county, on what is known as the Seaton farm. He was the third of nine children born to Allen Rose and Sarah (Pound) Seaton, and is descended from a family which has been represented in America for several generations. Its record in both the New and Old Worlds is worthy of perpetuation.

"Have regard for thy name, for that shall continue with thee above a thousand great treasures of Gold." The family is the first institution and lies at the base of everything that is good in society. C. H. Parkhurst, D. D., said: "Let us study the history of our family and try to improve wherein our ancestors may have done amiss in the past, or at least maintain the record of sobriety, patriotism and honor handed down to us. It ought to be an inspiration to every one to know he has descended from a long line of upright, intelligent men and women. Vicious indeed is the one who would intentionally bring reproach upon a name that has been maintained in honor for many generations." Again, Maitland says: "It were a great pleasure to man to know the origin and beginning of his house and surname, and how long it has stood, with good actions and virtue of his predecessors."

The earliest recorded ancestors of the Seaton family were Normans, who derived their remote origin from the Goths, the latter of whom took such an active part in the affairs of Europe from the third to the eighth century of the Christian era. "The Goths," says E. A. Freeman, M. C., in his history of the Goths, "may on many grounds claim foremost place among Teutonic nations which had a share in breaking up the Roman power. No Teutonic people has left behind it such early remains of a written language." The Goths first appear in history in the ancient land of Getae. For the early history of the Seaton family we are indebted to the history of the same written by O. A. Seaton, of Jewell City, Kans., from which we learn that over twenty places have been given the name Seaton and about as many different spellings of the family name, that have been found in various records. In an article on Seaton Chappel by Sir Walter Scott it is said they took their name from their habitation, dwelling by the sea in East Lothian. In this way the name came to be Seaton. Some account of the family is given for the last nine hundred years, though the name Seaton did not obtain until about two hundred years after the first historical mention of the people from whom the Seatons descended. One member of the family (a daughter of Lord Seaton of Scotland) married a brother to King Robert Bruce; another (Mary Seaton) was a maid of honor to Mary Queen of Scots and was with her through all of her troubles until her untimely death. Eight were lords and five earls, to say nothing of members of Parliament, knights, generals, etc. One was a canonized Saint and another an archbishop in the Catholic Church at Rome, Italy. The immortal Patrick Henry's mother was a descendant of the Seaton family, and Theodore Roosevelt's fifth great-grandfather descended from the Seaton family, as appears in the genealogy of the Roosevelt family published in 1902 by Charles

Chas Seaton M.D.

B. Whitesey, of Hartford, Conn. The Seaton's have been prominent in all the wars in America, as well as in the old country. One of them was killed in battle at Bunker Hill, and thirteen of them appear on the pension rolls of the Revolutionary war.

Every Seaton family, so far as we can learn, that had sons of proper age was represented in the late war of the Rebellion, on one side or the other. It depended somewhat upon which side of Mason and Dixon's line they lived.

James, John and Andrew Seaton left Scotland and went to County Tyrone, Ireland, where they took refuge after some disastrous conflict of the supporters of the Stuarts with their enemies in the year 1729. They lived there for about fifteen years. John Seaton married Jane Edwards in Scotland, and seven children were born to them. Then John with his family immigrated to the United States and settled at, or near, Boxford, Mass., in Essex county. The children of John and Jane Seaton were: Mary, James, Martha, John, Samuel, Elizabeth and Jane.

James Seaton, the second child, married Elizabeth Robinson May 5, 1748, and to them were born four children, Elizabeth, Kenner, Rodham and Pritchard. James Seaton, the father, in the meantime had moved to Virginia.

Kenner Seaton, the second child of James, was born in Virginia in 1755. He was a soldier in the war for American independence. He married Elizabeth Sliger, and to them were born seven children, Elizabeth, Margaret, Rebecca, George, James K., Sarah and Richard.

George Seaton, son of Kenner Seaton, was born in Virginia April 23, 1781, and died July 6, 1835. On Feb. 3, 1803, he married Sarah Drake, and to them were born eight children: Charles D., Allen R., John S., Jesse D., Mary, Elizabeth, Apphia W. and Sarah.

Allen R. Seaton, son of George and Sarah Seaton, married Sarah Pound in Jefferson county, Ky., Aug. 11, 1830, and to them were born nine children: John P., George W., Charles, James P., Grafton W., Mary E., Sarah J. and Apphia M., and Richard F., who died at the age of four and one-half years. They are peaceable and law-abiding citizens, decidedly inclined to be religious, always loyal to their country, and in politics generally Republicans.

Charles Seaton was born when Morgan county was still a wilderness. He started to school when only four and a half years old, walking three and a half miles with his two older brothers, John and George. His first teacher was Joseph Applegate, and the schoolhouse stood in the southeast corner of what is known as the Elijah Allison farm, near the sand knoll, near where C. H. Whittaker lives. He had the advantages of the common schools of the day, such as they were, working on the farm and clearing away the timber when the weather would permit, always going to school in the winter, when the weather was too inclement to work on the farm. In this way, by the time he was twenty years old he had obtained a fair common school education. In the year 1855 he attended the Belleville Academy at Belleville, Ind. Upon his return home he farmed in the summer and taught school in the winter months until he had accumulated, as he thought, enough money to pay his way through medical school. In March, 1858, he left home and went into the office of his uncle, Dr. John S. Seaton, of Louisville, Ky., who was then Professor of Anatomy in the Kentucky School of Medicine, situated at Louisville. He took the then prescribed course of study in that school and on Feb. 28, 1860, graduated with ease, and with honor to himself. In the following May he located at Hall, Ind., and commenced the practice of his profession among the scenes of his childhood days, his old neighbors and his youthful associates, a most difficult task for a young man to undertake. He was succeeding fairly well in establishing a lucrative practice when, on that historic 12th day of April, 1861, the boom of the cannon from Fort Sumter, S. C., reverberated across the land and shook the earth from center to circumference. The young doctor heard the ominous sound and at once took in the situation, fully realizing that it meant a call for all the able-bodied men of the country. When President Lincoln made his call for 300,000 men, he closed his office and joined a company then being recruited by Capt. A. T. Welman, and on Aug. 26, 1861, he went into Camp Morton, at Indianapolis, with what was afterwards Company A, 33rd Ind. Vols. At the organization of the company his comrades elected him to serve as first lieutenant and on Sept. 29, 1861, the regiment left for the South amid the beating of drums and the cheers of the multitude. Dr. Seaton served as first lieutenant until Jan. 10, 1863, when Captain Welman was compelled to resign on account of failing health, and Lieutenant Seaton became captain of Company A, remaining in command until Sept. 13, 1864, when his health failing him he also resigned and returned home, as he said, to die. Captain Seaton participated in all the marches, skirmishes and battles in which that grand old regiment took part. On March 5, 1863, he was captured at Thompson's Station, Tenn., and was taken to Libby Prison, where he was kept until May 5, 1863. He was at the head of his company in all the trying scenes through which the regiment passed, participating in the battles of Wild Cat, Ky., Cumberland Gap, Tazewell, Tenn., Crocker's Neck, Ky., Thompson's Station, Tenn., Resaca, Pumpkin Vine Creek, Golgotha, Culp's House, Kenesaw Mountain, Cassville, New Hope Church, Peach Tree Creek and Atlanta, Georgia.

When his company and regiment veteranized Captain Seaton came home, and while enjoying a thirty days' recruiting commission, among friends, he was married, on April 14, 1864, to Miss Mary Genevieve Major, the ceremony being performed by Elder J. H. Henry, then in charge of the Christian Church at Martinsville, Ind. Mrs. Seaton was born on her father's farm, four miles north of Martinsville, Aug. 23, 1838, youngest child in the family of William A. and Rebecca (Clark) Major, who moved from Brookville, Franklin Co., Ind., to Washington township, Morgan Co., Ind., in October, 1832. There Mr. Major entered the farm on which he died, four miles north of Martinsville, still known as the Major farm and owned by the Major family.

In the fall of 1864 Dr. Seaton returned home permanently, and after locating at Hall resumed the practice of his chosen profession. At the election of 1882 he was made county treasurer and was re-elected in 1884. About the time of the close of his second term the value of the mineral water found in the Barnard well was as yet little understood. Captain Barnard had just completed his first small bath house, with its eight tubs, and he was looking around for reputable physicians to assist in the sanitarium enterprise. He selected Dr. Seaton and Dr. E. V. Green, who took charge of the medical department, and to whom must be credited much of the success of the sanitarium. Dr. Seaton was particularly active in experimenting with and demonstrating the healing properties of the now famous waters of the Artesian City. He remained with Captain Barnard for more than five years and then assisted in organizing the Martinsville Sanitarium. In March, 1894, he became a partner of Dr. H. C. Robinson in the Home Lawn Sanitarium, the partnership lasting two years, when Dr. Robinson withdrew, and Dr. Seaton continued in control for three years more. At the end of that period the property changed hands, and his services were no longer needed. At this date, in conjunction with Dr. Sweet, he took charge of the National Sanitarium, at which he remained until June 1, 1901, when he retired because of failing health. After resting about a year he was called to take charge of the Hill-Cohn Sanitarium, at Martinsville, of which he has been in charge to the present time, making a total of nineteen years' experience in sanitarium work as a physician, and more than forty-seven years as a practicing physician and surgeon in general practice.

Dr. Seaton and his wife are members of the Christian Church, which he joined in January, 1881, under the preaching of Elder J. M. Canfield, of Indianapolis. After moving to Martinsville, in October, 1883, he was made a deacon and a member of the financial board of the church at that place, and when a vacancy occurred later on he was chosen elder, in which capacity he officiated five years, voluntarily resigning at the end of that time. For seven years in succession he served as superintendent of the Christian Sunday-school in Martinsville, always taking an active part in the work of the church there until his professional duties called him elsewhere.

Mrs. Seaton has been equally active in church and benevolent enterprises. She is a member of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and has been an enthusiastic member of the W. C. T. U. since its organization, having been a charter member. She has held various offices in that organization, and has contributed several papers to its literary organ. Though never particularly strong physically, Mrs. Seaton has been blessed with a fine mind and unusual energy, both of which she has unselfishly devoted to good causes wherever they have enlisted her sympathies. She has ever been willing to do her part in the church and in the various societies with which she has been connected, and her influence has been well directed, accomplishing good in many directions. Mrs. Seaton was educated in the schools of Martinsville, in the academy at Ladoga, Ind., and at the Northwestern Christian University, now Butler College, Irvington, Ind. She early developed a taste for music, and had the second piano brought into Morgan county, the family of Mr. P. M. Parks having the first. This old piano, a Baldwin, is still one of her treasured possessions.

Two children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Seaton, one son and one daughter, the latter dying in infancy. The son, Sims M. Seaton, is a bookkeeper for the Nonpareil Portrait and Publishing Company, at Camden, Ohio, where he is quite prominent, having been four times elected city treasurer. He married Miss Catherine Bertsch, of Camden. They have no children.

Dr. Seaton was school trustee of Gregg township one term, and for the past eight years he has been president of the board of pension examiners. He belongs to the State and county medical societies; to the Masonic fraternity, which he joined during the war (he is a charter member of Martinsville Chapter), and to P. M. Blankenship Post, No. 77, G. A. R., of which he is a past commander. His interest in his old command and comrades has never ceased. He has the original muster-roll of the enlisted soldiers of his company, Company A, 33d Regiment, Indiana Volunteers, the places of residence of all its members, their present residence if living, and date and cause of death if deceased. This record is complete up to date [October, 1907]. Another memento of his service is a gold watch which Mrs. Seaton possesses, and which the Doctor was carrying when in Libby Prison. Though searched twice for valuables the watch was not found, as he had concealed it in his high-topped boots. He is still carrying a watch—a P. S. Bartlett No. 74,516—which he purchased Sept. 15, 1863, just after being in Libby, and which he wore through the rest of the war. Though it has been in use ever since it is an excellent timekeeper and the Doctor has been offered large prices for it by some of his old comrades; his jeweler says it is good for forty-four years more.

Gen. John Coburn paid the following tribute to Captain Charles Seaton anent his army services: "Dr. Charles Seaton was a captain of Company A, in the 33rd Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered into the service in the summer of 1861. His first service was in the office of first lieutenant of this company, and upon the resignation of Capt. A. T. Welman was promoted to the office of captain on the 10th day of January, 1863, and served in that office until the 13th day of Sept., A. D. 1864, at the muster out of the regiment. He was a dutiful and obedient officer; brave and faithful at all times. He not only served as an officer of Co. A, but also as an assistant of the surgeon in the hospital, which duty he performed faithfully and successfully. He was a man of great kindness of heart and won the esteem and affection of the men of the regiment. His goodness of heart stimulated him to do this extra duty in a successful manner. He by this means attained and held the good will of the officers and the rank and file of the entire regiment. No officer of the 33d Regiment held by stronger cords of respect and affection the good will of the men of this regiment. He earned a promotion that was due many times for his services as a surgeon."

WILLIAM HENRY JENNINGS, a veteran of the Civil war, now residing on a farm in Monroe township, Madison county, was born in Henry county, Ind., Jan. 3, 1840, son of Thomas and Margaret (Hasket) Jennings.

Thomas Jennings was during his early manhood a resident of North Carolina, owning a farm in Perquimans county. There he married Margaret Hasket, a member of an old Quaker family in the state. Between 1830 and 1840 Mr. Jennings removed with his family to Henry county, Ind., making the journey with a team of horses. He settled there on rented land, and remained till 1845, when he moved to Hamilton county and rented another farm. The following year his wife died and the family was broken up, the children going to different relatives. Seven of them lived to grow up: Martha Ann; Mary Jane; Thomas; John, who enlisted in the war and was drowned in Texas while crossing a heavily loaded pontoon bridge; William H., James and Joseph, all Union soldiers. Thomas also wished to enlist, but was unable to pass the physical examination. By a second marriage to a widow, named Mrs. Betsy Shawl, Mr. Jennings had two other children, Joshua and Rebecca. His death occurred in Hamilton county, April 12, 1849, when he was aged thirty-six years.

William H. Jennings was less than six years old when his mother died, and he was taken to the home of his uncle, William Hasket, in Tipton county, Ind. He remained there on the farm till he was fourteen and then went to live with his sister Mary Jane, who had lately married and settled in Wabash county. When he was a little older he hired out for farm work and was so engaged till his marriage, May 26, 1861. His bride was Miss Hannah E. Ostler, born in Tipton county, Jan. 3, 1847, youngest daughter of George and Elizabeth (Bishop) Ostler. Her father owned a small farm of forty acres which he had cleared from the woods. Late in life he gave up farming and went to Kokomo, Ind., where he and his wife died at the ages of eighty and sixty years respectively. They were Methodists in religious belief, and people of genuine worth and character. Their other children were: George, Abraham, David, Jackson, John, Catherine and Mary. Three of the sons, David, Jackson and John, were in active service in the war for three years in Company F, 11th Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

After his marriage Mr. Jennings settled on a rented farm in Tipton county, but shortly there came a call to arms and he left his wife and home to enlist in Indianapolis Dec. 12, 1861, in Company K, 47th Ind. V. I., for three years or during the war. He served until honorably discharged at Baton Rouge, La., Oct. 23, 1865. His regiment was in Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama and Texas, and saw hard fighting. It fought night and day, going through Mississippi to the rescue of Banks, and was the first Union regiment to pass through Memphis, as well as to enter Mobile; at Port Gibson, just before the surrender, the men fought all day after marching all night, and skirmished all the next day, losing forty-seven men; at Champion Hills the regiment lost 143 men in killed and wounded. It was under fire eighty-one days. It was veteranized 400 strong, and had veteran furlough home. Mr. Jennings shared in all the experiences of his company, and was in the battles of Champion Hills, Fort Donelson, New Madrid, Black River, Riddle's Point, Siege of Vicksburg, Devil's Bluff, St. Charles, Jackson (Miss.), Spanish Fort, Fort Blakeley, Island No. 10, Yazoo Pass, Jackson (La.), and Milliken's Bend, as well as the siege of Mobile. Mr. Jennings was never a prisoner nor in hospital, but he had many narrow escapes from death. At Port Gibson he was struck by a bullet on the forehead, the ball having first passed through the upturned vizor of his military cap. Although its force was thus broken, he was knocked unconscious and lay there nearly half an hour, bleeding profusely. His comrades were lying down to fire, but Mr. Jennings had been standing and had fired sixty-five shots before he was knocked down. After recovering consciousness, he arose again and continued firing as before. On another occasion, during a charge across Yellow Bushy river, a ball grazed his chin, while once in battle his belt and cartridge box were cut away, his clothing pierced several times and his canteen once. Toward the very end of his service, in 1865, he was detailed at Shreveport as an agent for the Freedmen's Bureau, while all through his term of enlistment he had been detailed for extra services, because of the great confidence his officers felt in him. Soon after he veteranized, he was promoted to be fourth duty sergeant. He was a loyal soldier prompt to his duty and devoted to his regiment, for which on one occasion when home on veteran furlough he recruited eighteen men.

When the war was over, Mr. Jennings returned to Tipton county, bought a twenty-acre farm and started to operate it. He soon exchanged it for forty acres near Tipton, but before long disposed of this also and moved to Kokomo, where he did teaming on public works as well as farming. On his arrival he had purchased forty acres near the town, but he later exchanged that for residence property in Kokomo. At that time he kept a toll gate on the South Greentown Pike, near Kokomo, and was in charge of all the work on the pike. He remained in this section till 1884, when he moved to a farm in Tipton county, and from there went back to Howard county, thence to Clinton county, and finally to Madison county, where he now resides.

Mr. Jennings is not only a successful and progressive farmer, respected and esteemed in his community, but he has also been quite prominent in local lodge work. While in Kokomo he joined the I. O. O. F., and he is also a member of the Kokomo G. A. R. post. He has always been a Republican from the time of his first vote, which he cast for Abraham Lincoln. His wife is a member of the Methodist Church, and also of the Woman's Relief Corps, and while in Kokomo belonged to the Daughters of Rebekah.

Mr. Jennings' first wife died in December, 1888, leaving three children, Leota, Howard and Lorene. Two years later, Sept. 16, 1890, in Kokomo, Mr. Jennings married Mrs. Sarah F. (Hite) Beek. She was born July 10, 1849, daughter of Jacob and Mary C. (Gross) Hite. On July 19, 1868, she was married to her first husband, James E. Beek, who died in 1881.

Mr. and Mrs. Jennings have no children living.

Mrs. Jennings comes from a family originally from Virginia, where her great-grandfather founded the town of Hitesville. His son, James Hite, born in Virginia, became a farmer by occupation and married Miss Sarah Bacon, for his first wife. Their children were Jacob, Mary, Matilda, John A., William T. and Sarah. The second wife, whose name is unknown, died young. For his third wife Mr. Hite married Miss Catherine Thomas, by whom he had three children, Louisa, Byron and Henry. About 1830 Mr. Hite went to Ohio and settled on the frontier, in Ashland county, near Loudonville, where he cleared a farm of eighty acres and spent the rest of his life on it. He died at the age of sixty, an old-line Whig in politics and a Baptist in religion.

On her mother's side Mrs. Jennings descends from Dutch stock, although her grandfather, Martin Gross, was born in Virginia. His father, Jacob Gross, died when he was a child, and he was brought up in the family of a stepfather who was of German nationality and a pioneer in Pennsylvania. He worked on the Ohio river till he married, and then lived in Gallipolis for a time. From there he moved to Indiana, settled in Fall Creek township, Madison county, and in 1837 entered eighty acres of land half a mile east of Lapel. This land he cleared, built a good two-story house of hewed logs, which is still standing, and lived there till his death at the age of seventy-five. He was a great Bible reader, and was active in church work, serving as deacon. In politics he was a Republican. He married Sarah, daughter of Frederick and Amy (Flora) Taylor. Her father came to Pennsylvania from Holland as a stowaway when fourteen years old, having run away from home rather than be bound out to a brewer. He eventually settled in Ohio. Mrs. Gross bore her husband fourteen children, Mary, Julia, Enos, Sarah, Isaac, Morris, Esther, Martin, Harvey, Thomas, Emily and three who died in infancy. The sons all served three years in the Civil war. Mary, the eldest daughter, married Jacob Hite, and became the mother of Mrs. Jennings.

Jacob Hite was born Sept. 23, 1824, in Virginia, and was six years old when his father went to Ohio. He acquired what education he could in the common schools of that day, and then studied by himself until he was fitted to teach. In addition to his teaching he learned the blacksmith's trade. At the age of twenty-one, he came to Madison county, Ind., taught for a time, at Fishersburg, and also conducted a graded school at Chester's Grove, near Anderson, while later he also taught across White river. In 1848 he settled in Anderson and ran a blacksmith's shop there till 1859. In that year he bought a sawmill in Howard county, ran it till 1864 and then sold out in order to buy another in Cass county, Ind. That one he operated till 1874, when he moved to Kokomo, where he already had extensive interests, having owned and managed a lumber yard, besides having part ownership in a foundry and several sawmills. He died in Kokomo Jan. 16, 1881. In 1848 he was married in Fishersburg to Miss Mary Catherine Gross, who was born on the Ohio river near Gallipolis, April 25, 1826. Mrs. Hite is still living. Both united early in life with the Baptist Church at Fishersburg. In politics Mr. Hite was a Republican, public-spirited and active for the local welfare, and much respected by all his acquaintances. The eleven children born to him and his wife were as follows: Sarah F., Amy F., Feb. 1, 18—; Thomas B., Dec. 18, 1852; Florence M., Dec. 18, 1854; Nancy M., Oct. 11, 1856; Esther A., Aug. 7, 1858; James A., Feb. 14, 1860; John A., Nov. 10, 1862; Amanda C., July 19, 1864; Julia L., May 4, 1866; and William S., Jan. 4, 1868.

Mrs. Jennings first married, as has been stated, James E. Beek, born in Franklin county, Ind., June 14, 1842, son of James W. Beek. Mr. Beek received a good common school education and then took up farming. When the war began he enlisted in Company H, 34th Ind. V. I., served three years, re-enlisted in Virginia in the same company, and remained to the close of the war. He was in a number of battles, was once wounded and, recovering only partially, spent the rest of his term as a hospital nurse. While home on a furlough, he married Miss Wilhelmina Yakey, but she died young, leaving no children. After his marriage to Miss Hite Mr. Beek engaged in railroad work, and his death was due to an accident in the discharge of his duties in the switch yard, he being run over by an engine.

MEEKS. The Meeks family, of which James W., William A., Martin L. and J. Arthur Meeks, of Muncie, Ind., are worthy representatives, is of old Colonial Virginia stock, and members thereof have been prominent in every walk of life. The following is quoted from the Newberry Library (Chicago) record: "Meeks. This family is of English origin and all Meeks in this country are descended from two brothers, Littleton and Nacy Meeks, who settled in South Carolina. Both were Baptist preachers and were regarded as able, pious and good men. There are also a number of descendants of Littleton Meeks now in Tennessee. * * * John Meeks, Sr., was born in Virginia about 1780, and he was a son of Jesse Meeks, a Methodist minister. He went to Tennessee when young, and there his descendants still live." A prominent member of this family was Fielding Bradford Meeks, born in Iowa, Dec. 10, 1817, and died in Washington, D. C., Dec. 28, 1876, a noted American geologist and paleontologist.

Thomas Meeks, the great-grandfather of the Meeks brothers, was a pioneer settler of Monongalia county, W. Va., and lived on his farm near the village of Knottsville. He and his wife Susannah, were the parents of seventeen children, as follows: Amos, William, Elizabeth, Samuel, George, Rebecca, Polly, Josiah and Joseph, twins, Cassandra, Lovina, Edith, Thomas, John, Abraham, Asbury, and a daughter whose name is forgotten, who married a Mr. Courtney. Elizabeth married a Mr. Vinson; Rebecca married Stanton Jones; Polly married Abraham Bryant; Cassandra married, but the name of her husband is forgotten, and there were no children born to them; Lovina married a Mr. Gibson, an old time school teacher; and Edith married a Mr. McFarren. Thomas Meeks, besides being a farmer, followed the business of a weaver of coverlets, it being a custom in those days to carry on home industries on the farm, and frequently these occupations were handed down from generation to generation.

Amos Meeks, the grandfather of the Meeks brothers, was born near Knottsville, April 6, 1800, and received a common school education. He was married when twenty years old, within one and one-half miles of his birthplace, to Nancy Means, born on the south bank of the Potomac in 1803, daughter of Isaac and Catherine Means, the former the owner of a large farm and a few slaves. He reared a family of thirteen children, as follows: Nancy, who married Mr. Meeks; Jacob; Mary; Elvira; Isaac; William; a daughter, who married Abraham Wilson; Catherine, who married a Mr. Haymond; Jane, who married John Miller, of Knottsville, W. Va.; Susan, who married Washington Modist; Matilda, who married Matthew Lusett; Peggie, who married Henry Martin, and a daughter whose name is not remembered, who married an Evans. Isaac Means lived to be eighty-two years of age, and died on his farm. He was a man of upright character, but was a member of no religious body. He was well and favorably known throughout the community in which he spent his life, and was known as Major Isaac Means. The following are extracts from the Newberry Library (Chicago) record: "Means. This is a Scotch or Irish name and is variously spelled, such spellings as Main, Mains, Mein, Meins and Means being common, and it is thought they are all of the same stock. Joseph Means, of Allegheny county, Pa., was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1750, and died in 1809. He came to America in 1787, and settled in Allegheny county, Pa., with two brothers, Allan and Joseph. He married Agnes Barr in 1784. William Means, son of Joseph, was born Sept. 13, 1803, and died Oct. 9, 1871. He was born in Pennsylvania, and moved to Steubenville, Ohio, in 1836. He married Nancy Swearingen, Feb. 11, 1832. Archibald Means, son of William, was born March 31, 1833, in Allegheny county, Pa. He now lives in Percy, Ill. William Gordan Means was born at Amherst, N. H., April 27, 1815, son of David McGregor and Catherine (Atherton) Means. He was a great-grandson of Thomas Means, of Stewartstown, County Tyrone, Ireland. His grandfather, Col. Robert Means, was a weaver from the North of Ireland, and established himself in Amherst, N. H. Thomas Means, of Irish descent, was born in Pennsylvania in 1772. When ten years old he went to Virginia and was there reared to manhood. He was a farmer and prior to his marriage went to Tennessee. Thence in 1796 he went to Monroe county, Ky., where he died in 1846. He married Mary Mulkey, and had ten children. Robert Means came from the North of Ireland at the age of sixteen, and settled at Falmouth Neck, Me., in 1718. He died Sept. 3, 1769, at the age of seventy-nine years. He had eleven children and all his descendants live in Maine."

After marriage Amos Meeks settled on the Means farm and lived there a short time, then buying land where the town of Grafton, Va., is now situated. Here he owned 400 acres of rough hilly land, known as the Mounds, but which contained spots of very fertile soil. He cleared up the most valuable portions of this tract, and built a hewed log house, but sold out in 1836 and removed to Delaware county, Ind., making the journey with a four-horse covered wagon in sixteen days, which was then considered a quick journey. He and his first wife were the parents of these children: Robert, Catherine, Susannah, Thomas, Isaac, Elvina, William, Rebecca, Joseph, Josiah, Mary, Jacob, Matilda, John Wesley and Nancy, all except the last four being born in West Virginia and making the trip with their parents, the latter four being born in Delaware county. Amos Means by a subsequent marriage was the father of two children, Amos F. and Isadora. The family camped by the wayside, some sleeping in the wagon, which was bowed up at both ends and was capable of holding an immense load, also being constructed to withstand the rough usage of a long journey. Amos Meeks bought land in Liberty township, consisting of 148 acres, not one foot of which had been cleared, being covered with heavy timber, hickory and beech, with some walnut and oak. He cut trees so as to clear a space to erect his 16 x 18 feet log cabin, which was furnished with the luxury of a board floor, the boards therefor being hauled by Mr. Meeks from Zaner's Mills, on Campbell Creek, about five miles away. The cabin had a shake roof, held down with roof poles, and a stick chimney which was daubed with clay, an improvement on many of the pioneers' cabins being a brick fireplace. Mr. Meeks also purchased 160 acres in Blackford county, Ind., on which, however, he never settled, but gave it later to his sons, Robert and Isaac. Mr. Meeks cleared his farm and made a good home, where he died in his seventy-seventh year. He was one of the original pioneers of Delaware county, and assisted in building the first schoolhouse in his district, having been a teacher in his younger days in Virginia, and he also taught the first school in his district in Indiana. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and assisted to organize that denomination in his community, being a class leader and active in church work. His home was the stopping place of the itinerant Methodist circuit riders, men who carried the Gospel into the wilderness with their Bibles in their saddlebags and laid deep and solid the foundations of Methodism in Indiana. In political matters he was a Democrat.

Robert Meeks was born July 8, 1822, in West Virginia, and his education, received in the district schools, was such as was to be had in the early days. He came with his father to Indiana when a little more than seventeen years old, and attended his father's school, also assisting in building the log cabin and in clearing the farm. He worked on the home farm until about twenty-two years of age, when he came to Muncie and began to learn the cabinet maker's trade, being, in 1844, with the firm of Swain & Nottingham. He remained with this firm for one year, and then engaged in the business himself. Mr. Meeks was married March 5, 1846, in Liberty township, to Sarah Jones, born in the same neighborhood in West Virginia, March 11, 1827, daughter of Jacob and Beersheba (Haymond) Jones, granddaughter of William and Sarah (Anderson) Jones, and great-granddaughter of Jacob and Dinah Jones. Mrs. Meeks saw her great-grandfather twice when she was two and one-half years old, and remembers his appearance. It is believed that he was a soldier in the Revolutionary war and that he was of Scotch descent. His children were: Jacob; John and Polly, who were both captured by the Indians but managed to escape; and William. The Revolutionary records of the Jones family are here given. (D. A. R. Lineage Book, vol. i, p. 139). "Harrison Jones served in the Cumberland county militia at Guilford Court House, where he lost a leg. He was a pensioner when he died in 1841, at the age of eighty-four. Hugh Jones (37) served on the Dracut, Mass., Committee of Safety. Oliver Jones in 1780 enlisted under Capt. Joseph B. Varnum. Col. John Jones (295) fought in the early wars, and was a member of the Committee of Safety at Hopkinton, Mass. Col. Jonathan Jones (120) of Pennsylvania, commanded a company, and was promoted for service in the Canadian Campaign, rose to the rank of Colonel and served in the General Assembly, but died toward the close of the war from exposure on the field. Tignal Jones (301) in 1776, was a member from Wake county of the Provincial Congress, when it assembled at Halifax and appointed a committee of its ablest men to prepare a constitution and create a new government. Deodate Pratt Jones (vol. viii, p. 137) 1778, at the age of sixteen, enlisted for the war in Capt. Joseph Mansfield's company, received a pension for his services. Capt. Hugh Jones (203) of Pennsylvania was a soldier in the first regiment, and in 1780 a corporal in the third, and was a prisoner of war when the British occupied Philadelphia. Gen. Allen Jones of Tennessee, 1774-76, was a member of the Provincial Congress, and of the Committee of Safety of Halifax county and was a very active general of militia. In 1779 he was elected to the Continental Congress and was succeeded by his brother, Willie. Col. Joel Jones, in 1776, was promoted to lieutenant-colonel of Col. Jonathan Latimer's regiment, and served in the Northern Campaign, under Gen. Horatio Gates." From the Century Dictionary, Vol. IX, we find that Jacob Jones, born near Smyrna, Del., in 1770, who died in August, 1850, at Philadelphia, was an American naval officer, and commander of the "Wasp" at the capture of the "Frolic" in 1812.

Robert Meeks and his wife settled in Muncie, where he engaged for many years in the furniture and undertaking business, having his brother Isaac in partnership with him for many years, the latter retiring a short time prior to his death in 1891. The old firm, Robert and Isaac Meeks, has been replaced by Robert Meeks' Sons, the sons, James W., William A. and Martin L., being members of the firm which is the leading furniture and undertaking establishment of Muncie, and the oldest firm in that business in this region. Robert Meeks made a coffin the first Sunday after he began work in Muncie, in 1844, and the firm has existed for more than sixty-three years. Mr. Meeks was a man of high moral character, and was an early Prohibitionist of Muncie, a ticket he voted all his life. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, joining Feb. 9, 1858, and was long one of its leading members. On March 22, 1853, Mr. Meeks bought a block of land on which he built his residence in 1861-2, and this tract has become one of the most valuable residence tracts in Muncie, being bounded by Washington, Madison, Gilbert and Elm streets. Later he bought one-half a block south of this property, of which he owned a part at the time of his death. A self-made man in every sense of the word, Robert Meeks was also a man of many sterling qualities of character, and in his death, which occurred Feb. 24, 1906, at his residence, the city of Muncie lost a public-spirited citizen, a leading business man, and one whose life would well serve as a model for the future generations to follow.

JAMES W. MEEKS, son of Robert and Sarah (Jones) Meeks, was born Dec. 14, 1848, in Muncie, on the corner of Washington and Jefferson streets, and received his education in the public schools of Muncie, graduating from the high school at the age of twenty-two years. During this time he was out of school for three years, and learned much of his father's business, although he really began to learn the business when a boy during his vacations. He became a skilful cabinet maker when still quite young, and when thirty-two years old became a member of the firm, having been connected with the business to the present time. He was married June 27, 1876, in Muncie, to Louisa Catherine Hummel, born June 9, 1853, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Smith) Hummel, and directly after marriage the couple settled in a home already built by Mr. Meeks, which stands on the Meeks home block, where they have since resided. Mr. and Mrs. Meeks have three children: Amelia B., born April 4, 1877; Sarah M., born Jan. 23, 1882; and Robert H., born Nov. 4, 1884. Mr. Meeks is a member of the High Street Methodist Church, while his wife is a Universalist. He has been treasurer of the High Street Church and for the Preachers Aid Society for many years. Fraternally he is connected with the I. O. O. F., which he joined Dec. 13, 1873, in which he has held all the chairs, having held the office of Noble Grand and represented his Lodge in the Grand Lodge of the State. He is also a member of Welcome Lodge, K. P., No. 37, Muncie, and a member of DeEmber Tribe, I. O. R. M. He has been secretary of the Jones Family Reunion (of which he is a blood member on his mother's side) since two years after its organization in 1898. In his political belief he is a staunch Republican, but has never taken a very active part in public matters, his business interests claiming his attention. He is a member of the Muncie Commercial Club.

Amelia B. Meeks, daughter of James W., married Oliver J. Campbell, and they reside in Muncie with Mr. and Mrs. Meeks. They have one child, Robert J., born Sept. 24, 1903. Both Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are members of the High street Methodist Church.

Sarah M. Meeks was married Dec. 23, 1903, to Alfred C. Danks, chief engineer with the J. Edgar Thompson Works, of Bessemer, Pa., and they reside in Pittsburg, Pa. They have one son, John James.

Robert H. Meeks, who is connected with the Meeks establishment, married Mary Etta Payton, and they reside at the corner of Gilbert and Madison streets.

WILLIAM ANDREW MEEKS, son of Robert and Sarah (Jones) Meeks, was born April 8, 1851, in Muncie, and received his education in the high school, from which he was graduated. He learned the harness maker's trade, and at it he worked for sixteen months, then entering his father's establishment when he was twenty-one years old. He has been connected with this large industry to the present time. On Oct. 17, 1883, he was married near Muncie to Mary Caroline Dungan, born in Muncie, Nov. 5, 1859, daughter of John W. and Edith (Dragoo) Dungan. Mr. and Mrs. Meeks have one daughter, Edythe, who is a graduate of the schools of Indianapolis. Mr. Meeks is fraternally connected with the I. O. O. F., and the Knights of Pythias at Muncie. He has passed the different chairs and was a representative of both orders at the Grand Lodge. In political matters he is a stanch Republican, but, like his brother, gives his time to business rather than to public matters.

JAMES C. KENNEDY, who died Aug. 16, 1905, was one of the prosperous farmers of Adams township, Morgan county, Ind. He was born in the county, Feb. 25, 1835, son of Luke C. and Jane (Blatford) Kennedy, both natives of Kentucky, and grandson of Ezekiel Kennedy.

(I) Ezekiel Kennedy was born in Kentucky, but came of Irish descent. He passed his years engaged in agriculture, and died on his farm.

(II) Luke C. Kennedy, son of Ezekiel and father of James C., in 1830 bought a farm in Morgan county, Ind., bringing his family overland. At that time the country was all uncultivated, and the Kennedy family lived as typical pioneers. When the land was properly laid out, his farm was in Jefferson township, and there he lived until 1884, when he passed away. The mother died in 1854. Both were earnest members of the Baptist Church. In politics the father was a Republican. The family born to these worthy people consisted of seven children, of whom our subject was third in order of birth. All grew to maturity, but three are now deceased.

(III) After receiving a common school education, James C. Kennedy began to learn the trade of carpenter, and worked at it for twenty years, and at the same time farmed his property. In 1882, Mr. Kennedy bought a sixty-acre farm in Adams township, and with the exception of two years spent in Martinsville, lived here continuously until his death. During this time, he bought and sold several farms, only retaining his sixty-acre farm, upon which in 1888, he built a comfortable residence as well as other buildings. He had a fine orchard, planted by his own hand, and all of the smiling fields were redeemed from the wilderness by his energy and foresight. He found his greatest success in general farming.

In 1857, Mr. Kennedy married Frances E. Shoemaker, who died in 1874. In 1883, he married Hannah Secrest. Five children were born to the first marriage: Mary Jane; John; Lorenzo, deceased; Paris, a farmer in Gregg township, who married Hanie Walters, and has had four children—Howard, Hazel, Harrell, and Hubert, deceased; and Alphonse, a farmer in Monroe township, who married Ida Smith, and has a family of two children, Fred and Ednie. Mr. Kennedy gave his sons an excellent education, and they are succeeding very well indeed. Mr. Kennedy was a consistent member of the Christian Church, to which his widow also belongs. In politics he was a Republican, but never sought public office.

On Aug. 15, 1862, when the war spirit was rife in the land, Mr. Kennedy enlisted in Company H, 79th Ind. V. I., under Capt P. M. Blankenship, and he served very gallantly until the close of the war, in a number of hard fought battles, among these being Stone River. As a good citizen, loyal hearted man, and kind and friendly neighbor and associate, Mr. Kennedy was well-known throughout the entire county, and the success which attended him, was worthily won. Mrs. Kennedy is a lady much beloved in the neighborhood, and she takes a very active part in church work.

DAVID HARRISON GRAY, a wealthy farmer of Duck Creek township, Madison county, a lifelong resident of Indiana, is the third of his name to help on the forward march of his State in its course of ever-increasing prosperity. He was born in Franklin county, Sept. 21, 1839.

The paternal grandfather, also David by name, was a soldier in the Revolution, who later joined the stream of pioneers to Kentucky. In time he moved forward from there, too, going to Franklin county, Ind., where he entered 160 acres of timbered land. He cleared and cultivated it and made it his home till his death, which came at a very advanced age. Himself of Presbyterian Scotch-Irish descent, he married a member of the old Blackburn family of Kentucky, and his children were: Matthew; John, killed in early manhood; David; William; Whiteford; Elizabeth; Nellie, who married a Mr. Rinehart; Nancy, Mrs. Peter Clem; Susan and Mary.

David Gray (2) was born at Bardstown, Ky., and accompanied his father to Indiana when about seven or eight years of age. As it was before the day of good schools on the frontier, he had very little education save what he gleaned for himself from his own extensive reading. He married in Butler county, Ohio, Miss Nancy Knotts, a native of that section and a daughter of Nathan and Mary Knotts. The mother was born in Delaware, but her married life was spent on a frontier farm in Ohio. The children born to this union of David and Nancy Gray were Delilah, Mary, Susan, Margaret, Eliza, Sarah, Ellen, David H. and Matthew H. After his marriage David Gray lived for a few years on his father's land, but soon bought a small place of his own in that same neighborhood. Later he purchased part of the old homestead and lived there till his death, April 13, 1887, at the age of eighty-four. He worked hard all his life and prospered accordingly.

David H. Gray grew up on his father's farm, accustomed to work in the fields and with only a limited education, as there was little opportunity for that among the pioneers. At the age of twenty-two, in 1861, in defense of the Union, he enlisted in Franklin county, in Company G, 37th Ind. V. L., under Capt. John McCoy, for three years. At the end of his term, Oct. 27, 1864, he was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, after seeing much hard service in Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama. The list of battles in which he participated was a long one, including besides those of the Atlanta campaign, Stone River, Tullahoma, the two at Buzzard's Roost, Marietta, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Kennesaw Mountain, Pumpkin Vine Creek (where the regiment met a specially large loss), Burnt Hickory, Resaca and Snake Creek Gap, and the fighting along the Chattahoochee River. Mr. Gray shared in all the experiences of his regiment except for an interval of one month, when he was sick in a Chattanooga hospital with scurvy, and then detailed for a time as a nurse before rejoining his regiment. He saw particularly hard service in the raid on the railroad at Huntsville, Ala., and during the marches which followed in pursuit of Generals Joe Wheeler, Morgan and Forrest. Although he was never wounded, he was much disabled by his army hardships.

Returning to Franklin county after his discharge, Mr. Gray again went to work on his father's farm, but after his marriage in 1868 he settled in Union county for a year. He then moved to Madison county and bought the farm where he now lives, consisting then of 119 acres covered with brush and timber, and with only a log house on it. This place he has converted into good farming property, scientifically cultivated and with a number of good substantial buildings on it. His farming operations have been very profitable, and Mr. Gray ranks among the wealthy men of his township.

On Jan. 16, 1868, David H. Gray and Miss Ellen Nutt were united in matrimony. She was born in Union county, Nov. 9, 1836, and was a daughter of Aaron and Jane (Forbes) Nutt. Three daughters have been born to this union: Alice, Lorena and Dora, all of whom have been given good educations in the public schools. Alice is the wife of George W. Kootz, head clerk in the Elwood postoffice, and she has three children: Howard, Ester and Marsella. Lorena married Homer Sellers, a glass worker in Elwood, and they have one child, Mary. Mr. and Mrs. Gray are members of the Presbyterian Church at Elwood, of which she was a charter member, having united with that denomination earlier in life. Her husband later connected himself with the Elwood Church, in which he was elder for fifteen years. In political faith he is a Democrat. Mr. Gray was formerly a member of Elwood Post, G. A. R., and held the rank of quartermaster, but he is at present an unaffiliated member of the organization.

The Nutt family, to which Mrs. Gray belongs, is of Indiana pioneer stock and her grandfather, Levi, was one of the first settlers in Union county. He came there from Centerville, Ohio, but had been a soldier in the Revolution and was of an established Colonial family. He owned and cleared 160 acres in Union county and there ended his life. His wife's given name was Sarah. * Aaron Nutt, his son, was born in Centerville, and there married Miss Jane Forbes, of Scotch-Irish descent. They went to Indiana and his father gave them eighty acres which he had already entered. In time the son bought his father's farm also, and became the owner of a large place of 240 acres. Both he and his wife were old-school Baptists in their religious belief. They had four sons and four daughters, William, James, Levi, John, Harriet, Eliza, Ellen and Nancy. Of the sons, three were in the Civil war, viz.: William, who was in an Iowa regiment and died in hospital; James, who served five years in the 9th Ind. V. I.; and Levi, who served five years in Company B, 37th Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

WILLIAM E. DUNN, of Noblesville, Ind., one of the self-made men of Hamilton county, is a native of that county and a son of one of the pioneers. He was born in Washington township on July 7, 1855, son of Nathaniel and Ann (Hogan) Dunn.

The Dunns are of old Colonial stock of the State of Virginia, of Irish descent. Benjamin J. Dunn, the grandfather of William E. Dunn, was a native of Fayette county, Ky., where his father was a pioneer and contemporary with Daniel Boone. He died a comparatively young man, during his thirties, in Fayette county. He left a family of children: Joseph, James, Amanda, Nathaniel, Sophronia, Mary, and Lizzie, a half-sister of the foregoing.

Nathaniel Dunn, son of Benjamin, was born in Fayette county, Ky., Jan. 7, 1826. He received a common-school education, and learned the trade of cabinetmaking. In Garrard county, in his native State, he married Ann Hogan, who came of an old Virginia family, who were early settlers of Garrard county, slave holders and large property owners. Nathaniel Dunn removed to Montgomery county, Ind., and settled in Crawfordsville, where he lived for two years and followed his trade. He then went to Boone county, bought land which he cleared, and there made a farm out of the dense woods. After living there for about four years, he sold this farm at a good profit, and moved to Washington township, Hamilton county, where he added to his original purchase from time to time until he had a fine 160-acre farm, which compared favorably with any of its kind in the township. He was an original Republican in politics, and voted for Abraham Lincoln. During the Civil war, he assisted in raising the 101st Ind V. I., and was commissioned first lieutenant. He served eighteen months with this regiment, and was honorably discharged on account of disability. He was in the battle of Stone River, and conducted himself bravely in action. His health became impaired while building pontoon bridges in Tennessee, he became partly paralyzed, and died from the effects thereof Sept. 13, 1876, in Indianapolis, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Dunn were the parents of three children: John, who died in infancy; Joseph W., who died aged four years; and William E. Nathaniel Dunn was a prominent and reliable citizen of Hamilton county, was a trustee of Washington township for two years, and treasurer of the county for a like period. In early life he was a Methodist in religion, but in later years became a Presbyterian.

William E. Dunn was thirteen years old when his father removed to Noblesville. He was educated in the public schools of that city, also attending the high school, and when seventeen years of age started to work, clerking in a store. In 1873 he entered the private bank of Lock & Bonebreak, as a clerk, to learn the business. In 1874 he was given a regular clerkship, and he remained with this firm until 1878. He then engaged in the hardware business as a member of the firm of Loehr & Dunn, and continued therein for three years, after which he bought out Mr. Loehr's interest and continued the business alone for one year longer. In 1884 he entered the Citizen's State Bank, bought stock therein, and has since been connected with this institution. In 1893 he was elected president of this bank, and he is now one of the largest stockholders. The bank is capitalized at $100,000, and it carries on a general banking business. Mr. Dunn is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is its treasurer. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons, and the Knights of Pythias. In his political affiliations he is connected with the Republican party, and takes a great interest in its success in this section of the county.

Mr. Dunn was married Jan. 18, 1888, in Noblesville, to Fannie B. Ross, born Oct. 29, 1867, in Cicero, Ind., daughter of George W. and Elizabeth (Coon) Ross, and the following children have been born to this union: Mabel, born Aug. 14, 1889; Frank H., Sept. 22, 1891; Ross R., Aug. 18, 1895. Mr. Dunn has taken an active interest in all public improvements in Noblesville, and is a man who takes a high rank for his integrity and business ability. He and his family are very well known in Noblesville, and are universally respected and esteemed.

MOCK. The Mock family, one of the old and honored families of Marion county, established there by Michael Mock, is now worthily represented there by his granddaughter, Phoebe Mock, residing at Oaklondon, Lawrence township.

Thomas Mock, the great-grandfather of Miss Phoebe, according to tradition, came from Germany and settled in North Carolina. It is believed that he brought his wife and children, of whom Thomas, Michael, John, Margaret, Elizabeth and Magdalene are remembered. It is not definitely known whether Michael Mock was born in Germany or North Carolina, but the date of his birth is believed to have been Oct. 2, 1775. He was married Aug. 2, 1804, in North Carolina, to Anna Barbara Beaver, born May 15, 1787, and they removed between 1812 and 1815 to Butler county, Ohio, locating near Hamilton in the early settlement of the county. After the death of his wife, which occurred Oct. 30, 1821, Mr. Mock removed to near Germantown, Lawrence township, Marion Co., Ind., where in 1832 or 1833 he entered land, taking up eighty acres for himself, and giving each of his sons $200 that they might enter forty acres each. His daughters received a like amount. He built a hewed log house, one mile south of Germantown, which is still standing, and there died in October, 1843, in the faith of the Lutheran Church. His children were: Elizabeth, born May 25, 1805; Thomas, Dec. 13, 1806; Mary, March 30, 1808; Henry, May 9, 1810; Simeon, Dec. 1, 1812, all in North Carolina; Alexander; Nancy, born March 27, 1818; and John, June 1, 1820, the latter three born in Butler county, Ohio. All of these children came to Indiana except Thomas, who died Feb. 3, 1807, in North Carolina.

Alexander Mock, son of Michael and father of Miss Phoebe, was born June 15, 1815, in Butler county, Ohio, and came with his father to Indiana when a young man. He was married on the farm Nov. 2, 1837, to Mary Pickle, born Oct. 27, 1818, in Clermont county, Ohio, daughter of George and Polly (Apple) Pickle, both of Brush Valley, Pa. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Mock settled on the old Michael Mock homestead, and here continued to live with their family until 1853, when they removed to the present home of Miss Phoebe Mock on the Indianapolis and Pendleton pike. Here Mr. and Mrs. Mock passed the remainder of their lives, he dying Sept. 25, 1901, and she Dec. 30, 1893. He owned 203 acres of land, and at one time operated a tannery, but later gave up this enterprise. He was a hardworking, industrious man, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him for his many admirable traits of character. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat, and he and his wife were members of the Methodist Church. Their children were: Phoebe, born Jan. 23, 1839; Michael, Aug. 17, 1841; and Henry, June 7, 1850.

Phoebe Mock was reared among the pioneers of Indiana, and received a common school education in the district school, a log house with long benches with no backs, and plank floors. She was reared to the hard work of the farm, and was taught to spin, her mother being a fine weaver, making coverlets, blankets, jeans, linen for table cloths, sheets, flannels, etc., and some of these articles are still in the possession of Miss Mock. Miss Mock remained at home with her parents and cared for them tenderly in their declining years, making their old age a happy one. Although formerly a member of the Methodist Church, the church of this denomination is located at too great a distance from her home for her to attend. She is well known for her many charities, and she is a woman of many virtues, and of great kindness of heart. Miss Mock was left sixty-six acres of the homestead, and is now in independent circumstances. She resides in the home built by her father, which is, finished throughout, with the exception of the pantry, with black walnut, much of which was cut on the farm. The old-fashioned hall is furnished with broad, black walnut panels, each more than two feet wide, which were all cut from one mammoth black walnut tree.

ALBERT W. CLARK, superintendent of the Infirmary of Delaware county, who has brought to the responsibilities of that position a ripened experience gained from varied walks in life, comes of an agricultural family formerly identified with Maryland, and was born in that State, Caroline county, Dec. 23, 1854.

Gideon Clark, his paternal grandfather, was a native of Maryland, born March 1, 1805. He owned a farm of 171 acres in Kent county, where he spent his entire active life, and died there Dec. 12, 1864. He was a Methodist in his religious belief as was also his wife. Their children were: Charles H.; Henry; Joshua, who participated in the Civil war; Nathan, born March 4, 1842; Robert; James, born Jan. 8, 1849; Albert; Sarah; and Rebecca.

Charles H. Clark was born Feb. 8, 1829, and grew up on his father's farm. He married, Jan. 6, 1853, Martha, daughter of Josiah Steel. She was a native of Delaware, born Oct. 12, 1835. They remained in Maryland until 1872, and during the war their home was so near the scene of action in that State that the sound of the cannonading from a number of the great battles was distinctly heard, but they escaped any actual molestation. On removing to Indiana in 1872, Mr. Clark lived for a year in Selma and then rented land in Perry township, where he engaged in farming for a number of years. In 1884 he bought property in Selma and resided there until he died, Aug. 11, 1902. His wife died in Selma Aug. 6, 1896. Both were members of the Methodist Church and deeply interested in its work. Mr. Clark acted as sexton for many years. After his death the family had a memorial window for him put in the Church. Children were born to Charles and Martha Clark as follows: Albert Whitley, Dec. 23, 1854; John W., Dec. 25, 1855; Paul Gideon, Sept. 19, 1858; Mackendra, Dec. 7, 1860; Angeline, Sept. 22, 1862; Mary Frances, July 25, 1864; and Martha Ellen, July 30, 1869.

Albert W. Clark had attended a private school in Maryland and for a couple of years thereafter he studied in the public schools in Indiana near his home, altogether acquiring a good education. He lived at home for five years after coming West, but in 1877 he married and settled in Liberty township on rented land. Later, in 1880, he bought fifty acres, where he put up good frame buildings, and cultivated it very profitably until 1894. In that year he sold his land, chose Selma as his place of residence, and became a member of the firm of Clark Brothers, sawmill men and manufacturers of tiles. Within two years he bought out the others, and had just begun on his own account when the entire plant was burned. He at once rebuilt the sawmill and ran it until 1902, when he was made superintendent of the County Infirmary. For this position he has shown himself particularly well qualified, and is still the incumbent of the office. In politics he is a Republican and has the support of that party.

On Jan. 31, 1877, in Delaware county, Albert W. Clark married Eleanora Cecil, who was born in Perry township, March 31, 1855, daughter of George and Marietta (Coffin) Cecil, and second cousin of Dr. Albert Cecil. She and her husband have two daughters, namely: Myrtie May, born in 1882; and Maude C., born March 8, 1888, both of whom are graduates of the Selma high school.

On both the Cecil and the Coffin sides of the family Mrs. Clark is descended from pioneers of Perry township, as her ancestors settled there in early days. Her paternal grandfather, Calvin Cecil, son of John, came with his brother, Aaron, from Marion county, Ohio, sometime prior to 1835, and for a while the two lived together. At that time there were few inhabitants in that section and the settlement at Muncie was so small that Mr. Cecil could have entered what is now the Kirby farm. He chose, instead, a location in Perry township, a mile south of Burlington, because of a good spring on the land. From this place he moved to Liberty township, and bought 130 acres of timber land, which he cleared and operated. His first structure, a log house, was replaced, in 1853, by a two-story frame house with five rooms. Everything he undertook prospered, and he added to his original farm another tract near by of 123 acres. Calvin Cecil married Nancy Gearhart, and they had children as follows: Nancy, Mrs. James Coffin; George Mitchell; Benjamin; Catherine, wife of Simon Stouder; and Zachariah W., who served in an Indiana regiment during the Civil war, was in several battles and was wounded at Chickamauga. The parents were members of the United Brethren Church. Mr. Cecil was one of the early Republicans, and voted for Lincoln. He was quite noted in his day as a hunter. He lived to a good old age, dying at the home of his son, George. After his death his wife made her home with her daughter, Catherine, and there passed away in 1893.

George M. Cecil, father of Mrs. Clark, was born Dec. 8, 1831, probably in Miami county, Ohio, and he came with his parents to Indiana. There he grew up accustomed to farm work, and secured the usual education available on the frontier. After his marriage he located on a 120-acre farm in Perry township, a couple of miles north of Burlington, where part of the land had been cleared. After that preliminary work had been finished he developed the place into a very good farm and lived there until a few years before his death, when he moved into Muncie. All his life he was a hard worker, and was well rewarded for his industry by substantial returns, and by the sincere respect of his neighbors. In politics he was a Republican. He died in Muncie Aug. 21, 1893.

Mr. Cecil's first wife, the mother of Mrs. Clark, was Miss Marietta Coffin, born in Indiana, Nov. 26, 1829, daughter of Francis and Susannah (Stanton) Coffin. Both families were of the Quaker persuasion and were pioneer settlers. Francis Coffin came to Perry township from Wayne county, cleared a farm of 240 acres, and lived there in a log house until his death, at about the age of fifty. His wife died there in 1857, aged eighty. Their children were: Adolphus, wife of Isaac Holloway; James, who married Nancy Cecil; Marietta; Austin; Jordan; Eliza; Hannah, Mrs. Harry Ratcliff; Emeline, Mrs. Jonathan Thornburg; and Rebecca, Mrs. Jasper Helm. Mr. and Mrs. Cecil were married Aug. 18, 1853, and passed twenty years of wedded life, which was ended by Mrs. Cecil's death, June 3, 1873. They had children as follows: Eleanor; Annie C., who died July 11, 1863; Obed William, born Dec. 26, 1858; James Asbury, born Jan. 30, 1860, deceased July 16, 1863; Lydia Florence, born April 14, 1862, deceased Aug. 3, 1863; Orpha Lorzera, born Oct. 20, 1863; Minnie Maud, born Jan. 16, 1867; Bertha Clyde, born Jan. 23, 1869, deceased Aug. 24, 1888; and Ward Beecher, born Jan. 22, 1872.

George M. Cecil married for his second wife Miss Martha Dynes, who survives him and resides in Muncie. To this union six children were born, namely: Walter Calvin, born May 4, 1875; Elta Leonie, born Nov. 1, 1877; Charles D., born May 4, 1879; Ina Blanche, born Oct. 20, 1882; George Vinton, born Jan. 5, 1885; and Ethel O., born April 22, 1887.

GEORGE H. BLACK. Among the leading agriculturists of Hamilton county, Ind., may be mentioned George H. Black, of Fishers Switch, Delaware township, who has an excellent tract of 139 acres. Mr. Black was born March 10, 1842, in Marion county, Ind., son of William and Sarah (Parker) Black.

The Black family of this vicinity were of German origin, and early settlers of Baltimore, Md., whence enlisted in the Revolutionary army Christopher Black and six of his brothers, among whom those remembered are Rudolph, John and William. One of the brothers was killed, one was taken prisoner and carried to England, where he remained, and one was never heard of after enlisting. Christopher Black, who was a farmer of Howard county, Md., married a Miss Barlow, and their children were: Joshua, William, John, James, Christopher, Augustus, Rebecca (who married Richard Davis), Betsy (who married Allen Atherton), and one who died in infancy.

Joshua Black, son of Christopher and grandfather of George H., was born Oct. 3, 1788, in Howard county, Md., and was a soldier in the war of 1812. By trade he was a carpenter. He removed with his family in 1826 to Marion county, Ind., settling in Indianapolis, where for years he was engaged in building, erecting many structures of the day including the old Roberts Chapel, on the southwest corner of Meridian street and the Circle. Later he entered a tract of land in Irvington, where he lived for a time, but returned to the city and died there Nov. 4, 1879, at the age of ninety-one years and one month. He was a member of the Methodist Church, in which he was class leader. In politics he was an old-line Whig, serving as a member of the city council. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. Joshua Black married Elizabeth Burgess, and to them were born four children: Nancy, Washington, William and Sarah.

William Black, father of George H., was born Feb. 21, 1817, in Howard county, Md., and was nine years of age when he came with his father to Indianapolis, where he received his education, being reared on the old home. He was married June 1, 1841, on his father's farm in Irvington, to Sarah Parker, born March 27, 1821, daughter of John and Sarah (Sandusky) Parker. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Black settled on land belonging to Jacob Sandusky, where they lived three years, and then removed to Hancock county, Ind., near Cumberland. Here Mr. Black purchased eighty acres of land, nearly all of which was in the woods, but this he cleared, adding thereto until he owned 160 acres. On first locating on this farm Mr. and Mrs. Black resided in a log cabin, but later he built good frame buildings. This farm he sold in 1873, and removed to Indianapolis, where he remained five years, at the end of which time, being in poor health, he removed to a farm near to the one now owned by Mr. George H. Black, a tract of 104 acres, upon which he passed the remainder of his life, dying Dec. 11, 1900, aged nearly eighty-four years. His widow, who survives him and lives with her son George H., is a member of the Baptist Church, to which faith he also adhered. In politics he was originally an old-line Whig, and later a Republican, but in his latter years supported the Democratic party. A hard working, industrious man and exemplary citizen, Mr. Black was esteemed by all who knew him, and in his death the township lost one of its representative farmers.

George H. Black was born on his father's farm in Irvington, Marion Co., Ind., and when between three and four years of age removed with his father to Hancock county, Ind., where he was reared among the pioneers, receiving his education in the old log schoolhouse with stick chimney, puncheon floor and benches. On Aug. 25, 1861, Mr. Black enlisted in Hancock county, as a private of Company B, 8th Ind. V. I., to serve three years or during the war, serving until his re-enlistment as a veteran, Jan. 1, 1864, at Indianola, Texas, in the same organization. His services were in Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Maryland. He was promoted for meritorious conduct to be corporal, then duty sergeant, and was commissioned first lieutenant during the latter part of his service. He participated in the battles of Black Water, Mo., Sugar Creek and Pea Ridge, Ark., Cotton Plant, Ark., Port Gibson, Miss., Champion Hills, Miss., first battle of Jackson, Miss., Big Black River, Miss., Vicksburg, Miss., second battle of Jackson, Miss., Mustang Island, Texas, Fort Esperanza, Texas, Austin, Texas, Baton Rouge, La., Carrion Crow Bayou, La., Atchafalaya, La., Berryville, W. Va., Hall Town, W. Va., Opequan, Va., Winchester, Va., Fisher's Hill, Va., New Market, Va. and Cedar Creek, Va. Lieutenant Black was wounded at Vicksburg, being shot in the left shoulder by a minie ball, and was disabled for about three weeks, but remained with his regiment. Always a brave and cheerful soldier, Lieutenant Black did his duties efficiently and faithfully, and was respected by his superior officers and greatly esteemed by his men.

After the war Mr. Black returned to the home farm, and was married Nov. 9, 1865, to Dorcas Welling, born on a farm in Harrison county, Ohio, Oct. 13, 1844, daughter of Hamilton and Rachel (Corban) Welling. The Welling family, early settlers of Colonial Virginia, was of English stock, the name having been originally Wellington. William Welling, grandfather of Mrs. Black, was born in Maryland, and was a pioneer of Harrison county, Ohio, where he cleared a farm. He married Dorcas Wayman, by whom he had children: John, Elizabeth, William, David, Hamilton, Rebecca, Nancy and Dorcas. After the death of his wife he came to Hancock Co., Ind., and spent the remainder of his life with his daughter, Mrs. Rebecca Smith, at whose home he died at the age of eighty-three years. In political faith he was a Republican, and in religious belief a Methodist.

Hamilton Welling, father of Mrs. Black, was born Dec. 18, 1815, in Harrison county, Ohio, where he carried on farming. He married Rachel Corban, born Dec. 9, 1818, daughter of John and Rebecca (Styres) Corban, and they removed to Hancock county, Ind., in 1850, and purchased 142 acres of land in the woods, on which they built a log house which was their home for many years. Mrs. Welling died at the age of fifty-two years, but Mr. Welling still survives, being in his ninety-third year. He is a member of the Methodist Church, in which he has been a class leader nearly all of his life. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Welling were: Harriet R., William, Anna, Dorcas (who became Mrs. Black), John, Hannah, Sarah, Mary and Frank.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Black settled on his farm, whence they removed in 1873 to his present farm, which then consisted of 108 acres, partly cleared, but which now includes 139 acres of finely improved and cultivated land. Mr. Black is a good, practical farmer, and his land yields fine crops. He has furnished his property with substantial buildings, and his farm is operated with the latest improved machinery. He is a Democrat in political belief, although during the war he was a Republican and voted for Lincoln. Mrs. Black is a member of the Christian Church, and Mr. Black is a Deist in religious belief. He is a member of Fishers Switch Lodge, I. O. O. F., and also of the Encampment.

To Mr. and Mrs. Black were born the following children: Pearl W., Harry L., Grace D. and Vinton G. All of these children received good educations, and Vinton G. is at present a student in medicine at the Eclectic Medical College of Indiana.

JOHN DIETZ (deceased), who for many years was one of the representative men and prosperous farmers of Warren township, Marion Co., Ind., was born in Prussia, Germany, in 1813, son of John and Christina (Busch) Dietz, also natives of Prussia. These parents came to America with our subject, and settled in Pennsylvania, where they remained a year, and then removed to Indiana, settling on the Christian Dietz place near Irvington.

John Dietz was married, in 1855, to Lizzie Welter, daughter of John and Mary (Hammer) Welter. Mr. and Mrs. Welter came to Indiana in 1853, and they had a family of five children: Lizzie; Christian, a farmer of this county; John, also a farmer of this county; Emma, who married Lewis Gass, a blacksmith of this county; and Margaret, who married Guss Wolf, and lives in Hancock county.

John Dietz was a very hard worker. His 160 acres of timber land were cleared off by him, and the land placed in an excellent condition. In politics he was a Democrat, while his religious faith was that of the German Reformed Church. On Sept. 15, 1896, this excellent and highly esteemed man was taken away, and the community, as well as his immediate family mourned his loss. Success crowned his efforts, and he died at peace with God and man. During his long life, he endeavored to rear his children to fear God and to labor industriously to earn an honest livelihood. Mrs. Dietz lives in her pleasant home in Indianapolis, No. 213 North Summit street, where she is well known, and she is a lady of many Christian virtues.

ROBERT METZGER, the present chief of police in Indianapolis, and formerly sheriff of Marion county, Ind., is a well known and highly regarded citizen of the community. Under his administration the standard of official service in his department has been raised appreciably, and if he has enemies it is a flattering testimonial to his activity, for he enjoys the support and approval of the best element in the city. Mr. Metzger was born in Indianapolis, Oct. 6, 1865, a son of Englebert J. and Sophia (Dickmann) Metzger, the former of whom was born in Germany and the latter in Indianapolis.

The Metzger family is one not unknown in the business and military circles of Germany, where William Metzger, the grandfather of Robert Metzger, was born, and it was he who founded the family in the United States. After fighting in the Napoleonic war under General Blucher—he took part in the battle of Waterloo—he came to America with his family, settling in Covington, Ky., where he conducted a stationery store for some years, and died aged eighty-four. His father had lived to the age of 111, and his death was caused by drinking too much cold water upon coming home overheated after a walk of twelve miles.

The Dickmann family was also of German extraction and was founded in America by Frederick Dickmann, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Metzger. He settled in Indianapolis in 1830 and died there aged eighty-two years. By trade a contractor and builder, many of the old structures in this city stand as examples of his work. He married Sophia Steinmeir, and they had six children.

Englebert J. Metzger was five years old when his parents came to America and settled in Covington, Ky., where he was educated, grew to manhood and learned the printing business. At the outbreak of the Civil war he entered the army, and for a time was under the distinguished commander Gen. Lew Wallace, but was transferred to different regiments and for a time was a captain in the 23d Missouri Infantry. He was a brave soldier, and upon more than one occasion was seriously wounded, and feels the effects of the years of hardship and exposure.

After the close of the war he returned to the printing business and continued in that at Indianapolis, until he was appointed chief deputy under Sheriff Reissner, later serving four years as deputy under Sheriff Pressly, of Marion county. For a time he was engaged in a sawmill business in Illinois, but his health gave way and he bought a large farm near Grand Chain, Ill., which he has conducted for the past twenty years as a stock, grain and fruit farm. The children of his first marriage, to Sophia Dickmann, were Clara, wife of Peter Ohleyer; Olga, wife of Frederick Tetley; Miss Ada, a teacher in Chicago; and Robert, the subject proper of this sketch. The mother of this family died in 1880, aged thirty-six years. She was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Metzger subsequently married (second) Mary Klee, and three children were born to them. Mr. Metzger is a member of the Catholic Church.

Robert Metzger was reared in Indianapolis, and he received his early education in the German and English schools, later attending the city public schools. Then for seven years he worked at the carpenter's trade, after which he entered the employ of the Vonnegut Hardware Company, with whom he continued for thirteen years.

Mr. Metzger has always taken an active interest in political matters, ardently supporting the principles and candidates of the Republican party, and he is considered an especially valuable party worker. His prominence has been recognized in many ways, and he has, for years, been one of the leading members of the State, county and city executive committees. He usually is a delegate to the State conventions, and had the pleasure of holding the position of national delegate in 1900, when the late President McKinley and his honored successor were nominated. In 1905 he was made chairman of the Republican city committee, serving as such one term, during which he successfully conducted the campaign which resulted in the election of Charles A. Bookwalter, as mayor, and all the other candidates on the Republican ticket, after a most strenuous fight.

In 1902 Mr. Metzger was elected sheriff of Marion county, and from Jan. 1, 1903, to the close of 1904 efficiently performed the duties of that office. On Jan. 1, 1906, he was appointed chief of police for the city of Indianapolis for a term of four years. His record as guardian of the public safety has so far been highly creditable, not only as showing his executive ability, but also as exponent of the principles he holds and his high ideals of the responsibilities involved in public service. He has the co-operation of the best classes in his efforts to put the police department on an effective basis, and in spite of political enemies and those in league with the criminal and degenerate classes he has succeeded in making great progress. Mr. Metzger has proved himself able, fearless and conscientious in shouldering the obligations of his important position, his discharge of its duties showing that he has unusual regard for his oath of office and the respect of his fellow-citizens. Moreover, he believes that a good officer should be not only a brave man but a patriotic citizen and a gentleman, and he does not hesitate to discharge a man who fails to measure up to the high standards he has set. As a result the Indianapolis police force compares favorably with any in the large cities of the country, as regards both courtesy and efficiency. Mr. Metzger has shown on more than one occasion that he would not ask one of his inferiors to perform a duty or risk a danger that he himself would not face. His position is a difficult one at best, and he would fail in its most necessary requirements if he did not arouse the opposition of the lawless. But his honesty, energy and earnestness have impressed themselves favorably upon the community, and he has enlisted the good-will of every good citizen in Indianapolis.

On April 19, 1893, Mr. Metzger was united in marriage with Miss Grace A. Hough, daughter of Charles H. and Mary (Burke) Hough, and they have one son, Charles Robert. In religious faith Mr. Metzger is a Lutheran like his beloved mother. Mrs. Metzger belongs to the Congregational Church.

The Hough family originated in England and there Samuel Hough, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Metzger, was born. With his wife, formerly Mary Clark, whose beauty gave her the name of "Pretty Mary," he came to America and settled at Paterson, N. J., where they reared a family of nine children and died in old age.

Mrs. Metzger's maternal grandfather, Henry Burke, was of German descent, and was a shoemaker by trade. He married Amanda Moore, a member of a prominent family of Lancaster county, Pa., whose father lived to the age of ninety-one years and her mother to the age of ninety.

Charles H. Hough was born in New Jersey Nov. 6, 1836, and died in 1879, aged forty-two years. He was a pianomaker and was foreman of the Valley Gem manufacturing plant at the time of his death. Mrs. Hough was born in Ohio. She afterward married Edward E. Matthews, and they reside at St. Petersburg, Fla., at their beautiful home on the gulf.

FREEMAN H. SEWARD, a highly esteemed and substantial citizen of Madison county, engaged in the operation of his fine eighty-acre farm in Anderson township, was born in Rush county, Indiana, May 5, 1842, son of Joseph Irving and Charlotte (Hopper) Seward.

Joseph I. Seward was the son of Obediah and Polly (Sparks) Seward, the former of whom was born in South Carolina, where the family, of English and Dutch descent, had settled early in the colonization of that State. Obediah Seward moved from South Carolina to Ohio with his family, settling at an early date in Hamilton county, near Cincinnati. After the birth of several children he removed to Rush county, Ind., this being about 1827, and settled on eighty acres of land, all heavily timbered. It being the month of March, the spice bushes were in bud, and the family settled by a large ash log, from which they well as a store and residence, and there he has been engaged to the present time. Mr. Schooley is an ex-member of the G. A. R., Williams Post, having held all of the offices therein except that of commander, including senior vice-commander and junior vice-commander. In politics he is a Republican, and since the first administration of Grant has voted for every Republican candidate for President.

To the first marriage of Mr. Schooley there were born these children: Ransom M., Glenn A., Linton L. and Vercella. Mrs. Schooley died Aug. 14, 1897. Mr. Schooley was married (second) July 6, 1899, to Minerva McCoy, born in Fayette county, Ohio, daughter of Effrydicia and Nancy C. (Smith) McCoy, and a member of an early Ohio family, of German and English descent. Mr. and Mrs. Schooley are very well known in their community, where they have a wide social connection.

ELWOOD HENLEY. The fertile soil of Clay township, Hamilton Co., Ind., offers special opportunity to the industrious farmer, and among those who have been associated with the agricultural interests of this locality for a number of years, is Elwood Henley, born in Rush county, Ind., near Carthage, Jan. 7, 1832, son of Thomas and Abigail (Starbuck) Henley, both of whom were born in North Carolina, he in 1803, and she in 1804.

(I) John Henley (great-grandfather of Elwood) and his wife were farming people of Nantucket, and very honorable people, who later immigrated to North Carolina.

(II) Joseph Henley, grandfather of Elwood Henley, was born in North Carolina in 1760, but later came to Rush county, Indiana, where he made his home until his death, at the advanced age of ninety-five years. Eleven children were born to his marriage, although but one is now living, Micajah, who resides at Carthage, Indiana.

(III) Thomas Henley, son of Joseph and father of Elwood, attracted by the advantages offered in Indiana, came west to Rush county in 1821, and entered his land, and then returned to North Carolina, married and brought his bride to the wilderness, out of which it was their purpose to make a home. Eight children were born to this worthy couple: Henry W., living in Carmel, a farmer and operator of a sawmill; Elwood; Milton, now deceased, a farmer; Ann, who married

Aaron Hunt, now deceased, and is now residing at Carthage; Jane, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Eliza, who married Aaron O. Hill, a merchant of Carthage; Jason, who married Ella Jay, and is a carpenter, farmer and owner of a grain elevator at Portland; Owen, who married Mary Wright, and is a farmer on his father's homestead.

When Thomas Henley settled in the woods, he first built a cabin, and worked very hard, the family enduring all kinds of privations incident to pioneer life. From time to time he added to his land until he had 360 acres, which he devoted to general farming. In addition to this he at one time owned 480 acres of land in Iowa. In politics he was a Republican, but while taking an interest in local affairs, did not aspire to office. His religious belief was the simple faith of peace and love of the Society of Friends. On the maternal side of the house, the mother could trace her genealogy to Benjamin Franklin. Her father was Thomas Starbuck, a most worthy man, highly respected and prosperous.

(IV) Elwood Henley owns 160 acres of fine land, nearly all under the plow, and he has twenty acres of good timber land. He settled in this county in 1866, and taking up his land, made all the clearing himself, except fifty acres, putting in 2,000 rods of tiling, ditching it properly. In addition he has built a comfortable house and modern barn, with necessary out-buildings, and is constantly improving his property. In politics he is a Republican, but has never desired office, his personal affairs requiring all his time, but he promotes the material welfare of the township, and is interested in educational matters. His farm products are Poland-China hogs and Durham cattle, which he sells to several markets, his stock commanding excellent prices.

In 1856, Mr. Henley was married to Phebe Newby, who died in 1868, leaving five children: Penelope, deceased; John C., who married Martha A. Dickey, and is a traveling man for an Indianapolis firm; Abigail, who married Alfred Rail, and died eleven days after marriage; Barclay, who married Alda Conrad, and is farming on his father's place; Caroline, who married Samuel White, a farmer, who since moved to Indianapolis, and she is now deceased.

The second marriage of Mr. Henley was to Lydia Manlove, daughter of John and Margaret (Symons) Manlove, natives of Ohio and North Carolina, respectively, the latter coming to Indiana when young.

The grandfather of Mrs. Henley, George Manlove, was a native of North Carolina, who came to Ohio, working his way, in 1808, but who later removed to Indiana, settling in Fayette county in 1811. Returning to Cincinnati on a trip he died there. John Manlove, son of George and father of Mrs. Henley, had twelve children, six of whom are still living: Caroline, who married (first) Benjamin Benbow, and (second) Anderson Mason, and now lives in Iowa; Mary, who married John Hunt, and is also living in Iowa; Lydia (Mrs. Henley); George W., who married (first) Melissa Roby, and (second) Martha Brindall, and lives in this county, where he is engaged in farming; Melissa, who is living on the homestead in Clay township; Vienna, who married John W. S. Graves, and now lives at Wilkinson, Hancock county. Mr. Manlove was a staunch Republican, and an active worker in his party, although he never asked for office. He was a member of no church, but his wife was a Wesleyan Methodist. At the time of his death in 1891, he was a wealthy and highly respected farmer, and exemplary citizen.

Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Henley: Rollin, who married Ella Jeffries, and is living at Indianapolis; Phebe, who married Irvin Newlin, a railroad man, and lives in Carmel; Margaret, who married William A. Bonifield, a gas well digger; Homer, still on the home place; and Miss Olive, a charming young lady, still at home with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Henley are delightful people, kind-hearted, hospitable and charitable, and they have many friends throughout Hamilton and adjoining counties, where their many virtues are appreciated.

J. W. SPICER, M. D., a retired physician of Acton, Marion county, is a descendant on both sides of Kentucky families, and was born in Carroll county, that State, July 1, 1853, son of Moses and Margaret (Stafford) Spicer.

The paternal grandfather, William Spicer, was born in Culpeper county, Va., in 1790, and was a soldier in the War of 1812. He went to Kentucky in the early days and settled near Ghent, where he engaged in farming. His death occurred in 1884, at the advanced age of ninety-four, and of his eight children five survive him.

Moses Spicer was born April 19, 1826, in Carroll county, near Carrollton, and his wife, Margaret Stafford, was born in the same county in 1830. He spent most of his life in Kentucky, farming, and was very successful in his endeavors, but after the death of his wife, May 19, 1888, he began to think of leaving Kentucky, and in 1890 went to Franklin township, Marion county, where he lived on his son's farm, not far from Indianapolis. He died Oct. 21, 1906, when eighty years of age, and was buried at Frankfort, Ky. Moses and Margaret S. Spicer had four children, namely: Dr. J. W.; Hiram S., who married Miss Hattie Shanklin, of Kentucky, and was engaged in lumbering in Lexington, Ky.; Ella, who married (first) Frank B. Heaton, and after his death became the wife of Joshua Hawk, a farmer on Dr. Spicer's property; Mary C., who died at an early age in 1853. Moses Spicer was Democratic in party affiliation, but never sought or held office; neither was he interested in any lodge or society. He belonged to the Christian Church. Mrs. Margaret S. Spicer was the daughter of Hiram R. Stafford, a major in the War of 1812. He was a Kentuckian and spent his early years in that State. He was a great stockman and also owned a large farm of 500 acres, while before the Civil war he had a number of slaves. There were eight children in his family, four of whom are still living. The family is one of English descent, and are all of very strong physique. Several of the Major's older brothers served in the Revolution.

Dr. J. W. Spicer passed his early days in Kentucky, and though it was then becoming well settled, he remembered vividly the stories told by his father of the early times when the Indians were still dangerous neighbors and the wild game abundant. The boy attended school first in Carroll county, and then spent two years in the College of Liberal Arts, in the Kentucky University, at Lexington, Ky. The four years succeeding his college life were passed in teaching, the last three also including a considerable portion of his medical study, for his teaching did not preclude his finding time for much work under the direction of his uncle, Dr. N. P. Stafford. He completed his professional preparation at the Cincinnati Medical College, which he attended two terms, and from which he was graduated Feb. 23, 1878. The following summer he began practicing in joining each other, and several of their children intermarried, as is shown by wills still preserved. Of these brothers, John, and George were the only ones who proved by any existing records, their importation into this country, so the other two, William and James, may have married after reaching America, but probably all were married before leaving Ireland. They certainly were when they came to Augusta county, Va., as the records of the transfers of land to them in 1745 all give the names of the wives. A Rev. James Anderson, who is recorded as having preached the first sermon in Augusta, Va., in 1735, at the home of John Lewis, may have been one of these brothers. They seem to have settled in other parts of the State first, for a time, as John Anderson and his wife Jane came from Ireland about 1740, and, passing through Philadelphia, located in Orange county. They had three children with them, Esther, Mary and Margaret. About the same time came George with his wife Elizabeth and their children, William, Margaret, John and Frances.

William Anderson, the fourth brother and immediate progenitor of the Indiana family, came to Augusta county, Va., from Orange county, in the same state, about 1740. He was granted a tract of land containing 104 acres by patent, June 12, 1745, from the governor of Virginia, and deed and land books show that he purchased several other tracts about the same time from various parties. His name appears in several records on that of a court martial held at the Court House, Sept. 26, 1758, when William Anderson, a private in Capt. Robert Breckenridge's company, was fined One Pound for failing to attend a General Muster. At another court martial held at the Court House, March 13, 1776, Capt. William Anderson is a member of the Court, and he is again styled Capt. Anderson in a sale bill from James Graham to him, dated May 2, 1777. The will of William Anderson is dated Aug. 27, 1792, and names his wife, Elizabeth, and nine children, John, George, Robert, Alexander, Margaret, Mary, Rebecca, Elizabeth and Jane.

Alexander Anderson, also a captain, received his first commission as ensign from the Governor of Virginia, Dec. 17, 1793, according to Order Book No. 23, p. 34; was made lieutenant June 17, 1794; and still later made captain. The will of Alexander Anderson was probated in December, 1825. By his first wife, Esther Kirkland, to whom he was married April 27, 1786, he had two daughters, viz.: Mary, wife of Amos Crosby; and Rebecca, wife of William Hanger. On March 25, 1813, he married Ester, daughter of George and Susan (Evans) Crosby, and sister of Amos Crosby, just mentioned. They had five children, of whom one died in infancy. The other four were: Elizabeth, Mrs. Richard Hill; Martha Ann, Mrs. Ezra Fishburn; George A., who married Miss Margaret S. Sperry; and William Wallace.

William Wallace Anderson, born Feb. 21, 1813, grew up on his father's farm, in the old two-story brick house which Alexander Anderson built, and which is still standing, and made farming his regular calling. He was married April 21, 1836, by Rev. James A. Steele, a Presbyterian minister, to Miss Jannetta Murray, born June 12, 1816, daughter of James Murray. The father was one of the witnesses to the certificate, but it is not certain whether another witness, Peachea Murray, was the mother or not. The Murrays are a noted Scotch family and undoubtedly came, as did the Andersons, from the Scotch Colonies in the North of Ireland. The name Murry or Murray dates back to 1086, A. D., and is from O'Murread-Norgh, descendant of Mureadach, or O'Muireadoigh, chief of Munster-Thainain. Another descendant of this same line was David Murray, of Georgia, who was given land for his services in the Revolution, and who died in 1840, aged eighty-four.

After his marriage, William W. Anderson lived on a part of the homestead, in a double hewed log house, while his brother George occupied the brick house, with his mother. George Anderson believed in slavery, but William was opposed to it, and, finally, to escape from its influences, in 1846 he sold his home for $4,000 and started for the unknown West. They made the journey in a three-horse Conestoga wagon, which was rather lightly loaded with only the cooking utensils, bedding, carpets, etc., and in a one-horse carriage in which the family rode. When tired of riding in the latter, the children would change to the big wagon, and one of them, now Mrs. Wachtell, then a little girl of about eight, well remembers the long journey. They took it slowly, camping by night along the wayside or stopping at some inn or with hospitable settlers. At the mouth of the Miami they crossed the Ohio in a ferry boat, and made their way to Early's Creek, Delaware county, where a brother-in-law, Ezra Fishburn, had settled. After a visit so brief that the wagon was not unpacked, they went on to Chillicothe, where Mrs. Anderson's brother Emanuel lived, and there spent the winter, during which Mr. Anderson worked in Mr. Murray's grist mill.

The following spring Mr. Anderson pressed forward as far as Illinois, going by way of Muncie to Edgar county, where he settled on rented land along Big Sugar creek. He intended to buy later if he liked the country, but within two years he died, March 4, 1848, aged thirty-five. He was a typical pioneer, frugal and industrious but adventurous in spirit and ever ready to seek a new home if the prospects for betterment were bright. After his death, his widow was left almost without means, but she was a woman of resolution and industry, and was anxious to keep her family together. Ezra Fishburn drove out to Illinois for the bereaved family and brought them back to Granville, Delaware county, Ind., where Mrs. Anderson tried to make a living by making men's clothing. After about four years, however, she gave up the vain effort, and all her children except one daughter, Martha Ann, were put out among strangers. This youngest daughter cared for the mother till her death, which occurred in Muncie, May 26, 1876, at the age of sixty. She was a member of the Methodist Church.

Besides the records of the births and deaths of the parents, the old family Bible, belonging to Mrs. Anderson, showed the birth of five children: Esther Frances, born July 16, 1837, died Sept. 27, 1856, aged nineteen years, two months and eleven days; Susan L., born in 1838, became Mrs. Calvin S. Wachtell; Alexander H. was the third child and only son; Dorcas V. was born June 19, 1844; and Martha Ann W., born April 28, 1848, married Nathan Spence, of Muncie.

Alexander H. Anderson was only four years old when the family left Virginia, and he had just begun to go to school in Illinois when his father died. In Granville during the four years the mother kept her family together, the boy attended school regularly, but at nine years he was bound out to Abram Godlove, a farmer living on the Mississinewa river, near Sharon. He lived there four years, working on the farm and going to school winters, and then, on the death of Mr. Godlove, was bound out to his father, Joseph Godlove. Another four years followed before the death of the elder Mr. Godlove also, making the boy about seventeen years old. He had been regularly bound out to his first master till he was twenty-one and the legal papers gave the following terms, which Mr. Anderson well remembered: He was to receive on reaching his majority, a horse, saddle, bridle and fifty dollars' worth of clothing. At seventeen he was a large, strong youth and his services were considered more valuable, so that when his guardian, Thomas Samples, a Muncie lawyer, bound him out for the third time to Abraham Godlove, fifty dollars more was added to the former terms. This third contract was made by Mr. Samples without Mrs. Anderson's knowledge, and against her wishes. But Mr. Godlove also died before the end of the specified term, and Mr. Anderson absolutely refused to renew the contract with the son John. As both Mr. and Mrs. Godlove were dead, and Mr. Samples took no interest in the matter, the young man was unable to secure anything after his long years of toil.

After he was free to work for himself Alexander Anderson was employed by Nicholas Poland, who occupied the Godlove farm, for $18 a month and board, and spent one summer there. His next employer was Benjamin Zehner, owner of a grist and sawmill, but after a few months on his farm and in the mill, he took a new place for the winter with John Pettinger, and also went to school. At that time he was eighteen years old and he continued to go to school a part of each year till he was twenty-one. Meantime he worked for his future father-in-law, Abraham Cline, and for his services about the farm and mill he received $15 a month and his board, saving $100 the year he was twenty years old. The next winter he worked for Daniel Cochran. When he came of age, Mr. Anderson received $160 from his father's estate. He continued to work in that region, first for Nicholas Poland again, then he helped build Zehner's mill, which is still standing, as well as barns on different farms, doing, in fact, any work that came in his way.

On Sept. 15, 1864, Mr. Anderson enlisted in Indianapolis, as a private in Company G, 13th Ind. V. I., and served till discharged just a year later, at the close of the war. He was in Virginia and North Carolina, took part in the battle of Bentonville and in several skirmishes, including that at Fort Fisher. He was on several hard marches, one being from Fort Fisher to Raleigh, when they marched thirty or thirty-five miles a day through March and April, with many swollen streams to be crossed. They arrived in Raleigh the day that Lincoln was assassinated. The portion of this forced march from Fort Fisher to Wilmington was perhaps the worst, and once they marched all night. The exposure and hardships of his army life left Mr. Anderson much injured. Mr. Anderson was a faithful member and trustee of the Methodist Church at De Soto, to which his widow, Mrs. Rhoda C. Anderson, belongs, and in which she has long been an active worker. Mr. Anderson passed away Jan. 10, 1907, aged nearly sixty-five years, sincerely mourned by a wide circle of friends.

JOHN WESLEY GIBSON, for a number of years a farmer near McCordsville, Hancock county, Ind., was born Sept. 29, 1844, in Marion county, Ind., son of Jasper N. and Rebecca (Crubaugh) Gibson.

Archibald A. Gibson, his grandfather, was probably born in Canada and was of French stock; he could talk French. He was long a citizen of Vermont, and he was a soldier in the War of 1812, serving as first sergeant. He was shot in the thigh and carried the ball for twelve years. Archibald A. Gibson married Elizabeth Evens, who was of Welsh stock, and their children were: Abraham, Jasper N., David, William, Esther, Evens, and Malinda. Mr. Gibson moved to Ohio after his family began to grow up, and later migrated still farther west, to Marion county, Ind., where he was a pioneer. He settled two and a half miles east of Lawrence, but he died in Boone county, this State, at the age of ninety-six years. He was a chairmaker by trade. Mrs. Gibson died before him, passing away in Marion county at the age of seventy-three years. She was a member of the Methodist Church.

Jasper N. Gibson was born in 1824 in Ohio, near Cincinnati, received a common-school education and learned his father's trade, and also followed farming to some extent. When a young man he came to Marion county, but he returned to Ohio and married Rebecca Crubaugh, who was born about 1817 in Preble county, Ohio, daughter of John and Mary Crubaugh, of Pennsylvania German stock. After his marriage, Mr. Gibson worked at chairmaking and rented land near Cumberland, Ind. At the time of the Civil war his eldest son, John W., was the only one of the sons old enough for service, and both father and son became members of Company D, 79th Ind. V. I., Jasper N. Gibson enlisting Aug. 8, 1862, for three years or during the war. However, he only served eighteen months, becoming ill from exposure, and he was honorably discharged at Madison in 1863. He served in Kentucky and Tennessee and took part in the battle of Perryville. He was sick in hospital for about a year, at Nashville, Tenn., and Madison, Ind., having contracted rheumatism on account of exposure, and in fact he was so much disabled that he never was able to do much heavy work after his army experiences. In his younger years he was a most industrious man, and he always bore the reputation of being a good citizen and an honorable man in all the relations of life. He died at the age of seventy-two years, in Johnson county, Ind. Mr. Gibson was originally an old-line Whig in political sentiment, but he became a Republican in course of time, and supported Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. He was a member of the Baptist Church, his wife of the Methodist Church. Their children were: John W., Rebecca, Thomas, Mary, Ann, George and Newton.

John Wesley Gibson received such limited educational advantages as the common schools of his boyhood days afforded. The schoolhouse at which he attended was the usual primitive log building common at that time, having a stick chimney, well daubed with mud to keep the logs from burning, a fireplace four feet wide and two feet deep, and windows made of greased paper over an opening cut in the log walls. The period of his attendance consisted of only three or four months in the winter time, for during the summers he was obliged to work long and hard helping with the work at home, but nevertheless he learned to spell very well, in fact he could spell anything in the old speller used in the school. On Aug. 2, 1862, he enlisted for three years or during the war, in the same command which his father joined, becoming a private in Company D, 79th Ind. V. I., and served until honorably discharged at Nashville, Tenn., June 7, 1865; he was mustered out at Indianapolis. Mr. Gibson's service took him into Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia, and he had his share of hard marching, exposure and active participation in bat-ties, being at Perryville, Murfreesboro, Missionary Ridge, Pine Knob, Ringgold, Resaca, Pumpkin Vine Creek and Dallas. He was in line of battle when General MacPherson was killed and in the great battle following in front of Atlanta, when the Union troops were under fire for four months during this campaign. After the battle of Jonesboro, in which he took part, his regiment returned with Thomas and he was in the engagements at Franklin and Nashville. He was also in numerous skirmishes. While on picket line at Duck river, Tenn., he was grazed in the right shoulder by a musket ball. He was sick in hospital at Murfreesboro and Nashville for eight months, and was near death, but he was never captured, and except when disabled, was in every action of his command.

Returning to Marion county, Ind., after his army service was over, Mr. Gibson worked on the farm for two years, and then took up the carpenter's trade, at which he continued to work for twenty-one years, mostly in Marion county. He was engaged on several large buildings in Indianapolis, where he carried on business as a contractor and builder. His first marriage took place in Indianapolis, and after his second marriage he moved to Malott Park, Ind., where he continued in the same line of work. In 1900 he bought forty acres of land, part of the old James Johnson farm, on the present site of Fort Harrison farm. The land was subsequently bought by the United States government at $100 per acre, and included in the site of Fort Harrison, and Mr. Gibson then bought the farm of twenty-seven acres near McCordsville, Hancock county, on which he has since lived. He has recently sold this property, however, and removed to Jennings county, Ind., where he has bought a good farm of 125 acres. Since his removal here he has been licensed by the M. E. Church as a minister of the gospel.

In September, 1867, Mr. Gibson was married, in Indianapolis, to Frances Kratzer, a native of Marion county, Ind., daughter of Henry and Frances (Shearer) Kratzer, both of whom came of Pennsylvania German stock. To this union was born one child, Stella M., now the wife of Murry E. Rice. Mrs. Gibson died May 2, 1886, and Mr. Gibson married, in Washington township, Marion county, on Nov. 18, 1888, Eliza A. Siegmund, who was born Jan. 24, 1854, in Lawrence township, that county, on the present site of Fort Harrison, daughter of William and Jane (Herin) Siegmund. Children as follows have come to this union: John W., born July 23, 1890, in Malott Park; Nellie E., born Jan. 30, 1892, at that place; Eva, born Dec. 14, 1894, who died in February, 1895; and Rebecca J., born June 20, 1896, at Malott Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Gibson are members of the Methodist Church. In politics he is a Republican, casting his first Presidential vote for Grant and supporting every Republican candidate since that time. He is a member of the G. A. R. at Lawrence, and was formerly adjutant of his post, and he was formerly a member of the I. O. O. F., which he joined at Broad Ripple. Mr. Gibson has proved himself as good a citizen in times of peace as he was when his country needed special service, and he and his excellent wife are highly regarded in the various communities where they have resided.

The Siegmund family, to which Mrs. Gibson belongs, is of Pennsylvania German stock, and her mother's people, the Herins, are Ohio pioneer stock of Scotch-Irish extraction. James Siegmund, Mrs. Gibson's grandfather, was a pioneer from Ohio to Marion county, Ind., and settled on what is now the site of Fort Benjamin Harrison, where he entered 160 acres of land. A spring on the place is now marked by a wind pump near the center of the Fort. In early times the property was heavily covered with timber, and Mr. Siegmund built a log cabin for the family dwelling, in which he passed the remainder of his life, dying there. Mrs. Gibson well remembers a poplar stump which was nearly six feet across, and a large willow tree near the spring which had grown from a willow switch once used to string fish on and stuck in the ground by Lavina Siegmund when she was a girl. She died some years ago, at an advanced age. James Siegmund married Mrs. Elizabeth (Groves) Pearl, widow of Henry Pearl, and they had children as follows: Jacob, David, Hester, Susan, Lavina, William, John and James. The mother died at the age of ninety-three years, at the home of one of her children, and all of the family are also deceased. The parents were Missionary Baptists in religious faith.

William Siegmund, Mrs. Gibson's father, was born in Ohio about 1826, and was brought to Marion county when about one year old. He was always a farmer. He was married, in Marion county, on the old McCormick farm, to Jane Herin, who was born April 13, 1827, daughter of neighbors, John and Sarah Herin, the former a pioneer of near Castleton, Ind., where he entered 160 acres of land on the Millersville pike, clearing his farm from the woods. He was a substantial citizen. By his first wife, Sarah, Mr. Herin had the following named children: Jane, Polly, Jesse, William (who died when small), Sarah, Rebecca, and Clara. By his second wife he had one son, John. Mr. Herin lived to be about fifty-five years old, and died on his farm. William Siegmund had an interest in the home place, but he sold it and rented land in Lawrence township, and in later life lived in Washington township. For two winters he taught school. He was a Baptist in religious belief. Mrs. Siegmund in her later years became a Methodist. Their children were: Sarah, James, Jane, Lavina, Eliza A., Esther, Albert, Ella, Lora and Addie. Of this family Eliza A., Mrs. Gibson, received a good education in the common schools, becoming well trained in the old-fashioned substantial way, accurate in arithmetic and an excellent reader.

CORNELIUS MOORE, a substantial farmer of Jackson township, Madison county, was born in Hamilton county, Ind., son of Cornelius and Elizabeth (Lash) Moore.

Cornelius Moore was the son of John Moore, a pioneer of Athens county, Ohio. He was a farmer in Ohio, and improved a farm which is still owned by the Moore family. The children of John Moore were: John; Matthew; Lydia, who married a Mr. Pierce; Sarah, who married a Mr. Burnet; Annie, who married Lemuel Robinnet; Peggie, married to Mr. Jellie; Cornelius; and Clarissa, who married Richard Angel. The Moores were originally of German stock of New Jersey. Cornelius Moore, the father of our subject, was born in New Jersey, and came West with his parents to Ohio. He received the common school education of his day, and was reared to manhood on his father's farm. He was married in Athens county, Ohio, in about 1831 or 1832, and then settled on a farm in Athens. His wife, Elizabeth Lash, was the daughter of William and Elizabeth (Price) Lash.

The Lashes were of Colonial stock of New Jersey, and William Lash was a pioneer farmer of Athens county, Ohio, where he cleared up a farm, this tract now being in the possession of his descendants. He had a good homestead of eighty acres, which although very hilly, he made into a productive farm, and here he reared a family as follows: Easter, who married Basil Gabriel; Polly, who married Eli Reynolds; Elizabeth, the mother of our subject; Abraham; Jacob, and William. William Lash died of fever when on a journey down the Ohio river. He was then in middle life, and his wife survived him many years, living to the ripe old age of eighty years. She died in Athens county, Ohio.

Cornelius Moore did not live on the old homestead in Athens more than two years. In 1834 he came to Indiana, locating in Hamilton county. The journey was made with two horses and a wagon, the trip consuming three weeks. The party arrived in Madison county Nov. 26, 1834, and a few days later they settled in White River township, Hamilton county. This journey Mrs. Moore made five times in her life. Cornelius Moore settled in the woods in White River township, on 160 acres of land, which he had entered. He built a log cabin, which he later replaced with a hewed log house, building at the same time a double log barn, with a driveway through the centre, and a puncheon floor. Mr. Moore was a good, practical farmer and cleared a large portion of his farm from the woods. He died in 1854, at the age of forty-seven years, his wife surviving until Aug. 19, 1899, when she passed away, aged eighty-five years. Both Cornelius Moore and his wife were members of the Baptist Church, which they had joined in their youth in Ohio. In politics Mr. Moore was a Democrat. To this worthy couple were born: Isaac; Marilla, who died unmarried aged twenty-eight years; Joseph, who died aged sixty-four years; Mary, who married James Castor, died aged fifty years; George; Cornelius, our subject; William, who died aged fifty-five years; and Anthony. Of this family two sons were in the Civil war, George being first in an Ohio regiment for four months, and then served five months in the same regiment as our subject, Cornelius. He was in the battle and surrender of Harper's Ferry.

Cornelius Moore, our subject, attended the Normal school at Danville for a short time, and then educated himself to become a teacher. He taught school for five winters in Jackson township, Madison county. When twenty-one years of age he enlisted in Strawtown, Hamilton county, Ind., May 9, 1864, as a private of Company B, Capt. John B. Jackson's company, 136th Ind. V. I., to serve 100 days. He served out this time and was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, Ind., in August, 1864. This service was in Tennessee, at Murfreesboro. He re-enlisted at Strawtown, Ind., March 20, 1865, for one year, or during the war, and was again honorably discharged, the war being over, at Indianapolis, Ind., in August, 1865, having served five months in Washington, D. C., Virginia and Delaware. Mr. Moore was never in the hospital, but was always an active, faithful soldier, doing his duty cheerfully and promptly, and for meritorious services was promoted to corporal. He returned to the homestead in White River township, Hamilton county, after the war, and there he resided some years.

Mr. Moore was married Oct. 18, 1873, to Sarah White, daughter of Joel and Elizabeth (Garrettson) White, the former of whom was a native of Tennessee, where he married. He and his family removed as pioneers to Indiana and settled on land in Jackson township. Mr. White investing in 156 acres of land, from which he cleared a fine farm, it having been heavily timbered at the time of its purchase. Here Mr. White built a fine frame house, which was a well-known stopping place for travelers at that early day. Elizabeth Garrettson, the wife of Mr. White, was descended from the well-known Garrettson family of Maryland, who once owned the land upon which the city of Baltimore now stands. It is said that this estate has never been properly settled. Joel White and his wife were the parents of the following children: Susan, who married Elijah Robinett, died aged fifty-three years; Benjamin, who was the head of a family, died at the age of fifty-two years; Minerva married James Snell; Maria married Job Garrettson; George; Albert; John and Sarah. Joel White died aged sixty-five years, in 1874, his wife having passed away in 1870, aged fifty-nine. They had both been members of the Christian Church. In political opinions he was a staunch Jacksonian Democrat. Mr. White was a well-to-do pioneer settler and was universally respected. A man of kindly heart, he was also a practical and successful business man. Locating in Indiana with nothing, at the time of his death he was a large land owner, and was able to leave his children a handsome competency, beside 500 acres of land.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Moore settled on the old Moore homestead, where they lived for one year, and then moved to Wells county in a wagon, settling on a new farm in the woods. Here Mr. Moore cleared a home, and he and his family resided eight years, at the end of which time they removed to White River township, where he purchased 110 acres, living on this farm from 1881 to 1889. On this farm, after its clearing, draining and improving by Mr. Moore, he built a fine house, and good buildings, and sold it at an advance, which enabled him to purchase his present fine property, consisting of 258 acres. This property Mr. Moore has partly cleared, and it is well drained and supplied with good farm buildings, and besides this he owns considerable building property in the town of Anderson.

To Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Moore the following children have been born: Nellie E., who died aged eleven years; Carrie, who married William Brown, has three children, and resides on the homestead; Ora V.; Dora D.; and Georgiana. In his political belief Mr. Moore is a Jefferson Democrat. He was supervisor of White River township for four years, and in Jackson township was assessor for four years. He was formerly a member of Major May Post, G. A. R., of Anderson.

W. C. VANCE. One of the prominent citizens of Noblesville, and present postmaster of that city, W. C. Vance, was born in Hamilton county, Ind., Oct. 9, 1842, son of Thomas C. and Sophia (Swaim) Vance.

Samuel Vance, grandfather of W. C., came from Randolph county, N. C., as a pioneer to Hamilton county, Ind., and, settling in Clay township, cleared a farm of eighty acres, which he improved with what were good buildings for that day. He had married, in North Carolina, Sarah Voss, and their children were: Thomas C., Wesley, Joseph, Green, David, Benjamin, Lewis, Mary and Sarah, all born in Hamilton county, Ind., except Thomas C., Wesley and Joseph. Samuel Vance was a member of the Christian Church, and was an old-line Whig in politics. His death occurred on his farm when he was in his fifty-fifth year.

Thomas C. Vance, father of our subject, was born in 1818, in Randolph county, N. C., and was ten years of age when he came to Hamilton county in 1828 with his parents. He grew up among the pioneers and received the usual pioneer education, after which he engaged in farming, and followed that occupation all of his life. He married, in Hamilton county, Sophia Swaim, daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth (Mills) Swaim. Jesse Swaim was a pioneer of Washington county, Ind., having come from Randolph county, N. C., of Scotch-Irish stock, the Vance family's descendants also being of this origin. The Swaim children were: Nathaniel, Alexander, Trougott, Joseph, Mariah, Sophia and Catherine. Mr. Swaim died at Salem, Washington county, Ind. Mrs. Swaim removed to Hamilton county, Ind., settling in Clay township late in life, and there she died.

Thomas C. Vance cleared his farm from the woods in Union township, Boone county, and made his 110 acres into a good, well-cultivated farm. He died here, aged fifty-two years, in 1870, leaving these children: W. C.; Ira Newton; Mariah and Frank, all born in Boone county except W. C. The mother died in 1894.

W. C. Vance was brought up among the pioneers. In his boyhood days the country was covered with heavy timber, and log cabins were the pioneer homes. He attended the primitive schools of the times, and when sixteen years of age went to Zionsville, to clerk in the Swaim Brothers' store. They were his uncles, and he remained with them until 1861, when he enlisted at Zionsville, as a private of Company F, 10th Ind. V. I., for three years or during the war, under Capt. B. F. Gregory. He served three years and was honorably discharged at Indianapolis, Sept. 19, 1864, on the expiration of his service. He participated in the battles of Mills Springs, Chickamauga, Perryville, and of the Atlanta campaign, among the latter being Peach Tree Creek, and all the skirmishes and battles incident to that campaign up to the fall of Atlanta. He was struck in the right foot by a musket ball at the battle of Chickamauga, Saturday, Sept. 19, 1863, and was sent to the hospital from Corinth, Miss., and was in the hospital at Newburg one week. He was always an active soldier and did his full duty as such.

After the war Mr. Vance returned to Zionsville, and engaged in general merchandising with Joseph Swaim. There he remained one year, after which he went to Northfield, where, in company with his brother, Ira, he continued in the merchandise business for two years. He bought out his partner's interest and remained at this stand for the next five years, when he sold out, removing to Eagletown, Hamilton county. Here he engaged in a mercantile business for seven years, and his next venture was in the agricultural line, he purchasing ninety acres in Noblesville township. He added twenty acres to his farm, which he improved, but later he sold out and engaged in a grocery business in Noblesville. From 1884 to 1892 he continued this business, and in the latter year went back to farming, at which he continued for two years. In 1898 he was appointed postmaster at Noblesville by President McKinley, was re-appointed by President Roosevelt, and has not only proved an efficient official, but has gained the confidence and esteem of his fellow-townsmen by his courtesy and good business qualifications.

Mr. Vance was married July 4, 1865, in Lebanon, Boone county, Ind., to Elizabeth J. Halstead, born in Clinton county, Ohio, daughter of Joseph Halstead, who was a miller of Brown county, Ohio. Mr. Halstead made a trip to California by the way of the Isthmus, and was killed in the gold mines by the fall of a tree. His children were: Asa, Alanson, Joseph, James W., Peter, Elizabeth, Julia and William. In politics Mr. Vance is a staunch Republican, and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. He was a member of the city council of Noblesville from the First ward for five years. He is a member fraternally of the Masonic order, Noblesville Lodge; of the K. of P., Bernice Lodge, No. 120; of which latter he was first treasurer and a charter member; and of Lookout Post, No. 133, G. A. R., of which he was at one time commander. He and his wife have had children as follows: Lou; Nellie, who died at the age of thirteen years; Carl; Anna; Rolla, and Lola. Mr. Vance is a representative citizen; his record shows his true worth. He was a good, faithful soldier during the Civil war, and has proved himself to be just as good and as useful a man in times of peace.

MARCELLUS CHILES, a well-to-do citizen of Alexandria, comes from an old English family that settled in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., in Colonial days. He himself is a native of Ohio, born in Warren county, June 2, 1846, son of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Little) Chiles.

Benjamin Chiles migrated from Virginia to Ohio in early manhood. There is a tradition in the family that a part of the old family estate in the Shenandoah Valley still remains unsettled. In Ohio Benjamin Chiles married Miss Elizabeth Little, a native of that State residing in Warren county. She bore her husband two children, namely: Clementine, widow of the late Eli Cox, who now lives at No. 335 West Seventh street, Muncie; and Marcellus. Mrs. Elizabeth Chiles died, and her husband afterward married Mrs. Sarah Yost, by whom he had four children, Mary Catherine, Smith, Minerva and Benjamin. In February, 1856, Mr. Chiles moved to Delaware county, Ind., transporting all his household effects in a one-horse wagon. He did not purchase property there until 1868, when he bought eighty acres of forest land, cleared it and made a good farm. His death occurred at his home, near Bethel, when he was about sixty years old. Benjamin Chiles was an honest, hard-working man, and a respected citizen. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and in politics was originally an old-line Whig, but he became later an Abolitionist, and, after that issue was dead became a Republican.

Marcellus Chiles was only ten years old when his father moved to Indiana. He received a limited education and was brought up to hard work on the farm. There was in the vicinity a log school house where the children of the locality could go for two months every year, but Marcellus Chiles was able to attend only during a few winters. While still only a youth the war broke out, and he enlisted near Muncie in May, 1862, in Company L, 8th Ind. V. I. for three years or during the war, and served until he was honorably discharged Aug. 9, 1865, in Indianapolis, when the struggle was over. Mr. Chiles served in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and North Carolina, and was in the battles of Nashville, two at Franklin, Campbellsville and Pulaski. On Sept. 27, 1864, he was wounded by an ounce bullet which passed directly through the left thigh from right to left, in its course going also through an old fashioned pocket-book full of papers. Mr. Chiles lay on the field for thirty-six hours, uncared for and with little food or water. Even after he was found little attention was given him in the field hospital, and by Oct. 3d, when he reached Nashville hospital, to which he had been sent on a flat car, gangrene had set in and before the wound could at last be properly dressed, nineteen worms had to be removed from it. Mr. Chiles had at first bled profusely and consequently was much reduced. He remained in the hospital until November, was then taken by boat to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., and remained there until he was furloughed home March 17th. When able to report again for duty, he was assigned to convalescent camp, and stationed at Blair's Landing, N. C., whence he was sent on guard duty to Alexandria, Fort Monroe, Baltimore and other points.

On returning to Indiana after being discharged, Mr. Chiles worked as a butcher, going into the meat business for himself in 1867 at Yorktown. He remained there until 1872, when he engaged in the same line in Alexandria. From there he went to Kingman county, Kans., where he owned a good farm, while at the same time he was in the commission business in Kansas City. In 1887 he went to Eureka Springs, Ark., then to Springfield, Mo., where he was again in the meat business for two years and a half, and finally returned to Indiana, locating at Alexandria. Ever since Mr. Chiles has carried on a wholesale and retail meat business in that city, conducts two meat markets, and has become very prosperous. In addition to his business holdings he is the owner of a good home. He is entirely a self-made man, who entered life with no capital beyond a strong constitution, but has nevertheless forged steadily ahead until today he is a well known, wealthy and respected citizen. Politically Mr. Chiles is a Republican. He belongs to Lew Taylor Post, G. A. R., Alexandria, and is an unaffiliated member of the I. O. O. F., of Alexandria.

A year before locating in Yorktown Mr. Chiles had married there, Jan. 23, 1866, Miss Juliette S. Horne, who was born in Switzerland county, Ind., Sept. 23, 1846, daughter of Dr. John and Isabella (Scott) Horne, now of Yorktown. To Mr. and Mrs. Chiles have been born three children, who have all been finely educated: (1) John, born Dec. 11, 1866, attended the Muncie high school and De Pauw University at Greencastle, Ind. He read law in Kingman county, Kans., and is now successfully practicing in Denver, Colo. He married Miss Lillian Holmes, and has three children, Marcellus H., Margaret and John. (2) Daisy Caroline, born Dec. 19, 1868, was given first a high school education, and then attended De Pauw University. She is especially talented in music, and studied in the Conservatory of Music at Topeka, Kans.

She married John F. Mail, a successful attorney in Denver. (3) Creth, born Dec. 23, 1883, has completed a high school course, a normal course at Valparaiso, Ind., and is now studying at De Pauw University.

THOMAS B. NOBLE, M. D. (deceased), was one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Johnson county, where a long career of successful practice not only brought him ample means and worldly estate but also the esteem of his fellow-citizens and the grateful affection of many patients.

Dr. Noble was by birth a Kentuckian. He was a son of George Thomas and Louisa (Canby) Noble, the former of whom was a native of Kentucky, while the latter was born in Virginia. Both families were prominent in their respective States, where they are still well represented.

Thomas Noble, the Doctor's paternal grandfather, was a native of Virginia, of Irish descent. He was a physician, and engaged in agricultural pursuits as well. Moving to Kentucky, he lived there to an advanced age, and is buried on the old homestead farm in Boone county, that State. Sixteen children were born to him. On the maternal side, the Doctor's grandfather was Benjamin Canby, a native of Virginia, of English descent, and a physician by profession. In 1833 Dr. Canby moved to Indianapolis, Ind., and lived there to the fullness of years and honor.

George Thomas Noble, the father of Dr. Noble, followed farming exclusively. In 1832 he moved from Kentucky to Indianapolis and remained two years in the growing village, after which he bought a farm of eighty acres in Pleasant township, Johnson county, and moved to it. Later he bought an additional eighty-five-acre tract and in the cultivation and improvement of these farms passed the rest of his life, dying Nov. 3, 1883, in his eighty-third year. His wife had preceded him to the grave, dying in 1852, at the age of fifty years. Mr. Noble was a Methodist, and Mrs. Noble was reared a Quaker. They had a family consisting of eight members, six sons and two daughters, the survivors being: Noah, a resident of Pleasant township; John, a resident of Greenwood; and Julia, the wife of Grafton Johnson, of Greenwood. The others were: Lazarus, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Sarah, who was the wife of Lawrence Ritchie; Dr. Thomas B., the third in the family; Samuel, who died at the age of fifty-eight years; and James, who died in infancy.

Thomas Benjamin Noble was born in the Blue Grass State Feb. 12, 1827, and was five years of age when he was brought to Indianapolis from Kentucky by his parents. He was a resident of Greenwood from 1834. His early schooling was obtained in the old-fashioned subscription schools of the time and locality, and he was later given the advantages provided at the old Franklin College. Inheriting, perhaps, from both his paternal and maternal grandfathers a taste and talent for medicine and medical science, he early began its study and entered into practice in Greenwood in 1852, and in his chosen field of labor he attained marked success. When he died, at the age of eighty years, he held a high social and professional position. His skill and magnetic personality were recognized very generally, and there are few homes in the city which at some time or other have not welcomed his cheery presence.

On Nov. 29, 1855, Dr. Noble was united in marriage with Miss Margaret A. Wishard, daughter of John and Agnes (Oliver) Wishard, and a sister of the well-known venerable Dr. W. H. Wishard, of Indianapolis, who is now in his ninety-third year, who retired from regular practice in 1905, but is nevertheless often consulted. For some eight years he was a partner with Dr. Noble, in Greenwood. Another brother of Mrs. Noble, Dr. J. M. Wishard, was a physician of Greenwood also.

The Wishards were among the pioneer families of Johnson county, where its members have been known as intelligent and honorable citizens, prominent in the development of their community. Mrs. Noble is of Scottish descent in both paternal and maternal lines. Her paternal ancestry is traced back to George Wishard, who died a martyr as a Covenanter in Scotland. William Wishard, her great-grandfather, was born in that country, whence he emigrated to County Tyrone, Ireland, and thence to America, coming to Pennsylvania prior to the Revolutionary war. He settled at Red Stone Old Fort, now Brownstown, Pa. In 1776 he served in the Revolution as a minute man, and took part in the battle of the Brandywine. He was an early pioneer of Nicholas county, Ky., where he had a large farm, upon which he reared his numerous family. In early life he was a weaver, but after coming to the United States he engaged in agricultural pursuits.

John Oliver, Mrs. Noble's maternal grandfather, was born in Scotland, came to the United States, and moved with the Wishards to Kentucky, and he was one of the early men who developed the agricultural resources of the vicinity of Lexington. Later he moved to Nicholas county, Ky., near his old friends, the Wishards. It is said that John Oliver's wife, Martha (Henderson) Oliver, was the first person buried in Nicholas county, Ky. Of their family two sons and two daughters lived to maturity, and both the Oliver girls, Margaret and Agnes, married Wishards, Margaret marrying Samuel Wishard, and Agnes marrying John Wishard. Samuel came to Indiana and settled in Vermilion county, where he carried on farming.

Eight children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Noble, the six survivors being: Agnes, who married David Praig, has one son, Noble, and they reside in Indianapolis; Margaret married Edward T. Lee, a lawyer, and has three children, and they reside in Chicago; Martha, who married Rev. C. M. Carter, a Baptist minister of Muncie, Ind., has three children, Louise N., Noble and Helen; Thomas B., a practicing physician of Indianapolis, married Miss Florence Robb, and they have two children, Margaret and Thomas; Miss Mary lives at home; Elizabeth married John Oliver, a lawyer in Franklin, now deceased, and a daughter Elizabeth was born to Mrs. Oliver after his death.

In politics Dr. Noble was a lifelong Republican, and he was ever a useful and progressive citizen of his community. Whether the mixture of English and Irish ancestry produced an unusually robust condition, or whether a life according to the laws of nature and health brought their deserved results, the fact remains that Dr. Noble, in spite of his fourscore years, retained the physical and mental vigor of a man in the prime of life, his fine presence and abounding activity giving no indication of advancing years. He had many friends, not only in the Presbyterian Church, with which he and his wife united, but throughout the community which was his home for over seventy years. His late residence, built in 1875, is a handsome brick structure which has been the family home since its erection.

NICHOLAS S. MARTZ, one of Tipton's most prominent and public-spirited citizens, represents two of Indiana's earliest pioneer families, while in the generations still further back, the names of Martz and McCormick appear among the defenders of the country in its struggles against England. With the same spirit that animated his ancestors, Mr. Martz in his turn responded to his country's call for aid against its own sons, and he has a military record which adds new honor to the family name. He was born in Hamilton county, Ind., Nov. 10, 1845, son of Moses and Tabitha (McCormick) Martz.

On his maternal side Mr. Martz traces his descent from a certain McCormick of Scotch stock, who came from the North of Ireland to Virginia about 1700, and settled near Winchester. His son, John, was born Aug. 13, 1754, and as a young man fought in the Revolution. He enlisted twice in Virginia, once in 1775 and again later, while near the end of the struggle he took up arms again as a soldier from Pennsylvania, whither he had moved in the meantime. John McCormick married, in Virginia, March 4, 1785, Catherine Drennen, and in 1808 the whole family migrated to the territory of Indiana. They journeyed overland with horses and wagons, and a part of the journey was made down the Ohio on flatboats, and as there was trouble with the Indians at the time of their arrival, they remained for some time in a fort, but Mr. McCormick was the first man to leave the protection of the fort and venture to settle elsewhere. He located on land adjoining Connersville, and remained there the rest of his life, passing away April 18, 1837. His wife, who lived until Feb. 22, 1862, reached the age of ninety-three years. Their large family, who lived to grow up except two, were born as follows: Sarah, April 22, 1786; Anna, Sept. 6, 1787; Samuel, Sept. 23, 1789; John, Sept. 15, 1791; William, Sept. 27, 1793; Joseph, Sept. 7, 1796; James, Dec. 5, 1797; Elizabeth, March 29, 1800; Jane, June 4, 1802; Robert, June 19, 1804; Lewis, June 9, 1807; Catherine, Dec. 20, 1808; David, Jan. 24, 1811; and Mary, July 9, 1813.

John McCormick, fourth child of John (1), was born near Winchester, Va., and was seventeen years old when the family came to Indiana. In 1811 he was married, near Hamilton, Ohio, to Bethiah Case, who was born in Bolton county, Ky. Her people were originally from Pennsylvania and eventually settled in Ohio. The following year, when the War of 1812 broke out, John McCormick left his young wife in order to enlist, and served throughout that war. On his return they made their home with his parents and remained there until 1820, when they made a home of their own on the present site of Indianapolis, the first settlers there. So wild was it then that they had to cut a road in to their location some sixty miles, while during their first years there wolves were very numerous, as well as Indians. When the family first came eleven men accompanied them to help put up a cabin, and then left them alone in the forest. Mr. McCormick held a quarter-section along the White river under a title from the Indians, given after the peace treaty at St. Marys, Ohio. During the two years he remained there, he and his wife kept a hotel, boarding the men who platted the city of Indianapolis, while he also kept the ferry, using a log canoe.

In 1822 Mr. McCormick moved five miles up the river, near the present Crown Hill cemetery, and there built a saw mill, with corn cracker attached, which he ran for the three years before his untimely death, Aug. 25, 1825, when only thirty-four years old. He was a member of the Baptist Church, as his wife was during her earlier years, but later she united with the Christian Church. They had five children: Katie, William, Wesley, Tabitha and Levina. The two last, who were twins, married twin brothers, Moses and Isaac Martz. After her husband's death Mrs. McCormick married John King, a farmer of Morgan county, Ind., and they had two sons, Cornelius and John. Mrs. King was again left a widow, and after remaining on her farm some years, she finally moved to Arcadia and lived there with her daughters, dying in 1875.

The Martz family is of German descent, and was first represented in America about 1700. The earliest definite information is of Nicholas Martz, born Feb. 25, 1762, in Lancaster county, Pa. By occupation he was a farmer and cabinet maker. He was an immense man, weighing over 400 pounds at his death, and seems to have been equally unusual in character. One of his eccentric acts was to make his own coffin, several years before his demise.

Peter Martz, son of Nicholas, was born in Lancaster county, Feb. 26, 1787. When twenty years of age he moved from Pennsylvania to Pickaway county, Ohio, and again moved in 1816, to Indiana. At first he bought a tract in what was known as the twelve-mile strip, but later he took up 160 acres, three miles from Cambridge City, and building a log cabin, he there spent the typical life of a frontiersman. Besides farming he went extensively into milling, and owned the first grist-mill in the territory. Mr. Martz was a soldier in the War of 1812, was a strong Whig in his political views, and in religion was a member of the Lutheran Church.

In 1808, Peter Martz was married to Christina Myers, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1790. Her parents removed to Ohio, and there her father died, while her mother's death occurred considerably later, in Indiana. The married life of Mr. and Mrs. Martz continued until 1872, when Mr. Martz died in Arcadia, whither he had removed four years earlier in order to be near his sons Moses and Isaac. His wife died in 1879, near Montpelier, Ind., where she was living with a daughter. She and her husband were the parents of eleven children: (1) Henry married Barbara Gaylor, and died leaving two children, Edward and Sarah. (2) Charles married Betsy McGill, and they left six children, Peter, Catherine, Lydia J., Andrew J., John and Christina. (3) Moses and (4) Isaac, were twins. (5) Sarah married Andrew Doyle, and they and their seven children all reside in Wisconsin. (6) Mary, deceased, was the wife of John Reams, to whom she bore five children, Elizabeth, William H., Letta E., John Wesley and Lydia J. (7) Catherine is the widow of Wesley Swafford, and has five children, Mary, Perry, Harriet, Christina and Martha Ann. (8) Samuel, deceased, married Mary J. Berry, and had five children, Emma and Linville (deceased), Lewis, Edward and Anna. (9) Eliza, deceased, married Eli McConky, and had nine children, Peter, John, Reuben, Mary J., Angelina, Prudie, Rose Ann, Emma E. and Cynthia. (10) Jacob married Rebecca Ann Price, and both have died, leaving three children, George, Sarah Ann and Jennie. (11) Barbara married Edward Rogerson, and both are deceased, leaving five children, Etta, Delvina, Eliza, Frank and Jennie.

Moses Martz was born May 27, 1812, in Pickaway county, Ohio, but came to Indiana when only four years old. He received the limited education of most boys on the frontier, and was brought up to be a miller. On March 27, 1834, he married Tabitha McCormick, who was born at Connersville, Feb. 27, 1816, and who had grown up on the frontier like himself, and had received little education, her only school books having been the spelling book and New Testament. After their marriage they lived three years on Peter Martz's farm, and then in 1837 moved to Hamilton county. Moses and Isaac Martz located there together, owning 240 acres just west of what is now Arcadia, and both became prosperous and well-known citizens. Moses Martz cleared about 100 acres of his land, living meantime in a log cabin. He acquired seven acres adjoining Cicero creek, with the water rights, and putting up a flour mill, ran it for about twenty years, after which he turned it over to his son, John. He was a progressive man always, and had one of the first steam engines used in milling in Indiana, while he was also the first one to own a reaping machine and sewing machine, also had the first wheat drill used in Indiana, and was one of the first to take stock in the I. P. & C. railroad. Mr. Martz prospered and added to his original share of the land bought by the brothers, until he owned 160 acres, six of these acres lying within the village limits of Arcadia.

The early days, however, had few of the comforts of life, which the Martz family later enjoyed. When they began housekeeping, Mrs. Martz had to weave the cloth from which their clothing was made, and the farming had to be done with the rudier implements of the day. When they moved to their own land near Arcadia, there was no cabin on it, and while one was being built Mrs. Martz and her eight-weeks'-old baby had only a temporary shelter, warmed by a burning log heap. Having in that period experienced to the full the hardships caused by poor roads or none, Mr. Martz became a firm advocate of good roads, and was a stockholder in the first gravel road ever built in this country. Nothing has done more to develop Central Indiana than its gravel roads, and Mr. Martz not only supported the movement with words, but besides paying his regular taxes for the cause, contributed $400. All projects for improvement received his hearty support, and he was recognized as a citizen specially identified with the development of his region and deserving of special honor. Prosperous and influential as he was, Mr. Martz achieved it all by his own efforts, except for a legacy of $1,000 left him by his father. Isaac Martz, who ran a steam mill in Arcadia for years and was always in close touch with his brother, also won an honored position in the county.

The children born to Moses and Tabitha Martz numbered eleven: (1) John, deceased, married Margaret Johnson, and had six children, Alonzo (who died in infancy), Josephine, Etta, Flora, and Hattie and Mattie, twins. (2) Cornelius, deceased, married Martha Cruzan, and had two children, Albert E., postmaster at Arcadia, and Alice, wife of C. M. Burroughs, of Sullivan county, Ind. (3) Catherine married Henry Hackley, of Kokomo. (4) Eliza Ann married Stillman Montgomery, of Tipton, and has five children, Rosa, Effie, Minnie, Nola and Bertha. (5) Nicholas S., is a business man in Tipton. (6) Emma is the wife of Samuel Dickover, proprietor of a hotel in Missouri, and they have six children, Clark, Elmer, Minnie, Daisy, Grace and Frank. (7) Christena, deceased, and (8) Peter were twins. Peter is the present treasurer of Hamilton county. He married Maggie Gray, of Wayne county, and has had three daughters, Leota (deceased), Golda and Bertha. (9) Arminda is the wife of Cyrus Harbaugh, a practicing physician of Lafayette, and they have three children, Jewel, Merle and Nina. (10) Moses C. and (11) Isaac C. are twins. The latter married (first) Alice Wright, who died leaving one child, Neva. By his second marriage to Jennie Thomas, there was one son, Karl. He married (third) Laura Smith, and had two children, Beulah and Forest. Mr. and Mrs. Martz lived to see thirty grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren, and died surrounded by the devoted care and affection of their posterity. Mrs. Martz outlived her husband, dying in November, 1905, while he died in November, 1900. He was a Republican in politics, while in religious faith both were members of the Christian Church.

Nicholas S. Martz, oldest surviving son of Moses, was born in the Arcadia homestead, Nov. 10, 1845, and grew up amid pioneer surroundings. He received a common school education, going regularly to the little log school house until he was fourteen, but he was considerably younger when he began to work evenings in a sawmill.

In 1862 he enlisted in Company C, 79th Ind. V. I., as a drummer boy, and served five months, participating in the battles of Richmond Hill and Perryville, and then was honorably discharged in December, 1862. He remained at home until June 1, 1863, when he re-enlisted in Company G, 6th Ind. Cav., under Capt. W. S. Jewell, to serve three years, and was on duty until Sept. 15, 1865, at the close of the war, when he was discharged at Murfreesboro. During his term of service he was promoted from a private in the ranks to corporal and then orderly sergeant, while for a time he acted as captain of his company and as sergeant major of his regiment. Mr. Martz was in the great Atlanta campaign, and took part in most of its battles, including that of Pumpkin Vine Creek, when Gen. McPherson was killed, and the terrible struggle following in front of Atlanta. He was also in the battle of Knoxville, and at Nashville, under Thomas. His company was also one which accompanied Fitzpatrick as far as Macon, on his raid for the rescue of the prisoners at Andersonville, and they were then in almost daily skirmishes. Mr. Martz in the course of his army life, was several times surrounded by the enemy, but always succeeded in escaping and was never seriously wounded, receiving only one slight injury to his left shoulder. Neither was he ever in hospital, but was on active duty throughout his whole military career.

For a year and a half after his return from the war Mr. Martz was in charge of the old homestead, and then went into the grain business with his brother, John, in Milledburg, Hamilton county. At the end of two years his brother sold out, but the younger partner continued in the business six years longer. John Martz meantime had bought his father's old mill, moved the business to Cicero and later to Kokomo. There he died while still a young man, and Nicholas Martz spent four years in that town settling up his brother's affairs, a task in which his father shared. In 1879 he went to Atlanta, Ind., for a year, and from there to Windfall, where he leased a mill for another year. His next venture was in Greenwood, where he bought a grist-mill, built a sawmill and embarked extensively in a grain and lumber business, which proved very successful.

In 1888 Mr. Martz turned his attention to a new line of industry, and opened a canning factory in Kokomo, as a member of the firm of Charles & Martz. Three years later he sold out his interest there, and established a similar enterprise at Tipton. This is still in operation, although Mr. Martz sold out in 1898 to Grafton Johnson. Meantime, he had become interested in canning factories in both Hamilton and Vermilion counties, and is still connected with the management of these. He has also various real estate interests and owns valuable property in Tipton, Indianapolis, and other places, besides a business block in Cayuga, and the opera house building in Tipton. This opera house is one of the best structures in the town, being tasteful in design and very complete in its furniture and appliances, all of which are of the most modern type. The auditorium has a seating capacity of about 1,000, and the rest of the building is devoted to offices. Mr. Martz is recognized as one of the most enterprising and progressive of Tipton's citizens, and occupies a position of influence in the community.

Mr. Martz was married (first), in April, 1866, to Miss Elizabeth E. Walker, who was born on a farm near Fortville, Hancock county, daughter of Tarlton Walker. Mrs. Martz died near Fortville, the mother of three children: Charles M.; Mary A., who died at the age of three and a half years; and Minnie T. The mother was a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Martz married (second) Mary Allen, who was born near Shelbyville, Ind., daughter of John and Paulina Allen. She died less than four years after her marriage, leaving no children. Mr. Martz married (third) Anna Hanson, of Greenwood, Ind., who was born in Madison, Ind. Mr. Martz has always been much interested in the G. A. R., and in 1884 helped to organize the Post in Greenwood. He is now a member of the Post in Tipton. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason, and Knight Templar, and in politics is a Republican.

MOSES C. MARTZ, the youngest son of Moses, was born Sept. 30, 1857. He was sent to the public schools and later studied one year at Purdue University. In 1877 he entered upon his career of teaching and spent his first two years in the country, which were followed by ten in the graded schools of Arcadia and two years as teacher of a graded school in White River township. In 1891 and 1892 he was superintendent of the Arcadia schools but gave up this position to assist in the management of a canning factory. The following year he taught in Buffalo Corner, and then definitely abandoned the profession to become a mail agent on the rural delivery, in which occupation he is still engaged.

On May 23, 1880, Moses C. Martz was married in Arcadia, to Miss Clara E. Phyllis, who was born Oct. 16, 1863, in Hamilton county. The children born to this union were as follows: Gale, born April 13, 1881, who died in infancy; Raymond Paul, born June 30, 1883; Edith Shirley, born March 28, 1885; Mildred Alice, born Nov. 12, 1887; Harrison M., born June 13, 1888, who is serving in the U. S. navy as a member of the crew of the U. S. S. "Brooklyn," Admiral Schley's flagship in the battle of Santiago, thus in the younger generations maintaining the military spirit of the family; and Margery, born Oct. 31, 1890. Mr. Martz is a Republican in his politics, and is a member of the Christian Church. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow and prominent in that order, being a Patriarch Militant, Uniformed Rank, of Noblesville. He has represented his lodge three times in the State Grand Lodge, and his loyal work in the interest of the order has given him no small influence among its members. He also belongs to the K. of P., M. W. of America, Tribe of Ben Hur, and the Sons of the Revolution.

SAMUEL U. HUFFER, a respected citizen of Muncie, Ind., and a surviving soldier of the great Civil war, was born April 21, 1841, at Springfield, Ohio, son of Samuel and Susannah (Kurtz) Huffer.

Samuel Huffer was born in 1805, in Lancaster county, Pa., son of Abraham and Elizabeth Huffer, and of sturdy Pennsylvania-Dutch stock. Abraham Huffer was born in Lancaster county, and settled as a pioneer on the Mad River, Greene county, Ohio, where he owned 700 acres. He cleared up a farm from the woods, built and operated a distillery, a flour mill, sawmill, oil mill and paper mill, and he was also engaged in merchandising. His settlement was known as Huffersville, and was six and one-half miles north of Dayton, Ohio. His children were: John, David, Samuel, Abraham, Simeon, Joseph, Daniel and Eliza (who married John Myers).

Samuel Huffer was but a boy when he came with his father to Huffersville, and he remained at home, becoming the miller of the hamlet which has now disappeared from the local maps, its residents having been absorbed by larger places, Kneisley village being within a half mile of the old Huffer settlement. He married Susannah Kurtz, daughter of Christian Kurtz, of Pennsylvania-Dutch origin, of Lancaster county. After marriage Samuel Huffer and wife settled at Huffersville where they lived three years, Mr. Huffer continuing to work in the mill. Prior to 1840 the family moved to Springfield, Ohio, where he established a flour mill and distillery where they lived for seven years and then moved to the Mad River, where Mr. Huffer operated the mill at Cummins ville for five years. Later he operated mills at Donnelsville and New Castle, but moved to Delaware county, Ind., in 1851, settling at Muncie and operating a mill there for a time. He then bought 128 acres of land, three miles from Muncie, on which he lived for three years. Mr. Huffer then returned to Muncie where he followed milling and mercantile pursuits until his death which took place Dec. 5, 1860. His wife survived until December, 1866. They were worthy members of the Presbyterian Church. Their children were: Elizabeth Ann, John M., Adaline M., Sabina J., Sophia O., Samuel U. and Daniel S.

Samuel U. Huffer received as good a common school education as the times afforded, and he also attended school at Osborn, Greene county, Ohio. He then learned the grocery business in his father's store, and also clerked for some of the old Muncie firms. It was in 1863, at Muncie, that Mr. Huffer enlisted as a private soldier in Company G, 9th Ind. Cav., under Capt. James R. Nation, his contract being for three years or during the war. He served until honorably discharged at Vicksburg, Miss., Aug. 28, 1865. In July, 1864, he was promoted to be commissary sergeant of his company, and July 1, 1865, was made second lieutenant "for meritorious and gallant conduct." He participated in the following battles: Pulaski, Tenn., Sept. 21, 1864; Wilson's Pike, Dec. 1, 1864; Graming; White Pike, Tenn., Dec. 16, 1864; Second battle of Franklin, Tenn., Dec. 17, 1864; battle of Little Horpeth, Dec. 17, 1864; Reynolds' Mill, Dec. 25, 1864; Sugar Creek, Ala., Dec. 26, 1864; and Sholes Creek, Alabama.

During all this period of almost constant exposure and activity, Mr. Huffer was neither wounded nor taken prisoner, but took part in all the trials, marches, hardships and battles of his regiment. At the battle of Franklin, one of the most serious of the whole war, the 9th Cav. charged Hood's whole army and lost heavily, among those who fell being Lieut. Walter, of Company I, who was acting captain of Company G. The ranking officers had all been captured and upon the death of Lieut. Walter, the orderly sergeant being wounded, the command of Company G fell upon Sergeant Huffer who commanded the company from Dec. 17, 1864, to February, 1865. He was in the regimental hospital at Pulaski, with typhoid fever for eight months, his only time of misfortune. On his return to Muncie, Mr. Huffer engaged in a hardware business for about fifteen years, residing here until the present with the exception of a year and a half during which he carried on a grocery business at Topeka.

On Jan. 14, 1866, at Muncie, Mr. Huffer was married to Martha M. Craig, born on the Mad River, Ohio, Oct. 30, 1846, daughter of Joseph Brown and Sarah (Mathews) Craig.

The Craig family is of Scotch descent. Joseph Craig was a son of Samuel and Jane (Miller) Craig, and Samuel was a son of Robert and Esther Craig, while Robert was a son of James Craig. Joseph Craig, father of Mrs. Huffer, practiced law in Wapakoneta, Ohio, for seventeen years. He moved to Muncie, Ind., where he was in the drug business for two years, then moved to Hartford City, and engaged in the drug business three years. In 1869 he went to Montgomery county, Kans., and was deputy county auditor at Independence. He died there about 1893, aged eighty-three years. For forty years he was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and his wife also belonged to this denomination. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat. He was a man of character and ability which was shown wherever he lived. At Wapakoneta he served as county auditor for four years, and it was there that he joined both the Masonic and Odd Fellows orders.

Mr. and Mrs. Huffer's children were: Charles E., born April 27, 1867; Edgar P., born Nov. 7, 1868; Joseph Rolla, born July 26, 1870; Samuel Wilbur, born Oct. 17, 1874; and Walter C., born Aug. 24, 1877. Of these, Charles E. is pastor of a Presbyterian church at Albion, Mich.; he graduated from Hanover College, Ind., and the McCormick Theological Seminary of Chicago. Edgar was a druggist in Philadelphia, where he died Jan. 29, 1891. Joseph Rolla died July 2, 1872. Samuel Wilbur is the pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Liberty, Ind., and is a graduate of Hanover College, Ind., Princeton and McCormick Theological Seminaries. Walter C. is in the drug business in Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. Huffer are prominent members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he has been a ruling elder for twenty years and treasurer for six years, and during this time served several years as Sunday-school superintendent. Both as business man and private citizen, Mr. Huffer stands very high in public esteem. In political sentiment he has always been identified with the Republican party, and he cast his first Presidential vote for that idol of the Union army, Gen. Ulysses S. Grant. During one term Mr. Huffer served in the city council of Muncie, and he has always been interested in good government and in the upholding of the laws. He is a Mason of high degree and has held office in several of the Masonic bodies. For years he has worked with his comrades of the G. A. R., and is most highly regarded by them, having filled the office of quartermaster of Williams Post, No. 78, for six years.

REV. ANDREW P. STOUT, for many years an evangelist of the Christian Church in Indiana, and a man who did much religious and literary work, as well as earning an enviable reputation as a religious and Biblical lecturer, was born Dec. 11, 1844, at Eagletown, Hamilton county, Ind., son of Robert and Jane (Pearce) Stout, and he entered upon his eternal reward March 22, 1905.

The Stout family is of old North Carolina stock and English descent, and a record sent from Canecreek, Alamance county, N. C., the old home of this branch of the family, says: "Peter Stout was born in England, emigrated to America, settled in Pennsylvania on the Susquehanna river, date unknown. It is believed that he was a Friend, or Quaker. He married Margaret Syphen, born in the city of Hanover, Germany, who came to America when sixteen years old and settled in Pennsylvania." There is a well defined tradition in the Stout family, handed down by all the older members, that the original Peter Stout had a sister, Mary, who in the early Indian troubles in Pennsylvania was attacked by an Indian, scalped and left for dead. She recovered and lived to advanced years. Peter and Margaret (Syphen) Stout moved to Canecreek, N. C., where they were among the earliest settlers, and the following records are from the book of marriages of Canecreek Friends' Church, which has since been destroyed by fire; "Samuel Stout, son of Peter and Margaret (Syphen) Stout, married Rachael Chaney, 1762, 12th month, 16th day; Charles Stout, son of Peter and Margaret Stout, was married to Mary Noblet, 1767, 3rd month, 12th day; Peter, son of Peter and Margaret Stout, was married to Hannah Brown, 1773, 3rd month, 12th day; Margaret Stout, daughter of Peter and Margaret Stout, married Daniel Osborn, 1768, 2nd month, 9th day; Elizabeth Stout, daughter of Peter and Margaret Stout, married Thomas Osborn, 1776, 10th month, 17th day." The following records were also secured from the same church at the same time: "Sarah, daughter of Charles and Mary Stout, married Ephraim Doan, 1791, 4th month, 1st day."

Peter Stout, son of Samuel and probably grandson of Peter and Margaret Stout, had two brothers who went to North Carolina, named Samuel and Joseph. Said Samuel had sons: Henry, Samuel, Joseph, Charles and Peter, and daughters: Catherine, Betsey, Mary and Rachael. Of this family Joseph had sons: Peter and Samuel and daughters: Lydia and another whose name is not known. Mary Stout, daughter of Joseph and Hannah, married John Morrow, 1797, 12th month, 10th day. An aged lady of Canecreek, who died in 1904, Mrs. Sarah (Stout) Dixon, daughter of Peter and Charity (Barnes) Stout, furnished this record some years since, and it is without doubt a correct account of the origin of the Stout family in America. There is a tradition that Peter Stout, the original settler, came from Hyde Park, England.

The death of the mother of Rev. Andrew P. Stout in her twenty-third year left the infant with his grandparents Ephraim and Mary Stout, of Westfield, where he remained for about two years, when his father, marrying again, took him home. He worked on his father's farm until twenty years of age, and attended the district and High schools. He early began to take a very active interest in religious matters, and when twenty-one years old preached his first sermon. Later he studied with Dr. Parr at Jolietville, but for a time engaged in the drug business, although at no time did he give up his religious studies. At the age of twenty-four years he became a regular minister, and at the age of thirty-four years was ordained in the Baptist Church, preaching in Greencastle, Ind., and doing a great deal of evangelical work. In 1877 he became interested in literary work, and conceived the idea of teaching the truths of Jesus in chronological order and presenting them on a map. This map he published, and it had a large sale throughout the United States, receiving the commendation of all of the foremost divines of every denomination in the country. He wrote a chronological arrangement of the Gospel narrative in 1885, this work requiring a great amount of research.

The International Sunday School Lessons were composed mostly from it in 1900. For ten years Rev. Stout traveled and lectured on Jerusalem and the Jews, delivering 283 public lectures and visiting all parts of Indiana and the States west to the Pacific coast. He wrote "Jerusalem Tragedy," which was favorably received and met with a large sale, and "The Walks and Works of the Master," which was published by Charles D. Meigs. Rev. Stout was also the author of "Creeds Outgrown," perhaps his best work, and to the last he was active in religious work, planning new publications and lectures. He made his home in Sheridan for the last years of his life, where he bought a pleasant property consisting of a residence and two lots.

On May 15, 1864, Rev. Stout was married in Eagletown, Ind., to Eliza A. Bowman, born March 13, 1841, in Washington township, Hamilton county, Ind., daughter of Robert Pickens and Sarah (Griffin) Bowman, and to this union there were born seven children: Ida J., Emma R., Miles B., Stella M., John M., and Raymond B. and Mary E., twins.

The Bowmans are of English descent, and Rev. George Bowman, the grandfather of Mrs. Stout, was born in North Carolina and there married Mary Pickens. He removed to Indiana about 1832 or 1833, and settled at Eagletown. He was a pioneer Methodist minister, and one of the old-time circuit riders, his route being: Sugar Grove, Northfield, Big Springs, and Eagletown. He also owned a tract of eighty acres, which he cleared from the forest, and on which he erected a log cabin in which he lived for many years. He lived to advanced years and died at the home of his son, Emanuel Bowman, near Eagletown.

BENJAMIN M. NEIMAN, who for more than twenty years has been engaged in agricultural pursuits at Fishers Switch, Delaware township, is one of Hamilton county's representative farmers and an honored survivor of the Civil war. Mr. Neiman was born Sept. 23, 1843, at the present location of North Indianapolis, Marion county, Ind., son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Myers) Neiman.

Jacob Neiman was born in Dauphin county, Pa., a member of an old family of that State, and there he engaged in farming. He was married to Elizabeth Myers, born in the same county, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth Myers, and after the birth of one child came to Marion county, Ind., in 1837, making the journey by horse and wagon, this trip taking a month. Mr. Neiman purchased eighty acres of land where Riverside Park is now located, this being partly cleared, and later purchased eleven acres more, on which stood a grist mill. Here he continued to reside until his death, Feb. 25, 1868, his wife, Elizabeth, passing away in 1852, both in the faith of the Lutheran Church. In politics a Republican, Mr. Neiman was a man of much influence in his community, for eight years being trustee of Centre township.

Benjamin M. Neiman was reared to farm work among the pioneers of Marion county, and received his education in the common schools. On Aug. 11, 1862, at the age of eighteen years, he enlisted in Centre township, and was enrolled Aug. 20th, as a private of Company K (called the Second Zouaves), 63rd Ind. V. I., for three years or during the war, and served until honorably discharged, at Greensboro, N. C., June 21, 1865, having served his country nearly three years. He served in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and North Carolina, participating in the great Atlanta campaign when the Union troops were under fire for nearly four months; battle of Dalton, Ga.; battle near Lebanon, Ky., with Morgan's Raiders, who ditched their train, seventeen of his company killing seventeen Confederates; Resaca, Ga., where nearly one-third of his company lost their lives; Buzzard's Roost, Kenesaw Mountain, Lost Mountain, Chatahoochee, Burnt Hickory, Peach Tree Creek, Marietta, Jonesboro, Atlanta, Cassville, Columbia, Tenn., Franklin, Nashville, Fort Fisher, Wilmington and Fort Anderson, as well as in fifty-two skirmishes. He was struck by a ball on the right arm at Resaca, and his clothes, haversack and a piece of bacon were shot through at the battle of Franklin. For a short time he was sick with fever in Indianapolis, and was also sick at Atlanta, but outside of this was always with his regiment, an able and active soldier.

After the war Mr. Neiman returned to the home farm, and on June 28, 1868, he was married in Marion county to Rosetta L. Trester, of German stock (the name originally being Truster), born in Washington township, Marion county, Ind., Feb. 10, 1851, daughter of David and Elizabeth (Briddle) Trester, and granddaughter of William and Elizabeth (Hanes) Trester.

William Trester was a pioneer of Bourbon county, Ky., and it is believed that he came from Germany. He owned a large tract of land and one slave, and died on his farm in Kentucky. His children were: Joseph, Martin, Samuel, Elizabeth (who married a Hayes), and David. David Trester was born March 16, 1798, in Bourbon county, Ky., and came to Indiana when a young man, where he married Elizabeth Briddle, daughter of John Briddle, and she died Dec. 12, 1885. David Trester entered land on Michigan road, seven miles north of Indianapolis early in the thirties, there being but one blacksmith shop, one store and several log cabins in Indianapolis at that time. He had to blaze his way to his 160 acres of land, but this he cleared, and added to until he became very prosperous, owning residence property in Indianapolis. He died at the age of eighty-six years on the homestead. In religious belief he was an Episcopalian, while his wife was a Baptist. Their children were: William, Silas, Walter, Jasper, Lewis, Samuel, Mary Ann, Sarah Jane, Rosetta, and Louisa. Of this family Walter enlisted for service in the Civil war, was shot in the Red River expedition, and died about one year later, his father caring for him until his death. David Trester was a member of the grand and petit juries, and was an auctioneer of some note, crying more sales in his county than any man of his day. He was a very highly esteemed citizen, and was popular in the community in which he resided for so many years.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Neiman settled on his father's home place, whence they removed to Washington township, where four years were spent. Mr. Neiman then bought twenty-nine and one-half acres, but later traded this property, and in 1884 located on his present farm of sixty acres, now one of the most fertile in Delaware township. Mr. Neiman is a good farmer and representative citizen, and has the respect and esteem of the entire community. To him and his wife have been born children as follows: Annie E., born March 3, 1871; Eva Jane, born July 8, 1873, married Newton Manship, of Noblesville, who conducts a feed store, and they have three children, Gladys, Oscar and Velma; William D., born Aug. 19, 1875, died aged twenty-one years; Benjamin F., born March 24, 1878, married Gertrude Farley, has one son, Crevor Carl, born Sept. 1, 1905, and is a blacksmith on the home farm; Grace

B., born Nov. 17, 1880; Charles Roy, born Jan. 31, 1885; Mabel Clara, born July 15, 1886, married Orville Hudson, an engineer in the employ of the Heat & Light Company, Indianapolis; and John David, born June 16, 1889.

Mr. and Mrs. Neiman are members of the Friends Church, in which he held the office of overseer for several years. In politics a Republican, he voted for Lincoln and for every Republican candidate for the Presidency since, and was supervisor in Center township for four years. He was a member of the G. A. R. at Fishers Switch until that Post disbanded.

GEN. ROBERT SANFORD FOSTER was born at Vernon, Jennings Co., Ind., Jan. 27, 1834, and died at his home in Indianapolis March 3, 1903. Though he was in his seventieth year, and had been in enfeebled health for several months, it seemed to many who knew of him and his great usefulness as a man and a citizen that he was called away in the height of his career, from responsibilities for which none was so well fitted as he. The unusual marks of respect with which his burial was solemnized showed how general was the feeling regarding his worth, for with such notable exceptions as ex-President Harrison and General Lawton his funeral was perhaps the most impressive, the most universally participated in by citizens of all classes, of any ever held in Indianapolis. A brief review of his life and activities will serve to illustrate his unselfish character, the breadth of his interests, the depth of his sympathies, the extent of his ambitious desire to serve his fellowmen. His devotion to military affairs, sustained from his youth to the end of his days, dominated all his other interests, but he held many important public offices, served several years as president of the Indianapolis Board of Trade, and in various other ways bore important relations to the life and progress of the community.

General Foster was given a thorough and practical business education, attending the public schools and academy of his native place. At the age of sixteen he left home, and coming to Indianapolis learned the tinner's trade. But after a time he entered the mercantile establishment of his uncle, the late Andrew Wallace. It was during this period that he gained his first knowledge of military tactics as a member of the City Greys of Indianapolis, a military company which turned out many good soldiers who did the organization honor during the Civil war. When the Rebellion broke out Robert S. Foster was a lieutenant in the City Greys, and he was one of the first to enlist in the Union service after Fort Sumter was fired upon. On April 15, 1861, he enlisted, entering the service as a private of Indiana Volunteers. But within a few days he had recruited a company, of which he was unanimously elected captain, receiving his commission from Governor Morton April 17th, and being mustered in April 22d as captain of Company A, 11th Regiment, Indiana Volunteers (Zouaves). This regiment was organized at Indianapolis April 25th for three months' service, under the first call, was ordered May 8th to Evansville, assigned to picket the Ohio river, and did duty there until June 7th, when it was ordered to West Virginia, arriving at Cumberland, Md., June 9th. Two days later, June 11th, Captain Foster received his baptism of fire in action at Romney, W. Va. His company, being in advance, was fired upon from a bridge, when he charged through the bridge, routing the enemy, who fled to the mountains. On June 19th, he was promoted to major, 13th Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He remained with his first regiment until the latter part of June, when he and other officers were ordered home on recruiting service. On July 3d, while on recruiting service, Gen. Foster was commissioned by Governor Morton, major of the 13th regiment organized at Indianapolis and mustered in for three years' service June 19, 1861. Receiving marching orders on the same day of his commission to go to the front, on July 4th he left Indianapolis for service in West Virginia, having been assigned to Rosecrans' Brigade, McClellan's Army of Occupation, West Virginia, to which the regiment was attached from July to September, 1861. On the morning of the 10th they joined General McClellan's forces at Roaring Run, and the next day participated in the battle of Rich Mountain, W. Va., under Rosecrans, Foster commanding two companies of his regiment, charging the Rebel infantry and artillery, and capturing two brass Napoleon guns from Pegram's Rebel forces. He participated with his regiment in all the battles, skirmishes and marches of that West Virginia campaign. In September, 1861, he was appointed captain in the 19th regular infantry but declined.

On Oct. 25, 1861, he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel, vice Horace Heffren, transferred to the 50th regiment, Ind. Vols. Col. Foster commanded his regiment during the campaign of General Shields in the Shenandoah valley, being engaged in the battles of Winchester, Strasburg, Fisher's Hill, Burnt Bridge, Somerville, etc., and was also in the memorable campaign against Stonewall Jackson, when he was pursued by Generals Banks, Fremont and McDowell down the Shenandoah and Rappahannock valley to Port Republic and Luray.

It was on March 22, 1862, at the battle of Winchester (commonly called Kearnsstown), that General Foster first won notice for great military ability and generalship in maneuvering a body of troops when exposed to an enfilading fire from artillery and infantry. His superb knowledge of military tactics in the hour of extreme peril was brought into practice and won for him the perpetual confidence and admiration of every officer and enlisted man in his regiment and throughout Shields' division. It was so well and coolly done that he received cheer after cheer from the troops engaged in battle. It was at the critical point in the battle, when Stonewall Jackson's forces were driving the Union forces. General Sullivan's Brigade of Shields' Division was supporting the left, and before he had received orders from General Kimball for re-enforcements, ordered Colonel Foster and his regiment to report to Kimball. In crossing a large open field in front of a long stone wall fence, in which the enemy were entrenched, it was necessary to change the position of the regiment at least six or eight times to protect the flank from the enfilading fire of the enemy's artillery. This military maneuvering was consummated by General Foster without the least excitement or difficulty, and with as much ease as though he had the regiment on battalion drill or dress parade. The command was given to charge with fixed bayonets, and the boys responded with a Hoosier yell, pouring forth a terrible volley, followed with a charge over the stone wall upon the swarming mass of Rebels, who broke and fled into the woods, leaving the 13th victors of the field. Four times the colors of the 13th went down in the bloody charge, but only for a moment, to rise again more beautiful than ever, as the "Old Guard" (christened such by Governor Morton after the battle) gained the crest of the hill, in front of the stone fence. General Sullivan in a letter written a number of years ago, said: "It is an acknowledged fact, expressed on all sides, and from both officers and enlisted men, that Foster and the 13th regiment were in the thickest of the fight and had a good deal to do in the routing of the enemy from behind the stone fence and finishing up one of the most important battles of the war. If Shields' division had been defeated and Stonewall Jackson had moved onto Harper's Ferry and Washington, it is fair to believe that certain political movements in agitation at that time might have resulted differently. I have heard since the war that Jackson's defeat was a greater blow to Southern sympathizers in New York and Washington, than it was to the leaders of the Confederacy."

From September to November, 1861, General Foster was in Reynolds' Cheat Mountain Brigade; in Milroy's command, Mountain department, to March, 1862; 2d Brigade, Shields' 2d Division, Banks' Fifth Army Corps, to April, 1862; 2d Brigade, 1st Division, Department of the Rappahannock, to July, 1862. Meantime, on May 2, 1862, Lieutenant-Colonel Foster was promoted to Colonel of the 13th, vice Sullivan, promoted to Brigadier-General. On June 28th, Foster was transferred with his regiment to the Army of the Potomac, joining that army at Harrison's Landing July 4th, the day after the battle of Malvern Hill. He remained with the Army of the Potomac until ordered to re-enforce Pope's army, when his command was assigned temporarily to the 4th Army Corps on the Peninsula, being in Perry's Brigade, 2d Division. After a short sojourn with the 4th Corps he was transferred in September, 1862, with his regiment to Suffolk, Va., on the Nansemond river and the border of the great Dismal Swamp, between Petersburg and Norfolk, known as the Blackwater. Here he was placed in command of a Provisional Brigade, 1st Division, 7th Army Corps, Department of Virginia, organized for him by Major-General Peck, commanding the Post, continuing in such command until April, 1863. His brigade was engaged with the enemy almost daily, making frequent raids into the enemy's lines. He was placed in command of a large body of troops, consisting of cavalry, artillery and infantry, and assigned to the difficult task of destroying the railroads between Petersburg and Suffolk, which he accomplished to the entire satisfaction of all his superior officers, tearing up and removing to Norfolk, Va., over twenty miles of the Petersburg & Norfolk and Seaboard & Roanoke railroads. His command was engaged every day with the enemy and came off victorious, accomplishing all the work assigned. Colonel Foster was placed in command of the south front of Suffolk during its siege by Longstreet's army, in charge of twelve regiments of infantry, one regiment of cavalry, three batteries of light artillery and eighteen siege guns. It was this command that pursued Longstreet during his retreat, inflicting great damage to the enemy, capturing many prisoners, arms, etc., and his valor and discrimination in this responsible undertaking won him his promotion, June 15, 1863, to the rank of brigadier-general. From April to July, 1863, General Foster commanded the 2d Brigade, 7th Army Corps, Department of Virginia.

In July, 1863, he was assigned to the Army in front of Richmond, taking part in the attack, commanding a light division of infantry, cavalry and artillery. His command was sent in advance to destroy the railroads and burn some important railroad bridges, and succeeded in tearing up many rails between Richmond and Fredericksburg, and all the bridges except one across the South Anna river. After his return to Norfolk he was made president of a military court martial to try Dr. D. M. Wright, of Norfolk, for the murder of Lieut. A. S. Sanford, of the 1st U. S. Colored regiment.

On the 28th of July he was ordered with his command to Morris Island, S. C., and took part in the siege of Forts Wagner, Gregg and Sumter. Being ordered thence to Florida, he arrived at Jacksonville, and was placed in command of a division under General Seymour, and as soon as the Florida campaign closed was ordered to re-enforce Grant in the grand advance on Richmond. He was assigned to duty as chief of staff of the 10th Army Corps during the battles of Drury's Bluff, Roods Hill, Chesterfield Heights, etc., and in all its operations against the enemy around Richmond, during which time he commanded the cavalry that made the attack on Beauregard's ammunition supply train between Richmond and Petersburg.

In June, 1864, General Foster was assigned to the difficult and dangerous duty of crossing the James river below Richmond at midnight, with two thousand infantry, one battery of artillery and two squadrons of cavalry. This important expedition was accomplished noiselessly by floating fifteen hundred of his command down the river on pontoons and safely landing them on the opposite side of the river, taking the enemy by surprise, driving them back, laying the pontoon bridge and crossing his cavalry and artillery. By day-light they were entrenched within seven miles of Richmond on a main road, and able to defend the position against four times their number. For this successful and daring maneuver and piece of strategy General Foster was officially complimented by General Grant for the gallant manner in which he accomplished this difficult and dangerous undertaking, holding his position against numerous attacks for nearly two months, and fighting two or three well-contested battles together with General Hancock and Sheridan's Cavalry against the great mass of Lee's Army. He was relieved of his command at this point and ordered to Petersburg to take command of the 2d Division, 10th Army Corps, where he was engaged daily and nightly during the siege of Petersburg, losing nearly one-half of his whole effective force, which crippled him to such an extent that his division was relieved (by Miles' Division of Hancock's Corps) and placed in reserve for a few weeks, when a re-organization took place. His corps and the 18th were ordered to make another attack on the defenses of Richmond, which they did, fighting from day-light until 4:00 p. m., carrying all the enemies' works up to Chapin's Bluff, making three separate charges during the day. Foster's Division losing between 800 and 900 men, killed and wounded, the 10th and 18th Corps were consolidated as the 24th Corps, under the command of Major-General Ord, with General Foster as chief of staff. This position he held until the withdrawal of his old division to join General Terry in his expedition against Fort Fisher. Foster was then assigned to the command of the 1st Division, 24th Corps (Terry's old division).

On the 2d of April, during the general assault on Lee's Army at Petersburg, nearly all the outer line of works had been carried by noon, except two strong redoubts which occupied a commanding position, named, respectively, Fort Gregg and Fort Whitworth. General Grant decided that these should be stormed, and about ten o'clock Foster's Division of the 24th Corps swept down upon Fort Gregg, which was carried after a most desperate hand to hand fight. When Mr. Lincoln heard of the assault he telegraphed throughout the country that the last stronghold around Petersburg had been captured by Foster's division of Ord's Corps, after a most desperate struggle. The men fought twenty-four minutes after they reached the parapet of the fort, all the sally ports being securely locked and the garrison ordered by General Lee not to surrender under any circumstances. Foster lost 164 men, killed and wounded. The assault was made under the immediate supervision of Generals Grant, Ord and Gibbon, and for this great victory Foster was brevetted major-general; his staff were all brevetted and his assaulting regiments were presented bronze eagles to surmount their flag staffs, an honor rarely granted to any regiment and only for extreme bravery.

During the remaining days of the struggle General Foster was in command of his old and reliable division in the pursuit of Lee to Appomattox Court House. The important part General Foster took in the last seven days of the war is vividly described by one of his old comrades who was a prominent officer with Sheridan. He said: "The most active and efficient general officer in command of a division in the two Corps of the Army of the James, then under General Ord, was Brevet Major-General Robert S. Foster, of Indiana, commanding the First Division, 24th Corps, commanded by Major-General Gibbon of the regular army. It was the memorable night when Sheridan was in front of Lee's Army at Appomattox and expected an attack from Lee early the next morning. General Sheridan was so anxious to bag Lee that he sent an officer to find the Army of the James under General Ord with the following dispatch: 'If the Army of the James can be here by daylight, we will bag Lee.'"

Foster was the first to receive the dispatch and forwarded it to General Gibbon, in command of the Corps. "We will resume the march," said Foster to his staff officers. The word was not long getting to the rank and file, and they were soon plodding along with renewed energy in the hope of ending the struggle. His division marched until eleven o'clock when orders were received to lie down and rest until two o'clock, and for division commanders to resume the march at that hour without further orders.

General Foster was in front. Five minutes after halting the column was asleep. Foster and two of his staff did not sleep, but remained awake, preparing for the early morning struggle. At two o'clock sharp the

First Division of the 24th Corps was in line and the painful march was resumed. It was 3 o'clock before the other divisions awoke, they having been overcome with sleep and trusted to staff officers to awaken them. The early dawn was just peeping over the hills in the east when Foster found himself in the vicinity of General Sheridan's headquarters. Riding ahead a half mile, he reigned up in front of the dashing leader's headquarters with his staff and reported. Sheridan was lying down, but the moment he heard Foster's voice, and that part of the Army of the James was with him, he jumped up and rushed out to Foster, grasping his hand and expressing his delight, exclaiming: "God bless you, Foster, you have saved my army." While Sheridan was giving instructions General Gibbon rode up and approaching Foster said: "Foster, I am thankful one of my division commanders did not sleep over as all the rest of us did."

The First Division was quickly put into position in the rear of Sheridan's cavalry, long before the other divisions came up, the cavalry was attacked by Lee's infantry and driven in, leaving Foster's forces to withstand an attack by all that remained of Lee's Army. The most that Foster's forces could do was to hold the enemy in check which was splendidly done, until the remaining divisions of the Army of the James could be hastened to his support, but in holding the ground his men had been roughly handled. When the long line of infantry was disclosed by the withdrawal of Sheridan's cavalry, Lee was astounded and saw at once that the end had come. With Sheridan and the Army of the James in his front, and the Army of the Potomac in his rear and right flank, there was no alternative but surrender. A flag of truce was displayed and in the grey dawn of that beautiful Sabbath morning, April 9, 1865, a score of shots from a battery with Foster's division proclaimed, "Glory to God, peace on earth, good will toward men."

The long list of battles, etc., in which General Foster bore an active part during his unusually active service, includes many of the most important movements of the war, namely: 1861—Rich Mountain, July 11; Cheat Mountain, Sept. 12, 13; Greenbrier river, Oct. 3-4; Expedition up Kanawha District, Oct. 29-Nov. 7; expedition to Camp Baldwin, Dec. 11-14; Allegheny Mountain, Dec. 13; ordered to Green Spring Run, Va., Dec. 18, on duty there until March, 1862.

Resigned Sept. 25; honorably discharged from the United States service; brevetted Major-General, U. S. Vols., to date from March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious service during the war.

It is a significant fact that during his army service General Foster never lost a battle or skirmish and was successful in all his expeditions in front of Richmond and elsewhere. It seemed that he had a charmed life. A tribute to his regiment paid by General Hasbrouck deserves to be permanently recorded. "The brunt of a fight was not the only place where the Thirteenth was great in its achievements, and many of its accomplishments were close to what was regarded as impossible. As a dress parade regiment it was equally in demand. There was a noticeable and high regard on the part of the regiment for its commander. General Foster was endeared to all of them, and I do not recall a regiment that ever showed the same regard for its commander at all times as did the Thirteenth Indiana."

A tribute from a New York veteran is along the same line, and we quote it in part: "They were proud of their handsome general, and when he appeared upon his favorite black horse no knight in armor was ever more magnificent and imposing. He knew no fear, and rode calmly and without excitement where bullets rained about him. His commands were always given with clear distinctness and a steadiness of tone that inspired confidence even in the tumult of battle. Though strict in discipline, he was never unapproachable, and no troops had better care than General Foster's. I belonged to one of the four New York regiments, that, with the Thirteenth Indiana, made up his brigade. He has worn his military honors so modestly he could seldom be induced to talk much about his experiences, but among the 'boys' he was known as a witty and charming raconteur. Long years have passed since the stirring times in which this great soldier took so noble a part, but to the old brigade he is dear as ever, and many a grizzled veteran will mourn as for a tried friend."

At the close of the war General Foster was ordered to Washington on duty as a member of the Military Commission convened for the trial of the conspirators and assassins of President Lincoln, serving from May to July. He resigned in September, 1865, and returned to his former home in Indianapolis, Ind. Soon after his return he was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel of the 27th Regiment, U. S. Infantry, in the regular army, but declined the honor, preferring civil life.

As an important factor in the history of the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic, General Foster must go on record as the original organizer, and the first to give the great order a permanent existence. While Major B. F. Stephenson, of Springfield, Ill., was the author of the ritual and patriotic mover in the order, Foster was the first to put the theories into practical shape, which he did after first receiving the initiation and full instructions from the author of the organization. Foster was, in fact, the first to perform the duties of Commander-in-chief, the first Department Commander in Indiana, and the first Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic.

During the summer of 1866, and immediately after the close of the war and the mustering out of the vast army of volunteer soldiers of the Union army, a number of comrades met in the city of Indianapolis to devise ways and means for organizing the ex-soldiers of the Union Army residing in Indiana into a society or union for mutual protection, and to give aid and assistance to comrades in need and worthy of attention. They had been in correspondence with parties in Illinois regarding an organization intended for the benefit of ex-soldiers of the late war, which was strongly recommended to them by prominent ex-soldiers of that State. General Foster was selected by the late Governor O. P. Morton, to go to Springfield to investigate and report upon the character and supposed efficiency of the soldier organization being formed in that State. He went to Springfield during the month of July, 1866, and there met Major B. F. Stephenson, who had been a surgeon in an Illinois regiment. He found in Major Stephenson a grand and enthusiastic friend of ex-soldiers, who had devised a form of organization, which, while simple, had enough of mysterious and ritualistic ceremonies to make it attractive. He was extremely in earnest in his description of his favorite plan for organizing all the ex-soldiers of the Union Army into one grand brotherhood for mutual protection and benefit. He communicated to General Foster the work in all its details, and administered to him the obligation taken by all who enter the Grand Army, and General Foster became a full fledged member of the G. A. R. But he was a veritable "member-at-large," without a department and without a post. Major Stephenson gave General Foster copies of the ritual, blanks, etc., that he had printed or written, with full authority to organize the order at any place he thought proper, saying, "I am very glad to have some one take hold of this plan and work it up, as they do not manifest much interest in the order here in Illinois."

General Foster returned to Indiana and immediately organized a post of the Grand Army in Indianapolis, designated as Post No. 1, and at the same time organized the Department of Indiana, of which he had the honor of being selected department commander. He sent inspectors throughout the State to organize posts and to muster in all ex-soldiers of the Union, who had an honorable discharge and who expressed a desire to join the organization. Ex-soldiers set up the type and printed all the literature, blanks, etc., kind patriotic friends furnished ample funds for the work of organization and within ninety days there were over thirty thousand members in the Grand Army of the Republic. In addition the department mustered ex-soldiers of Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York, and issued them charters authorizing the mustering of different posts in these States, because there was no other department but Indiana to apply to for a charter.

The first National Encampment of the G. A. R. was held in Indianapolis, in November, 1866, Gen. John M. Palmer, of Illinois, presiding. At this encampment Gen. Stephen A. Hurlbut, of Illinois, was chosen National Commander, and General Foster was chosen as junior vice commander. The Department of Indiana did not report to Stephenson or any one else until after the national organization in November, 1866. But the work of organizing posts was carried on actively, and when the Pittsburg convention of soldiers and sailors met in Pittsburg, in September, 1866, the Grand Army of the Republic in Indiana sent delegates as representatives of 30,000 members in that department. The Indiana department established headquarters at the "Monongahela House," and the first flag denoting G. A. R. headquarters and the first G. A. R. badge worn by a G. A. R. man distinguished those headquarters and Indiana soldiers at that convention. During all this time all correspondence seemed to indicate that Indiana was regarded as the only department-organized body of the G. A. R. in the United States. The department officers of Indiana in July, August and September, 1866, never heard of any State or post organization in other States. No other G. A. R. organization than the Indiana department was represented in Pittsburg. Indiana headquarters, however, always recognized the head in Dr. Stephenson and the right in him to claim for his State the paternity of the order, and the propriety of his taking the initiative in calling a convention to establish a national organization was not questioned by Indiana. At the same time the first encampment was held in Indianapolis because the Indiana department was recognized as the first State organization.

This is the history in brief of the beginning of the Grand Army of the Republic in Indiana, in 1866; and there is but one conclusion, that upon the evidence herein set forth and on file at Department of Indiana Headquarters, the organization of what is to-day known as the Grand Army of the Republic was born to the soldiers and on its way to a national existence from the moment General Foster left the presence of Major B. F. Stephenson, in August, 1866, with the draft of the first ritual and constitution in his possession. It is also made plain that the Grand Army of the Republic, as a national body, was first organized in the city of Indianapolis, by General Foster, who was the first department commander, as well as acting commander-in-chief for nearly four months.

After the war General Foster was honored with several public offices of honor and trust, serving as alderman of the city of Indianapolis, as city treasurer (1867-71), as director of the Northern prison, and, under appointment of President Garfield, as United States Marshal, for the district of Indiana, serving from 1881 to 1885. He was appointed by Governor Durbin Quartermaster-General of the State of Indiana. He took an active interest in Republican politics. For several years he was president of the Board of Trade. He had an office in the Board of Trade Building and was engaged in business as a grain broker. A number of years ago he was connected with the Union Railway Company. During the last few months of his life, because of enfeebled health, he was obliged to relinquish most of his activities, and for a month before his death, which was caused by the complications of heart disease and asthma, he was confined to his bed.

General Foster was a member of George H. Thomas Post, No. 17, G. A. R., of the Society of the Army of the Potomac, Union Veteran Legion, Loyal Legion (commander of Indiana), I. O. O. F., a 32d degree Mason, and a member of the Columbia Club.

Though he stood so high in Masonry, the fraternity did not conduct his funeral, which, as became his rank of brigadier-general, and his position as quartermaster-general of the State, in which he was serving at the time of his death, was strictly military. The Governor issued the following proclamation:

State of Indiana,
Office of the Adjutant General,
Indianapolis, Ind., March 4, 1903.

General Orders No. 1.

I. The following proclamation has been issued:

BY THE GOVERNOR OF INDIANA—A PROCLAMATION.

The melancholy duty devolves upon me of announcing the death of Gen. Robert S. Foster, Quartermaster-General of Indiana, which occurred at his home in Indianapolis, at 3:45 p. m. on Tuesday, March 3.

General Foster was one of the most conspicuous survivors of the Civil war. He was closely identified with Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas and others, who achieved immortal fame as victorious leaders of the mighty legions of the North, marshaled under the flag of the Union. At the beginning of the sectional conflict, Robert S. Foster raised a company of volunteers and was thereupon commissioned captain by Governor Morton. His subsequent achievements in the science of arms were characterized by a series of brilliant victories, which were rewarded by well earned promotions, until he was finally brevetted Major-General. Before he had reached the age of thirty years he was commander of a division, and in all of the many notable engagements in which he bore a conspicuous part it is recorded to his credit that he never lost a battle or a skirmish. Going into the war almost at its beginning, he was present at the surrender of Lee at Appomattox, where he shared the honors of the victorious hosts and was personally complimented by President Lincoln.

In civil life General Foster occupied many positions of public trust. He had an unusually high sense of honor, his integrity was never questioned, and he was generally beloved. He was a stranger to intrigue, and, although his courage had been tested and proved on many fields of carnage, his great nature was marked by unvarying kindness and gentleness.

He was a native of Indiana and thoroughly loyal to its every interest. He achieved distinction by the force of merit, but, secure in all the honors he had so worthily won, he was so modest that he rarely made reference to the distinguished services he had rendered his country during the period of the Nation's direct necessities.

As a soldier and as a citizen he was a model type of sturdy American manhood, and the people of Indiana, I am sure, will mourn with those of us who knew him best in doing honor to his precious memory.

I, therefore, recommend that during the time his body lies in state at the Capitol, public business be suspended, so far as practicable, in order that proper respect may be paid to one who served his country with patriotic fidelity in the discharge of every responsibility imposed upon him.

WINFIELD T. DURBIN,
Governor.

DANIEL E. STORMS,
Secretary of State.

II. On the day of the funeral the flags on all armories of the Indiana National Guard will be displayed at half mast, and the officers will wear the usual badge of mourning on the sword hilt for the period of thirty days. The colors of the several regiments and battalions, if paraded within thirty days will be draped in mourning.

By order of the Governor.

JOHN R. WOODS,
Adjutant General.

The soldiers of the Indiana National Guard, for whose welfare General Foster had done so much, especially during his last years, after the reorganization following the Spanish-American war, performed the last rites over his body. The Second regiment and a platoon of light artillery were ordered out for the funeral, and on the morning of Friday, March 6th, the home battalion escorted the body from the family home to the State House, where it lay in state in the rotunda for about two hours. Four of the General's closest friends, as well as a detail of the Governor's staff, accompanied his body to and from the Capitol. There it was viewed by members of the General Assembly, the Governor and Staff, the State officers, the judges of the Supreme and Appellate Courts, business associates, friends, and hundreds of acquaintances. The capitol was most appropriately draped for the occasion. The escort back to the residence also included Battery A and the other companies of the 2d regiment. At the house services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. M. L. Haines, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, who delivered the address. The Grand Army Ritual was then observed by his comrades of George H. Thomas Post, and after a brief address by the Chaplain the cortege reformed, the same escort being on duty from the house to Crown Hill cemetery, where the remains were laid in the family sepulcher. The troops drawn up at the entrance of the cemetery saluted as the funeral car passed, and as the cortege entered the artillery fired minute guns, the major-general's salute of thirteen. The troops stood at attention during the short but impressive military ceremony, which closed with fifteen guns fired at intervals of fifteen seconds until the sounding of "taps," the beautiful call to sleep which he had answered for the last time. The three volleys of musketry were then fired over the grave—the formal close of one of the most touching funerals ever witnessed in Indianapolis.

The important part which General Foster played in municipal affairs was acknowledged by the officials of the city, who made many unusual demonstrations of respect at the time of his demise. All the State, county and city offices were closed while his body lay in state at the Capitol, and the municipal as well as the State officials took part in the funeral. The flags on all public buildings were at half mast. The Board of Trade closed, and in all parts of the city many houses suspended business during the funeral. Many places of business were draped in flags and mourning. The city schools observed the solemn occasion with tributes to his memory and lessons from his life.

"In social life General Foster was genial and companionable. In his family he was a devoted husband and father. In business life he was a model of honor. It is but natural that such a man should leave a wide circle of friends who mourn his loss as a personal one."

General Foster was married May 1, 1861, to Margaret R. Foust, of Indianapolis, and their union was blessed with two children, a son and a daughter, the son, Clarence M. Foster, a prominent business man of Chicago, Ill., being now the only survivor of the family. Mrs. Foster died suddenly May 7, 1891, and the daughter died in September, 1898, as the result of an accident.

HUGH DOUGHERTY is one of the most active men in the business life of Indianapolis today. He has attained prominence in several distinct fields, and the reputation he had made in any one of them would be a creditable achievement for the average man. From 1865 until 1904 he was a resident of Bluffton, Ind., in the latter year settling in Indianapolis to take the presidency of the Marion Trust Company, in which connection he has become widely known as a financier. His activity in bringing the independent telephone companies to their present status has gained him national fame in such circles. His political standing is of itself noteworthy.

Mr. Dougherty was born July 28, 1844, in Darke county, Ohio, where his grandfather, Hugh Dougherty, a native of County Donegal, Ireland, had settled years before. Upon his emigration from Ireland the grandfather located first in Washington county, Pa., in 1818, removing thence to Darke county, Ohio, where his son William became a farmer. The latter married Margaret Studabaker, daughter of Abraham Studabaker, and distantly related to the Indiana family of the name who have become widely known as extensive carriage and wagon manufacturers. Mr. Dougherty passed his early life on his father's farm. He received only such advantages for education as the local public schools afforded, but nevertheless he was able to pass a teacher's examination when he was seventeen and he obtained the coveted license. He taught but one term, after which he enlisted for service in the Civil war, becoming a member of the 94th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until his discharge, in May, 1863. He took part in the battles at Richmond, Perryville and Stone River, and was captured at the latter engagement, late in 1862.

Returning home at the close of his army experience, Mr. Dougherty remained there until 1865, when he went to Bluffton, Wells Co., Ind., to enter the employ of his uncle, John Studabaker, who was engaged in the grain business. This uncle was also the owner of the Exchange Bank of Bluffton, which Mr. Dougherty soon entered, and for a number of years, until 1888, he was his uncle's partner in that establishment. In 1888 he became president, and the Studabaker Bank, as it is now known, has long been one of the leading financial institutions of that section of the State. Mr. Dougherty continued to serve as its president through a period of sixteen years, until 1904, when he resigned to enter upon the more important duties of president of the Marion Trust Company of Indianapolis. His connection with this concern has been highly honorable. He has shown himself to be the possessor of the qualities necessary in the head of such a company, the proper balance of progress and judgment needed to advance its affairs without imperiling its standing.

Mr. Dougherty is generally recognized as a leader in every undertaking with which he is identified. When the United Telephone Company—one of the first of the so-called independent companies—was organized, in 1896, with a capital of $300,000, he became its president, and has continued to act in that capacity ever since. Incidentally he became one of the leaders in the national association, by means of which the independent companies have been able to hold their own, and to his individual efforts may be attributed much of the success of the national body. Contemporaneous with the organization of the United Telephone Company, there came into existence a number of similar companies, not only in Ohio and Indiana but almost all over the United States. The Bell Telephone Company claimed that the independent companies were infringing upon its patents, and finally brought suit against a small company in Boston. Realizing that the weaker concern was liable to meet defeat because it lacked the financial means necessary to fight so powerful a foe, and that upon the verdict depended their own future, the independent companies organized to support the defense of the suit and the National Association then formed is still maintained. The president, Judge J. M. Thomas, and Mr. Dougherty were placed on the committee in charge of the suit, which was decided in favor of the independent companies after about five years of the most expensive litigation. They were literally fighting for their lives, and neither money nor talent was spared in the contest. Judge Thomas and Mr. Dougherty devoted themselves to the work without abatement of enthusiasm or energy until success was assured. Shortly before the case was decided Judge Thomas died, and Mr. Dougherty was chosen to succeed him as president of the National Association. His efforts have been productive of much good besides the immunity from lawsuits of the companies originally interested. Many investors intimidated by the conditions previously prevailing entered the field as soon as the courts fixed the limit of responsibility, and the patronage of the independent concerns with which he was connected financially was extended by the agreement Mr. Dougherty succeeded in making with the Bell Company, by which the lines he represented could be connected with a number of large cities where they were not yet established. Thus he has been instrumental in promoting the efficiency of a public utility which probably affects as many people, of different classes, as any other one thing.

In politics Mr. Dougherty was long one of the most influential Democrats in Wells county, and his reputation as a counselor of disinterested worth extends throughout the State. He was a member of the State Executive Committee from 1890 to 1896, and was a delegate to the national conventions of 1884, 1892, 1896 and 1900. He belongs to the conservative wing of his party. In 1871, 1872 and 1873 he represented his district in the State Senate.

In spite of the weighty business affairs which have engaged his energies Mr. Dougherty has found time for wholesome enjoyment of social and domestic pleasures, and his leisure has been so well employed in reading and study, and the development of his natural talents, that he is considered an able writer and speaker. Nothing is more thoroughly indicative of the character of the man than his unassuming personality, his kindly bearing, and his considerate conduct in every relation of life. He has always considered it a privilege to serve his fellow-man in either public or private capacity, and he is in sympathy with many projects having that end in view. Worthy charities have always received his support. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and an interested worker in all religious and philanthropic enterprises. He is serving on the board of trustees of the Indiana Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, and as president of the board of trustees of DePauw University. Socially he belongs to the University, Commercial and Country Clubs of Indianapolis.

On Oct. 25, 1877, Mr. Dougherty was married, at Milwaukee, Wis., to Miss Emma Gilliland, daughter of T. F. Gilliland, of Indianapolis, and they have had one daughter, Elizabeth, who graduated from the high school at Bluffton and from DePauw University and is now a student of Wellesley. Mrs. Dougherty is not only a leader in social circles, but a woman whose time and means are devoted quietly but unreservedly to charitable and philanthropic enterprises, sharing her husband's sympathy in such works to the full.

We may close this brief sketch of Mr. Dougherty's career with the comments made recently by two of his fellow citizens of Indianapolis, both of whom are in a position to judge of his merits. Mr. Edward L. McKee, under date of June 24, 1908, says:

"Mr. Hugh Dougherty, president of the Marion Trust Company, is well known to the financial interests of this city as a conservative handler of means, a man who weighs carefully and looks into the future by the light of past experience before entering upon any enterprise. This watchful building has shown in the remarkable growth of the enterprise of which he is now at the head; it is also shown in the strength of the institution of Bluffton with which he spent so many of his earlier years. But other than as a financier Mr. Dougherty ranks high, being a staunch church member, a loyal supporter of the Methodist faith and a liberal contributor with money and personal effort."

Volney T. Malott, president of the Indiana National Bank, writes: "Mr. Hugh Dougherty, a distinguished financier, president of the Marion Trust Company, ranks among the ablest financiers of the State; he has had a long and successful career as a banker, and is a man of the highest standing and the strictest integrity."

J. L. MATTHEWS, banker, farmer and prominent citizen of Mooresville, Morgan Co., Ind., is a descendant of an old and honorable New England family, and was born at Gardner, Worcester Co., Mass., Dec. 24, 1844. His parents, James C. and Alvira (Bush) Matthews, were both natives of Massachusetts, and his great-grandfather served in the Revolution, after which he settled on a farm. The original founders of the family in America came from Scotland in Colonial days, and were prominently identified with the settlement and development of New England. The parents of James C. Matthews had children as follows: Hezekiah, a resident of his native State, now over ninety years of age; Joel, a farmer; Lewis, a merchant; James C.; Mrs. Pratt; Mrs. Joseph Gile; Lydia, Mrs. Flint; and Miss Lucy. The parents were worthy members of the Congregational Church.

James C. Matthews lived at Gardner all his life, there marrying and rearing his family. He died in 1854. He was one of the original promoters of the chair industry at that place, which developed into the most extensive chair manufacturing locality in the world. He owned a farm which he lived on and operated during the summers, working at chair-making during the winters, and he accumulated ample means for subsistence in his old age. He was a man devoted to the welfare of his family and secured the best possible educational advantages for them. His wife was Alvira Bush, daughter of Artemas Bush, a native of Massachusetts and a farmer by occupation, whose children were: Alvira, Mrs. Matthews; Maria, who never married; and a son, who died young. Mrs. Matthews died in 1876. Both she and her husband were consistent members of the Congregational Church. Their children were: Ephraim, who became a chair manufacturer in Massachusetts; Eliza, Mrs. Charles Averill; Miss Lucinda; Alvin, a butcher; J. L.; and Sarah, Mrs. Jacob Holden.

J. L. Matthews remained under the parental roof until after he reached the age of eleven years, when he went to work for a neighboring farmer, continuing thus for six years. He then enlisted for service in the Civil war, entering for nine months, as a member of Company K, 42d Mass. V. I., under Col. Burrill, and was assigned to the Department of the Gulf under Gen. Banks. On Jan. 1, 1863, at Galveston, Tex., the colonel and a portion of the regiment and three other regiments were captured, but our subject was with the remainder of the regiment which, being on another transport, escaped capture. They returned to New Orleans, where they were assigned to the charge of the pontoon bridges between Baton Rouge and Port Hudson. Returning again to New Orleans after a short time, they made the bridge which was towed to and used in the battle of Bayou Cache. After that they went to Alexandria, on the Red River, and crossed in the rear of Port Hudson, where they laid a bridge on the bend in the river, at the place where the colored troops were so badly cut to pieces. They then drew nearer to Port Hudson, and following the battle there, went to Donaldsonville, reaching that point after the battle. Mr. Matthews then went to Algiers, and took the steamer for New York, thence proceeding to Readville, Mass., where he received his honorable discharge, after eleven months service, Aug. 20, 1863. He escaped both wound and capture, although he had taken part in many dangerous enterprises.

Mr. Matthews resumed farm work for a while, and later served three or four years in the capacity of a clerk in a store. In 1869 he first came to Indianapolis. After a short time he went to Cleveland, Ohio, where he remained two years, employed for a few months as a shipper for the Biddeford Chair Company, after which he took a position at the Cleveland Workhouse, as overseer of the chair work. Later he traveled in the interest of a chair house, and then returned to Indianapolis, where he found employment in a manufacturing plant where money drawers were made. In 1878 he came to Mooresville and engaged with a partner in a lumber business, which relationship was soon dissolved, Mr. Matthews continuing alone. He handled at this time mostly native timber, walnut and cherry lumber, which he bought ready made, though he also bought logs in the tree and hired the sawing done. For five years he successfully carried on an extensive business, wholesaling his lumber, which he shipped to different points, his customers being for the most part eastern firms. About 1880 he bought a farm and became interested in its operation, although he has always continued to reside in Mooresville.

In 1885 he became a stock holder in the Farmers Bank of Mooresville, of which he has been the president since 1900, previous to which he was vice-president for many years. It is a bank of exchange, deposit and discount, doing business under the laws of the State of Indiana, with a capital of $35,000, and a surplus of $28,000. It was organized in 1873, and has ever been regarded as one of the most substantially sound and safe financial institutions in the State. The confidence with which it is regarded by the public is shown in the fact that the deposits amount to over $200,000.

Mr. Matthews has been often called upon to handle and settle estates, and his successful settlement of the Franklin Landers estate will stand as one of the best evidences of his business ability and acumen, as well as an index to the high integrity of his business standards. In 1900 when he and Mr. Edwin Nichols took over the settlement this estate was in a hopeless condition. The land was deeded to them. Mr. Nichols dying in 1904, the entire responsibility of finishing this task fell on Mr. Matthews's shoulders, and he well deserved the laurels he won in saving the old home farm of 1,000 acres. This is but one of the many estates he has settled successfully. His methodical business habits, conservative conduct, and correct system in all trusts win the approval of all concerned and the admiration of his business associates, who respect his opinions to a marked degree.

In political sentiment Mr. Matthews is a Republican, but he is no politician, being so busy with private concerns and without aspiration for public honors. He has been a member of the town board, and in 1900 was elected a member of the county council, but he has declined many such offers of preference, though he has proved himself a thoroughly public-spirited citizen by giving his service and influence in other ways. His wide acquaintance and high reputation make his support an important factor in the success of local movements, and he is always found in the front rank of any enterprise for the betterment and benefit of his community. Charitable and kind, he is ever ready to give a helping hand where it is needed.

One of Mr. Matthews's many benefactions was the gift of the substantial sum of $2,500 for the building and furnishing of a room in the Methodist Episcopal Hospital and Deaconess Home of the State of Indiana, situated in Indianapolis. Mr. Matthews not only gave this substantial amount toward the funds, but he also devoted a great deal of his time to the managing board. He was one of the promoters of this beneficial institution, was a member of the building committee, and is today one of the active trustees of the Hospital, which ranks among the best institutions of its kind in the State.

Mr. Matthews was married Oct. 24, 1882, to Miss Flora C. Cox, who was born in Morgan county, Ind., in August, 1854, daughter of John B. and Harriet (Landers) Cox. They have no children. Mr. and Mrs. Matthews are earnest members of the M. E. Church, in which Mr. Matthews is class-leader and trustee, having ever taken a leading part in the work of the congregation.

As a business man who has attained standing and independence through his own exertions, as a citizen of worth and a man of high integrity, Mr. Matthews is one of the most esteemed men of today in Mooresville. He retains his commodious residence there, and also owns a farm and much other valuable land in the region where he has been established for so many years.

John B. Cox, father of Mrs. Matthews, was born in 1830 in Morgan county, son of Abner and Abby (Dollarhide) Cox, farming people of Scotch-Irish descent. They came as pioneers to Morgan county, Ind., in 1820, and endured the privations of those early days with courage and patience, realizing before they died ample rewards in comfortable means and devoted children. Abner Cox was a staunch Democrat. He was one of the founders of the Methodist religion in his neighborhood and built a house of worship, which he presented to the society, on his farm. His children were: Asa, Larkin and Dennis, farmers; John B., father of Mrs. Matthews; Mary, Mrs. Gregory; Abby, Mrs. Randolph; and Delilah, Mrs. William Knox.

John B. Cox was reared to farming. In 1853 he married and settled on land which he successfully cultivated, bought and sold stock for the government, during the Rebellion, and was connected with the mule business for the government with Wood & Fudra, of Indianapolis. He was a strong Republican, became a citizen of much importance in Morgan county, and was also a leading member of the Methodist Church. At his death, which took place in October, 1865, he left a large estate. He was a man who held the good will of all who knew him. He married Harriet Landers, who was born in Morgan county, Ind., Dec. 17, 1835, daughter of William and Delilah (Stone) Landers, and to them were born three children: Flora C., wife of J. L. Matthews; Emma, wife of Dr. Thomas Stuckey, of Indianapolis; and Ida B., Mrs. Charles Sheets, of Mooresville. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cox were members of the Methodist Church.

William Landers, father of Mrs. Harriet Cox, and son of Jonathan Landers, was born in 1788 in Virginia. Jonathan Landers was an early settler in Virginia of Scotch-Irish descent, and served in the Revolutionary war. He was twenty-one years old when he came from England, after losing all of his relatives by the Black plague. After the Revolution he married a widow named Withero, in Virginia, where most of his children were born. In the early days he removed to Kentucky, and in 1820 was a pioneer in Indiana, where he entered land and improved a good farm in Morgan county. There he died, a man of large means and highly esteemed. His children were: William, father of Mrs. Cox; James, who settled in Missouri, and was a Confederate sympathizer during the Civil war; John, deceased, who was a farmer in Indiana; and Lucy, Mrs. Priest.

William Landers was ten years old when his parents moved to Kentucky, and there he contracted his first marriage, and settled down to farming. After five children were born to him, he moved, in 1820, to Morgan county, Ind., where he bought and owned large tracts of land during his life, becoming a successful farmer and a wealthy man. He was a strong supporter of Democratic principles and he established the Martinsville Democrat, a paper of large circulation, which he ran for some time. He was associate judge for many years, justice of the peace for many years, and held many public offices of honor and trust. On one occasion he was nominated for the Legislature. The canal question was the great issue that campaign, and the stand he took defeated him, though the people came to realize afterward that he was foresighted and not mistaken in his ideas. He wanted to have the work classified, but the value of his plans was not appreciated until later. During all the political campaigns in which he took part he was noted for his intelligent devotion to the interests of the people, and enjoyed universal esteem. His death took place Oct. 10, 1851, when he was sixty-three years old.

The first wife of Mr. Landers was Eva Stone, daughter of Nimrod H. and Sarah (Craig) Stone, natives of Virginia, the former a Revolutionary soldier. He removed to Kentucky and in 1820 became a pioneer in Morgan county, Ind. He was a wheelwright by trade, and followed that calling. In early life he was a Primitive Baptist preacher, but later became very active in the Campbellite Church. He was a near relative of Bartlett Stone, of Kentucky, the noted supporter and follower of Alexander Campbell. Mrs. Eva Stone Landers died in Indiana in 1821, and the second wife of Mr. Landers was Delilah Stone, a native of Kentucky and a sister of his former wife. To this marriage were born these children: Washington, who died leaving one son; Franklin; Sarah, who married Cyrus Vickery, both dying in Iowa; Henry, a farmer in Morgan county; Eva, who died aged twelve years; John, a prominent citizen of Indianapolis; Harriet, who married J. B. Cox; and Jackson, of Indianapolis. Of this family Franklin Landers became very prominent.

He began life as a farmer; taught school; engaged in merchandising in Waverly; platted the town of Brooklyn, and engaged in merchandising there; became interested in the Conduit wholesale dry goods store in Indianapolis, later the Hibben & Murphy establishment, and later for over twenty years was an extensive pork packer of that city. He bought and owned large tracts of fine farming land; conducted farming on a large scale; and was the most extensive mule raiser and dealer in the State. He was a leading Democrat, represented Morgan county and Johnson county in the National Congress, and in 1876 was a candidate for governor of Indiana against Albert G. Porter. He died in October, 1901.

REGINALD H. SULLIVAN, of the law firm of Sullivan & Knight, Indianapolis, has a professional standing which few men of his age enjoy, and the prospect of a career of energy and usefulness befitting the best traditions of his race and family. He has inherited the strong and active intellect of a long line of ancestors noted in the legal profession, which has been honored by representatives of the Sullivan family in every generation since its settlement in America.

The founder of the family in this country was Thomas Sullivan, great-great-grandfather of Reginald H. Sullivan, who came to America to escape the oppressive laws forbidding Catholics to hold any office of honor or trust in Ireland, by which his father, a prominent barrister, had suffered loss of position. The young Irishman married Margaret Irwin, whose father, James Irwin, removed with his family from near Chambersburg, Pa., to Augusta City, Va., in the year 1780. The young couple settled in Harrisonburg, Rockingham Co., Va., and two children were born to them, one son and one daughter, the son only surviving.

Jeremiah Sullivan, son of Thomas and Margaret (Irwin) Sullivan, was born July 21, 1794, in Harrisonburg, Va., and studying law was graduated in 1816, receiving a license to practise from the Commonwealth of Virginia. He served as a captain in the war of 1812. Tempted by the opening West he started in the company of two young friends for Louisville, Ky., making the journey by horseback. On his arrival at Cincinnati he was advised to go to Madison, Ind., which was recommended to him as a location in every way desirable for a young lawyer. Acting upon the advice, he was so well pleased with the prospect that he opened an office, and was soon one of the recognized leading spirits of the legal fraternity of the then new State. Throughout the remainder of his life he was prominently identified with the growth and progress of his adopted home, going back to Virginia, however, to marry Miss Charlotte Butler, of his native town. In 1820 he was elected to the State Legislature, which at that time met in Corydon, and to him belongs the honor of having selected the name of Indiana's present capital. He was one of the commissioners appointed to choose a site and name for a more convenient capital of the growing State, and it was at his suggestion that the new center of government was called Indianapolis. His standing in his profession was never impaired by his extraneous public service, and he was a member of the first Supreme court of the State of Indiana.

Thomas L. Sullivan, son of Jeremiah Sullivan and grandfather of Reginald H. Sullivan, was in his early manhood a captain in the United States army, serving in the Mexican war. After that struggle he settled in Indianapolis, where he followed the family profession, practicing law successfully for a number of years. He married Lætitia Smith, daughter of Oliver H. Smith, United States Senator from Indiana.

Thomas L. Sullivan, father of Reginald H. Sullivan, was born in Indianapolis in the year 1846, on the present site of the traction and terminal station. True to the example of his forefathers, he was prominent in the affairs of the community and honored in its highest councils, serving as judge of the Marion Circuit court and twice as mayor of Indianapolis (1889-1893). He married Alice D. Moore, whose father was a prominent banker in Madison, Ind., and to them were born four children, viz.: Reginald H.; Catherine, Mrs. John E. Hollett; Miss Mary; and Dr. Thomas L. Sullivan.

Reginald H. Sullivan was born March 10, 1876, in Indianapolis, and received his early education in the public schools of his native city. At the age of seventeen he entered Wash College, where he attended four years, graduating at the age of twenty-one, after which he went to the Indiana Law School for his professional preparation, graduating from that institution in the spring of 1899. He joined his father in the practice of law, being associated with him until the older man retired, after which he continued practice alone until Jan. 1, 1907, when he formed his present partnership, with Edward H. Knight, son of George A. Knight, of Brazil, Ind. The firm is a particularly notable one, both its members being lawyers of uncommon ability and brilliant promise, and each has a large patronage acquired within a brief but successful legal experience. Both these young men are well known figures in the law circles of the State, and their association has awakened much interest among members of the profession. In 1906 Mr. Sullivan received the nomination, on the Democratic ticket, for member of the Legislature from his district, but he has since been too occupied with legal work to consider such honors.

HENRY WALLACE LAWRENCE, of Indianapolis, president of the Indiana Hotel Company, and otherwise prominent in the business life of the city, may truly be said to have reached the pinnacle of success in his chosen calling. In the profitable management of large hotel interests, as a representative of the most progressive ideas now prevailing in that line, as a man of initiative and admirable independence, he is regarded not only in his home city, but throughout the West, as a master of the work which has claimed most of his attention during his active years. It was the business which his father followed, and for which undoubtedly he had a natural inclination, fortified by executive qualities and the enterprise necessary to success at the present day. As the head of the most ambitious hotel concern in Indianapolis and one of the foremost corporations of the kind in the country, he is in a position which alone would command respect, but which has been strengthened materially by a personality which compels the admiration of all his associates.

Mr. Lawrence's residence in Indianapolis covers a period of less than twenty years. He is a native of the State of New York, born Aug. 15, 1852, son of James Pitt and Emily S. (Salls) Lawrence, and grandson of Hiram Lawrence. Hiram Lawrence was the first male child born in the town of Lisbon, N. Y., and was of English descent. He was a brother of Capt. James Lawrence, the immortal commander of the "Chesapeake," whose dying command, "Don't give up the ship," has gone down into American history. Hiram Lawrence took part in the war of 1837, subsequently becoming a man of large estate, owning lumber-mills and timber lands. He married Nancy Pitt, who was of English-Dutch ancestry. She lived to the age of ninety-two years, and was killed in an accident on the Grand Trunk railroad. Daniel Salls, Mr. Lawrence's maternal grandfather, was born in Scotland, and when he came to America became one of the first settlers of Stockholm, New York.

James Pitt Lawrence was born in New York, and died in June, 1877, aged fifty-two years. His wife, a native of the same State, died in 1884, aged fifty-seven years. They were members of the Presbyterian Church. Of their five children Henry Wallace is the only survivor. The father was interested in the hotel business during almost his entire life. He was a pioneer in that line in the Adirondack Mountains, and kept hotels in turn at Plattsburg, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio, and then built the "Foquet House" at the former place and the "Blue Mountain House" in the mountains.

Henry Wallace Lawrence was educated at Plattsburg, N. Y., and was graduated from the Plattsburg Academy in 1874. He then became interested with his father in the hotel business, and a few years later started in the same line for himself. For a number of years he conducted a hotel at Moore's Junction, N. Y., went from there to Dallas, Texas, then to Denver, Colo., to Palatka, Fla., and to other points. In 1889 he came to Indianapolis and leased the "Spencer House," which he subsequently purchased. It is a commodious hostelry containing 125 rooms, which he still owns and operates. In 1897 he became proprietor of the "Bates House," which has been replaced by the fine "Claypool Hotel," an establishment of five hundred rooms, equipped with every modern convenience and luxury. In this connection alone he has an acquaintanceship which extends all over the country. In 1901 he organized the Indiana Hotel Company, of which he became president. Mr. Lawrence has numerous other business interests, being a director of the Indiana Trust Company and the owner of valuable real estate. He is a man of analytical mind, keen in his judgment of business values and possessing a faculty of untiring energy which enables him to prosecute all his undertakings to the point of success. Though alive to the possibilities of material gain he does not allow that sense to dominate his conduct to the exclusion of other considerations, which he considers just as valuable. Thus he has attained an enviable position, being as popular for his personal qualities and his good sense as he is for his commercial standards.

On Jan. 1, 1880, Mr. Lawrence was married to Miss Adelaide E. Cunningham, daughter of James Pitt Cunningham, of Ogdensburg, N. Y. James Pitt Lawrence and James Pitt Cunningham, respective fathers of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence, were first cousins, their fathers having married the Pitt sisters. Hiram Cunningham married Phoebe Pitt and Hiram Lawrence married Nancy Pitt. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence have had one son, James H., who was a manly lad of eleven years when his death occurred. Mrs. Lawrence is a member of the Catholic Church. She is a worthy descendant of an honored and historical family, and has proved a valuable assistant to her husband in his business ventures as well as a devoted and congenial helpmate in the advancement of all their interests. Her intelligent advice and sympathy have been very real factors in his progressive career. A recent issue of the "Hotel World," a leading hotel weekly published in Chicago, refers to her in very complimentary terms as one of the four wives of prominent Western hotel men whose valuable assistance has contributed materially to the success of their husbands.

Fraternally Mr. Lawrence belongs to the Masons and the Knights of Pythias, and socially he is connected with the Columbia Club. In political faith he is a Republican.

JUDGE WILLIAM E. DEUPREE is one of the most prominent citizens of Franklin, Ind. As judge of the Eighth Judicial District, embracing Johnson and Brown counties, for several years member of the legal firm of Deupree & Slack, and an influential member of the Democratic party in his county, he is widely known and universally respected. Moreover, he is a native of the county, having been born March 2, 1864, in Blue River township.

Throughout the period of its worded history the members of the Deupree family have been characterized by their love for liberty and free institutions, more noticeable, perhaps, in the early days, when men were more often obliged to lay down their lives in defense of cherished principles. There is a well-founded tradition in the family that the Deuprees or Duprees are of French Huguenot stock from northern France; that they were a family of wealth and influence; and that all were massacred except two young sons, who, escaping, came to America. One settled in Virginia, the other located in New Orleans. William Dupree or Deupree, a descendant of the Virginia settler, was a large land holder and slave owner in Virginia, and a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He died in 1850, at a place called Dupress Cross Roads, in Virginia. He was the great-great-grandfather of Judge William E. Deupree.

Thomas J. Deupree, son of William, held the institution of slavery in such abhorrence that he moved out to Kentucky, settling in Hardin county. In 1820 he came thence to Indiana, purchasing a tract of farm land in Shelby county, near Edinburg, where he located with his family. He was drowned in the Muscakitouk river, near Seymour, Ind. His wife, whose maiden name was Hatchett, was from North Carolina, and had accompanied him to Kentucky and to Indiana, sharing the burdens of pioneer existence with her husband and family, which consisted of four sons and three daughters, namely: William, Abraham C., Matthew, Edwin, Parthena (who married William Cutsinger), and two other daughters.

A characteristic incident, showing the spirit which prevailed in this branch of the family, is worthy of relation: In 1824-25 William Deupree, the grandfather in Virginia of Thomas J. Deupree's children, offered to give each of his grandsons a slave. They wrote a reply that they were poor, and needed money. They thanked him very much for his offer but explained that they were obliged to decline it, as on account of slavery they had left Kentucky and settled in Indiana. However, he might release four slaves and deduct their value from their portion of the estate belonging to their deceased father.

Abraham C. Deupree, grandfather of Judge William E. Deupree, was born in Kentucky, but was reared in Indiana, coming to this State with his parents in about 1820, when a lad of nine years. In time he became an ordained minister, and he and his wife were two of the seven charter members of the Christian Church at Edinburg, Ind. In 1850 Abraham C. Deupree moved to Johnson county, where he remained until his death in 1876, at the age of sixty-six years. He became an extensive farmer and was an universally respected citizen. He married Hannah Carter, who was born in 1813 in New Jersey, and had come with her parents to Bartholomew county, Ind. She died in 1903. Their family consisted of four sons and two daughters. Mrs. Deupree was a birthright Quaker.

William and Ellyza (Shipp) Sanders were the maternal grandparents of Judge Deupree, the father of the former being a pioneer in Johnson county, Ind., on the Shelby county line, where he operated a large farm, reared a numerous family and died at a good old age. William Sanders continued to live in the same township on the same farm which he purchased about the time of his marriage. He is now (1908) aged eighty-six years. His first wife, Ellyza Shipp, was the daughter of a neighbor, and a family of nine were born to this union. Mrs. Deupree died about 1862. His second wife, Margaret Barker, still survives.

Daniel C. Deupree was born in Shelby county, Ind., and was ten years of age when his parents moved to Johnson county, in 1850. In 1873 he returned to Shelby county. Daniel C. Deupree spent his boyhood and young manhood in Johnson county, and was first married there, to Susan Sanders, a native of Johnson county. She died in April, 1866, a member of the Christian Church, though she had earlier been a Methodist. The second wife of Mr. Deupree was Anna Walker, daughter of Jesse Walker, and eight children were born to this union, one of whom died in infancy. The other members of this family were as follows: Hannah, who married Charles Thomas, lives in Shelby county, near Shelbyville; Ella lives at home; Jesse is a resident of Blue River township, Johnson county; John resides in Indianapolis; Araminta is the wife of John Stainbrook, of Needham township, Johnson county; Orpha resides at home; Elijah lives at home. Mr. and Mrs. Deupree are leading members of the Christian Church. Since 1873 he has been identified with the Democratic party; prior to that time he was a Republican, but since the demonetization of silver in 1873, he has been a Democrat.

William E. Deupree was the only child of his parents. During the first ten years of his life he attended the schools of Johnson county. Later he was on the Shelby county farm, and he began his independent career as a school teacher, being engaged thus for one winter in Shelby county and two winters in Bartholomew county. Deciding to follow the law as a profession, he began reading under John C. Orr, a prominent attorney of Columbus, and was admitted to the Bar, in Bartholomew county, in February, 1887, immediately opening an office in Edinburg, on March 1st. Continuing in practice there for six years, to the very day, on March 1, 1893, he came to Franklin, entering into practice with W. C. Thompson. This association lasted until June 1, 1894. Mr. Deupree continued alone until Sept. 1, 1897, when he admitted L. E. Slack to partnership, and they enjoyed a large and valuable practice and high rank, both members of the firm being men of ability in the profession. This partnership continued until Nov. 1, 1906, when Mr. Deupree was elected Circuit Judge of Johnson and Brown counties, the Eighth Judicial circuit.

Judge Deupree has been prominently identified with political life ever since locating in Franklin, coming from Edinburg with an honorable record of four years as prosecuting attorney. For six years he served as deputy prosecuting attorney in Franklin, and for six years the firm of Deupree & Slack were attorneys for the county. Mr. Deupree served four terms as chairman of the Democratic county central committee and was for two years a member of the State Executive committee. In 1900 he was chosen as delegate to the National Democratic convention at Kansas City. Externally the Judge is prominent in a number of organizations. He belongs to Franklin Lodge, No. 107, A. F. & A. M.; Franklin Chapter, No. 65, R. A. M.; Franklin Commandery, No. 23, K. T.; Indianapolis Consistory, Scottish Rite, 32d degree, and Murat Temple, Mystic Shrine; to Hesperion Lodge, K. of P., of Franklin (united with Rolla Lodge of Columbus, in 1886); to Johnson Lodge, No. 76, I. O. O. F. (joining Hernden Lodge, No. 97, of Edinburg, in 1885), and also belongs to the Indiana Encampment, No. 40. As an Odd Fellow he has gone through all the principal chairs in the subordinate lodge and the encampment, and is a member of the Grand Lodge of the State; both he and his wife belonged to the Rebekahs at Edinburg.

On Jan. 12, 1889, Judge Deupree was united in marriage with Miss Ada M. Pruitt, daughter of Alexander and Sarah A. (Miller) Pruitt. Five children have been born to this marriage, namely: Hazel, Grace, Ada, Ralph and William Ert. Grace died when ten years old, and Ada did not survive infancy. For the past nine years the pleasant and attractive home of the family has been on Adams street, the property belonging to Judge Deupree. He and his wife are valued members of the Christian Church. They are prominent socially and enjoy the esteem of a wide circle of friends.

GEN. JOHN P. HAWKINS was born in Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 29, 1830, son of John and Elizabeth (Waller) Hawkins, who came hither in 1820. His grandfather, Thomas Jameson Hawkins, who came to this city about 1827, was an ordained minister of the Baptist Church, but for many years previous to his ordination had exercised his talents as an exhorter. He died in 1840, after a life of good influence and usefulness.

John P. Hawkins was for a time a student at Wabash College, and later a cadet at the West Point Military Academy, from which he was graduated in 1852. Receiving a commission as lieutenant in the United States army, he served on the frontier up to the breaking out of the Civil war, in which he was first engaged in the defense of Washington and at the battle of Bull Run, being subsequently in the Western Army under Fremont. When General Halleck assumed the command he was appointed inspector of the subsistence department, and was engaged in organizing the commissary department throughout that command, in that connection acting as chief commissary of General Grant's army. He was present at the battle of Shiloh, where he acted as aide to General Grant. In connection with some reminiscences of his life which General Hawkins is preparing, to accompany his family genealogy which he now has under way, the following extract, which will be of interest to many people, will appear:

"In the spring of 1862, soon after the battle of Shiloh, General Halleck came from St. Louis to Pittsburg Landing with his full complement of staff officers, and went into camp near the bank of the Tennessee river, relieving Grant of the command, and making him 'second in command,' which was no command at all. Among those who came with Halleck was Capt. Philip H. Sheridan, as quartermaster for the headquarters. As such he had charge of and was responsible for the transportation pertaining to it, tentage, etc. Very soon after Halleck's arrival he commenced his memorable approach on Corinth, which occupied several weeks, the progress being very slow. Sheridan's duties were light, and he employed much of his time in the trenches at the front, seeing all he could of the advance, and of the enemy, and he probably knew more of what was going on there than Halleck or any other person, for he had an eye to see, and a topographical talent to remember and co-relate his observations. It was while thus engaged he was appointed to the colonelcy of the 2d Michigan Cavalry, which happened in this wise:

"Shortly after the capture of Island No. 10, and not long after the battle of Shiloh, General Pope brought his army up the Tennessee river to re-enforce Halleck and went into camp near Hamburg, a short distance above Pittsburg Landing. With his troops was Gordon Granger, colonel of the 2d Michigan Cavalry, whom I called on a few days after his arrival. He then informed me that he was advised of his appointment as brigadier-general, that his commission had not yet arrived, but would soon be received; that he would then vacate his colonelcy of the 2d Michigan Cavalry, and it was in his hands to name his successor to Governor Blair, and that he wanted me to take his place as colonel of the regiment. But I gave no thought to accepting it, told Granger that I had never had any experience in the mounted service—had no inclination for it, but knew a person who was well qualified for it, naming Phil Sheridan, who had very successfully commanded mounted infantry in Oregon in war against the Indians, and for success and gallantry in that war had been personally praised by General Scott in a General Order. I also told him of Sheridan's unimportant duties at Halleck's headquarters, and his untiring energy in watching developments on our line of advance toward Corinth. And so Granger recommended Sheridan as his successor. He was appointed to the colonelcy and soon after was appointed a brigadier-general for his enterprise and gallantry, especially in an engagement with the forces of General Chalmers, whom he defeated. Some might say that this was the commencement of his distinguished career, but such understanding would be erroneous, for its commencement was in his native qualities of energy and bravery, assisted and developed by his education at West Point, where, as a cadet, he was always earnest, observing and intelligent, and in his early army life as a lieutenant he performed his duties with his whole heart interested in them, and so his course from the beginning was onward and upward, and no special circumstance or opportunity was the impellent factor toward the ultimate attainment of his splendid record as a soldier.

"After the war I was Sheridan's guest for a few days at New Orleans. He was then assembling a large army on the Mexican border, and wanted me to take command of an army corps on the Rio Grande. But I was just recovering from a severe sickness, was weak and tired, and my only thought was to get up North and recuperate, and so told him that I could not undertake it. So this was the second time during the war that I felt compelled to decline an important command. One day during my stay with him Sheridan said to me: 'You ought to have taken the 2d Michigan.' To which I answered that I had no regret about it, only satisfaction, for I would not have done for the regiment nor for myself what he had done."

General Hawkins was commissary general of the army when retired in 1894. He is now a resident of Indianapolis.

SAMUEL MOORE MITCHELL was one of the foremost business men of Martinsville throughout his active career. His life was typical of the early activities, the change, the growth of that town and of the State, to an unusual degree. Born in the veritable pioneer days, reared amid the primitive surroundings of the times, he engaged in business when barter was the rule, and continued during the evolutionary period which culminated long before his death in modern commercial methods. All the experiences of the rude civilization which prevailed when he commenced life were his. And he had the progressive spirit which made him a leader in the advancement which so altered his environments before the close of his days.

Mr. Mitchell was born July 7, 1814, at Charlestown, Clark Co., Ind., fourth child of Giles and Mary (Moore) Mitchell. The great-grandfather, William Mitchell, was a native of Ireland, and his mother was a Frenchwoman. William Mitchell, son of William, was born about 1747 in Virginia, at a place called Hobb's Hole, where he lived. He was a farmer and tobacco raiser. During the Revolution he served under Washington, and was present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. Removing from Virginia to Kentucky, he lived for a time around New Bedford, and thence moved to Corydon, Harrison Co., Ind., finally to Parke county, Ind., where he passed the remainder of his days. He was married in Pittsylvania county, Va., to Chloe Nance, who was born in 1754, and was of Irish blood, and both lived to advanced age, William Mitchell dying in Parke county, Ind., in 1841, aged ninety-four, and his wife at the home of her son, Giles, Aug. 20, 1847, aged eighty-eight. She is interred in the old family burying ground on the hill, one and a half miles south of Martinsville. William and Chloe Mitchell were the parents of nine children, namely: (1) Oliva. (2) Frederick, a planter, resided near Nashville, Tenn. (3) Isaac, also a planter, lived in Danville, Ky. (4) Robert, a farmer, settled in Parke county, Ind., where he died leaving a large number of children and grandchildren living in that county. (5) William ("Buck"), a farmer, lived in Missouri. (6) Giles is mentioned further on. (7) James was a farmer. (8) Ann became Mrs. Sparks, of Parke county, Ind. (9) Rebecca.

Giles Mitchell was born Oct. 3, 1787, in Pittsylvania county, Va. When fourteen he moved to Kentucky with his uncle, Edgar Mitchell, and there, in Mercer county, he was married Oct. 23, 1806, to Mary Moore, who was born in Kentucky in 1786, daughter of John Moore. The Moores were of English extraction. When very young John Moore was captured by the Indians, and he lived among them for a number of years, learning the language of the tribe as well as his mother tongue. He was very tall and straight as an arrow. He died on his farm near Harrodsburg, Ky., about 1824, when about sixty years old. His wife's maiden name was Ann Swan, and besides Mrs. Mitchell they had a son, who was the father of William A. ("Gus") Moore, a farmer of near Spencer, in Owen county, Indiana.

From Mercer county Mr. and Mrs. Giles Mitchell moved with their two children, John S. and James M., to Woodford county, Ky., and thence, in 1810, to Indiana, which at that time was still a Territory. They came down the Ohio river to the mouth of Harrod's creek, landing on the Kentucky side of the Ohio river, opposite Utica, Clark county, Ind., where they crossed, and proceeded by wagon on to Charlestown, where they made a settlement, taking up their home in a log cabin on the banks of Pleasant Run. In Clark county they lived for several years. Then they removed farther north, to Bartholomew county, Ind., where Mrs. Mitchell died Aug. 22, 1828. Mr. Mitchell's children were: (1) John Swan, born Sept. 29, 1807, in Mercer county, Ky., died May 5, 1872, at Sulphur Springs, Texas. On Aug. 15, 1831, he married at Madison, Ind., where he was in business, Rebecca Cavin. (2) James Madison, born Nov. 28, 1809, died July 6, 1885. He was one of the most important citizens of Martinsville in his day, and served several years as treasurer of Morgan county. He married July 18, 1836, Mary A. Scott. (3) Mary Ann, born June 4, 1812, in Clark county, Ind., married John M. Gwin, a native of County Derry, Ireland, and died May 3, 1861. Mr. Gwin died May 19, 1866. Their son, William, born Dec. 5, 1832, was a graduate of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and died Jan. 3, 1863, as the result of a wound received while serving as lieutenant-commander on the gunboat "Burton," in the attack on Harris' Bluff (he married Mary F. Hutchinson, of New York, eleven weeks before his death). (4) Samuel Moore, born July 7, 1814, is mentioned further on. (5) Nancy, born in Clark county Jan. 7, 1818, was married Sept. 25, 1834, to John Walker, a native of County Cork, Ireland, engaged in business in Columbus, Ind. They had two children: John, who died in infancy; and James, who died at the age of thirty-five, at Cincinnati, at the home of his step-mother, Mrs. Ada (Finch) Walker. James Walker was with Lieut.-Commander Gwin at the time of his death, and escorted the remains to New York. Mrs. Nancy (Mitchell) Walker died Aug. 7, 1838, at Columbus, Ind. (6) Stephen Decatur, born Aug. 20, 1820, in Clark county, Ind., died April 19, 1821, in Bartholomew county. (7) Giles Bedford, born May 17, 1822, in Bartholomew county, about two and a half miles southwest of Columbus, Ind., died Oct. 16, 1879. He became a physician and surgeon, practising at Mooresville, Morgan county, except for a short time when he was in partnership with his brothers, James M. and Samuel Moore Mitchell, in the dry-goods business in Martinsville. He married Sarah Reagan, who survived him.

By his second marriage Giles Mitchell had two children: (8) William Addison Strange, born Aug. 28, 1831, in Bartholomew county, Ind., and died April 9, 1871, at Martinsville. He married Caroline Thomas, daughter of Isaac Thomas, of Martinsville, Ind. (9) Ellen Adaline died young.

To the third marriage of Giles Mitchell were born three children, two of whom died young, the survivor being Thomas Bloomfield, born April 27, 1836, at Martinsville, who has passed all his life there. He was reared principally on a farm, and for some years carried on the dairy business, but for a number of years has been in the insurance and abstract business. He married Jane Ritchey, daughter of George Ritchey, who moved to Martinsville from Ohio.

Giles Mitchell, the father of this large family, died at Martinsville July 5, 1865, in his seventy-eighth year. He had led an active life. About six feet in height, large, square-shouldered and well built, he had a strong constitution and good health—very necessary equipment for a pioneer. Moving out to Kentucky at the early age of fourteen, he there found many experiences which qualified him to meet the sterner life of the wilderness which confronted the venturesome ones who made a home in Indiana in its primitive days. He was drafted to go with Harrison to Tippecanoe, but believing that he was needed at home he hired a substitute, who was never again heard from. However, when the war of 1812 broke out he was engaged in the Indian border wars, and serving with Captain Bigger's Rangers, and in company with Davis Floyd and twenty-five others pursued some Indians from the neighborhood of Charlestown, capturing them at Muscatatock, between State ford and Berge's ferry, in Jackson or Scott county, Ind. In 1813 he did picket duty at the Stitt Hill, in Morgan county, and near the mouth of Indian creek, four miles south of Martinsville. During this time his family, then consisting of wife and three children, John S., James M. and Mary A., were twice taken by friends on horseback to the Ohio river and placed aboard boats which landed them at Whirl's ferry, opposite Utica, Ind., because of threatened Indian attacks. But though a number of whites were killed in the skirmishes around Charlestown at that time, the Redskins came no nearer than Silver Creek and Pigeon Roost. During the Indian troubles which followed the Pigeon Roost massacre, in 1812, the family lived in the blockhouse at Charlestown for several months, until the danger was over.

By occupation Giles Mitchell was a brick-mason and farmer, and in 1824 he built the first brick courthouse for the county of Bartholomew, at Columbus, later removing from there to Martinsville, where he erected the first brick courthouse for Morgan county. In the spring of 1821 he settled on a farm in the woods two and a half miles southwest of Columbus, where was made the brick for the courthouse soon after put up. He kept the "Union Hotel" at Martinsville, and while thus engaged bought a farm of 320 acres, one and a half miles south of that town, later living upon that place for a number of years. In the old family burying ground upon this farm his mother and most of the other deceased members of the family are interred. Giles Mitchell was a Mason in fraternal connection and in religion a member of the Christian Church.

Samuel Moore Mitchell was six years old when he removed with his father's family to Bartholomew county, Ind., where he lived for twelve years, in the meantime being in the employ of his brother-in-law, John M. Gwin, as store boy for four years, excepting one term spent in school at Bloomington, Ind. Then, in his young manhood, he came to Martinsville, where he was destined to play an important part in the advancement of the community. After clerking for a year in the dry-goods store of his brother, James M., who had already embarked in business, he went to school at the Salem Academy, at Salem, Ind., one of the best institutions of learning in the State at the time, for a year. Then he became second clerk on the steamboat "Livingston," which plied between Cincinnati and New Orleans, and during the year he remained in that connection he gained experience which proved very valuable in his subsequent transactions. He then arranged to return to the employ of his brother, James, with whom he soon afterward entered into partnership, the brothers continuing to do business together for many years. During the winter and spring of 1837 James M. Mitchell built a large frame dwelling and store house combined, 46x66 feet in dimensions, on the west side of the present public square in Martinsville, and when the building was completed the brothers stocked it with new goods. There they did business until the place was burned down, in 1852. Meantime their interests had enlarged and varied. In the fall of 1838 they built a pork house about a block southwest of the courthouse in Martinsville, and that season slaughtered and packed two flatboat loads of hogs, fifteen hundred head, this cargo, with a boatload of corn, being started for New Orleans in the charge of the younger brother. In 1839 they built a new pork house across the street, west of the old one, putting in steam, and used this building about two years, shipping their pork to New Orleans. Then they were obliged to move their slaughter house from town, locating it upon a site one and a half miles northwest of Martinsville, on the White river, at the foot of the falls, now on John Nutter's farm. In 1840-41 they had financial difficulties and abandoned the pork business, selling their pork and lard to Blackley, Strong and Simpson, of Cincinnati, with agreement to deliver in New Orleans, which they did. However, they continued in the mercantile business in a small way, and in 1842 took the contract to build what was called the "County Seminary," a brick school building on the lot later occupied by the residence of E. F. Branch. It was occupied as a school building for many years, and then sold and converted into a woolen, carding and spinning mill.

In 1839 they bought the farm a mile south of Martinsville, near which is now located South Park cemetery, surrounding the private burying ground of James M. Mitchell. After the collapse just mentioned they worked industriously and economically to save the property, selling goods and hoeing their own crops. In 1842 they managed to get a boatload of pork, wheat and flour for shipment to New Orleans, there found a good market and sold the cargo at a profit of nearly three thousand dollars, of which twenty-five hundred dollars was invested in groceries, the rest being applied on the payment of various debts. Having sustained their credit and kept the confidence of all with whom they had dealings, they pulled through the crisis and entered with new courage upon the old line of business, and, persevering in their determination to come out ahead, they succeeded in overcoming all obstacles and embarrassments, regaining a firm footing in the commercial world. Their merchandising, farming and packing were continued on a much larger scale, and in the quarter century following, until 1867, they added to their accumulations and increased their business steadily, dissolving after a partnership of thirty years' standing.

Meantime great changes had taken place. In 1858 they slaughtered and packed at their house on the falls the last boatload of pork that ever left Martinsville for New Orleans. By common consent S. Moore Mitchell assumed charge of the store and all the indoor business, his brother superintending the farming and pork packing. The latter was a born mechanic, and a judge of building whose opinions were sought and given to the end of his days. The brothers needed a number of flat boats in the transaction of their business, and he not only superintended their construction but aided personally, himself selecting the timber for his boat gunwales, which were usually from sixty to seventy-five feet long. The boats carried the produce from their establishment on the White river down the Wabash, thence to the Ohio, and down the Mississippi to New Orleans, where it entered the markets of the world. The business was a very important one in its day, and was highly appreciated by the local farmers, who thus had the opportunity to dispose of their products in competition with others.
